Presented to The Library of the University of Toronto by Mrs. Keith Falkner
In Memory of her Father
Harry Mill Lancaster
Henry Esmond finds Friends.
THE WORKS

OF

WILLIAM M. THACKERAY

THE HISTORY OF HENRY ESMOND, ESQ.
CATHERINE
DENIS DUVAL
LOVEL THE WIDOWER

NEW YORK

THOMAS Y. CROWELL & COMPANY

PUBLISHERS TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE

WILLIAM BINGHAM, LORD ASHBURTON.

My Dear Lord:

The writer of a book which copies the manners and language of Queen Anne's time must not omit the Dedication to the Patron; and I ask leave to inscribe this volume to your Lordship, for the sake of the great kindness and friendship which I owe to you and yours.

My volume will reach you when the author is on his voyage to a country where your name is as well known as here. Wherever I am, I shall gratefully regard you; and shall not be the less welcomed in America because I am

Your obliged friend and servant,

W. M. Thackeray.

London, October 18, 1852.
CONTENTS.

THE HISTORY OF HENRY ESMOND.

Book I.

THE EARLY YOUTH OF HENRY ESMOND UP TO THE TIME OF HIS LEAVING TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

CHAPTER

I. An Account of the Family of Esmond of Castlewood Hall, . . . 4
II. Relates how Francis, Fourth Viscount, Arrives at Castlewood, 8
III. Whither in the Time of Thomas, Third Viscount, I Had Preceded him as Page to Isabella, . . . . 15
IV. I am Placed Under a Popish Priest and Bred to that Religion—Viscountess Castlewood, . . . . 24
V. My Superiors are Engaged in Plots for the Restoration of King James II., . . . . 30
VI. The Issue of the Plots—The Death of Thomas, Third Viscount of Castlewood; and the Imprisonment of his Viscountess, . . . . 40
VII. I am Left at Castlewood an Orphan, and Find Most Kind Protectors There, . . . . 53
VIII. After Good Fortune Comes Evil, . . . . 60
IX. I Have the Smallpox, and Prepare to Leave Castlewood, . . . . 63
X. I Go to Cambridge, and Do but Little Good There, . . . . 85
XI. I Come Home for a Holiday to Castlewood, and Find a Skeleton in the House, . . . . 91
XII. My Lord Mohun Comes Among Us for No Good, . . . . 102
XIII. My Lord Leaves Us and his Evil Behind him, . . . . 111
XIV. We Ride After him to London, . . . . 122

Book II.

CONTAINS MR. ESMOND'S MILITARY LIFE AND OTHER MATTERS APPERTAINING TO THE ESMOND FAMILY.

I. I am in Prison, and Visited, but Not Consoled There, . . . . 136
II. I Come to the End of my Captivity, but not of my Trouble, . . . . 145
III. I Take the Queen's Pay in Quin's Regiment, . . . . 152
IV. Recapitulations, . . . . 161
V. I Go on the Vigo Bay Expedition, Taste Salt Water, and Smell Powder, . . . . 166
VI. The 29th December, . . . . 176
VII. I am Made Welcome at Walcote, . . . . 182
VIII. Family Talk, . . . . 191
IX. I Make the Campaign of 1704, . . . . 197
X. An Old Story about a Fool and a Woman, . . . . 205
XI. The Famous Mr. Joseph Addison, . . . . 213
XII. I Get a Company in the Campaign of 1706, . . . . 223
XIII. I Meet an Old Acquaintance in Flanders, and Find my Mother's Grave and my own Cradle There, . . . . 228
XIV. The Campaign of 1707, 1708, . . . . 239
XV. General Webb Wins the Battle of Wynendael, . . . . 245
CONTENTS.

Book III.

CONTAINING THE END OF MR. ESMOND'S ADVENTURES IN ENGLAND.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHAPTER</th>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>I Come to an End of my Battles and Bruises,</td>
<td>269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>I Go Home and Harp on the Old String,</td>
<td>260</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>A Paper out of the Spectator,</td>
<td>293</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>Beatrix's New Sutor,</td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>Mohun Appears for the Last Time in this History,</td>
<td>317</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI</td>
<td>Poor Beatrix,</td>
<td>320</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VII</td>
<td>I Visit Castlewood Once More,</td>
<td>334</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII</td>
<td>I Travel to France and Bring Home a Portrait of Rigand,</td>
<td>343</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IX</td>
<td>The Original of the Portrait Comes to England,</td>
<td>352</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X</td>
<td>We Entertain a Very Distinguished Guest at Kensington,</td>
<td>364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XI</td>
<td>Our Guest Quits Us as Not Being Hospitable Enough,</td>
<td>377</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII</td>
<td>A Great Scheme, and Who Balked it,</td>
<td>386</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XIII</td>
<td>August 1st, 1714,</td>
<td>391</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CATHERINE: A STORY.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHAPTER</th>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>Introducing to the Reader the Chief Personages of this Narrative,</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>In which are Depicted the Pleasures of a Sentimental Attachment,</td>
<td>25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>In which a Narcotic is Administered, and a Great Deal of Genteel Society Depicted,</td>
<td>35</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>In which Mrs. Catherine Becomes an Honest Woman Again,</td>
<td>43</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>Contains Mr. Brock's Autobiography and Other Matter,</td>
<td>53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI</td>
<td>The Adventures of the Ambassador, Mr. Macshane,</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VII</td>
<td>Which Embraces a Period of Seven Years,</td>
<td>77</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII</td>
<td>Enumerates the Accomplishments of Master Thomas Billings—Introduces Brock as Dr. Wood—and Announces the Execution of Ensign Macshane,</td>
<td>92</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IX</td>
<td>Interview between Count Galgenstein and Master Thomas Billings, when he Informs the Count of his Parentage,</td>
<td>105</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>X</td>
<td>Showing how Galgenstein and Mrs. Cat Recognize Each Other in Marylebone Gardens—and how the Count Drives her Home in his Carriage,</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XI</td>
<td>Of some Domestic Quarrels and the Consequences Thereof,</td>
<td>123</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XII</td>
<td>Treats of Love, and Prepares for Death,</td>
<td>135</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>XIII</td>
<td>Being a Preparation for the End, Chapter the Last, Another Last Chapter,</td>
<td>137</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DENIS DUVAL.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHAPTER</th>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>The Family Tree,</td>
<td>151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>The House of Saverne,</td>
<td>156</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>The Travelers,</td>
<td>177</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>Out of the Depths,</td>
<td>190</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>I Hear the Sound of Bow Bells,</td>
<td>204</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI</td>
<td>I Escape from a Great Danger,</td>
<td>219</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VII</td>
<td>The Last of my School Days,</td>
<td>232</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VIII</td>
<td>I Enter His Majesty's Navy, Notes on Denis Duval,</td>
<td>245</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

LOVEL THE WIDOWER.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHAPTER</th>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th>PAGE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>I</td>
<td>The Bachelor of Beak Street,</td>
<td>273</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II</td>
<td>In which Miss Prior is Kept at the Door,</td>
<td>292</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III</td>
<td>In which I Play the Spy,</td>
<td>310</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IV</td>
<td>A Black Sheep,</td>
<td>328</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>V</td>
<td>In which I am Stung by a Serpent,</td>
<td>349</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>VI</td>
<td>Cecilia's Successor,</td>
<td>366</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
PREFACE.

THE ESMONDS OF VIRGINIA.

The estate of Castlewood, in Virginia, which was given to our ancestors by King Charles I. as some return for the sacrifice made in his Majesty's cause by the Esmond family, lies in Westmoreland County, between the rivers Potomac and Rappahannock, and was once as great as an English principality, though in the early times its revenues were but small. Indeed, for near eighty years after our forefathers possessed them, our plantations were in the hands of factors, who enriched themselves one after another, though a few scores of hogsheads of tobacco were all the produce that, for long after the Restoration, our family received from their Virginian estates.

My dear and honored father, Colonel Henry Esmond, whose history, written by himself, is contained in the accompanying volume, came to Virginia in the year 1718, built his house in Castlewood, and here permanently settled. After a long, stormy life in England, he passed the remainder of his many years in peace and honor in this country; how beloved and respected by all his fellow-citizens, how inexpressibly dear to his family, I need not say. His whole life was a benefit to all who were connected with him. He gave the best example, the best advice, the most bounteous hospitality to his friends; the tenderest care to his dependants; and bestowed on those of his immediate family such a blessing of fatherly love and protection as can never be thought of, by us at least, without veneration and thankfulness; and my sons’ children, whether established here in our Republic, or at home in the always beloved mother country, from which our late quarrel hath separated us, may surely be proud to be descended from one who in all ways was so truly noble.

My dear mother died in 1736, soon after our return from England, whither my parents took me for my education; and where I made the acquaintance of Mr. Warrington, whom my children never saw. When it pleased Heaven, in the bloom of his youth, and after but a few months of a most happy union, to remove him from me, I owed my recovery from the grief which that calamity caused me mainly to my dearest father’s tenderness, and then to the blessing vouchsafed to me in the birth of my two beloved boys. I know the fatal difference which separated them in politics never disunited their hearts; and as I can love them both, whether wearing the King’s colors or the Republic’s, I am sure that they love me and one another, and him above all, my father and theirs, the dearest friend of their childhood, the noble gentleman who bred them from their infancy in the practice and knowledge of Truth, and Love, and Honor.

My children will never forget the appearance and figure of their revered grandfather; and I wish I possessed the art of drawing (which my papa had in perfection), so that I could leave to our descendants a portrait of one who was so good and so respected. My father was of a dark complexion, with a very great forehead and dark hazel eyes, overhung by eyebrows which remained black long after his hair was white. His nose was aquiline, his smile extraordinary sweet. How well I remember it, and how little any description I can write can recall his image! He was of rather low stature, not being above five feet seven inches in height; he used to laugh at my sons, whom he called his crutches, and say they were grown too tall for him to lean upon. But small as he was, he had a perfect grace and majesty of deportment such as I have never seen in this country, except perhaps in our friend Mr. Washington, and commanded respect wherever he appeared.

In all bodily exercises he excelled, and showed an extraordinary quickness and agility. Of fencing he was especially fond, and made my two boys proficient in that art; so much so, that when the French came to this country with M. Rochambeau, not one of his officers was superior to my Henry, and he was not the equal of my poor George, who had taken the King's side in our lamentable but glorious war of independence.

Neither my father nor my mother ever wore powder in their hair; both their heads were as white as silver, as I can remember them. My dear mother possessed to the last an extraordinary brightness and freshness of complexion; nor would people believe that she did not wear rouge. At sixty years of age she still looked young, and was quite agile. It was not until after that dreadful siege of our house by the Indians, which left me a widow ere I was a mother, that my dear mother's health broke. She never recovered her terror and anxiety of those days which ended so fatally for me, then a bride scarce six months married, and died in my father's arms ere my own year of widowhood was over.

From that day, until the last of his dear and honored life, it was my delight and consolation to remain with him as his comforter and companion; and from those little notes which my mother hath made here and there in the volume in which my father describes his adventures in Europe, I can well understand the extreme devotion with which she regarded him—a devotion so passionate and exclusive as to prevent her, I think, from loving any other person except with an inferior regard; her whole thoughts being centered on this one object of affection and worship. I know that, before her, my dear father did not show the love which he had for his daughter; and in her last and most sacred moments this dear and tender parent owned to me her repentance that she had not loved me enough; her jealousy even that my father should give his affection to any but herself; and, in the most fond and beautiful words of affection and admonition, she bade me never to leave him, and to supply the place which she was quitting. With a clear conscience, and a heart inexpressibly thankful, I think I can say that I fulfilled those dying commands, and that until his last hour my dearest father never had to complain that his daughter's love and fidelity failed him.

And it is since I knew him entirely—for during my mother's life he never quite opened himself to me—since I knew the value and splendor of that affection which he bestowed upon me, that I have come to understand and pardon what, I own, used to anger me in my mother's lifetime—her jealousy respecting her husband's love. 'Twas a gift so precious that no wonder she who had it was for keeping it all, and could part with none of it, even to her daughter.

Though I never heard my father use a rough word, 'twas extraordinary with how much awe his people regarded him; and the servants on our plantation, both those assigned from England and the purchased negroes, obeyed him with an eagerness such as the most severe taskmasters roundabout us could never get from their people. He was never familiar, though perfectly simply and natural; he was the same with the meanest man as with the greatest, and as courteous to a black slave girl as to the Governor's wife. No one ever thought of taking a liberty with him (except once a tipsy gentleman from York, and I am bound to own that my papa never forgave him); he set the humblest people at once on their ease with him, and brought down the most arrogant by a grave, satiric way which made persons exceedingly afraid of him. His courtesy was not put on like a Sunday suit, and laid by when the company went away; it was always the same, as he was always dressed the same, whether for a dinner for ourselves or for a great entertainment. They say he liked to be the first in his company; but what company was there in which he would not be first? When I went to Europe for my education, and we passed a winter at London with my half brother, my Lord Castlewood, and his second lady, I saw at her Majesty's Court some of the most famous gentleman of those days: and I thought to myself none of these are better than my papa; and the famous Lord Bolingbroke, who came to us from Dawley, said as much and that the men of that time were not like those of his youth. 'Were your father, Madam,' he said, 'to go into the woods, the Indians would elect him sachem;' and his Lordship was pleased to call me Pocahontas.

I did not see our other relative Bishop Tusher's lady, of whom so much is said in my papa's memoirs—although my mamma went to visit her in the country. I have no pride (as I showed by complying with my mother's request, and marrying a gentleman who was but the younger son of a Suffolk Baronet), yet I own to a decent respect for my name, and wonder how one who ever bore it should change it for that of Mrs. Thomas Tusher. I pass over, as odious and unworthy of credit, those reports (which I heard in Europe and was then too young to understand) how this person, having left her family and fled to Paris, out of jealousy of the Pretender, betrayed his secrets to my Lord Stair, King George's Ambassador, and nearly caused the Prince's death there; how she came to England and married this Mr. Tusher and became a great favorite of King George II. by whom Mr. Tusher was made a Dean, and then a Bishop. I did not see the lady, who chose to remain at her palace all the time we were in London; but after visiting her, my poor mother said she had lost all her good looks, and warned me not to set too much store by any such gifts which nature had bestowed upon me. She grew exceedingly stout; and I remember my brother's wife, Lady Castlewood, saying, 'No wonder she became a favorite, for the King likes them old and ugly, as his father did before him.' On which papa said, 'All women were alike; that there was never one so beautiful as that one; and that we could forgive her everything but her beauty.' And hereupon my mamma looked vexed, and my Lord Castlewood began to laugh; and I, of course, being a young creature, could not understand what was the subject of their conversation.

After the circumstances narrated in the third book of these Memoirs, my father and mother both went abroad, being advised by their friends to leave the country in consequence of the transactions which are recounted at the close of the volume of the Memoirs. But my brother hearing how the future Bishop's lady had quitted Castlewood and joined the Pretender at Paris, pursued him, and would have killed him, Prince as he was, had not the Prince managed to make his escape. On his expedition to Scotland directly after, Castlewood was so enraged against him that he asked leave to serve as a volunteer, and join the Duke of Argyll's army in Scotland, which the Pretender never had the courage to face; and thenceforth my lord was quite reconciled to the present reigning family, from whom he hath even received promotion.

Mrs. Tusher was by this time as angry against the Pretender as any of her relations could be, and used to boast as I have heard, that she not only brought back my lord to the Church of England, but procured the English peerage for him which the junior branch of our family at present enjoys. She was a great friend of Sir Robert Walpole, and would not rest until her husband slept at Lambeth, my papa used, laughing, to say. However, the Bishop died of apoplexy suddenly, and his wife erected a great monument over him; and the pair sleep under that stone, with a canopy of marble clouds and angels above them—the first Mrs. Tusher lying sixty miles off at Castlewood.

But my papa's genius and education are both greater than any a woman can be expected to have, and his adventures in Europe far more exciting than his life in this country, which was passed in the tranquil offices of love and duty; and I shall say no more by way of introduction to his Memoirs, nor keep my children from the perusal of a story which is much more interesting than that of their affectionate old mother,

Rachel Esmond Warrington.

Castlewood, Va.,
November 3, 1778.
The actors in the old tragedies, as we read, piped their iambics to a tune, speaking from under a mask, and wearing stilts and a great head-dress. 'Twas thought the dignity of the Tragic Muse required these appurtenances, and that she was not to move except to a measure and cadence. So Queen Medea slew her children to a slow music; and King Agamemnon perished in a dying fall (to use Mr. Dryden's words); the Chorus standing by in a set attitude, and rhythmically and decorously bewailing the fates of those great crowned persons. The Muse of History hath encumbered herself with ceremony as well as her Sister of the Theater. She too wears the mask and the cothurnus, and speaks to measure. She too, in our age, busies herself with the affairs only of kings; waiting on them obsequiously and stately, as if she were but a mistress of court ceremonies, and had nothing to do with the registering of the affairs of the common people. I have seen in this very old age and decrepitude the old French King Louis XIV., the type and model of kinghood—who never moved but to measure, who lived and died according to the laws of his Court-martial, persisting in enacting through life the part of Hero; and, divested of poetry, this was but a little wrinkled old man, pockmarked, and with a great periwig and red heels to make him look tall—a hero for a book if you like, or for a brass statue or a painted ceiling, a god in a Roman shape, but what more than a man for Mme. Maintenon, or the barber who shaved him, or M. Fagon, his surgeon? I wonder shall History ever pull off her periwig and cease to be court-ridden? Shall we see something of France and England besides Versailles and Windsor? I saw Queen Anne at the latter place tearing down the Park slopes, after her staghounds, and driving her one-horse chaise, a hot, redfaced woman, not in the least resembling that statue of her which turns its stone back upon St. Paul's, and faces the coaches struggling up Ludgate Hill. She was neither better bred nor wiser than you and me, though we knelt to hand her a letter or a wash-hand basin. Why shall History go on kneeling to the end of time? I am for having her rise up off her knees, and take a natural posture; not to be forever performing cringes and congees like a court-chamberlain, and shuffling backward out of doors in the presence of the sovereign. In a word, I would have History familiar rather than heroic, and think that Mr. Hogarth and Mr. Fielding will give our children a much better idea of the manners of the present age in England, than the Court Gazette and the newspapers which we get thence.

There was a German officer of Webb's, with whom we used to joke, and of whom a story (whereof I myself was the author) was got to be believed in the army, that he was the eldest son of the hereditary Grand Bootjack of the Empire, and the heir to that honor of which his ancestors had been very proud, having been kicked for twenty generations by one imperial foot, as they drew the boot from the other. I have heard that the old Lord Castlewood, of part of whose family these present volumes are a chronicle, though he came of quite as good blood as the Stuarts whom he served (and who, as regards mere lineage, are no better than a dozen English and Scotch houses I could name), was prouder of his post about the Court than of his ancestral honors, and valued his dignity (as Lord of the Butteries and Groom of the King's Posset) so highly, that he cheerfully ruined himself for the thankless and thriftless race who bestowed it. He pawned his plate for King Charles I., mortgaged his property for the same cause, and lost the greater part of it by fines and sequestration; stood a siege of his castle by Ireton, where his brother Thomas capitulated (afterward making terms with the Commonwealth, for which the elder brother never forgave him), and where his second brother Edward, who had embraced the ecclesiastical profession, was slain on Castlewood Tower, being engaged there both as preacher and artilleryman. This resolute old loyalist, who was with the King while his house was thus being battered down, escaped abroad with his only son, then a boy, to return and take a part in Worcester fight. On that fatal field Eustace Esmond was killed, and Castlewood fled from it once more into exile, and henceforward, and after the Restoration, never was away from the court of the monarch (for whose return we offer thanks in the Prayer Book) who sold his country and who took bribes of the French king.
What spectacle is more august than that of a great king in exile? Who is more worthy of respect than a brave man in misfortune? Mr. Addison has painted such a figure in his noble piece of "Cato." But suppose fugitive Cato fuddling himself at a tavern with a wench on each knee, a dozen faithful and tipsy companions of defeat, and a landlord calling out for his bill; and the dignity of misfortune is straightway lost. The Historical Muse turns away shamefaced from the vulgar scene, and closes the door—on which the exile's unpaid drink is scored up—upon him and his pots and his pipes, and the tavern chorus which he and his friends are singing. Such a man as Charles should have had an Ostade or Mieris to paint him. Your Knellers and Le Bruns only deal in clumsy and impossible allegories; and it hath always seemed to me blasphemy to claim Olympus for such a wine-drabbled divinity as that.

About the King's follower, the Viscount Castlewood—orphaned of his son, ruined by his fidelity, bearing many wounds and marks of bravery, old and in exile—his kinsmen I suppose should be silent; nor if this patriarch fall down in his cups, call fie upon him, and fetch passers-by to laugh at his red face and white hairs. What! does a stream rush out of a mountain free and pure, to roll through fair pastures, to feed and throw out bright tributaries, and to end in a village gutter? Lives that have noble commencements have often no better endings; it is not without a kind of awe and reverence that an observer should speculate upon such careers as he traces the course of them. I have seen too much of success in life to take off my hat and huzza to it as it passes in its gilt coach; and would do my little part with my neighbors on foot that they should not gape with too much wonder, nor applaud too loudly. Is it the Lord Mayor going in state to mince pies and the Mansion House? Is it poor Jack of Newgate's procession, with the sheriff and javelin-men, conducting him on his last journey to Tyburn? I look into my heart and think that I am as good as my Lord Mayor, and know I am as bad as Tyburn Jack. Give me a chain and red gown and a pudding before me, and I could play the part of Alderman very well, and sentence Jack after dinner. Starve me, keep me from books and honest people, educate me to love dice, gin, and pleasure, and put me on Hounslow Heath, with a purse before me, and I will take it. "And I shall be deservedly hanged," say you, wishing to put an end to this prosing. I don't say No. I can't but accept the world as I find it, including a rope's end, as long as it is in fashion.
CHAPTER I.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE FAMILY OF ESMOND OF CASTLEWOOD HALL.

When Francis, fourth Viscount Castlewood, came to his title, and presently after to take possession of his house of Castlewood, County Hants, in the year 1691, almost the only tenant of the place besides the domestics was a lad of twelve years of age, of whom no one seemed to take any note until my Lady Viscountess lighted upon him, going over the house with the housekeeper on the day of her arrival. The boy was in the room known as the Book-room, or Yellow Gallery, where the portraits of the family used to hang, that fine piece among others of Sir Antonio Van Dyke of George, second Viscount, and that by Mr. Dobson of my Lord the third Viscount, just deceased, which it seems his lady and widow did not think fit to carry away, when she sent for and carried off to the house at Chelsea, near to London, the picture of herself by Sir Peter Lely, in which her Ladyship was represented as a huntress of Diana's court.

The new and fair lady of Castlewood found the sad, lonely little occupant of this gallery busy over his great book, which he laid down when he was aware that a stranger was at hand. And, knowing who that person must be, the lad stood up and bowed before her, performing a shy obeisance to the mistress of his house.

She stretched out her hand—indeed when was it that that hand would not stretch out to do an act of kindness, or to protect grief and ill-fortune? 'And this is our kinsman,' she said; 'and what is your name, kinsman?'

'My name is Henry Esmond,' said the lad, looking up at her in a sort of delight and wonder, for she had come upon him as a Dea certè, and appeared the most charming object he had ever looked on. Her golden hair was shining in the gold of the sun; her complexion was of a dazzling bloom; her lips smiling, and her eyes beaming with a kindness which made Harry Esmond's heart to beat with surprise.

'His name is Henry Esmond, sure enough, my Lady,' says Mrs. Worksop, the housekeeper (an old tyrant whom Henry Esmond plagued more than he hated), and the old gentlewoman looked significantly toward the late lord's picture, as it now is in the family, noble and severe-looking, with his hand on his sword, and his order on his cloak, which he had from the Emperor during the war on the Danube against the Turk.

Seeing the great and undeniable likeness between this portrait and the lad, the new Viscountess, who had still hold of the boy's hand as she looked at the picture, blushed and dropped the hand quickly, and walked down the gallery, followed by Mrs. Worksop. When the lady came back, Harry Esmond stood exactly in the same spot, and with his hand as it had fallen when he dropped it on his black coat.

Her heart melted, I suppose (indeed she hath since owned as much), at the notion that she should do anything unkind to any mortal, great or small; for, when she returned, she had sent away the housekeeper upon an errand by the door at the farther end of the gallery; and coming back to the lad, with a look of infinite pity and tenderness in her eyes, she took his hand again, placing her other fair hand on his head, and saying some words to him, which were so kind, and said in a voice so sweet, that the boy, who had never looked upon so much beauty before, felt as if the touch of a superior being or angel smote him down to the ground, and kissed the fair, protecting hand as he knelt on one knee. To the very last hour of his life, Esmond remembered the lady as she then spoke and looked: the rings on her fair hands, the very scent of her robe, the beam of her eyes lighting up with surprise and kindness, her lips blooming in a smile, the sun making a golden halo round her hair.

As the boy was yet in this attitude of humility, enters behind him a portly gentleman, with a little girl of four years old in his hand. The gentleman burst into a great laugh at the lady and her adorer, with his little queer figure, his sallow face, and long black hair. The lady blushed, and seemed to deprecate his ridicule by a look of appeal to her husband, for it was my Lord Viscount who now arrived, and whom the lad knew, having once before seen him in the late lord's lifetime.

'So this is the little priest!' says my Lord, looking down at the lad; 'welcome, kinsman.'

'He is saying his prayers to mamma,' says the little girl, who came up to her papa's knees; and my Lord burst out into another great laugh at this, and kinsman Henry looked very silly. He invented a half-dozen of speeches in reply, but 'twas months afterward when he thought of this adventure; as it was, he had never a word in answer.

'Le pauvre enfant, il n'a que nous,' says the lady, looking to her lord; and the boy, who understood her, though doubtless she thought otherwise, thanked her with all his heart for her kind speech.

'And he shan't want for friends here,' says my Lord, in a kind voice, 'shall he, little Trix?'
The little girl, whose name was Beatrix, and whom her papa called by this diminutive, looked at Henry Esmond solemnly, with a pair of large eyes, and then a smile shone over her face, which was as beautiful as that of a cherub, and she came up and put out a little hand to him. A keen and delightful pang of gratitude, happiness, affection filled the orphan child's heart, as he received from the protectors whom Heaven had sent to him these touching words and tokens of friendliness and kindness. But an hour since, he had felt quite alone in the world: when he heard the great peal of bells from Castlewood church ringing that morning to welcome the arrival of the new lord and lady, it had rung only terror and anxiety to him, for he knew not how the new owner would deal with him; and those to whom he formerly looked for protection were forgotten or dead. Pride and doubt too had kept him within doors, when the Vicar and the people of the village, and the servants of the house, had gone out to welcome my Lord Castlewood—for Henry Esmond was no servant, though a dependant; no relative, though he bore the name and inherited the blood of the house; and in the midst of the noise and acclamations attending the arrival of the new lord (for whom, you may be sure, a feast was got ready, and guns were fired, and tenants and domestics huzzaed when his carriage approached and rolled into the courtyard of the Hall), no one ever took any notice of young Henry Esmond, who sat unobserved and alone in the Book room, until the afternoon of that day, when his new friends found him.

When my Lord and Lady were going away thence, the little girl, still holding her kinsman by the hand, bade him to come too. 'Thou wilt always forsake an old friend for a new one, Trix,' says her father to her good-naturedly; and went into the gallery, giving an arm to his lady. They passed thence through the music-gallery, long since dismantled, and Queen Elizabeth's rooms, in the clock tower, and out into the terrace, where was a fine prospect of sunset and the great darkling woods with a cloud of rooks returning; and the plain and river with Castlewood village beyond, the purple hills beautiful to look at—and the little heir of Castlewood, a child two years old, was already here on the terrace in his nurse's arms, from whom he ran across the grass instantly he perceived his mother, and came to her.

'If thou canst not be happy here,' says my Lord, looking round at the scene, 'thou art hard to please, Rachel.'

'I am happy where you are,' she said, 'but we were happiest of all at Walcote Forest.' Then my Lord began to describe what was before them to his wife, and what indeed little Harry knew better than he, viz., the history of the house; how by yonder gate the page ran away with the heiress of Castlewood, by which the estate came into the present family; how the Roundheads attacked the clock tower, which my Lord's father was slain in defending. "I was but two years old then," says he, "but take forty-six from ninety, and how old shall I be, kinsman Harry?"

"Thirty," says his wife, with a laugh.

"A great deal too old for you, Rachel," answered my Lord, looking fondly down at her. Indeed she seemed to be a girl, and was at that time scarce twenty years old.

"You know, Frank, I will do anything to please you," says she, "and I promise you I will grow older every day."

"You mustn't call papa Frank; you must call papa my Lord, now," says Miss Beatrix, with a toss of her little head; at which the mother smiled, and the good-natured father laughed, and the little trotting boy laughed not knowing why, but because he was happy, no doubt—as everyone seemed to be there. How those trivial incidents and words, the landscape and sunshine, and the group of people smiling and talking remain fixed on the memory!

As the sun was setting, the little heir was sent in the arms of his nurse to bed, whither he went howling; but little Trix was promised to sit to supper that night, 'and you will come too, kinsman, won't you?' she said.

Harry Esmond blushed: 'I—I have supper with Mrs. Work-sop,' says he.

'D—n it,' says my Lord, 'thou shalt sup with us, Harry, to-night! Shan't refuse a lady, shall he, Trix' and they all wondered at Harry's performance as a trencher-man, in which character the poor boy acquitted himself very remarkably; for the truth is he had had no dinner, nobody thinking of him in the bustle which the house was in during the preparations antecedent to the new Lord's arrival.

'No dinner! poor dear child!' says my Lady, heaping up his plate with meat, and my Lord, filling a bumper for him, bade him call a health; on which Master Harry, crying 'The King,' tossed off the wine. My Lord was ready to drink that, and most other toasts: indeed only too ready. He would not hear of Dr. Tusher (the Vicar of Castlewood, who came to supper) going away when the sweetmeats were brought; he had not had a chaplain long enough, he said, to be tired of him; so his reverence kept my Lord company for some hours over a pipe and a punch-bowl; and went away home with rather a reeling gait, and declaring a dozen of times that his Lordship's affability surpassed every kindness he had ever had from his Lordship's gracious family.

As for young Esmond, when he got to his little chamber, it was with a heart full of surprise and gratitude toward the new friends whom this happy day had brought him. He was up and watching long before the house was astir, longing to see that fair lady and her children—that kind protector and patron; and only fearful lest their welcome of the past night should in any way be withdrawn or altered. But presently little Beatrix came out into the garden, and her mother followed, who greeted Harry as kindly as before. He told her at greater length the histories of the house (which he had been taught in the old lord's time), and to which she listened with great interest; and then he told her, with respect to the night before, that he understood French and thanked her for her protection.

'Do you?' says she, with a blush; 'then, sir, you shall teach me and Beatrix.' And she asked him many more questions regarding himself, which had best be told more fully and explicitly than in those brief replies which the lad made to his mistress's questions.

CHAPTER II.

RELATES HOW FRANCIS, FOURTH VISCOUNT, ARRIVES AT CASTLEWOOD.

'Tis known that the name of Esmond and the estate of Castlewood, com. Hants, came into possession of the present family through Dorothea, daughter and heiress of Edward, Earl and Marquis Esmond and Lord of Castlewood, which lady married, 23 Eliz., Henry Poyns, gent.; the said Henry being then a page in the household of her father. Francis, son and heir of the above Henry and Dorothea, who took the maternal name which the family hath borne subsequently, was made knight and baronet by King James I.; and being of a military disposition remained long in Germany, with the Elector-Palatine, in whose service Sir Francis incurred both expense and danger, lending large sums of money to that unfortunate Prince; and receiving many wounds in the battles against the Imperialists in which Sir Francis engaged.

On his return home Sir Francis was rewarded for his services and many sacrifices, by his late Majesty James I., who graciously conferred upon this tried servant the post of Warden of the Butteries and Groom of the King's Posset, which high and confidential office he filled in that king's and his unhappy successor's reign.
His age and many wounds and infirmities obliged Sir Francis to perform much of his duty by deputy; and his son, Sir George Esmond, knight and banneret, first as his father's lieutenant, and afterward as inheritor of his father's title and dignity, performed this office during almost the whole of the reign of King Charles I., and his two sons, who succeeded him.

Sir George Esmond married, rather beneath the rank that a person of his name and honor might aspire to, the daughter of Thos. Topman of the City of London, alderman and goldsmith, who taking the Parliamentary side in the troubles then commencing, disappointed Sir George of the property which he expected at the demise of his father-in-law, who devised his money to his second daughter Barbara, a spinster.

Sir George Esmond, on his part, was conspicuous for his attachment and loyalty to the Royal cause and person; and the King being at Oxford in 1642, Sir George, with the consent of his father, then very aged and infirm, and residing at his house of Castlewood, melted the whole of the family plate for his Majesty's service.

For this, and other sacrifices and merits, his Majesty, by patent under the Privy Seal, dated Oxford, January, 1643, was pleased to advance Sir Francis Esmond to the dignity of Viscount Castlewood of Shandon, in Ireland; and the Viscount's estate being much impoverished by loans to the King, which in those troublesome times his Majesty could not repay, a grant of land in the plantations of Virginia was given to the Lord Viscount; part of which land is in possession of descendants of his family to the present day.

The first Viscount Castlewood died full of years, and within a few months after he had been advanced to his honors. He was succeeded by his eldest son, the before named George; and left issue besides, Thomas, a colonel in the King's army, who afterward joined the Usurper's Government; and Francis, in holy orders, who was slain while defending the house of Castlewood against the Parliament, anno 1647.

George, Lord Castlewood (the second viscount), of King Charles the I.'s time, had no male issue save his one son Eustace Esmond, who was killed, with half of the Castlewood men beside him, at Worcester fight. The lands about Castlewood were sold and apportioned to the Commonwealth men; Castlewood being concerned in almost all of the plots against the Protector, after the death of the King, and up to King Charles II.'s restoration. My Lord followed that king's Court about in his exile, having ruined himself in its service. He had but one daughter, who was of no great comfort to her father; for misfortune had not taught those exiles sobriety of life; and it is said that the Duke of York and his brother the King both quarreled about Isabel Esmond. She was maid of honor to the Queen Henrietta Maria; she early joined the Roman Church; her father, a weak man, following her not long after at Breda.

On the death of Eustace Esmond at Worcester, Thomas Esmond, nephew to my Lord Castlewood, and then a stripling, became heir to the title. His father had taken the Parliament side in the quarrels, and so had been estranged from the chief of his house; and my Lord Castlewood was at first so much enraged to think that his title (albeit little more than an empty one now) should pass to a rascally Roundhead, that he would have married again, and indeed proposed to do so to a vintner's daughter at Bruges, to whom his Lordship owed a score for lodging when the King was there, but for fear of the laughter of the Court, and the anger of his daughter, of whom he stood in awe; for she was in temper as imperious and violent as my Lord, who was much enfeebled by wounds and drinking, was weak.

Lord Castlewood would have had a match between his daughter Isabel and her cousin, the son of that Francis Esmond who was killed at Castlewood siege. And the lady, it was said, took a fancy to the young man, who was her junior by several years (which circumstance she did not consider to be a fault in him); but having paid his court, and being admitted to the intimacy of the house, he suddenly flung up his suit when it seemed to be pretty prosperous, without giving a pretext for his behavior. His friends rallied him at what they laughingly chose to call his infidelity; Jack Churchill, Frank Esmond's lieutenant in the Royal Regiment of Foot-guards, getting the company which Esmond vacated when he left the Court and went to Tangier in a rage at discovering that his promotion depended on the complaisance of his elderly affianced bride. He and Churchill, who had been condiscipuli at St. Paul's School, had words about this matter; and Frank Esmond said to him with an oath, 'Jack, your sister may be so-and-so, but by Jove my wife shan't!' and swords were drawn, and blood drawn too, until friends separated them on this quarrel. Few men were so jealous about the point of honor in those days; and gentlemen of good birth and lineage thought a royal blot was an ornament to the family coat. Frank Esmond retired in the sulks, first to Tangier, whence he returned after two years' service, settling on a small property he had of his mother, near to Winchester, and became a country gentleman, and kept a pack of beagles, and never came to Court again in King Charles' time. But his uncle Castlewood was never reconciled to him; nor, for some time afterward, his cousin whom he had refused.

By places, pensions, bounties from France, and gifts from the King while his daughter was in favor, Lord Castlewood, who had spent in the Royal service his youth and fortune, did not retrieve the latter quite, and never cared to visit Castlewood or repair it since the death of his son, but managed to keep a good house, and figure at Court, and to save a considerable sum of ready money.

And now, his heir and nephew, Thomas Esmond, began to bid for his uncle's favor. Thomas had served with the Emperor, and with the Dutch, when King Charles was compelled to lend troops to the States; and against them, when his Majesty made an alliance with the French King. In these campaigns Thomas Esmond was more remarked for dueling, brawling, vice, and play, than for any conspicuous gallantry in the field, and came back to England, like many another English gentleman who has traveled, with a character by no means improved by his foreign experience. He had dissipated his small paternal inheritance of younger brother's portion, and, as truth must be told, was no better than a hanger-on of ordinaries, a brawler about Alsacia and the Friars, when he bethought him of a means of mending his fortune.

His cousin was now of more than middle age, and had nobody's word but her own for the beauty which she said she once possessed. She was lean, and yellow, and long in the tooth; all the red and white in all the toy-shops in London could not make a beauty of her—Mr. Killigrew called her the Sybil, the death's-head put up at the King's feast as a memento mori, etc.,—in fine, a woman who might be easy of conquest, but whom only a very bold man would think of conquering. This bold man was Thomas Esmond. He had a fancy to my Lord Castlewood's savings, the amount of which rumor had very much exaggerated. Mme. Isabel was said to have Royal jewels of great value; whereas poor Tom Esmond's last coat but one was in the pawn.

My Lord had at this time a fine house in Lincoln's Inn Fields, nigh to the Duke's Theater and the Portugal ambassador's chapel. Tom Esmond, who had frequented the one as long as he had money to spend among the actresses, now came to the church as assiduously. He looked so lean and shabby that he passed without difficulty for a repentant sinner; and so becoming converted, you may be sure took his uncle's priest for a director.

This charitable father reconciled him with the old lord, his uncle, who a short time before would not speak to him, as Tom passed under my Lord's coach window, his Lordship going in state to his place at Court, while his nephew slunk by, with his battered hat and feather, and the point of his rapier sticking out of the scabbard, to his twopenny ordinary in Bell Yard.

Thomas Esmond, after this reconciliation with his uncle, very soon began to grow sleek, and to show signs of the benefits of good living and clean linen. He fasted rigorously twice a week, to be sure; but he made amends on the other days; and, to show how great his appetite was, Mr. Wycherley said, he ended by swallowing that fly-blown rank old morsel his cousin. There were endless jokes and lampoons about this marriage at Court; but Tom rode thither in his uncle’s coach now, called him father, and having won could afford to laugh. This marriage took place very shortly before King Charles died; whom the Viscount of Castlewood speedily followed.

The issue of this marriage was one son, whom the parents watched with an intense eagerness and care; but who, in spite of nurse and physicians, had only a brief existence. His tainted blood did not run very long in his poor feeble little body. Symptoms of evil broke out early on him; and, part from flattery, part superstition, nothing would satisfy my Lord and Lady, especially the latter, but having poor little cripple touched by his Majesty at his church. They were ready to cry out miracle at first (the doctors and quack-salvers being constantly in attendance on the child, and experimenting on his poor little body with every conceivable nostrum)—but though there seemed, from some reason, a notable amelioration in the infant’s health after his Majesty touched him, in a few weeks afterward the poor thing died—causing the lampooners of the Court to say that the King, in expelling evil out of the infant of Tom Esmond and Isabella his wife, expelled the life out of it, which was nothing but corruption.

The mother’s natural pang at losing this poor little child must have been increased when she thought of her rival Frank Esmond’s wife, who was a favorite of the whole Court, where my poor Lady Castlewood was neglected, and who had one child, a daughter, flourishing and beautiful, and was about to become a mother once more.

The Court, as I have heard, only laughed, the more because the poor lady, who had pretty well passed the age when ladies are accustomed to have children, nevertheless determined not to give hope up, and even when she came to live at Castlewood, was constantly sending over to Hexton for the doctor, and announcing to her friends the arrival of an heir. This absurdity of hers was one among many others which the wags used to play upon. Indeed, to the last days of her life, my Lady Viscountess had the comfort of fancying herself beautiful, and persisted in blooming up to the very midst of winter, painting roses on her cheeks long after their natural season, and attiring herself like summer though her head was covered with snow.

Gentlemen who were about the Court of King Charles, and King James, have told the present writer a number of stories about this queer old lady, with which it’s not necessary that posterity should be entertained. She is said to have had great powers of inveotive; and, if she fought with all her rivals in King James’ favor, ’tis certain she must have had a vast number of quarrels on her hands. She was a woman of an intrepid spirit, and, it appears, pursued and rather fatigued his Majesty with her rights and her wrongs. Some say that the cause of her leaving Court was jealousy of Frank Esmond’s wife; others that she was forced to retreat after a great battle which took place at Whitehall between her Ladyship and Lady Dorchester, Tom Killigrew’s daughter, whom the King delighted to honor, and in which that ill-favored Esther got the better of our elderly Vashti. But her Ladyship, for her part, always averred that it was her husband’s quarrel, and not her own, which occasioned the banishment of the two into the country; and the cruel ingratitude of the Sovereign in giving away, out of the family, that place of Warden of the Butteries and Groom of the King’s Posset which the two last Lords Castlewood had held so honorably, and which was now conferred upon a fellow of yesterday, and a hanger-on of that odious Dorchester creature, my Lord Bergamot; * ‘I never,’ said my Lady, ‘could have come to see his Majesty’s posset carried by any other hand than an Esmond. I should have dashed the salver out of Lord Bergamot’s hand, had I met him.’ And those who knew her Ladyship are aware that she was a person quite capable of performing this feat, had she not wisely kept out of the way.

Holding the purse-strings in her own control, to which, indeed, she liked to bring most persons who came near her, Lady Castlewood could command her husband’s obedience, and so broke up her establishment at London—she had removed from Lincoln’s Inn Fields to Chelsea, to a pretty new house she bought there—and brought her establishment, her maids, lapdogs, and gentlewomen, her priest, and his Lordship, her husband, to Castlewood Hall, that she had never seen since she

* Lionel Tipton, created Baron Bergamot, ann. 1683, Gentleman Usher of the Back Stairs, and afterward appointed Warden of the Butteries and Groom of the King’s Posset (on the decease of George, second Viscount Castlewood), accompanied his Majesty to St. Germain’s, where he died without issue. No Groom of the Posset was appointed by the Prince of Orange, nor hath there been such an officer in any succeeding reign.
quitted it as a child with her father during the troubles of King Charles I.'s reign. The walls were still open in the old house as they had been left by the shot of the Commonwealthmen. A part of the mansion was restored and furbished up with the plate, hangings, and furniture brought from the house in London. My Lady meant to have a triumphal entry into Castlewood village, and expected the people to cheer as she drove over the Green in her coach, my Lord beside her, her gentlewomen, lap-dogs, and cockatoos on the opposite seat, six horses to her carriage and servants armed and mounted following it and preceding it. But 'twas in the height of the No-Popery cry; the folks in the village and the neighboring town were scared by the sight of her Ladyship's painted face and eyelids, as she bobbed her head out of the coach window, meaning, no doubt, to be very gracious; and one old woman said, 'Lady Isabel! lord-a-mercy, it's Lady Jezebel!' a name by which the enemies of the right honorable Viscountess were afterward in the habit of designating her. The country was then in a great No-Popery fervor; her Ladyship's known conversion, and her husband's, the priest in her train, and the service performed at the chapel of Castlewood (though the chapel had been built for that worship before any other was heard of in the country, and though the service was performed in the most quiet manner), got her no favor at first in the country or village. By far the greater part of the estate of Castlewood had been confiscated, and been parcelled out to Commonwealthmen. One or two of these old Cromwellian soldiers were still alive in the village, and looked grimly at first upon my Lady Viscountess, when she came to dwell there.

She appeared at the Hexton Assembly, bringing her lord after her, scaring the country folks with the splendor of her diamonds, which she always wore in public. They said she wore them in private too, and slept with them round her neck; though the writer can pledge his word that this was a calumny. 'If she were to take them off,' my Lady Sark said, 'Tom Esmond, her husband, would run away with them and pawn them.' 'Twas another calumny. My Lady Sark was also an exile from Court, and there had been war between the two ladies before.

The village people began to be reconciled presently to their lady, who was generous and kind, though fantastic and haughty in her ways; and whose praises Dr. Tusher, the Vicar, sounded loudly among his flock. As for my Lord, he gave no great trouble, being considered scarce more than an appendage to my Lady, who, as daughter of the old lords of Castlewood, and possessor of vast wealth, as the country folks said (though indeed nine-tenths of it existed but in rumor), was looked upon as the real queen of the Castle and mistress of all it contained.

CHAPTER III.

WHITHER IN THE TIME OF THOMAS, THIRD VISCOUNT, I HAD PRECEDED HIM AS PAGE TO ISABELLA.

Coming up to London again some short time after this retreat, the Lord Castlewood dispatched a retainer of his to a little cottage in the village of Ealing, near to London, where for some time had dwelt an old French refugee, by name Mr. Pastoureau, one of those whom the persecution of the Huguenots by the French king had brought over to this country. With this old man lived a little lad who went by the name of Henry Thomas. He remembered to have lived in another place a short time before, near to London, too, among looms and spinning-wheels, and a great deal of psalm-singing and church-going, and a whole colony of Frenchmen.

There he had a dear, dear friend, who died, and whom he called aunt. She used to visit him in his dreams sometimes; and her face, though it was homely, was a thousand times dearer to him than that of Mrs. Pastoureau, Bon Papa Pastoureau’s new wife, who came to live with him after aunt went way. And there, at Spittlefields, as it used to be called, lived Uncle George, who was a weaver too, but used to tell Harry that he was a little gentleman, and that his father was a Captain, and his mother an angel.

When he said so, Bon Papa used to look up from the loom, where he was embroidering beautiful silk flowers, and say, ‘Angel! she belongs to the Babylonish scarlet woman.’ Bon Papa was always talking of the scarlet woman. He had a little room where he always used to preach and sing hymns out of his great old nose. Little Harry did not like preaching; he liked better the fine stories which aunt used to tell him. Bon Papa’s wife never told him pretty stories; she quarreled with Uncle George, and he went away.

After this Harry’s Bon Papa and his wife and two children of her own that she had brought with her, came to live at Ealing. The new wife gave her children the best of everything, and Harry many a whipping, he knew not why. Besides blows, he got ill names from her, which need not be set down here for the sake of old Mr. Pastoureau, who was still kind sometimes. The unhappiness of those days is long forgiven, though they cast a shade of melancholy over the child’s youth which will accompany him, no doubt, to the end of his days; as those tender twigs are bent the trees grow afterward; and he, at least, who has suffered as a child, and is not quite perverted in that early school of unhappiness, learns to be gentle and long-suffering with little children.

Harry was very glad when a gentleman dressed in black, on horseback, with a mounted servant behind him, came to fetch him away from Ealing. The noverca, or unjust stepmother, who had neglected him for her own two children, gave him supper enough the night before he went away, and plenty in the morning. She did not beat him once, and told the children to keep their hands off him. One was a girl, and Harry never could bear to strike a girl; and the other was a boy, whom he could easily have beat, but he always cried out, when Mrs. Pastoureau came sailing to the rescue with arms like a flail. She only washed Harry’s face the day he went away; nor ever so much as once boxed his ears. She whimpered rather when the gentleman in black came for the boy; and old Mr. Pastoureau, as he gave the child his blessing, scowled over his shoulder at the strange gentleman, and grumbled out some thing about Babylon and the scarlet lady. He was grown quite old, like a child almost. Mrs. Pastoureau used to wipe his nose as she did to the children. She was a great big handsome young woman; but, though she pretended to cry, Harry thought ’twas only a sham, and sprung quite delighted upon the horse upon which the lackey helped him.

He was a Frenchman; his name was Blaise. The child could talk to him in his own language perfectly well; he knew it better than English indeed, having lived hitherto chiefly among French people; and being called the Little Frenchman by other boys on Ealing Green. He soon learned to speak English perfectly, and to forget some of his French; children forget easily. Some earlier and fainter recollections the child had of a different country, and a town with tall white houses, and a ship. But these were quite indistinct in the boy’s mind, as indeed the memory of Ealing soon became, at least of much that he suffered there.

The lackey before whom he rode was very lively and voluble, and informed the boy that the gentleman riding before him was my lord’s chaplain, Father Holt—that he was now to be called Master Harry Esmond—that my Lord Viscount Castlewood was his parrain—that he was to live at the great house of Castlewood, in the province of ——shire, where he would see Madame the Viscountess, who was a grand lady. And so, seated on a cloth before Blaise’s saddle, Harry Esmond was brought to London, and to a fine square called Covent Garden, near to which his patron lodged.

Mr. Holt, the priest, took the child by the hand, and brought him to this nobleman, a grand languid nobleman in a great cap and flowered morning gown, sucking oranges. He patted Harry on the head and gave him an orange.

‘C’est bien ça,’ he said to the priest after eyeing the child, and the gentleman in black shrugged his shoulders.

‘Let Blaise take him out for a holiday’—and out for a holiday the boy and the valet went. Harry went jumping along; he was glad enough to go.

He will remember to his life’s end the delights of those days. He was taken to see a play by M. Blaise, in a house a thousand times greater and finer than the booth at Ealing Fair, and on the next happy day they took water on the river, and Harry saw London Bridge, with the houses and booksellers’ shops thereon, looking like a street, and the Tower of London, with the armor, and the great lions and bears in the moat—all under company of M. Blaise.

Presently, of an early morning, all the party set forth for the country, namely, my Lord Viscount and the other gentleman; M. Blaise and Harry on a pillion behind them, and two or three men with pistols leading the baggage horses. And all along the road the Frenchman told little Harry stories of brigands which made the child’s hair stand on end, and terrified him, so that at the great gloomy inn on the road where they lay he besought to be allowed to sleep in a room with one of the servants, and was compassionated by Mr. Holt, the gentleman who traveled with my lord, and who gave the child a little bed in his chamber.

His artless talk and answers very likely inclined this gentleman in the boy’s favor, for the next day Mr. Holt said Harry should ride behind him, and not with the French lackey; and all along the journey put a thousand questions to the child—as to his foster brother and relations at Ealing; what his old grandfather had taught him; what languages he knew, whether he could read and write and sing, and so forth. And Mr. Holt found that Harry could read and write, and possessed the two languages of French and English very well; and when he asked Harry about singing, the lad broke out with a hymn to the tune of Dr. Martin Luther, which set Mr. Holt a-laughing; and even caused his grand parrain in the laced hat and periwig to laugh too when Holt told him what the child was singing. For it appeared that Dr. Martin Luther's hymns were not sung in the churches Mr. Holt preached at.

'You must never sing that song any more; do you hear, little mannikin?' says my Lord Viscount, holding up a finger.

'But we will try and teach you a better, Harry,' Mr. Holt said; and the child answered, for he was a docile child, and of an affectionate nature, 'That he loved pretty songs, and would try and learn anything the gentleman would tell him.' That day he so pleased the gentlemen by his talk that they had him to dine with them at the inn, and encouraged him in his prattle; and M. Blaise, with whom he rode and dined the day before, waited upon him now.

'Tis well, 'tis well!' said Blaise, that night (in his own language) when they lay again at an inn. 'We are a little lord here; we are a little lord now; we shall see what we are when we come to Castlewood, where my lady is.'

'When shall we come to Castlewood, M. Blaise?' says Harry.

'Parbleu! my lord does not press himself,' Blaise says, with a grin; and, indeed, it seemed as if his lordship was not in a great hurry, for he spent three days in that journey, which Harry Esmond hath often since ridden in a dozen hours. For the last two of the days Harry rode with the priest, who was so kind to him that the child had grown to be quite fond and familiar with him by the journey's end, and had scarce a thought in his little heart which by that time he had not confided to his new friend.

At length, on the third day, at evening, they came to a village standing on a green with elms round it, very pretty to look at; and the people there all took off their hats, and made courtesies to my Lord Viscount, who bowed to them all languidly; and there was one portly person that wore a cassock and a broad-leafed hat, who bowed lower than anyone—and with this one both my lord and Mr. Holt had a few words. 'This, Harry, is Castlewood church,' says Mr. Holt, 'and this is the pillar thereof, learned Dr. Tusher. Take off your hat, sirrah, and salute Dr. Tusher!'

'Come up to supper, doctor,' says my lord; at which the doctor made another low bow, and the party moved on toward a grand house that was before them, with many gray towers and vanes on them, and windows flaming in the sunshine; and a great army of rooks, wheeling over their heads, made for the woods behind the house, as Harry saw; and Mr. Holt told him that they lived at Castlewood too.
They came to the house, and passed under an arch into a courtyard, with a fountain in the center, where many men came and held my lord's stirrup as he descended, and paid great respect to Mr. Holt likewise. And the child thought that the servants looked at him curiously, and smiled to one another—and he recalled what Blaise had said to him when they were in London, and Harry had spoken about his god-papa, when the Frenchman said, 'Parbleu, one sees well that my lord is your godfather;' words whereof the poor lad did not know the meaning then, though he apprehended the truth in a very short time afterward, and learned it, and thought of it with no small feeling of shame.

Taking Harry by the hand as soon as they were both descended from their horses, Mr. Holt led him across the court, and under a low door to rooms on a level with the ground; one of which Father Holt said was to be the boy's chamber, the other on the other side of the passage being the father's own; and as soon as the little man's face was washed, and the father's own dress arranged, Harry's guide took him once more to the door by which my lord had entered the hall, and up a stair and through an anteroom to my lady's drawing room—an apartment than which Harry thought he had never seen anything more grand—no, not in the Tower of London which he had just visited. Indeed, the chamber was richly ornamented in the manner of Queen Elizabeth's time, with great stained windows at either end, and hangings of tapestry, which the sun, shining through the colored glass, painted of a thousand hues; and here in state, by the fire, sat a lady to whom the priest took up Harry, who was indeed amazed by her appearance.

My Lady Viscountess' face was daubed with white and red up to the eyes, to which the paint gave an unearthly glare; she had a tower of lace on her head, under which was a bush of black curls—borrowed curls—so that no wonder little Harry Esmond was scared when he was first presented to her, the kind priest acting as master of the ceremonies at that solemn introduction, and he stared at her with eyes almost as great as her own, as he had stared at the player woman who acted the wicked tragedy queen, when the players came down to Ealing Fair. She sat in a great chair by the fire corner; in her lap was a spaniel dog that barked furiously; on a little table by her was her ladyship's snuffbox and her sugar-plum box. She wore a dress of black velvet, and a petticcoat of flame-colored brocade. She had as many rings on her fingers as the old woman of Banbury Cross; and pretty, small feet which she was fond of showing, with great gold clocks to her stockings, and white pantofles with red heels; and an odor of musk was shook out of her garments whenever she moved or quitted the room, leaning on her tortoise-shell stick, little Fury barking at her heels.

Mrs. Tusher, the parson's wife, was with my lady. She had been waiting-woman to her ladyship in the late lord's time, and, having her soul in that business, took naturally to it when the Viscountess of Castlewood returned to inhabit her father's house.

'I present to your ladyship your kinsman and little page of honor, Master Henry Esmond,' Mr. Holt said, bowing lowly, with a sort of comical humility. 'Make a pretty bow to my lady, monsieur; and then another little bow, not so low, to Madame Tusher, the fair priestess of Castlewood.'

'Where I have lived and hope to die, sir,' says Madame Tusher giving a hard glance at the brat, and then at my lady. Upon her the boy's whole attention was for a time directed. He could not keep his great eyes off from her. Since the Empress of Ealing, he had seen nothing so awful.

'Does my appearance please you, little page?' asked the lady.

'He would be very hard to please if it didn't,' cried Madame Tusher.

'Have you done, you silly Maria,' said Lady Castlewood.

'Where I'm attached, I'm attached, madame—and I'd die rather than not say so.'

'Je meurs oh je m'attache,' Mr. Holt said, with a polite grin. 'The ivy says so in the picture and clings to the oak, like a fond parasite as it is.'

'Parricide, sir!' cries Mrs. Tusher.

'Hush, Tusher, you are always bickering with Father Holt,' cried my lady. 'Come and kiss my hand, child;' and the oak held out a branch to little Harry Esmond, who took and dutifully kissed the lean old hand, upon the gnarled knuckles of which there glittered a hundred rings.

'To kiss that hand would make many a pretty fellow happy!' cried Mrs. Tusher; on which my lady crying out, 'Go, you foolish Tusher!' and tapping her with her great fan, Tusher ran forward to seize her hand and kiss it. Fury arose and barked furiously at Tusher; and Father Holt looked on at this queer scene, with arch, grave glances.

The awe exhibited by the little boy perhaps pleased the lady to whom this artless flattery was bestowed; for having gone down on his knee (as Father Holt had directed him, and the mode then was) and performed his obeisance, she said, 'Page Esmond, my groom of the chamber will inform you what your duties are, when you wait upon my lord and me; and good Father Holt will instruct you as becomes a gentleman of our name. You will pay him obedience in everything, and I pray you may grow to be as learned and as good as your tutor.'

The lady seemed to have the greatest reverence for Mr. Holt, and to be more afraid of him than of anything else in the world. If she was ever so angry, a word or look from Father Holt made her calm; indeed he had a vast power of subjecting those who came near him; and, among the rest, his new pupil gave himself up with an entire confidence and attachment to the good father, and became his willing slave almost from the first moment he saw him.

He put his small hand into the father's as he walked away from his first presentation to his mistress, and asked many questions in his artless, childish way. 'Who is that other woman?' he asked. 'She is fat and round; she is more pretty than my Lady Castlewood.'

'She is Madame Tusher, the parson's wife of Castlewood. She has a son of your age, but bigger than you.'

'Why does she like so to kiss my lady's hand. It is not good to kiss.'

'Tastes are different, little man. Madame Tusher is attached to my lady, having been her waiting-woman before she was married, in the old lord's time. She married Dr. Tusher, the chaplain. The English household divines often marry the waiting-women.'

'You will not marry the Frenchwoman, will you? I saw her laughing with Blaise in the buttery.'

'I belong to a church that is older and better than the English church,' Mr. Holt said (making a sign whereof Esmond did not then understand the meaning, across his breast and forehead); 'in our church the clergy do not marry. You will understand these things better soon.'

'Was not St. Peter the head of your church? Dr. Rabbits of Ealing told us so.'

The father said, 'Yes, he was.'

'But St. Peter was married, for we heard only last Sunday that his wife's mother lay sick of a fever.' On which the father again laughed, and said he would understand this too better soon, and talked of other things, and took away Harry Esmond, and showed him the great old house which he had come to inhabit.
It stood on a rising green hill, with woods behind it, in which were rooks' nests, where the birds at morning and returning home at evening made a great cawing. At the foot of the hill was a river, with a steep ancient bridge crossing it; and beyond that a large pleasant green flat, where the village of Castlewood stood, and stands, with the church in the midst, the parsonage hard by it, the inn with the blacksmith's forge beside it, and the sign of the Three Castles on the elm. The London road stretched away toward the rising sun, and to the west were swelling hills and peaks, behind which many a time Harry Esmond saw the same sun setting that he now looks on thousands of miles away across the great ocean, in a new Castlewood, by another stream, that bears, like the new country of wandering Æneas, the fond names of the land of his youth.

The hall of Castlewood was built with two courts, whereof one only, the fountain court, was now inhabited, the other having been battered down in the Cromwellian wars. In the fountain court, still in good repair, was the great hall, near to the kitchen and butteries; a dozen of living rooms looking to the north, and communicating with the little chapel that faced eastward and the buildings stretching from that to the main gate, and with the hall (which looked to the west) into the court now dismantled. This court had been the most magnificent of the two, until the Protector's cannon tore down one side of it before the place was taken and stormed. The besiegers entered at the terrace under the clock tower, slaying every man of the garrison, and at their head my lord's brother, Francis Esmond.

The Restoration did not bring enough money to the Lord Castlewood to restore this ruined part of his house; where were the morning parlors, above them the long music gallery, and before which stretched the garden terrace, where, however, the flowers grew again which the boots of the Roundheads had trodden in their assault, and which was restored without much cost and only a little care, by both ladies who succeeded the second viscount in the government of this mansion. Round the terrace garden was a low wall with a wicket leading to the wooded height beyond, that is called Cromwell's Battery to this day.

Young Harry Esmond learned the domestic part of his duty, which was easy enough, from the groom of her ladyship's chamber; serving the countess, as the custom commonly was in his boyhood, as page, waiting at her chair, bringing her scented water and the silver basin after dinner, sitting on her carriage step on state occasions, or on public days introducing her company to her. This was chiefly of the Catholic gentry, of whom there were a pretty many in the country and neighboring city; and who rode not seldom to Castlewood to partake of the hospitalities there. In the second year of their residence the company seemed especially to increase. My lord and my lady were seldom without visitors, in whose society it was curious to contrast the difference of behavior between Father Holt, the director of the family, and Dr.
Tusher, the rector of the parish, Mr. Holt moving among the very highest as quite their equal, and as commanding them all; while poor Dr. Tusher, whose position was indeed a dif-cult one, having been chaplain once to the Hall, and still to the Protestant servants there, seemed more like an usher than an equal, and always rose to go away after the first course.
Also there came in these times to Father Holt many private visitors, whom, after a little, Henry Esmond had little dif-culty in recognizing as ecclesiastics of the father’s persuasion, whatever their dresses (and they adopted all) might be. These were closeted with the father constantly, and often came and rode away without paying their devoirs to my lord and lady,—to the lady and lord rather—his lordship being little more than a cipher in the house, and entirely under his domineering partner. A little fowling, a little hunting, a great deal of sleep, and a long time at cards and table carried through one day after another with his lordship. When meetings took place in this second year, which often would happen with closed doors, the page found my lord’s sheet of paper scribbled over with dogs and horses, and ’twas said he had much ado to keep himself awake at these councils; the countess ruling over them, and he acting as little more than her secretary.

Father Holt began speedily to be so much occupied with these meetings as rather to neglect the education of the little lad who so gladly put himself under the kind priest’s orders.
At first they read much and regularly, both in Latin and French; the father not neglecting in anything to impress his faith upon his pupil, but not forcing him violently, and treating him with a delicacy and kindness which surprised and attached the child, always more easily won by these methods than by any severe exercise of authority. And his delight in their walks was to tell Harry of the glories of his order, of its martyrs and heroes, of its brethren converting the heathen by myriads, traversing the desert, facing the stake, ruling the courts and councils or braving the tortures of kings; so that Harry Esmond thought that to belong to the Jesuits was the greatest prize of life and bravest end of ambition; the greatest career here and in heaven the surest reward; and began to long for the day, not only when he should enter into the one Church and receive his first communion, but when he might join that wonderful brotherhood, which was present throughout all the world, and which numbered the wisest, the bravest, the highest born, the most eloquent of men among its members. Father Holt bade him keep his views secret, and to hide them as a great treasure which would escape him if it was revealed; and, proud of this confidence and secret vested in him, the lad became fondly attached to the master who initiated him into mystery so wonderful and awful. And when little Tom Tusher, his neighbor, came from school for his holiday, and said how he, too, was to be bred up for an English priest, and would get what he called an exhibition from his school, and then a college scholarship and fellowship, and then a good living, it tasked young Harry Esmond's powers of reticence not to say to his young companion, 'Church! priesthood! fat living! My dear Tommy, do you call yours a Church and a priesthood? What is a fat living compared to converting a hundred thousand heathens by a single sermon? What is a scholarship at Trinity by the side of a crown of martyrdom, with angels awaiting you as your head is taken off? Could your master at school sail over the Thames on his gown? Have you statues in your Church that can bleed, speak, walk, and cry? My good Tommy, in dear Father Holt's Church these things take place every day. You know St. Philip of the Willows appeared to Lord Castlewood, and caused him to turn to the one true Church. No saints ever come to you.' And Harry Esmond, because of his promise to Father Holt, hiding away these treasures of faith from T. Tusher, delivered himself of them nevertheless simply to Father Holt; who stroked his head, smiled at him with his inscrutable look, and told him that he did well to meditate on these great things, and not to talk of them except under direction.

CHAPTER IV.

I AM PLACED UNDER A POPISH PRIEST AND BRED TO THAT RELIGION—VISCOUNTESS CASTLEWOOD.

Had time enough been given, and his childish inclinations been properly nurtured, Harry Esmond had been a Jesuit priest ere he was a dozen years older, and might have finished his days a martyr in China or a victim on Tower Hill; for, in the few months they spent together at Castlewood, Mr. Holt obtained an entire mastery over the boy’s intellect and affections; and had brought him to think, as indeed Father Holt thought with all his heart too, that no life was so noble, no death so desirable, as that which many brethren of his famous order were ready to undergo. By love, by a brightness of wit and good humor that charmed all, by an authority which he knew how to assume, by a mystery and silence about him which increased the child’s reverence for him, he won Harry’s absolute fealty, and would have kept it, doubtless, if schemes greater and more important than a poor little boy’s admission into orders had not called him away.

After being at home for a few months in tranquillity (if their’s might be called tranquillity, which was, in truth, a constant bickering), my lord and lady left the country for London, taking their director with them; and his little pupil scarce ever shed more bitter tears in his life than he did for nights after the first parting with his dear friend, as he lay in the lonely chamber next to that which the father used to occupy. He and a few domestics were left as the only tenants of the great house; and, though Harry sedulously did all the tasks which the father set him, he had many hours unoccupied, and read in the library, and bewildered his little brains with the great books he found there.

After a while the little lad grew accustomed to the loneliness of the place; and in after days remembered this part of his life as a period not unhappy. When the family was at London the whole of the establishment traveled thither with the exception of the porter—who was, moreover, brewer, gardener, and woodman—and his wife and children. These had their lodging in the gatehouse hard by, with a door into the court; and a window looking out on the green was the chaplain’s room; and next to this a small chamber where Father Holt had his books and Harry Esmond his sleeping closet.
The side of the house facing the east had escaped the guns of the Cromwellians, whose battery was on the height facing the western court; so that this eastern end bore few marks of demolitions, save in the chapel, where the painted windows surviving Edward VI. had been broken by the Commonwealth men. In Father Holt’s time little Harry Esmond acted as his familiar and faithful little servitor; beating his clothes, folding his vestments, fetching his water from the well long before daylight, ready to run anywhere for the service of his beloved priest. When the father was away, he locked his private chamber; but the room where the books were was left to little Harry, who, but for the society of this gentleman, was little less solitary when Lord Castlewood was at home.

The French wit saith that a hero is none to his valet-de-chambre, and it required less quick eyes than my lady’s little page was naturally endowed with, to see that she had many qualities by no means heroic, however much Mrs. Tusher might flatter and coax her. When Father Holt was not by, who exercised an entire authority over the pair, my lord and my lady quarreled and abused each other so as to make the servants laugh, and to frighten the little page on duty. The poor boy trembled before his mistress, who called him by a hundred ugly names, who made nothing of boxing his ears, and tilting the silver basin in his face which it was his business to present it to her after dinner. She hath repaired, by subsequent kindness to him, these severities, which it must be owned made his childhood very unhappy. She was but unhappy herself at this time, poor soul! and I suppose made her dependents lead her own sad life. I think my lord was as much afraid of her as her page was, and the only person of the household who mastered her was Mr. Holt. Harry was only too glad when the father dined at table, and to slink away and prattle with him afterward, or read with him, or walk with him. Luckily my Lady Viscountess did not rise till noon. Heaven help the poor waiting-woman who had charge of her toilet! I have often seen the poor wretch come out with red eyes from the closet where those long and mysterious rites of her ladyship’s dress were performed, and the backgammon box locked up with a rap on Mrs. Tusher’s fingers when she played ill, or the game was going the wrong way.

Blessed be the king who introduced cards, and the kind inventors of piquet and cribbage, for they employed six hours at least of her ladyship’s day, during which her family was pretty easy. Without this occupation my lady frequently declared she should die. Her dependents one after another relieved guard—’twas rather a dangerous post to play with her ladyship—and took the cards turn about. Mr. Holt would sit with her at piquet during hours together, at which time she behaved herself properly; and as for Dr. Tusher, I believe he would have left a parishioner’s dying bed, if summoned to ply a rubber with his patroness at Castlewood. Sometimes, when they were pretty comfortable together, my lord took a hand. Besides these my lady had her faithful poor Tusher, and one, two, three gentlewomen whom Harry Esmond could recollect in his time. They could not bear that genteel service very long; one after another tired and failed at it. These and the housekeeper, and little Harry Esmond, had a table of their own. Poor ladies! their life was far harder than the page’s. He was sound asleep, tucked up in his little bed, while they were sitting by her ladyship reading her to sleep with the News Letter or the Grand Cyrus. My lady used to have boxes of new plays from London, and Harry was forbidden, under the pain of a whipping, to look into them. I am afraid he deserved the penalty pretty often, and got it sometimes. Father Holt applied it twice or thrice when he caught the young scapegrace with a delightful wicked comedy of Mr. Shadwell’s or Mr. Wycherley’s under his pillow.

These, when he took any, were my lord’s favorite reading. But he was averse to much study, and, as his little page fancied, to much occupation of any sort.

It always seemed to young Harry Esmond that my lord treated him with more kindness when his lady was not present, and Lord Castlewood would take the lad sometimes on his little journeys a-hunting or a-birding; he loved to play at cards and tric-trac with him, which games the boy learned to pleasure his lord; and was growing to like him better daily, showing a special pleasure if Father Holt gave a good report of him, patting him on the head, and promising that he would provide for the boy. However, in my lady’s presence, my lord showed no such marks of kindness, and affected to treat the lad roughly, and rebuked him sharply for little faults, for which he in a manner asked pardon of young Esmond when they were private, saying, if he did not speak roughly, she would, and his tongue was not such a bad one as his lady’s—a point whereof the boy, young as he was, was very well assured.

Great public events were happening all this while, of which the simple young page took little count. But one day, riding into the neighboring town on the step of my lady’s coach, his lordship and she and Father Holt being inside, a great mob of people came hooting and jeering round the coach, bawling out ‘The bishops forever!’ ‘Down with the Pope!’ ‘No popery! no popery! Jezebel, Jezebel!’ so that my lord began to laugh, my lady’s eye to roll with anger, for she was as bold as a lioness, and feared nobody; while Mr. Holt, as Esmond saw from his place on the step, sank back with rather an alarmed face, crying out to her ladyship, ‘For God’s sake, madam, do not speak or look out of window; sit still." But she did not obey this prudent injunction of the father; she thrust her head out of the coach window, and screamed out to the coachman, "Flog your way through them, the brutes, James, and use your whip!"

The mob answered with a roaring jeer of laughter and fresh cries of 'Jezebel! Jezebel!' My lord only laughed the more; he was a languid gentleman; nothing seemed to excite him commonly, though I have seen him cheer and halloo the hounds very briskly, and his face (which was generally very yellow and calm) grow quite red and cheerful during a burst over the Downs after a hare, and laugh, and swear, and huzza at a cock fight, of which sport he was very fond. And now, when the mob began to hoot his lady he laughed with something of a mischievous look, as though he expected sport, and thought that she and they were a match.

James, the coachman, was more afraid of his mistress than the mob, probably, for he whipped on his horses as he was bidden, and the postboy that rode with the first pair (my lady always rode with her coach and six) gave a cut of his thong over the shoulders of one fellow who put his hand out toward the leading horse's rein.

It was a market day, and the country-people were all assembled with their baskets of poultry, eggs, and such things; the postilion had no sooner lashed the man who would have taken hold of his horse, but a great cabbage came whirling like a bombshell into the carriage, at which my lord laughed more, for it knocked my lady's fan out of her hand and plumped into Father Holt's stomach. Then came a shower of carrots and potatoes.

'For Heaven's sake be still!' says Mr. Holt; 'we are not ten paces from the Bell archway, where they can shut the gates on us, and keep out this canaille.'

The little page was outside the coach on the step and a fellow in the crowd aimed a potato at him, and hit him in the eye, at which the poor little wretch set up a shout; the man laughed, a great big saddler's apprentice of the town. 'Ah!
you d---d little yellow popish bastard,' he said and stooped to pick up another; the crowd had gathered quite between the horses and the inn door by this time, and the coach was brought to a dead stand-still. My lord jumped as briskly as a boy out of the door on his side of the coach, squeezing little Harry behind it; had hold of the potato-thrower's collar in an instant, and the next moment the brute's heels were in the air, and he fell on the stones with a thump.
‘You hulking coward!’ says he; ‘you pack of screaming blackguards! how dare you attack children and insult women! Fling another shot at that carriage, you sneaking pigskin cobbler, and by the Lord I’ll send my rapier through you!’

Some of the mob cried, ‘Huzza, my lord!’ for they knew him, and the saddler’s man was a known bruiser, near twice as big as my Lord Viscount.

‘Make way there,’ says he (he spoke in a high shrill voice, but with a great air of authority). ‘Make way, and let her ladyship’s carriage pass.’ The men that were between the coach and the gate of the Bell actually did make way, and the horses went in, my lord walking after them with his hat on his head.

As he was going in at the gate, through which the coach had just rolled, another cry begins, of ‘No popery—no papists! My lord turns round and faces them once more.

‘God save the king!’ says he at the highest pitch of his voice. ‘Who dares abuse the king’s religion? You, you d—d psalm-singing cobbler, as sure as I’m a magistrate of this county I’ll commit you!’ The fellow shrunk back, and my lord retreated with all the honors of the day. But when the little flurry caused by the scene was over, and the flush passed off his face, he relapsed into his usual languor, trifled with his little dog, and yawned when my lady spoke to him.

This mob was one of many thousands that were going about the country at that time, huzzaing for the acquittal of the seven bishops, who had been tried just then, and about whom little Harry Esmond at that time knew scarce anything. It was Assizes at Hexton, and there was a great meeting of the gentry at the Bell; and my lord’s people had their new liveries on, and Harry a little suit of blue-and-silver, which he wore upon occasions of state; and the gentlefolks came round and talked to my lord; and a judge in a red gown, who seemed a very great personage, especially complimented him and my lady, who was mighty grand. Harry remembers her train borne up by her gentlewoman. There was an assembly and ball at the great room at the Bell, and other young gentlemen of the county families looked on as he did. One of them jeered him for his black eye, which was swelled by the potato, and another called him a bastard, on which he and Harry fell to fisticuffs. My lord’s cousin, Colonel Esmond of Walcote, was there, and separated the two lads, a great tall gentleman, with a handsome good-natured face. The boy did not know how nearly in after life he should be allied to Colonel Esmond, and how much kindness he should have to owe him.
There was little love between the two families. My lady used not to spare Colonel Esmond in talking of him, for reasons which have been hinted already; but about which, at his tender age, Henry Esmond could be expected to know nothing.

Very soon afterward my lord and lady went to London with Mr. Holt, leaving, however, the page behind them. The little man had the great house of Castlewood to himself; or between him and the housekeeper, Mrs. Worksop, an old lady who was a kinswoman of the family in some distant way, and a Protestant, but a stanch Tory and a king's man, as all the Esmonds were. He used to go to school to Dr. Tusher when he was at home, though the doctor was much occupied too. There was a great stir and commotion everywhere, even in the little quiet village of Castlewood, whither a party of people came from the town, who would have broken Castlewood chapel windows, but the village people turned out, and even old Sieveright, the republican blacksmith, along with them; for my lady though she was a papist, and had many odd ways, was kind to the tenantry, and there was always a plenty of beef and blankets and medicine for the poor at Castlewood Hall.

A kingdom was changing hands while my lord and lady were away. King James was flying, the Dutchmen were coming; awful stories about them and the Prince of Orange used old Mrs. Worksop to tell to the idle little page.

He liked the solitude of the great house very well; he had all the play books to read, and no Father Holt to whip him, and a hundred childish pursuits and pastimes without doors and within, which made this time very pleasant.

CHAPTER V.

MY SUPERIORS ARE ENGAGED IN PLOTS FOR THE RESTORATION OF KING JAMES II.

Not having been able to sleep for thinking of some lines for eels which he had placed the night before, the lad was lying in his little bed, waiting for the hour when the gate would be open, and he and his comrades, Job Lockwood, the porter's son, might go to the pond and see what fortune had brought them. At daybreak Job was to awaken him, but his own eagerness for the sport had served as a réveillé long since —so long that it seemed to him as if the day never would come.

It might have been four o'clock when he heard the door of the opposite chamber, the chaplain's room, open, and the voice of a man coughing in the passage. Harry jumped up, thinking for certain it was a robber, or hoping perhaps for a ghost, and, flinging open his own door, saw before him the chaplain's door open, and a light inside, and a figure standing in the doorway, in the midst of a great smoke which issued from the room.

‘Who’s there?’ cried out the boy, who was of a good spirit. ‘Silentium!’ whispered the other; ‘tis I, my boy!’ and, holding his hand out, Harry had no difficulty in recognizing his master and friend, Father Holt. A curtain was over the window of the Chaplain’s room that looked to the court, and Harry saw that the smoke came from a great flame of papers which were burning in a brazier when he entered the chaplain’s room. After giving a hasty greeting and blessing to the lad, who was charmed to see his tutor, the father continued the burning of his papers, drawing them from a cupboard over the mantelpiece wall, which Harry had never seen before.

Father Holt laughed, seeing the lad’s attention fixed at once on this hole. ‘That is right, Harry,’ he said; ‘faithful little famule, see all and say nothing. You are faithful, I know.’

‘I know I would go to the stake for you,’ said Harry.

‘I don’t want your head,’ said the father, patting it kindly; ‘all you have to do is to hold your tongue. Let us burn these papers, and say nothing to anybody. Should you like to read them?’

Harry Esmond blushed and held down his head; he had looked as the fact was, and without thinking, at the paper before him; and though he had seen it, could not understand a word of it, the letters being quite clear enough, but quite without meaning. They burned the papers, beating down the ashes in a brazier so that scarce any traces of them remained.

Harry had been accustomed to see Father Holt in more dresses than one; it not being safe, or worth the danger, for popish ecclesiastics to wear their proper dress; and he was, in consequence, in no wise astonished that the priest should now appear before him in a riding dress, with large buff leather boots, and a feather to his hat, plain, but such as gentlemen wore.

‘You know the secret of the cupboard,’ said he, laughing, ‘and must be prepared for other mysteries;’ and he opened—but not a secret cupboard this time—only a wardrobe, which he usually kept locked, and from which he now took out two or three dresses and perruques of different colors, and a couple of swords of a pretty make (Father Holt was an expert practitioner with the small-sword, and every day while he was at home he and his pupil practiced this exercise, in which the lad became a very great proficient), a military coat and cloak, and a farmer's smock, and placed them in the large hole over the mantelpiece from which the papers had been taken.

'If they miss the cupboard,' he said, 'they will not find these; if they find them, they'll tell no tales, except that Father Holt wore more suits of clothes than one. All Jesuits do. You know what deceivers we are, Harry.'

Harry was alarmed at the notion that his friend was about to leave him; but 'No,' the priest said, 'I may very likely come back with my lord in a few days. We are to be tolerated; we are not to be persecuted. But they may take a fancy to pay a visit at Castlewood ere our return; and, as gentlemen of my cloth are suspected, they might choose to examine my papers, which concern nobody—at least not them.' And to this day, whether the papers in cipher related to politics, or to the affairs of that mysterious society whereof Father Holt was a member, his pupil, Harry Esmond, remains in entire ignorance.

The rest of his goods, his small wardrobe, etc., Holt left untouched on his shelves and in his cupboard, taking down—with a laugh, however—and flinging into the brazier, where he only half burned them some theological treatises which he had been writing against the English divines. 'And now,' said he, 'Henry, my son, you may testify, with a safe conscience, that you saw me burning Latin sermons the last time I was here before I went away to London; and it will be daybreak directly, and I must be away before Lockwood is stirring.'

'Will not Lockwood let you out, sir?' Esmond asked. Holt laughed; he was never more gay or good-humored than when in the midst of action or danger.

'Lockwood knows nothing of my being here, mind you,' he said; 'nor would you, you little wretch! had you slept better. You must forget that I have been here; and now farewell. Close the door, and go to your own room and don't come out till—stay, why should you not know one secret more? I know you will never betray me.'

In the chaplain's room were two windows; the one looking into the court facing westward to the fountain; the other, a small casement strongly barred, and looking on to the green in front of the Hall. This window was too high to reach from the ground; but, mounting on a buffet which stood beneath it, Father Holt showed me how, by pressing on the base of the window, the whole framework of lead, glass, and iron stanchions descended into a cavity worked below, from which it could be drawn and restored to its usual place from without; a broken pane being purposely open to admit the hand which was to work upon the spring of the machine.

'When I am gone,' Father Holt said, 'you may push away the buffet, so that no one may fancy that an exit has been made that way; lock the door; place the key—where shall we put the key? under Chrysostom on the bookshelf; and if any ask for it, say I keep it there, and told you where to find it, if you had need to go to my room. The descent is easy down the wall into the ditch; and so once more farewell, until I see thee again, my dear son.' And with this the intrepid father mounted the buffet with great agility and briskness, stepped across the window, lifting up the bars and framework again from the other side, and only leaving room for Harry Esmond to stand on tiptoe and kiss his hand before the casement closed, the bars fixing as firm as ever, seemingly, in the stone arch overhead. When Father Holt next arrived at Castlewood, it was by the public gate on horseback; and he never so much as alluded to the existence of the private issue to Harry, except when he had need of a private messenger from within, for which end, no doubt, he had instructed his young pupil in the means of quitting the Hall.

Esmond, young as he was, would have died sooner than betray his friend and master, as Mr. Holt well knew; for he had tried the boy more than once, putting temptations in his way, to see whether he would yield to them and confess afterward, or whether he would resist them, as he did sometimes, or whether he would lie, which he never did. Holt instructing the boy on this point, however, that if to keep silence is not to lie, as it certainly is not, yet silence is, after all, equivalent to a negation; and therefore a downright No, in the interest of justice or your friend, and in reply to a question that may be prejudicial to either, is not criminal, but, on the contrary, praiseworthy; and as lawful a way as the other of eluding a wrongful demand. For instance (says he), suppose a good citizen, who had seen his Majesty take refuge there, had been asked, 'Is King Charles up that oak tree?' his duty would have been not to say, Yes, so that the Cromwellians should seize the king and murder him like his father, but No; his Majesty being private in the tree, and therefore not to be seen there by loyal eyes; all which instruction in religion and morals, as well as in the rudiments of the tongues and sciences, the boy took eagerly and with gratitude from his tutor. When, then, Holt was gone, and told Harry not to see him, it was as if he had never been. And he had this answer pat when he came to be questioned a few days after.

The Prince of Orange was then at Salisbury, as young Esmond learned from seeing Dr. Tusher in his best cassock (though the roads were muddy, and he never was known to wear silk, only his stuff one, a-horseback), with a great orange cockade in his broad-leafed hat, and Nahum, his clerk, ornamented with a like decoration. The doctor was walking up and down in front of his parsonage, when little Esmond saw him, and heard him say he was going to pay his duty to his Highness the Prince, as he mounted his pad and rode away with Nahum behind. The village people had orange cockades too, and his friend the blacksmith's laughing daughter pinned one into Harry's old hat, which he tore out indignantly when they bade him to cry 'God save the Prince of Orange and the Protestant religion!' but the people only laughed, for they liked the boy in the village, where his solitary condition moved the general pity, and where he found friendly welcomes and faces in many houses. Father Holt had many friends there too, for he not only would fight the blacksmith at theology, never losing his temper, but laughing the whole time in his pleasant way; but he cured him of an ague with quinquina, and was always ready with a kind word for any man that asked it, so that they said in the village 'twas a pity the two were papists.

The director and the vicar of Castlewood agreed very well; indeed, the former was a perfectly bred gentleman, and it was the latter's business to agree with everybody. Dr. Tusher and the lady's maid, his spouse, had a boy who was about the age of little Esmond; and there was such a friendship between the lads as propinquity and tolerable kindness and good humor on either side would be pretty sure to occasion. Tom Tusher was sent off early, however, to a school in London, whither his father took him and a volume of sermons, in the first year of the reign of King James; and Tom returned but once, a year afterward, to Castlewood for many years of his scholastic and collegiate life. Thus there was less danger to Tom of a perversion of his faith by the director, who scarce ever saw him, than there was to Harry, who constantly was in the vicar's company; but as long as Harry's religion was his Majesty's, and my lord's, and my lady's, the doctor said gravely, it should not be for him to disturb or disquiet him; it was far from him to say that his Majesty's Church was not a branch of the Catholic Church; upon which Father Holt used, according to his custom, to laugh, and say that the holy Church throughout all the world, and the noble army of martyrs, were very much obliged to the doctor.

It was while Dr. Tusher was away at Salisbury that there came a troop of dragoons with orange scarfs, and quartered in Castlewood, and some of them came up to the Hall, where they took possession, robbing nothing however beyond the henhouse and the beer cellar; and only insisting upon going through the house and looking for papers. The first room they asked to look at was Father Holt’s room, of which Harry Esmond brought the key, and they opened the drawers and the cupboards, and tossed over the papers and clothes, but found nothing except his books and clothes, and the vestments in a box by themselves, with which the dragoons made merry, to Harry Esmond’s horror. And to the questions which the gentleman put to Harry, he replied that Father Holt was a very kind man to him, and a very learned man, and Harry supposed would tell him none of his secrets if he had any. He was about eleven years old at this time, and looked as innocent as boys of his age.

The family were away more than six months, and when they returned they were in the deepest state of dejection, for King James had been banished, the Prince of Orange was on the throne, and the direst persecutions of those of the Catholic faith were apprehended by my lady, who said she did not believe that there was a word of truth in the promises of toleration that Dutch monster made, or in a single word the perjured wretch said. My lord and lady were in a manner prisoners in their own house; so her ladyship gave the little page to know, who was by this time growing of an age to understand what was passing about him, and something of the characters of the people he lived with.

‘We are prisoners,’ says she; ‘in everything but chains, we are prisoners. Let them come, let them consign me to dungeons, or strike off my head from this poor little throat’ (and she clasped it in her long fingers). ‘The blood of the Esmonds will always flow freely for their kings. We are not like the Churchills—the Judases who kiss their master and betray him. We know how to suffer, how even to forgive in the royal cause’ (no doubt it was to that fatal business of losing the place of groom of the posset to which her ladyship alluded, as she did half a dozen times in the day). ‘Let the tyrant of Orange bring his rack and his odious Dutch tortures—the beast! the wretch! I spit upon him and defy him. Cheerfully will I lay this head upon the block; cheerfully will I accompany my lord to the scaffold; we will cry, “God save King James!”’ with our dying breath, and smile in the face of the executioner.' And she told her page, a hundred times at least, of the particulars of the last interview which she had with his Majesty.

'I flung myself before my liege's feet,' she said, 'at Salisbury. I devoted myself—my husband—my house, to his cause. Perhaps he remembered old times, when Isabella Esmond was young and fair; perhaps he recalled the day when it was not I that kneeled—at least he spoke to me with a voice that reminded me of days gone by. "Egad!" said his Majesty, "you should go to the Prince of Orange, if you want anything." 'No, sire,' I replied, "I would not kneel to a usurper; the Esmond that would have served your Majesty will never be groom to a traitor's posset." The royal exile smiled even in the midst of his misfortune; he deigned to raise me with words of consolation. The viscount, my husband, himself, could not be angry at the august salute with which he honored me!'

The public misfortune had the effect of making my lord and his lady better friends than they ever had been since their courtship. My Lord Viscount had shown both loyalty and spirit when these were rare qualities in the dispirited party about the king; and the praise he got elevated him not a little in his wife's good opinion, and perhaps in his own. He wakened up from the listless and supine life which he had been leading; was always riding to and fro in consultation with this friend or that of the king's; the page of course knowing little of his doings, but remarking only his greater cheerfulness and altered demeanor.

Father Holt came to the Hall constantly, but officiated no longer openly as Chaplain; he was always fetching and carrying; strangers, military and ecclesiastic (Harry knew the latter, though they came in all sorts of disguises), were continually arriving and departing. My lord made long absences and sudden reappearances, using sometimes the means of exit which Father Holt had employed, though how often the little window in the chaplain's room let in or let out my lord and his friends, Harry could not tell. He stoutly kept his promise to the father of not prying, and if at midnight from his little room he heard noises of persons stirring in the next chamber, he turned round to the wall, and hid his curiosity under his pillow until it fell asleep. Of course he could not help remarking that the priest's journeys were constant, and understanding by a hundred signs that some active though secret business employed him; what this was may pretty well be guessed by what soon happened to my lord.
HISTORY OF HENRY ESMOND.

No garrison or watch was put into Castlewood when my lord came back, but a guard was in the village; and one or other of them was always on the green keeping a lookout on our great gate, and those who went out and in. Lockwood said that at night especially every person who came in or went out was watched by the outlying sentries. 'Twas lucky that we had a gate which their worship's knew nothing about. My lord and Father Holt must have made constant journeys at night; once or twice little Harry acted as their messenger and discreet little aide-de-camp. He remembers he was bidden to go into the village with his fishing-rod, enter certain houses, ask for a drink of water, and tell the goodman, 'There would be a horse market at Newbury next Thursday,' and so carry the same message on to the next house on his list.

He did not know what the message meant at the time, nor what was happening; which may as well, however, for clearness' sake, be explained here. The Prince of Orange being gone to Ireland, where the king was ready to meet him with a great army, it was determined that a great rising of his Majesty's party should take place in this country; and my lord was to head the force in our county. Of late he had taken a greater lead in affairs than before, having the indefatigable Mr. Holt at his elbow, and my Lady Viscountess strongly urging him on; and my Lord Sark being in the Tower a prisoner, and Sir Wilmot Crawley of Queen's Crawley having gone over to the Prince of Orange's side—my lord became the most considerable person in our part of the county for the affairs of the king.

It was arranged that the regiment of Scots Greys and Dragoons, then quartered at Newbury, should declare for the king on a certain day, when likewise the gentry affected to his Majesty's cause were to come in with their tenants and adherents to Newbury, march upon the Dutch troops at Reading under Ginkel; and, these overthrown, and their indomitable little master away in Ireland, 'twas thought that our side might move on London itself, and a confident victory was predicted for the king.

As these great matters were in agitation, my lord lost his listless manner and seemed to gain health; my lady did not scold him, Mr. Holt came to and fro, busy always; and little Harry longed to have been a few inches taller, that he might draw a sword in this good cause.

One day, it must have been about the month of July, 1690, my lord, in a great horseman's coat, under which Harry could see the shining of a steel breastplate he had on, called little Harry to him, put the hair off the child’s forehead, and kissed him and bade God bless him in such an affectionate way as he never had used before. Father Holt blessed him too, and then they took leave of my Lady Viscountess, who came from her apartment with a pocket handkerchief to her eyes, and her gentlewoman and Mrs. Tusher supporting her. ‘You are going to—to ride,’ says she. ‘Oh, that I might come too! but in my situation I am forbidden horse exercise.’

‘We kiss my Lady Marchioness’s hand,’ says Mr. Holt.

‘My lord, God speed you!’ she said, stepping up and embracing my lord in a grand manner. ‘Mr. Holt, I ask your blessing;’ and she knelt down for that, while Mrs. Tusher tossed her head up.

Mr. Holt gave the same benediction to the little page, who went down and held my lord’s stirrups for him to mount; there were two servants waiting there too, and they rode out of Castlewood gates.

As they crossed the bridge Harry could see an officer in scarlet ride up, touching his hat, and address my lord.

The party stopped, and came to some parley or discussion, which presently ended, my lord putting his horse into a canter after taking off his hat and making a bow to the officer, who rode alongside him step for step; the trooper accompanying him falling back, and riding with my lord’s two men. They cantered over the Green, and behind the elms (my lord waving his hand, Harry thought), and so they disappeared. That evening we had a great panic, the cowboy coming at milking time riding one of our horses, which he had found grazing at the outer park wall.

All night my Lady Viscountess was in a very quiet and subdued mood. She scarce found fault with anybody; she played at cards for six hours; little page Esmond went to sleep. He prayed for my lord and the good cause before closing his eyes.

It was quite in the gray of the morning when the porter’s bell rang, and old Lockwood, waking up, let in one of my lords’ servants, who had gone with him in the morning, and who returned with a melancholy story. The officer who rode up to my lord had, it appeared, said to him that it was his duty to inform his lordship that he was not under arrest, but under surveillance, and to request him not to ride abroad that day.

My lord replied that riding was good for his health, that if the captain chose to accompany him he was welcome; and it was then that he made a bow, and they cantered away together.
When he came on to Wansey Down, my lord all of a sudden pulled up, and the party came to halt at the cross-way.

'Sir,' says he to the officer, "we are four to two; will you be so kind as to take that road and leave me to go mine?"

'Your road is mine, my lord,' says the officer.

'Then——' says my lord; but he had no time to say more, for the officer, drawing a pistol, snapped it at his lordship; as at the same moment Father Holt, drawing a pistol, shot the officer through the head. It was done, and the man dead in an instant of time. The orderly, gazing at the officer, looked scared for a moment, and galloped away for his life.

'Fire! fire!' cried out Father Holt, sending another shot after the trooper, but the two servants were too much surprised to use their pieces, and my lord calling to them to hold their hands, the fellow got away.

'Mr. Holt, qui pensait à tout,' says Blaise, 'gets off his horse, examines the pockets of the dead officer for papers, gives his money to us two, and says, "The wine is drawn, M. le Marquis"—why did he say Marquis to M. le Vicomte?—"we must drink it."

'The poor gentleman's horse was a better one than that I rode,' Blaise continues; 'Mr. Holt bid me get on him, and so I gave a cut to Whitefoot, and she trotted home. We rode on toward Newbury; we heard firing toward midday; at two o'clock a horseman comes up to us as we were giving our cattle water at an inn, and says, "All is done! The Écossais declared an hour too soon—General Ginkel was down upon them." The whole thing was at an end.

'And we've shot an officer on duty, and let his orderly escape,' says my lord.

'Blaise,' says Mr. Holt, writing two lines on his table-book, one for my lady, and one for you, Master Harry; "you must go back to Castlewood, and deliver these," and behold me.'

And he gave Harry the two papers. He read that to himself, which only said, 'Burn the papers in the cupboard, burn this. You know nothing about anything.' Harry read this, ran upstairs to his mistress' apartment, where her gentlewoman slept near to the door, made her bring a light and wake my lady, into whose hands he gave the paper. She was a wonderful object to look at in her night attire, nor had Harry ever seen the like.

As soon as she had the paper in her hand, Harry stepped back to the chaplain's room, opened the secret cupboard over the fireplace, burned all the papers in it, and as he had seen the priest do before, took down one of his reverence's manuscript sermons, and half burned that in the brazier. By the time the papers were quite destroyed it was daylight. Harry ran back to his mistress again. Her gentlewoman ushered him again into her ladyship's chamber; she told him (from behind her nuptial curtains) to bid the coach be got ready, and that she would ride away anon.

But the mysteries of her ladyship's toilet were as awfully long on this day as on any other, and, long after the coach was ready, my lady was still attiring herself. And just as the viscountess stepped forth from her room, ready for departure, young John Lockwood comes running up from the village with news that a lawyer, three officers, and twenty or four-and-twenty soldiers, were marching thence upon the house. John had but two minutes the start of them, and, ere he had well told his story, the troop rode into our courtyard.

CHAPTER VI.

THE ISSUE OF THE PLOTS—THE DEATH OF THOMAS, THIRD VISCOUNT OF CASTLEWOOD; AND THE IMPRISONMENT OF HIS VISCOUNTESS.

At first my lady was for dying like Mary Queen of Scots (to whom she fancied she bore a resemblance in beauty), and stroking her scraggy neck, said, 'They will find Isabel of Castlewood is equal to her fate.' Her gentlewoman, Victoire, persuaded her that her prudent course was, as she could not fly, to receive the troops as though she suspected nothing, and that her chamber was the best place wherein to await them. So her black japan casket, which Harry was to carry to the coach, was taken back to her ladyship's chamber, whither the maid and mistress retired. Victoire came out presently, bidding the page to say her ladyship was ill, confined to her bed with the rheumatism.

By this time the soldiers had reached Castlewood. Harry Esmond saw them from the window of the tapestry parlor; a couple of sentinels were posted at the gate, a half dozen more walked toward the stables; and some others, preceded by their commander, and a man in black, a lawyer probably, were conducted by one of the servants to the stair leading up to the part of the house which my lord and lady inhabited.

So the captain, a handsome kind man, and the lawyer, came through the anteroom to the tapestry parlor, and where now was nobody but young Harry Esmond, the page.
'Tell your mistress, little man,' says the captain kindly, 'that we must speak to her.'
'My mistress is ill abed,' said the page.
'What complaint has she?' asked the captain.
The boy said, 'The rheumatism.'
'Rheumatism? that's a sad complaint,' continues the good-natured captain; 'and the coach is in the yard to fetch the doctor, I suppose?'
'I don't know,' says the boy.
'And how long has her ladyship been ill?'
'I don't know,' says the boy.
'When did my lord go away?'
'Yesterday night.'
'With Father Holt?'
'With Mr. Holt.'
'And which way did they travel?' asks the lawyer.
'They traveled without me,' says the page.
'We must see Lady Castlewood.'
'I have orders that nobody goes in to her ladyship—she is sick,' says the page; but at this moment Victoire came out.
'Hush!' says she; and, as if not knowing that anyone was near, 'What's this noise?' says she. 'Is this gentleman the doctor?'
'Stuff! we must see Lady Castlewood,' says the lawyer, pushing by.
The curtains of her ladyship's room were down and the chamber dark, and she was in bed with a nightcap on her head and propped up by her pillows, looking none the less ghastly because of the red which was still on her cheeks, and which she could not afford to forego.
'Is that the doctor?' she said.
'There is no use in this deception, madam,' Captain Westbury said (for so was he named). 'My duty is to arrest the person of Thomas, Viscount Castlewood, a nonjuring peer, of Robert Tusher, vicar of Castlewood, and Henry Holt, known under various other names and designations, a Jesuit priest, who officiated as chaplain here in the late king's time, and is now at the head of the conspiracy which was about to break out in this country against the authority of their Majesties King William and Queen Mary; and my orders are to search the house for such papers or traces of the conspiracy as may be found here. Your ladyship will please to give me your keys, and it will be as well for yourself that you should help us, in every way, in our search.'
'You see, sir, that I have the rheumatism, and cannot move,' said the lady, looking uncommonly ghastly as she sat up in her bed, where, however, she had had her cheeks painted, and a new cap put on, so that she might at least look her best when the officers came.

'I shall take leave to place a sentinel in the chamber, so that your ladyship, in case you should wish to rise, may have an arm to lean on,' Captain Westbury said. 'Your woman will show me where I am to look;' and Mme. Victoire, chattering in her half French and half English jargon, opened while the captain examined one drawer after another; but, as Harry Esmond thought, rather carelessly, with a smile on his face, as if he was only conducting the examination for form's sake.

Before one of the cupboards Victoire flung herself down, stretching out her arms, and, with a piercing shriek, cried, 'Non, jamais, monsieur l'officier! Jamais! I will rather die than let you see this wardrobe.'

But Captain Westbury would open it, still with a smile on his face, which, when the box was opened, turned into a fair burst of laughter. It contained—not papers regarding the conspiracy—but my lady's wigs, washes, and rouge pots, and Victoire said men were monsters, as the captain went on with his perquisition. He tapped the back to see whether or no it was hollow, and as he thrust his hands into the cupboard, my lady from her bed called out with a voice that did not sound like that of a very sick woman, 'Is it your commission to insult ladies as well as to arrest gentlemen, captain?'

'These articles are only dangerous when worn by your ladyship,' the captain said, with a low bow, and a mock grin of politeness. 'I have found nothing which concerns the government as yet—only the weapons with which beauty is authorized to kill,' said he, pointing to a wig with his sword-tip. 'We must now proceed to search the rest of the house.'

'You are not going to leave that wretch in the room with me,' cried my lady, pointing to the soldier.

'What can I do, madam? Somebody you must have to smooth your pillow and bring your medicine—permit me——'

'Sir!' screamed out my lady.

'Madam, if you are too ill to leave the bed,' the captain then said, rather sternly, 'I must have in four of my men to lift you off in the sheet. I must examine this bed, in a word; papers may be hidden in a bed as elsewhere; we know that very well and——'

Here it was her ladyship's turn to shriek, for the captain, with his fist shaking the pillows and bolsters, at last came to 'burn' as they say in the play of forfeits, and wrenching away one of the pillows, said, 'Look! did not I tell you so?' Here is a pillow stuffed with paper.

'Some villain has betrayed us,' cried out my lady, sitting up in the bed, showing herself full dressed under her night-rail.

'And now your ladyship can move, I am sure; permit me to give you my hand to rise. You will have to travel for some distance—as far as Hexton Castle, to-night. Will you have your coach? Your woman shall attend you if you like—and the japen box.'

'Sir! you don't strike a man when he is down,' said my lady, with some dignity; 'can you not spare a woman?'

'Your ladyship must please to rise, and let me search the bed,' said the captain; 'there is no more time to lose in bandying talk.'

And, without more ado, the gaunt old woman got up. Harry Esmond recollected to the end of his life that figure, with the brocade dress and the white night-rail, and the gold-clocked red stockings and white red-heeled shoes, sitting up in the bed, and stepping from it. The trunks were ready packed for departure in her anteroom, and the horses ready harnessed in the stable; about all which the captain seemed to know by information got from some quarter or other; and whence Esmond could make a pretty shrewd guess in after times, when Dr. Tusher complained that King William's government had basely treated him for services done in that cause.

And here he may relate, though he was then too young to know all that was happening, what the papers contained, of which Captain Westbury had made a seizure, and which papers had been transferred from the japan box to the bed when the officers arrived.

There was a list of gentlemen of the county in Father Holt's handwriting—Mr. Freeman's (King James') friends—a similar paper being found among those of Sir John Fenwick and Mr. Coplestone, who suffered death for this conspiracy.

There was a patent conferring the title of Marquis of Esmond on my Lord Castlewood and the heirs male of his body; his appointment as lord-lieutenant of the county, and major general.*

There were various letters from the nobility and gentry, some ardent and some doubtful, in the king's service; and (very luckily for him) two letters concerning Colonel Francis

*To have this rank of marquis restored in the family had always been my Lady Viscount's ambition; and her old maiden aunt, Barbara Topham, the goldsmith's daughter, dying about this time, and leaving all her property to Lady Castlewood, I have heard that her ladyship sent almost the whole of the money to King James, a proceeding which so irritated my Lord Castlewood that he actually went to the parish church, and was only appeased by the marquis' title which his exiled majesty sent to him in return for the £15,000 his subject lent him.
Esmond; one from Father Holt, which said, 'I have been to see this colonel at his house at Walcote, near to Wells, where he resides since the king's departure, and pressed him very eagerly in Mr. Freeman's cause, showing him the great advantage he would have by trading with that merchant, offering him large premiums there as agreed between us. But he says no; he considers Mr. Freeman the head of the firm, will never trade against him or embark with any other trading company, but considers his duty was done when Mr. Freeman left England. This colonel seems to care more for his wife and his beagles than for affairs. He asked me much about young H. E., "that bastard," as he called him; doubting my lord's intentions respecting him. I reassured him on this head, stating what I knew of the lad, and our intentions respecting him, but with regard to Freeman he was inflexible.'

And another letter was from Colonel Esmond to his kinsman, to say that one Captain Holton had been with him offering him large bribes to join you know who, and saying that the head of the house of Castlewood was deeply engaged in that quarter. But for his part he had broke his sword when the K. left the country, and would never again fight in that quarrel. The P. of O. was a man, at least, of a noble courage; and his duty, and, as he thought, every Englishman's, was to keep the country quiet and the French out of it; and, in fine, that he would have nothing to do with the scheme.

Of the existence of these two letters and the contents of the pillow Colonel Frank Esmond, who became Viscount Castlewood, told Henry Esmond afterward when the letters were shown to his lordship, who congratulated himself, as he had good reason, that he had not joined in the scheme which proved so fatal to many concerned in it. But naturally the lad knew little about these circumstances when they happened under his eyes; only being aware that his patron and his mistress were in some trouble, which had caused the flight of the one and the apprehension of the other by the officers of King William.

The seizure of the papers effected, the gentlemen did not pursue their further search through Castlewood House very rigorously. They examined Mr. Holt's room, being led thither by his pupil, who showed, as the father had bidden him, the place where the key of his chamber lay, opened the door for the gentlemen, and conducted them into the room.

When the gentlemen came to the half-burned papers in the brazier, they examined them eagerly enough, and their young guide was a little amused at their perplexity.
What are these? says one.

They’re written in a foreign language, says the lawyer.

What are you laughing at, little whelp? adds he, turning round as he saw the boy smile.

Mr. Holt said they were sermons, Harry said, and bade me to burn them—which indeed was true of those papers.

Sermons indeed—it’s treason, I would lay a wager, cries the lawyer.

Egad! it’s Greek to me, says Captain Westbury.

Can you read it, little boy? cries the lawyer.

Yes, sir, Harry said.

Then read, and read in English, sir, on your peril, said the lawyer. And Harry began to translate:

Hath not one of your own writers said, “The children of Adam are now laboring, as much as he himself ever did, about the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, shaking the boughs thereof, and seeking the fruit, being for the most part unmindful of the tree of life.” Oh, blind generation! ’tis this tree of knowledge to which the serpent has led you—and here the boy was obliged to stop, the rest of the page being charred by the fire; and asked of the lawyer—Shall I go on, sir?

The lawyer said, This boy is deeper than he seems; who knows that he is not laughing at us?

Let’s have in Dick the Scholar, cried Captain Westbury, laughing; and he called to a trooper out of the window, Ho, Dick, come in here and construe.

A thickset soldier, with a square good-humored face, came in at the summons, saluting his officer.

Tell us what is this, Dick, says the lawyer.

My name is Steele, sir, says the soldier. ’I may be Dick for my friends, but I don’t name gentlemen of your cloth among them.

Well, then, Steele.

Mr. Steele, sir, if you please. When you address a gentleman of his Majesty’s Horse Guards, be pleased not to be so familiar.

I didn’t know, sir, said the lawyer.

How should you? I take it you are not accustomed to meet with gentlemen, says the trooper.

Hold thy prate, and read that bit of paper, says Westbury.

’Tis Latin, says Dick, glancing at it, and again saluting his officer, and from a sermon of Mr. Cudworth’s, and he translated the words pretty much as Henry Esmond had rendered them.

What a young scholar you are, says the captain to the boy.
Depend on it, he knows more than he tells,' says the lawyer.
'I think we will pack him off in the coach with old Jezebel.'
'For construing a bit of Latin?' said the captain very good-naturedly.
'I would as lief go there as anywhere,' Harry Esmond said simply, 'for there is nobody to care for me.'
There must have been something touching in the child's voice or in this description of his solitude, for the captain looked at him very good-naturedly, and the trooper called Steele put his hand kindly on the lad's head, and said some words in the Latin tongue.
'What does he say?' says the lawyer.
'Faith, ask Dick himself,' cried Captain Westbury.
'I said I was not ignorant of misfortune myself, and had earned to succor the miserable, and that's not your trade, Mr. Sheepskin,' said the trooper.
'You had better leave Dick the Scholar alone, Mr. Corbet,' the captain said. And Harry Esmond, always touched by a kind face and kind word, felt very grateful to his good-natured champion.
The horses were by this time harnessed to the coach; and the countess and Victoire came down and were put into the vehicle. This woman, who quarreled with Harry Esmond all day, was melted at parting with him, and called him 'dear angel,' and 'poor infant,' and a hundred other names.
The viscountess, giving him her lean hand to kiss, bade him always be faithful to the house of Esmond. 'If evil should happen to my lord,' says she, 'his successor, I trust, will be found, and give you protection. Situated as I am, they will not dare wreak their vengeance on me now.' And she kissed a medal she wore with great fervor, and Henry Esmond knew not in the least what her meaning was; but hath since learned that, old as she was, she was forever expecting, by the good offices of saints and relics, to have an heir to the title of Esmond.
Harry Esmond was too young to have been introduced into the secrets of politics in which his patrons were implicated; for they put but few questions to the boy (who was little of stature, and looked much younger than his age), and such questions as they put he answered cautiously enough, and professing even more ignorance than he had, for which his examiners willingly enough gave him credit. He did not say a word about the window or the cupboard over the fireplace; and these secrets quite escaped the eyes of the searchers.
So then my lady was consigned to her coach and sent off to Hexton, with her woman and the man of law to bear her company; a couple of troopers riding on either side of the coach. And Harry was left behind at the Hall, belonging as it were to nobody, and quite alone in the world. The captain and a guard of men remained in possession there; and the soldiers, who were very good-natured and kind, ate my lord’s mutton and drank his wine, and made themselves comfortable, as they well might do in such pleasant quarters.

The captains had their dinner served in my lord’s tapestry parlor, and poor little Harry thought his duty was to wait upon Captain Westbury’s chair, as his custom had been to serve his lord when he sat there.

After the departure of the countess Dick the Scholar took Harry Esmond under his special protection, and would examine him in his humanities, and talk to him both of French and Latin, in which tongues the lad found, and his new friend was willing enough to acknowledge, that he was even more proficient than Scholar Dick. Hearing that he had learned them from a Jesuit, in the praise of whom and whose goodness Harry was never tired of speaking, Dick, rather to the boy’s surprise, who began to have an early shrewdness like many children bred up alone, showed a great deal of theological science and knowledge of the points at issue between the two Churches; so that he and Harry would have hours of controversy together, in which the boy was certainly worsted by the arguments of this singular trooper. ‘I am no common soldier,’ Dick would say, and indeed it was easy to see by his learning, breeding, and many accomplishments that he was not. ‘I am one of the most ancient families in the empire; I have had my education at a famous school and a famous university; I learned my first rudiments of Latin near to Smithfield in London, where the martyrs were roasted.’

‘You hanged as many of ours,’ interposed Harry; ‘and, for the matter of persecution, Father Holt told me that a young gentleman of Edinburgh, eighteen years of age, student at the college there, was hanged for heresy only last year, though he recanted and solemnly asked pardon for his errors.’

‘Faith! there has been too much persecution on both sides; but ’twas you taught us.’

‘Nay, ’twas the pagans began it,’ cried the lad, and began to instance a number of saints of the Church, from the proto-martyr downward. ‘This one’s fire went out under him; that one’s oil cooled in the caldron; at a third holy head the executioner chopped three times and it would not come off. Show us martyrs in your Church for whom such miracles have been done.'

‘Nay,’ says the trooper gravely, ‘the miracles of the first three centuries belong to my Church as well as yours, Master Papist,’ and then added, with something of a smile upon his countenance, and a queer look at Harry. ‘And yet, my little catechizer, I have sometimes thought about those miracles that there was not much good in them, since the victim’s head always finished by coming off at the third or forth chop, and the caldron, if it did not boil one day, boiled the next. H owebeit, in our times, the Church has lost that questionable advantage of respite. There never was a shower to put out Ridley’s fire, nor an angel to turn the edge of Campion’s ax. The rack tore the limbs of Southwell the Jesuit and Sympson the Protestant alike. For faith, everywhere multitudes die willingly enough. I have read in M. Ryeaut’s “History of the Turks,” of thousands of Mohammed’s followers rushing upon death in battle as upon certain Paradise; and in the great Mogul’s dominions people fling themselves by hundreds under the cars of the idols annually, and the widows burn themselves on their husband’s bodies as ‘tis well known. ‘Tis not the dying for a faith that’s so hard, Master Harry—every man of every nation has done that; ’tis the living up to it that is difficult, as I know to my cost,’ he added with a sigh. ‘And Tah!’ he added, ‘my poor lad, I am not strong enough to convince thee by my life, though to die for my religion would give me the greatest of joys, but I had a dear friend in Magdalen College in Oxford; I wish Joe Addison were here to convince thee, as he quickly could, for I think he’s a match for the whole College of Jesuits; and what’s more, in his life too. In that very sermon of Dr. Cudworth’s which your priest was quoting from, and which suffered martyrdom in the brazier’—Dick added with a smile, ‘I had a thought of wearing the black coat (but was ashamed of my life, you see, and took to this sorry red one); I have often thought of Joe Addison—Dr. Cudworth says, “A good conscience is the best looking-glass of heaven”—and there’s a serenity in my friend’s face which always reflects it. I wish you could see him, Harry.’

‘Did he do you a great deal of good?’ asked the lad simply. ‘He might have done,’ said the other; ‘at least he taught me to see and approve better things. ’Tis my own fault deteri- toria sequi.’

‘You seem very good,’ the boy said.

‘I’m not what I seem, alas!’ answered the trooper, and indeed, as it turned out, poor Dick told the truth, for that very night, at supper in the hall, where the gentlemen of the troop took their repasts, and passed most part of their days dicing and smoking of tobacco, and singing and cursing over the Castlewood ale, Harry Esmond found Dick the Scholar in a woful state of drunkenness. He hiccoughed out a sermon; and his laughing companions bade him sing a hymn, on which Dick, swearing he would run the scoundrel through the body who insulted his religion, made for his sword, which was hanging on the wall, and fell down flat on the floor under it, saying to Harry, who ran forward to help him, 'Ah, little papist, I wish Joseph Addison was here!'

Though the troopers of the king's Life Guards were all gentlemen, yet the rest of the gentlemen seemed ignorant and vulgar boors to Harry Esmond, with the exception of this good-natured Corporal Steele the Scholar, and Captain Westbury and Lieutenant Trant, who were always kind to the lad. They remained for some weeks or months encamped in Castlewood, and Harry learned from them, from time to time, how the lady at Hexton Castle was treated, and the particulars of her confinement there. 'Tis known that King William was disposed to deal very leniently with the gentry who remained faithful to the old king's cause; and no prince usurping a crown, as his enemies said he did (righteously taking it, as I think now), ever caused less blood to be shed. As for women conspirators, he kept spies on the least dangerous, and locked up the others. Lady Castlewood had the best rooms in Hexton Castle and the jailer's garden to walk in; and though she repeatedly desired to be led out to execution, like Mary Queen of Scots, there never was any thought of taking her painted old head off, or any desire to daought butkeeperperson in security.

And it appeared she found that some were friends in her misfortune whom she had, in her prosperity, considered as her worst enemies. Colonel Francis Esmond, my lord's cousin and her ladyship's, who had married the Dean of Winchester's daughter, and, since King James' departure out of England, had lived not very far away from Hexton town, hearing of his kinswoman's strait, and being friends with Colonel Brice, commanding for King William in Hexton, and with the church dignitaries there, came to visit her ladyship in prison, offering to his uncle's daughter any friendly services which lay in his power. And he brought his lady and little daughter to see the prisoner, to the latter of whom, a child of great beauty and many winning ways, the old viscountess took not a little liking, although between her ladyship and the child’s mother there was little more love than formerly. There are some injuries which women never forgive one another; and Madam Francis Esmond, in marrying her cousin, had done one of those irretrievable wrongs to Lady Castlewood. But as she was now humiliated, and in misfortune, Madam Francis could allow a truce to her enmity, and could be kind for a while, at least, to her husband’s discarded mistress. So the little Beatrix, her daughter, was permitted often to go and visit the imprisoned viscountess, who, in so far as the child and its father were concerned, got to abate in her anger toward that branch of the Castlewood family. And the letters of Colonel Esmond coming to light, as has been said, and his conduct being known to the king’s council, the colonel was put in a better position with the existing government than he had ever before been; any suspicions regarding his loyalty were entirely done away; and so he was enabled to be of more service to his kinswoman than he could otherwise have been.

And now there befell an event by which this lady recovered her liberty, and the house of Castlewood got a new owner, and fatherless little Harry Esmond a new and most kind protector and friend. Whatever that secret was which Harry was to hear from my lord the boy never heard it; for that night when Father Holt arrived, and carried my lord away with him, was the last on which Harry ever saw his patron. What happened to my lord may be briefly told here. Having found the horses at the place where they were lying, my lord and Father Holt rode together to Chatteris, where they had temporary refuge with one of the father’s penitents in that city; but the pursuit being hot for them and the reward for the apprehension of one or the other considerable, it was deemed advisable that they should separate; and the priest betook himself to other places of retreat known to him, while my lord passed over from Bristol into Ireland, in which kingdom King James had a court and an army. My lord was but a small addition to this; bringing, indeed, only his sword and the few pieces in his pocket; but the king received him with some kindness and distinction in spite of his poor plight, confirmed him in his new title of marquis, gave him a regiment, and promised him further promotion. But titles or promotion were not to benefit him now. My lord was wounded at the fatal battle of the Boyne, flying from which field (long after his master had set him an example) he lay for a while concealed in the marshy country near to the town of Trim, and more from catarrh and fever caught in the bogs than from the steel of the enemy in the battle, sank and died. May the earth lie light upon Thomas of Castlewood! He who writes this must speak in charity, though this lord did him and his two grievous wrongs; for one of these he would have made amends, perhaps, had life been spared him; but the other lay beyond his power to repair, though 'tis to be hoped that a greater Power than a priest has absolved him of it. He got the comfort of this absolution, too, such as it was; a priest of Trim writing a letter to my lady to inform her of this calamity.

But in those day letters were slow of traveling, and our priest's took two months or more on its journey from Ireland to England; where, when it did arrive, it did not find my lady at her own house; she was at the king's house of Hexton Castle when the letter came to Castlewood, but it was opened for all that by the officer in command there.

Harry Esmond well remembered the receipt of this letter, which Lockwood brought in as Captain Westbury and Lieutenant Trant were on the green playing at bowls, young Esmond looking on at the sport or reading his book in the arbor.

'Here's news for Frank Esmond,' says Captain Westbury; 'Harry, did you ever see Colonel Esmond?' And Captain Westbury looked very hard at the boy as he spoke.

Harry said he had see him but once when he was at Hexton, at the ball there.

'And did he say anything?'

'He said what I don't care to repeat,' Harry answered. For he was now twelve years of age; he knew what his birth was, and the disgrace of it; and he felt no love toward the man who had most likely stained his mother's honor and his own.

'Did you love my Lord Castlewood?'

'I wait until I know my mother, sir, to say,' the boy answered, his eyes filling with tears.

'Something has happened to Lord Castlewood,' Captain Westbury said in a very grave tone—'something which must happen to us all. He is dead of a wound received at the Boyne, fighting for King James.'

'I am glad my lord fought for the right cause,' the boy said.

'It was better to meet death on the field like a man than face it on Tower Hill, as some of them may,' continued Mr. Westbury. 'I hope he has made some testament, or provided for thee somehow.' This letter says he recommends unicum filium suum dilectissimum to his lady. 'I hope he has left you more than that.'
Harry did not know, he said. He was in the hands of Heaven and Fate; but more lonely now, as it seemed to him, than he had been all the rest of his life; and that night, as he lay in his little room which he still occupied, the boy thought with many a pang of shame and grief of his strange and solitary condition: how he had a father and no father; a nameless mother that had been brought to ruin, perhaps, by that very father whom Harry could only acknowledge in secret and with a blush, and whom he could neither love nor revere. And he sickened to think how Father Holt, a stranger, and two or three soldiers, his acquaintances of the last six weeks, were the only friends he had in the great wide world, where he was now quite alone. The soul of the boy was full of love, and he longed as he lay in the darkness there for someone upon whom he could bestow it. He remembers, and must to his dying day, the thoughts and tears of that long night, the hours tolling through it. Who was he, and what? Why here rather than elsewhere? I have a mind, he thought, to go to that priest at Trim, and find out what my father said to him in his deathbed confession. Is there any child in the whole world so unprotected as I am? Shall I get up and quit this place and run to Ireland? With these thoughts and tears the lad passed that night away until he wept himself to sleep.

The next day the gentlemen of the guard, who had heard what had befallen him, were more than usually kind to the child, especially his friend Scholar Dick, who told him about his own father's death, which had happened when Dick was a child at Dublin, not quite five years of age. 'That was the first sensation of grief,' Dick said, 'I ever knew. I remember I went into the room where his body lay, and my mother sat weeping beside it. I had my battledore in my hand and fell a-beating the coffin, and calling "Papa"; on which my mother caught me in her arms, and told me in a flood of tears papa could not hear me, and would play with me no more, for they were going to put him under ground, whence he could never come to us again. And this,' said Dick kindly, 'has made me pity all children ever since; and caused me to love thee, my poor fatherless, motherless lad. And, if ever thou wastest a friend, thou shalt have one in Richard Steele.'

Harry Esmond thanked him, and was grateful. But what could Corporal Steele do for him? take him to ride a spare horse, and be servant to the troop? Though there might be a bar in Harry Esmond's shield, it was a noble one. The council of the two friends was that little Harry should stay where he was and abide his fortune; so Esmond stayed on at Castlewood, awaiting with no small anxiety the fate, whatever it was, which was over him.

CHAPTER VII.

I AM LEFT AT CASTLEWOOD AN ORPHAN, AND FIND MOST KIND PROTECTORS THERE.

During the stay of the soldiers in Castlewood honest Dick the Scholar was the constant companion of the lonely little orphan lad Harry Esmond; and they read together, and they played bowls together, and when the other troopers or their officers, who were free-spoken over their cups (as was the way of that day, when neither men nor women were over-nice), talked unbecomingly of their amours and gallantries before the child, Dick, who very likely was setting the whole company laughing, would stop their jokes with a maxima debetur pueris reverentia, and once offered to lug out against another trooper called Hulking Tom, who wanted to ask Harry Esmond a ribald question.

Also, Dick seeing that the child had, as he said, a sensibility above his years, and a great and praiseworthy discretion, confided to Harry his love for a vintner’s daughter, near to the Tollyard, Westminster, whom Dick addressed as Saccharissa in many verses of his composition, and without whom he said it would be impossible that he could continue to live. He vowed this a thousand times a day, though Harry smiled to see the lovelorn swain had his health and appetite as well as the most heart-whole trooper in the regiment; and he swore Harry to secrecy too, which vow the lad religiously kept until he found that officers and privates were all taken into Dick’s confidence and had the benefit of his verses. And it must be owned likewise that, while Dick was sighing after Saccharissa in London, he had consolations in the country; for there came a wench out of Castlewood village who had washed his linen and who cried sadly when she heard he was gone, and without paying her bill too, which Harry Esmond took upon himself to discharge by giving the girl a silver pocket piece, which Scholar Dick had presented to him, when, with many embraces and prayers for his prosperity, Dick parted from him, the garrison of Castlewood being ordered away. Dick the Scholar said he would never forget his young friend, nor indeed did he; and Harry was sorry when the kind soldiers vacated Castlewood, looking forward with no small anxiety (for care and solitude had made him thoughtful beyond his years) to his fate when the new lord and lady of the house came to live there. He had lived to be past twelve years old now; and had never had a friend, save this wild trooper perhaps, and Father Holt; and had a fond and affectionate heart, tender to weakness, that would fain attach itself to somebody, and did not seem at rest until it had found a friend who would take charge of it.

The instinct which led Henry Esmond to admire and love the gracious person, the fair apparition of whose beauty and kindness had so moved him when he first beheld her, became soon a devoted affection and passion of gratitude, which entirely filled his young heart, that as yet, except in the case of dear Father Holt, had had very little kindness for which to be thankful. O Dea certé thought he, remembering the lines out of the Æneis which Mr. Holt had taught him. There seemed, as the boy thought, in every look or gesture of this fair creature, an angelical softness and bright pity; in motion or repose she seemed gracious alike; the tone of her voice, though she uttered words ever so trivial, gave him a pleasure that amounted almost to anguish. It cannot be called love that a lad of twelve years of age, little more than a menial, felt for an exalted lady, his mistress; but it was worship. To catch her glance, to divine her errand and run on it before she had spoken it; to watch, follow, adore her; became the business of his life. Meanwhile, as is the way often, his idol had idols of her own, and never thought of or suspected the admiration of her little pygmy adorer.

My lady had on her side her three idols; first and foremost, Jove and supreme ruler, was her lord, Harry's patron, the good Viscount of Castlewood. All wishes of his were laws with her. If he had a headache, she was ill. If he mourned, she trembled. If he joked, she smiled and was charmed. If he went a-hunting, she always was at the window to see him ride away, her little son crowing on her arm, or on the watch till his return. She made dishes for his dinner; spiced his wine for him; made the toast for his tankard at breakfast; hushed the house when he slept in his chair, and watched for a look when he woke. If my lord was not a little proud of his beauty, my lady adored it. She clung to his arm as he paced the terrace, her two fair little hands clasped round his great one; her eyes were never tired of looking in his face and wondering at its perfection. Her little son was his son, and had his father's look and curly brown hair. Her daughter Beatrix was his daughter, and had his eyes—were there ever such beautiful eyes in the world? All the house was arranged so as to bring him ease and give him pleasure. She liked the small gentry round about to come and pay him court, never caring for admiration for herself; those who wanted to be well with the lady must admire him. Not regarding her dress, she would wear a gown to rags, because he had once liked it; and, if he brought her a brooch or a ribbon, would prefer it to all the most costly articles of her wardrobe.

My lord went to London every year for six weeks, and the family being too poor to appear at Court with any figure, he went alone. It was not until he was out of sight that her face showed any sorrow; and what a joy when he came back! What preparation before his return! The fond creature had his arm-chair at the chimney-side, delighting to put the children in it, and look at them there. Nobody took his place at the table; but his silver tankard stood there as when my lord was present.

A pretty sight it was to see, during my lord’s absence, or on those many mornings when sleep or headache kept him abed, this fair young lady of Castlewood, her little daughter at her knee, and her domestics gathered round her, reading the Morning Prayer of the English Church. Esmond long remembered how she looked and spoke, kneeling reverently before the sacred book, the sun shining upon her golden hair until it made a halo round about her. A dozen of the servants of the house kneeled in a line opposite their mistress; for a while Harry Esmond kept apart from these mysteries, but Dr. Tusher showing him that the prayers read were those of the Church of all ages, and the boys’ own inclination prompting him to be always as near as hemight to his mistress, and to think all things she did right, from listening to the prayers in the antechamber, he came presently to kneel down with the rest of the household in the parlor; and before a couple of years my lady had made a thorough convert. Indeed the boy loved his catechizer so much that he would have subscribed to anything she bade him, and was never tired of listening to her fond discourse and simple comments upon the book, which she read to him in a voice of which it was difficult to resist the sweet persuasion and tender appealing kindness. This friendly controversy, and the intimacy which it occasioned, bound the lad more fondly than ever to his mistress. The happiest period of all his life was this; and the young mother, with her daughter and son, and the orphan lad whom she protected, read and worked and played and were children together. If the lady looked forward—as what fond woman does not? toward the future, she had no plans from which Harry Esmond was left out; and a thousand and a thousand times, in his passionate and impetuous way, he vowed that no power should separate him from his mistress; and only asked for some chance to happen by which he might show his fidelity to her. Now, at the close of his life, as he sits and recalls in tranquillity the happy and busy scenes of it, he can think, not ungratefully, that he has been faithful to that early vow. Such a life is so simple that years may be chronicled in a few lines. But few men's life-voyages are destined to be all prosperous; and this calm of which we are speaking was soon to come to an end.

As Esmond grew, and observed for himself, he found of necessity much to read and think of outside that fond circle of kinsfolk who had admitted him to join hands with them. He read more books than they cared to study with him; was alone in the midst of them many a time, and passed nights over labors, futile perhaps, but in which they could not join him. His dear mistress divined his thoughts with her usual jealous watchfulness of affection; began to forebode a time when he would escape from his home nest; and, at his eager protestations to the contrary, would only sigh and shake her head. Before those fatal decrees in life are executed, there are always secret previsions and warning omens. When everything yet seems calm, we are aware that the storm is coming. Ere the happy days were over, two at least of that home party felt that they were drawing to a close, and were uneasy and on the lookout for the cloud which was to obscure their calm.

'Twas easy for Harry to see, however much his lady persisted in obedience and admiration for her husband, that my lord tired of his quiet life, and grew weary, and then testy, at those gentle bonds with which his wife would have held him. As they say the Grand Lama of Thibet is very much fatigued by his character of divinity, and yawns on his altar as his bonzes kneel and worship him, many a home god grows heartily sick of the reverence with which his family-devotees pursue him, and sighs for freedom and for his old life, and to be off the pedestal on which his dependents would have him sit forever, while they adore him, and ply him with flowers, and hymns, and incense, and flattery; so, after a few years of his marriage my honest Lord Castlewood began to tire; all the high-flown raptures and devotional ceremonies with which his wife, his chief priestess, treated him, first sent him to sleep, and then drove him out of doors; for the truth must be told, that my lord was a jolly gentleman, with very little of the august or divine in his nature, though his fond wife persisted in revering it—and, besides, he had to pay a penalty for this love, which persons of his disposition seldom like to defray; and, in a word, if he had a loving wife, had a very jealous and exacting one. Then he wearied of this jealousy; then he broke away from it; then came, no doubt, complaints and recriminations; then perhaps, promises of amendment not fulfilled; then upbraidings not the more pleasant because they were silent, and only sad looks and tearful eyes conveyed them. Then, perhaps, the pair reached that other stage which is not uncommon in married life, when the woman perceives that the god of the honeymoon is a god no more; only a mortal like the rest of us—and so she looks into her heart, and lo! vacua sedes et inania arcana. And now, supposing our lady to have a fine genius and a brilliant wit of her own, and the magic spell and infatuation removed from her which had led her to worship as a god a very ordinary mortal—and what follows? They live together, and they dine together, and they say ‘my dear’ and ‘my love’ as heretofore; but the man is himself, and the woman herself; that dream of love is over as everything else is over in life; as flowers and fury, and griefs and pleasures, are over.

Very likely the Lady Castlewood had ceased to adore her husband herself long before she got off her knees, or would allow her household to discontinue worshiping him. To do him justice, my lord never exacted this subservience; he laughed and joked and drank his bottle and swore when he was angry, much too familiarly for anyone pretending to sublimity; and did his best to destroy the ceremonial with which his wife chose to surround him. And it required no great conceit on young Esmond’s part to see that his own brains were better than his patron’s, who, indeed, never assumed any airs of superiority over the lad, or over any dependent of his, save when he was displeased, in which case he would express his mind in oaths very freely; and who, on the contrary, perhaps, spoiled ‘Parson Harry,’ as he called young Esmond, by constantly praising his parts and admiring his boyish stock of learning.

It may seem ungracious in one who has received a hundred favors from his patron to speak in any but a reverential manner of his elders; but the present writer has had descendants of his own whom he has brought up with as little as possible of the servility at present exacted by parents from children (under which mask of duty there often lurks indifference, contempt, or rebellion); and as he would have his grandsons believe or represent him to be not an inch taller than Nature has made him; so, with regard to his past acquaintances, he would speak without anger, but with truth, as far as he knows it, neither extenuating nor setting down aught in malice.

So long, then, as the world moved according to Lord Castlewood's wishes, he was good-humored enough; of a temper naturally sprightly and easy, liking to joke, especially with his inferiors, and charmed to receive the tribute of their laughter. All exercises of the body he could perform to perfection—shooting at a mark and flying, breaking horses, riding at the ring, pitching the quoit, playing at all games with great skill. And not only did he do these things well, but he thought he did them to perfection; hence he was often tricked about horses, which he pretended to know better than any jockey; was made to play at ball and billiards by sharpers who took his money, and came back from London woefully poorer each time than he went, as the state of his affairs testified when the sudden accident came by which his career was brought to an end.

He was fond of the parade of dress, and passed as many hours daily at his toilet as an elderly coquette. A tenth part of his day was spent in the brushing of his teeth and the oiling of his hair, which was curling and brown, and which he did not like to conceal under a periwig such as almost everybody of that time wore. (We have the liberty of our hair back now, but powder and pomatum along with it. When, I wonder, will these monstrous poll-taxes of our age be withdrawn, and men allowed to carry their colors, black, red, or gray, as Nature made them?) And as he liked her to be well dressed, his lady spared no pains in that matter to please him; indeed, she would dress her head or cut it off, if he had bidden her.

It was a wonder to young Esmond, serving, as page to my lord and lady, to hear, day after day, to such company as came, the same boisterous stories told by my lord, at which his lady never failed to smile or hold down her head, and Dr. Tusher to burst out laughing at the proper point, or cry, 'Fie, my lord, remember my cloth!' but with such a faint show of resistance that it only provoked my lord further. Lord Castlewood's stories rose by degrees, and became stronger after the ale at dinner and the bottle afterward; my lady always taking flight after the very first glass to Church and king, and leaving the gentlemen to drink the rest of the toasts by themselves.

And as Harry Esmond was her page, he also was called from duty at this time. 'My lord has lived in the army and with soldiers,' she would say to the lad, 'among whom great license is allowed. You have had a different nurture, and I trust these things will change as you grow older; not that any fault attaches to my lord, who is one of the best and most religious men in this kingdom.' And very likely she believed so. 'Tis strange what a man may do, and a woman yet think him an angel.

And as Esmond has taken truth for his motto, it must be owned, even with regard to that other angel, his mistress, that she had a fault of character which flawed her perfections. With the other sex perfectly tolerant and kindly, of her own she was invariably jealous; and a proof that she had this vice is that though she would acknowledge a thousand faults that she had not, to this which she had she could never be got to own. But if there came a woman with even a semblance of beauty to Castlewood, she was so sure to find out some wrong in her that my lord, laughing in his jolly way, would often joke with her concerning her foible. Comely servant-maids might come for hire, but none were taken at Castlewood. The housekeeper was old; my lady's own waiting-woman squinted and was marked with the smallpox; the housemaids and scullion were ordinary country wenches to whom Lady Castlewood was kind, as her nature made her to everybody almost; but as soon as ever she had to do with a pretty woman, she was cold, retiring, and haughty. The country ladies found this fault in her; and though the men all admired her, their wives and daughters complained of her coldness and airs, and said that Castlewood was pleasanter in Lady Jezebel's time (as the dowager was called) than at present. Some few were of my mistress' side. Old Lady Blenkinsop Jointure, who had been at Court in King James I.'s time, always took her side; and so did old Mistress Crookshank (Bishop Crookshank's daughter, of Hexter), who, with some more of their like, pronounced my lady an angel; but the pretty women were not of this mind; and the opinion of the country was that my lord was tied to his wife's apron strings and that she ruled over him.

The second fight which Harry Esmond had was at fourteen years of age with Bryan Hawkshaw, Sir John Hawkshaw's son, of Bramblebrook, who, advancing this opinion, that my lady was jealous and henpecked my lord, put Harry in such a fury that Harry fell on him and with such rage that the other boy, who was two years older and by far bigger than he, had by far the worst of the assault, until it was interrupted by Dr. Tusher walking out of the dinner room.

Bryan Hawkshaw got up bleeding at the nose, having, indeed, been surprised, as many a stronger man might have been, by the fury of the assault upon him.
‘You little bastard beggar!’ he said, ‘I’ll murder you for this!’

And indeed he was big enough.

‘Bastard or not,’ said the other, grinding his teeth, ‘I have a couple of swords, and if you like to meet me, as a man, on the terrace to-night——’

And here, the doctor coming up, the colloquy of the young champions ended. Very likely, big as he was, Hawkshaw did not care to continue a fight with such a ferocious opponent as this had been.

CHAPTER VIII.

AFTER GOOD FORTUNE COMES EVIL.

Since my Lady Mary Wortley Montagu brought home the custom of inoculation from Turkey (a perilous practice many deem it, and only a useless rushing into the jaws of danger), I think the severity of the smallpox, that dreadful scourge of the world, has somewhat been abated in our part of it; and remember in my time hundreds of the young and beautiful who have been carried to the grave, or have only risen from their pillows frightfully scarred and disfigured by this malady. Many a sweet face hath left its roses on the bed on which this dreadful and withering blight has laid them. In my early days this pestilence would enter a village and destroy half its inhabitants; at its approach, it may well be imagined, not only the beautiful but the strongest were alarmed, and those fled who could. One day in the year 1694 (I have good reason to remember it) Dr. Tusher ran into Castlewood House with a face of consternation, saying that the malady had made its appearance at the blacksmith’s house in the village, and that one of the maids there was down in the smallpox.

The blacksmith, besides his forge and irons for horses, had an alehouse for men, which his wife kept, and his company sat on benches before the inn door, looking at the smithy while they drank their beer. Now, there was a pretty girl at this inn, the landlord’s men called Nancy Sievewright, a bouncing, fresh-looking lass, whose face was as red as the hollyhocks over the pales of the garden behind the inn. At this time Harry Esmond was a lad of sixteen, and somehow in his walks and rambles it often happened that he fell in with Nancy Sievewright’s bonny face; if he did not want something done at the blacksmith’s he would go and drink ale at the Three Castles or find some pretext for seeing this poor Nancy. Poor thing, Harry meant or imagined no harm; and she, no doubt, as little, but the truth is they were always meeting in the lanes, or by the brook, or at the garden palings or about Castlewood; it was, 'Lord, Mr. Henry!' and 'How do you do, Nancy?' many and many a time in the week. 'Tis surprising the magnetic attraction which draws people together from ever so far. I blush as I think of poor Nancy now, in a red bodice and buxom purple cheeks, and a canvas petticoat; and that I devised schemes and set traps and made speeches in my heart, which I seldom had courage to say when in presence of that humble enchantress, who knew nothing beyond milking a cow and opened her black eyes with wonder when I made one of my fine speeches out of Waller or Ovid. Poor Nancy! from the midst of far-off years thine honest country face beams out;
and I remember thy kind voice as if I had heard it yesterday.

When Dr. Tusher brought the news that the smallpox was at the Three Castles, whither a trampler, it was said, had brought the malady, Henry Esmond's first thought was of alarm for poor Nancy, and then of shame and disquiet for the Castle-wood family, lest he might have brought this infection; for the truth is that Mr. Harry had been sitting in a back room for an hour that day, where Nancy Sievewright was with a little brother who complained of headache, and was lying stupefied and crying, either in a chair by the corner of the fire, or in Nancy's lap, or on mine.

Little Lady Beatrix screamed out at Dr. Tusher's news; and my lord cried out, 'God bless me!' He was a brave man, and not afraid of death in any shape but this. He was very proud of his pink complexion and fair hair,—but the idea of death by smallpox scared him beyond all other ends. 'We will take the children and ride away to-morrow to Walcote;
this was my lord's small house, inherited from his mother, near to Winchester.

'That is the best refuge in case the disease spreads,' said Dr. Tusher. 'Tis awful to think of it beginning at the ale-house; half the people of the village have visited that to-day, or the blacksmith's, which is the same thing. My clerk Nahum lodges with them. I can never go into my reading desk.
and have that fellow so near me. I won't have that man near me.'

'If a parishioner dying in the smallpox sent to you, would you not go?' asked my lady, looking up from her frame of work, with her calm blue eyes.

'By the Lord I wouldn't,' said my lord.

'We are not in a popish country; and a sick man doth not absolutely need absolution and confession,' said the doctor.
"Tis true they are a comfort and a help to him when attainable and to be administered with hope of good. But in a case where the life of a parish priest in the midst of his flock is highly valuable to them he is not called upon to risk it (and therewith the lives, future prospects, and temporal, even spiritual welfare of his own family) for the sake of a single person, who is not very likely in a condition even to understand the religious message whereof the priest is the bringer, being uneducated, and likewise stupefied or delirious by disease. If your ladyship or his lordship, my excellent good friend and patron, were to take it——

"God forbid!" cried my lord.

'Amen!' continued Dr. Tusher. 'Amen to that prayer, my very good lord!—for your sake I would lay my life down'—and, to judge from the alarmed look of the doctor's purple face, you would have thought that that sacrifice was about to be called for instantly.

To love children and be gentle with them was an instinct rather than a merit in Henry Esmond; so much so that he thought almost with a sort of shame of his liking for them, and of the softness into which it betrayed him; and on this day the poor fellow had not only had his young friend, the milkmaid's brother, on his knee, but had been drawing pictures and telling stories to the little Frank Castlewood, who had occupied the same place for an hour after dinner, and was never tired of Henry's tales and his pictures of soldiers and horses. As luck would have it Beatrix had not on that evening taken her usual place, which generally she was glad enough to have, upon her tutor's lap. For Beatrix, from the earliest time, was jealous of every caress which was given to her little brother Frank. She would fling away even from the maternal arms if she saw Frank had been there before her; insomuch that Lady Esmond was obliged not to show her love for her son in the presence of the little girl, and embrace one or the other alone. She would turn pale and red with rage if she caught signs of intelligence or affection between Frank and his mother; would sit apart, and not speak for a whole night, if she thought the boy had a better fruit or a larger cake than hers; would fling away a ribbon if he had one; and from the earliest age, sitting up in her little chair by the great fireplace opposite to the corner where Lady Castlewood commonly sat at her embroidery, would utter infantinesarcasms about the favor shown to her brother. These, if spoken in the presence of Lord Castlewood, tickled and amused his humor; he would pretend to love Frank best, and dandle and kiss him, and roar with laughter at Beatrix's jealousy. But the truth is, my lord did not often witness these scenes, nor very much trouble the quiet fireside at which his lady passed many long evenings. My lord was hunting all day when the season admitted; he frequented all the cock fights and fairs in the country, and would ride twenty miles to see a main fought or two clowns break their heads at a cudgeling match; and he liked better to sit in his parlor drinking ale and punch with Jack and Tom than in his wife's drawing room; whither, if he came, he brought only too often bloodshot eyes, a hiccoughing voice, and a reeling gait. The management of the house and the property, the care of the few tenants and the village poor, and the accounts of the estate, were in the hands of his lady and her young secretary, Harry Esmond. My lord took charge of the stables, the kennel, and the cellar—and he filled this and emptied it too.

So it chanced that upon this very day, when poor Harry Esmond had had the blacksmith's son, and the peer's son, alike upon his knee, little Beatrix, who would come to her tutor willingly enough with her book and her writing, had refused him, seeing the place occupied by her brother; and, luckily for her, had sat at the farther end of the room away from him, playing with a spaniel dog which she had (and for which, by fits and starts, she would take a great affection), and talking at Harry Esmond over her shoulder, as she pretended to caress the dog, saying Fido would love her, and she would love Fido, and nothing but Fido, all her life.

When, then, the news was brought that the little boy at the Three Castles was ill with the smallpox, poor Harry Esmond felt a shock of alarm, not so much for himself, as for his mistress' son, whom he might have brought into peril. Beatrix, who had pouted sufficiently (and who, whenever a stranger appeared, began, from infancy almost, to play off little graces to catch his attention), her brother being now gone to bed, was for taking her place upon Esmond's knee; for, though the doctor was very obsequious to her, she did not like him, because he had thick boots and dirty hands (the pert young miss said), and because she hated learning the catechism.

But as she advanced toward Esmond from the corner where she had been sulking, he started back and placed the great chair on which he was sitting between him and her—saying in the French language to Lady Castlewood, with whom the young lad had read much, and whom he had perfected in this tongue, 'Madam, the child must not approach me. I must tell you that I was at the blacksmith's to-day, and had his little boy upon my lap.'

'Where you took my son afterward,' Lady Castlewood said, very angry, and turning red. 'I thank you, sir, for giving him such company. Beatrix,' she said in English, 'I forbid you to touch Mr. Esmond. Come away, child; come to your room. Come to your room; I wish your reverence good-night—and you, sir, had you not better go back to your friends at the alehouse?' Her eyes, ordinarily so kind, darted flashes of anger as she spoke; and she tossed up her head (which hung down commonly) with the mien of a princess.

'Heyday!' says my lord, who was standing by the fireplace—indeed he was in the position to which he generally came by that hour of the evening—'Heyday! Rachel, what are you in a passion about? Ladies ought never to be in a passion. Ought they, Dr. Tusher? though it does good to see Rachel in a passion—damme, Lady Castlewood, you look dev'lish handsome in a passion.'

'It is, my lord, because Mr. Henry Esmond, having nothing to do with his time here, and not having a taste for our company, has been to the alehouse, where he has some friends.'

My lord burst out, with a laugh and an oath, 'You young slyboots, you've been at Nancy Sievewright. D— the young hypocrite, who'd have thought it in him? I say, Tusher, he's been after—'

'Enough, my lord,' said my lady, 'don't insult me with this talk.'

'Upon my word,' said poor Harry, ready to cry with shame and mortification, 'the honor of that young person is perfectly unstained for me.'

'Oh, of course, of course,' says my lord, more and more laughing and tipsy. 'Upon his honor, doctor—Nancy Sieve——'

'Take Mistress Beatrix to bed,' my lady cried at this moment to Mrs. Tucker, her woman, who came in with her ladieship's tea. 'Put her into my room, no, into yours,' she added quickly. 'Go, my child; go, I say; not a word!' And Beatrix, quite surprised at so sudden a tone of authority from one who was seldom accustomed to raise her voice, went out of the room with a scared countenance, and waited even to burst out a-crying until she got to the door with Mrs. Tucker.

For once her mother took little heed of her sobbing, and continued to speak eagerly. 'My lord,' she said, 'this young man, your dependent, told me just now in French—he was ashamed to speak in his own language—that he had been at the alehouse all day, where he has had that little wretch who is now ill of the smallpox on his knee. And he comes home reeking from that place—yes, reeking from it—and takes my boy into his lap without shame, and sits down by me, yes, by me. He may have killed Frank for what I know—killed our child. Why was he brought in to disgrace our house? Why is he here? Let him go; let him go, I say, to-night, and pollute the place no more.'

She had never once uttered a syllable of unkindness to Harry Esmond; and her cruel words smote the poor boy so that he stood for some moment bewildered with grief and rage at the injustice of such a stab from such a hand. He turned quite white from red, which he had been.

'I cannot help my birth, madam,' he said, 'nor my other misfortune. And as for your boy, if—if my coming nigh to him pollutes him now, it was not so always. Good-night, my lord. Heaven bless you and yours for your goodness to me. I have tired her ladyship's kindness out, and I will go;' and, sinking down on his knee, Harry Esmond took the rough hand of his benefactor and kissed it.

'He wants to go to the alehouse, let him go,' cried my lady. 'I'm d—d if he shall,' said my lord. 'I didn't think you could be so d—d ungrateful, Rachel.'

Her reply was to burst into a flood of tears, and to quit the room with a rapid glance at Harry Esmond, as my lord, not heeding them, and still in great good humor, raised up his young client from his kneeling posture (for a thousand kindnesses had caused the lad to revere my lord as a father), and put his broad hand on Harry Esmond's shoulder.

'She was always so,' my lord said; 'the very notion of a woman drives her mad. I took to liquor on that very account, by Jove, for no other reason than that; for she can't be jealous of a beer barrel or a bottle of rum, can she, doctor? D—d it, look at the maids—just look at the maids in the house.' (My lord pronounced all the words together—just-look-at-the-maze-in-the-house; jever-see-such-maze?) 'You wouldn't take a wife out of Castlewood now, would you, doctor?' and my lord burst out laughing.

The doctor, who had been looking at my Lord Castlewood from under his eyelids, said, 'But joking apart, and, my lord, as a divine, I cannot treat the subject in a jocular light, nor, as a pastor of this congregation, look with anything but sorrow at the idea of so very young a sheep going astray.'

'Sir,' said young Esmond, bursting out indignantly, 'she told me that you yourself were a horrid old man, and had offered to kiss her in the dairy.

‘For shame, Henry,’ cried Dr. Tusher, turning as red as a turkey cock, while my lord continued to roar with laughter. ‘If you listen to the falsehoods of an abandoned girl——’

‘She is as honest as any woman in England, and as pure for me,’ cried out Henry, ‘and as kind, and as good. For shame on you to malign her!’

‘Far be it from me to do so,’ cried the doctor. ‘Heaven grant I may be mistaken in the girl, and in you, sir, who have a truly precocious genius; but that is not the point at issue at present. It appears that the smallpox broke out in the little boy at the Three Castles; that it was on him when you visited the alehouse for your own reasons; and that you sat with the child for some time, and immediately afterward with my young lord.’ The doctor raised his voice as he spoke and looked toward my lady, who had now come back, looking very pale, with a handkerchief in her hand.

‘This is all very true, sir,’ said Lady Esmond, looking at the young man.

‘Tis to be feared that he may have brought the infection with him.’

‘From the alehouse—yes,’ said my lady.

‘D—— it, I forgot when I collared you, boy,’ cried my lord, stepping back. ‘Keep off, Harry, my boy; there’s no good in running into the wolf’s jaws, you know.’

My lady looked at him with some surprise, and instantly advancing to Henry Esmond, took his hand. ‘I beg your pardon, Henry,’ she said; ‘I spoke very unkindly. I have no right to interfere with you—with your——’

My lord broke out into an oath. ‘Can’t you leave the boy alone, my lady?’ She looked a little red, and faintly pressed the lad’s hand as she dropped it.

‘There is no use, my lord,’ she said; ‘Frank was on his knee as he was making pictures, and was running constantly from Henry to me. The evil is done, if any.’

‘Not with me, damme,’ cried my lord. ‘I’ve been smoking,’ and he lighted his pipe again with a coal—and it keeps off infection; and as the disease is in the village—plague take it—I would have you leave it. We’ll go to-morrow to Walcote, my lady.’

‘I have no fear,’ said my lady; ‘I may have had it as an infant; it broke out in our house then; and when four of my sisters had it at home, two years before our marriage, I escaped it and two of my dear sisters died.’
‘I won’t run the risk,’ said my lord; ‘I’m as bold as any man, but I’ll not bear that.’

‘Take Beatrix with you and go,’ said my lady. ‘For us the mischief is done; and Tucker can wait upon us, who has had the disease.’

‘You take care to choose ’em ugly enough,’ said my lord, at which her ladyship hung down her head and looked foolish; and my lord, calling away Tusher, bade him come to the oak parlor and have a pipe. The doctor made a low bow to her ladyship (of which salaams he was profuse), and walked off on his creaking square-toes after his patron.

When the lady and the young man were alone, there was a silence of some moments during which he stood at the fire, looking rather vacantly at the dying embers, while her ladyship busied herself with the tambour frame and needles.

‘I am sorry,’ she said, after a pause, in a hard, dry voice—

‘I repeat I am sorry that I showed myself so ungrateful for the safety of my son. It was not at all my wish that you should leave us, I am sure, unless you found pleasure elsewhere. But you must perceive, Mr. Esmond, that at your age, and with your tastes, it is impossible that you can continue to stay upon the intimate footing in which you have been in this family. You have wished to go to the university, and I think ’tis quite as well that you should be sent thither. I did not press this matter, thinking you a child, as you are, indeed, in years—quite a child; and I should never have thought of treating you otherwise until—until these circumstances came to light. And I shall beg my lord to dispatch you as quick as possible; and will go on with Frank’s learning as well as I can (I owe my father thanks for a little grounding, and you, I’m sure, for much that you have taught me)—and—and I wish you a good-night, Mr. Esmond.’

And with this she dropped a stately courtesy, and, taking her candle, went away through the tapestry door, which led to her apartments. Esmond stood by the fireplace, blankly staring after her. Indeed, he scarce seemed to see until she was gone; and then her image was impressed upon him, and remained forever fixed upon his memory. He saw her retreating, the taper lighting up her marble face, her scarlet lip quivering, and her shining golden hair. He went to his own room and to bed, where he tried to read, as his custom was; but he never knew what he was reading until afterward he remembered the appearance of the letters of the book (it was in Montaigne’s Essays), and the events of the day passed before him—that is, of the last hour of the day; for as for the morning, and the poor milkmaid yonder, he never so much as once thought. And he could not get to sleep until daylight, and woke with a violent headache, and quite unrefreshed.

He had brought the contagion with him from the Three Castles sure enough, and was presently laid up with the small-pox, which spared the Hall no more than it did the cottage.

CHAPTER IX.

I HAVE THE SMALLPOX, AND PREPARE TO LEAVE CASTLEWOOD.

When Harry Esmond passed through the crisis of that malady and returned to health again, he found that little Frank Esmond had also suffered and rallied after the disease, and the lady his mother was down with it, with a couple more of the household. 'It was a providence, for which we all ought to be thankful,' Dr. Tusher said, 'that my lady and her son were spared, while Death carried off the poor domestics of the house;' and rebuked Harry for asking, in his simple way, for which we ought to be thankful, that the servants were killed, or the gentlefolks were saved? Nor could young Esmond agree in the doctor's vehement protestations to my lady, when he visited her during her convalescence, that the malady had not in the least impaired her charms, and had not been churl enough to injure the fair features of the Viscountess of Castlewood; whereas, in spite of these fine speeches, Harry thought that her ladyship's beauty was very much injured by the smallpox. When the marks of the disease cleared away, they did not, it is true, leave furrows or scars on her face (except one, perhaps, on her forehead over her left eyebrow); but the delicacy of her rosy color and complexion was gone; her eyes had lost their brilliancy, her hair fell, and her face looked older. It was as if a coarse hand had rubbed the delicate tints of that sweet picture, and brought it, as one has seen unskillful painting-cleaners do, to the dead color. Also, it must be owned, that for a year or two after the malady, her ladyship's nose was swollen and redder.

There would be no need to mention these trivialities but that they actually influenced many lives, as trifles will in the world, where a gnat often plays a greater part than an elephant, and a mole-hill, as we know in King William's case, can upset an empire. When Tusher in his courtly way (at which Harry Esmond always chafed and spoke scornfully) vowed and protested that my lady's face was none the worse,—the lad broke out and said, 'It is worse; and my mistress is not near so handsome as she was;' on which poor Lady Castlewood gave a rueful smile, and a look into a little Venice glass she had, which showed her, I suppose, that what the stupid boy said was only too true, for she turned away from the glass, and her eyes filled with tears.

The sight of these in Esmond's heart always created a sort of rage of pity, and seeing them on the face of the lady whom he loved best, the young blunderer sank down on his knees, and besought her to pardon him, saying that he was a fool and an idiot, that he was a brute to make such a speech, he who had caused her malady; and Dr. Tusher told him that a bear he was indeed, and a bear he would remain, at which speech poor young Esmond was so dumb-stricken that he did not even growl.

'He is my bear, and I will not have him baited, doctor,' my lady said, patting her hand kindly on the boy's head, as he was still kneeling at her feet. 'How your hair has come off! And mine, too,' she added with another sigh.

'It is not for myself that I cared,' my lady said to Harry, when the parson had taken his leave; 'but am I very much changed? Alas! I fear 'tis too true.'

'Madam, you have the dearest and kindest and sweetest face in the world, I think,' the lad said; and indeed he thought and thinks so.

'Will my lord think so when he comes back?' the lady asked with a sigh, and another look at her Venice glass. 'Suppose he should think as you do, sir, that I am hideous—yes, you said hideous—he will cease to care for me. 'Tis all men care for in women, our little beauty. Why did he select me from among my sisters? 'Twas only for that. We reign but for a day or two; and be sure that Vashti knew Esther was coming.'

'Madam,' said Mr. Esmond, 'Ahasuerus was the Grand Turk, and to change was the manner of his country and according to his law.'

'You are all Grand Turks for that matter,' said my lady, 'or would be if you could. Come, Frank, come, my child. You are well, praised be Heaven. Your locks are not thinned by this dreadful smallpox; nor your poorface scarred; is it, my angel?'

Frank began to shout and whimper at the idea of such a misfortune. From the very earliest time the young lord had been taught to admire his beauty by his mother; and esteemed it as highly as any reigning toast valued hers.

One day, as he himself was recovering from his fever and illness, a pang of something like shame shot across young Esmond’s breast, as he remembered that he had never once during his illness given a thought to the poor girl at the smithy, whose red cheeks but a month ago he had been so eager to see. Poor Nancy! her cheeks had shared the fate of roses, and were withered now. She had taken the illness on the same day with Esmond—she and her brother were both dead of the smallpox and buried under the Castlewood yew trees. There was no bright face looking now from the garden, or to cheer the old smith at his lonely fireside. Esmond would have liked to have kissed her in her shroud (like the lass in Mr. Prior’s pretty poem); but she rested many a foot below the ground, when Esmond after his malady first trod on it.

Dr. Tusher brought the news of this calamity, about which Harry Esmond longed to ask, but did not like. He said almost the whole village had been stricken with the pestilence; seventeen persons were dead of it, among them mentioning the names of poor Nancy and her little brother. He did not fail to say how thankful we survivors ought to be. It being this man’s business to flatter and make sermons, it must be owned he was most industrious in it, and was doing the one or the other all day.

And so Nancy was gone; and Harry Esmond blushed that he had not a single tear for her, and fell to composing an elegy in Latin verses over the rustic little beauty. He bade the dryads mourn and the river nymphs deplore her. As her father followed the calling of Vulcan, he said that surely she was like a daughter of Venus, though Sievewright’s wife was an ugly shrew, as he remembered to have heard afterward. He made a long face, but, in truth, felt scarcely more sorrowful than a mute at a funeral. These first passions of men and women are mostly abortive; and are dead almost before they are born. Esmond could repeat, to his last day, some of the doggerel lines in which his muse bewailed his pretty lass; not without shame to remember how bad the verses were, and how good he thought them; how false the grief, and yet how he was rather proud of it. ’Tis an error, surely, to talk of the simplicity of youth. I think no persons are more hypocritical, and have a more affected behavior to one another, than the young. They deceive themselves and each other with artifices that do not impose upon men of the world; and so we get to understand truth better, and grow simpler as we grow older.

When my lady heard of the fate which had befallen poor Nancy, she said nothing so long as Tusher was by, but when he was gone she took Harry Esmond’s hand and said:
'Harry, I beg your pardon for those cruel words I used on the night you were taken ill. I am shocked at the fate of the poor creature, and am sure that nothing had happened of that which, in my anger, I charged you. And the very first day we go out, you must take me to the blacksmith, and we must see if there is anything I can do to console the poor old man. Poor man! to lose both his children! What should I do without mine?'

And this was, indeed, the very first walk which my lady took, leaning on Esmond's arm, after her illness. But her visit brought no consolation to the old father; and he showed no softness or desire to speak. 'The Lord gave and took away,' he said; and he knew what his servant's duty was. He wanted for nothing—less now than ever before, as there were fewer mouths to feed. He wished her ladyship and Master Esmond good-morning; he had grown tall in his illness and was but very little marked; and with this and a surly bow, he went in from the smithy to the house, leaving my lady, somewhat silenced and shamefaced, at the door. He had a handsome stone put up for his two children, which may be seen in Castlewood churchyard to this very day; and before a year was out his own name was upon the stone. In the presence of Death, that sovereign ruler, a woman's coquetry, is scared; and her jealousy will hardly pass the boundaries of that grim kingdom. 'Tis entirely of the earth that passion, and expires in the cold blue air beyond our sphere.

At length, when the danger was quite over, it was announced that my lord and his daughter would return. Esmond well remembered the day. The lady his mistress was in a flurry of fear; before my lord came, she went into her room and returned from it with reddened cheeks. Her fate was about to be decided. Her beauty was gone—was her reign, too, over? A minute would say. My lord came riding over the bridge; he could be seen from the great window, clad in scarlet, and mounted on his gray hackney; his little daughter ambled by him in a bright riding dress of blue, on a shining chestnut horse. My lady leaned against the great mantelpiece, looking on, with one hand on her heart; she seemed only the more pale for those red marks on either cheek. She put her handkerchief to her eyes and withdrew it, laughing hysterically—the cloth was quite red with the rouge when she took it away. She ran to her room again, and came back with pale cheeks and red eyes—her son in her hand—just as my lord entered, accompanied by young Esmond, who had gone out to meet his protector, and to hold his stirrup as he descended from horseback.

'What, Harry, boy!' my lord said good-naturedly, 'you look as gaunt as a greyhound. The smallpox hasn’t improved your beauty, and your side of the house had never too much of it—ho, ho!'

And he laughed, and sprang to the ground with no small agility, looking handsome and red, with a jolly face and brown hair, like a beef-eater; Esmond kneeling again, as soon as his patron had descended, performed his homage, and then went to greet the little Beatrix and help her from her horse.

'Fie! how yellow you look,' she said; 'and there are one, two, red holes in your face;' which indeed, was very true; Harry Esmond’s harsh countenance bearing, as long as it continued to be a human face, the marks of the disease.

My lord laughed again in high good humor.

'D— it' said he, with one of his usual oaths, 'the little slut sees everything. She saw the dowager’s paint t’other day, and asked her why she wore that red stuff; didn’t you, Trix? and the Tower; and St. James'; and the play; and the Prince George, and the Princess Anne—didn’t you, Trix?'

'They are both very fat, and smell of brandy,' the child said. Papa roared with laughing.

'Brandy!' he said. 'And how do you know, Miss Pert?'

'Because your lordship smells of it after supper, when I embrace you before you go to bed,' said the young lady, who, indeed was as pert as her father said, and looked as beautiful a little gypsy as eyes ever gazed on.

'And now for my lady,' said my lord, going up the stairs, and passing under the tapestry curtain that hung before the drawing room door. Esmond remembered that noble figure, handsomely arrayed in scarlet. Within the last few months he himself had grown from a boy to be a man, and with his figure his thoughts had shot up and grown manly.

My lady’s countenance, of which Harry Esmond was accustomed to watch the changes, and with a solicitous affection to note and interpret the signs of gladness or care, wore a sad and depressed look for many weeks after her lord’s return; during which it seemed as if by caresses and entreaties she strove to win him back from some ill humor he had, and which he did not choose to throw off. In her eagerness to please him she practiced a hundred of those arts which had formerly charmed him, but which seemed now to have lost their potency. Her songs did not amuse him, and she hushed them and the children when in his presence. My lord sat silent at his dinner, drinking greatly, his lady opposite to him, looking furtively at his face, though also speechless. Her silence annoyed him as much as her speech; and he would peevishly, and with an oath, ask her why she held her tongue and looked so glum; or he would roughly check her when speaking, and bid her not talk nonsense. It seemed as if, since his return, nothing she could do or say could please him.

When a master and mistress are at strife in a house, the subordinates in the family take the one side or the other. Harry Esmond stood in so great a fear of my lord, that he would run a league barefoot to do a message for him; but his attachment for Lady Esmond was such a passion of grateful regard that, to spare her a grief, or to do her a service, he would have given his life daily; and it was by the very depth and intensity of this regard that he began to divine how unhappy his adored lady's life was, and that a secret care (for she never spoke of her anxieties) was weighing upon her.

Can anyone, who has passed through the world and watched the nature of men and women there, doubt what had befallen her? I have seen, to be sure, some people carry down with them into old age the actual bloom of their youthful love, and I know that Mr. Thomas Parr lived to be a hundred and sixty years old. But, for all that, threescore and ten is the age of men, and few get beyond it; and 'tis certain that a man who marries for mere beaux yeux as my lord did, considers his part of the contract at an end when the woman ceases to fulfill hers, and his love does not survive her beauty. I know 'tis often otherwise, I say; and can think (as most men in their own experience may) of many a house, where, lighted in early years, the sainted lamp of love hath never been extinguished; but so there is Mr. Parr, and so there is the great giant at the fair that is eight feet high—exceptions to men—and that poor lamp whereof I speak, that lights at first the nuptial chamber, is extinguished by a hundred winds and draughts down the chimney, or sputters out for want of feeding. And then—and then it is Chloe in the dark, stark awake, and Strephon snoring unheeding; or vice versa, 'tis poor Strephon that has married a heartless jilt, and awoke out of that absurd vision of conjugal felicity, which was to last forever, and is over like any other dream. One and other has made his bed, and so must lie in it, until that final day when life ends, and they sleep separate.

About this time young Esmond, who had a knack of string-ing verses, turned some of Ovid's Epistles into rhymes, and brought them to his lady for her delectation. Those which treated of forsaken women touched her immensely, Harry remarked; and when Enone called after Paris, and Medea bade Jason come back again, the lady of Castlewood sighed, and said she thought that part of the verses was the most pleasing. Indeed, she would have chopped up the dean, her old father, in order to bring her husband back again. But her beautiful Jason was gone, as beautiful Jasons will go, and the poor enchantress had never a spell to keep him.

My lord was only sulky as long as his wife's anxious face or behavior seemed to upbraid him. When she had got to master these, and to show an outwardly cheerful countenance and behavior, her husband's good humor returned partially, and he swore and stormed no longer at dinner, but laughed sometimes, and yawned unrestrainedly; absenting himself often from home, inviting more company thither, passing the greater part of his days in the hunting field, or over the bottle as before; but with this difference that the poor wife could no longer see now, as she had done formerly, the light of love kindled in his eyes. He was with her, but that flame was out; and that once welcome beacon no more shone there.

What were this lady's feelings when forced to admit the truth whereof her foreboding glass had given her only too true warning, that with her beauty her reign had ended, and the days of her love were over? What does a seaman do in a storm if mast and rudder are carried away? He ships a jury mast, and steers as he best can with an oar. What happens if your roof falls in a tempest? After the first stun of the calamity the sufferer starts up, gropes around to see that the children are safe, and puts them under a shed out of the rain. If the palace burns down you take shelter in the barn. What man's life is not overtaken by one or more of these tornadoes, that send us out of the course and fling us on rocks to shelter as best we may?

When Lady Castlewood found that her great ship had gone down, she began as best she might, after she had rallied from the effects of the loss, to put out small ventures of happiness, and hope for little gains and returns, as a merchant on Change, indocilis pauperiem pati, having lost his thousands, embarks a few guineas upon the next ship. She laid out her all upon her children, indulging them beyond all measure, as was inevitable with one of her kindness of disposition; giving all her thoughts to their welfare—learning, that she might teach them; and improving her own many natural gifts and feminine accomplishments, that she might impart them to her young ones. To be doing good for someone else is the life of most good women. They are exuberant of kindness, as it were, and must impart it to someone. She made herself a good scholar of French, Italian, and Latin, having been grounded in these by her father in her youth; hiding these gifts from her husband out of fear, perhaps, that they should offend him, for my lord was no bookman—pish’d and psha’d at the notion of learned ladies, and would have been angry that his wife could construe out of a Latin book of which he could scarce understand two words. Young Esmond was usher, or house tutor, under her or over her as it might happen. During my lord’s many absences these schooldays would go on uninterruptedly; the mother and daughter learning with surprising quickness; the latter by fits and starts only, and as suited her wayward humor. As for the little lord, it must be owned that he took after his father in the matter of learning—liked marbles and play, and the great horse and the little one, which his father brought him, and on which he took him out a-hunting, a great deal better than Corderius and Lily; marshaled the village boys, and had a little court of them, already flogging them, and domineering over them with a fine imperious spirit, that made his father laugh when he beheld it, and his mother fondly warn him. The cook had a son, the woodman had two, the big lad at the porter’s lodge took his cuffs and his orders. Dr. Tusher said he was a young nobleman of gallant spirit; and Harry Esmond, who was his tutor and eight years his little lordship’s senior, had hard work sometimes to keep his own temper and hold his authority over his rebellious little chief and kinsman.

In a couple of years after that calamity had befallen which had robbed Lady Castlewood of a little—a very little—of her beauty, and her careless husband’s heart (if the truth must be told, my lady had found not only that her reign was over, but that her successor was appointed, a princess of a noble house in Drury Lane somewhere, who was installed and visited by my lord at the town eight miles off—

pudet hec opprobria dicere nobis—a great change had taken place in her mind, which, by struggles only known to herself, at least never mentioned to anyone, and unsuspected by the person who caused the pain she endured—had been schooled into such a condition as she could not very likely have imagined possible a score of months since, before her misfortunes had begun.

She had oldened in that time as people do who suffer silently great mental pain, and learned much that she had never suspected before. She was taught by that bitter teacher Misfortune. A child, the mother of other children, but two years back her lord was a god to her; his words her law; his smiles her sunshine; his lazy commonplaces listened to eagerly, as if they were words of wisdom, all his wishes and freaks obeyed with a servile devotion. She had been my lord’s chief slave and blind worshiper. Some women bear further than this, and submit not only to neglect but to unfaithfulness too —but here this lady’s allegiance had failed her. Her spirit rebelled and disowned any more obedience. First she had to bear in secret the passion of losing the adored object; then to get a further initiation, and to find this worshiped being was but a clumsy idol; then to admit the silent truth that it was she was superior, and not the monarch her master; that she had thoughts which his brain could never master, and was the better of the two; quite separate from my lord although tied to him, and bound, as almost all people (save a very happy few), to work all her life alone. My lord sat in his chair, laughing his laugh, cracking his joke, his face flushing with wine, my lady in her place over against him; he never suspecting that his superior was there, in the calm resigned lady, cold of manner, with downcast eyes. When he was merry in his cups, he would make jokes about her coldness, and, ‘D—it, now my lady is gone, we will have t’other bottle,’ he would say.
He was frank enough in telling his thoughts, such as they were.
There was little mystery about my lord’s words or actions.
His Fair Rosamond did not live in a labyrinth, like the lady of Mr. Addison’s opera, but paraded with painted cheeks and a tipsy retinue in the country town. Had she a mind to be revenged, Lady Castlewood could have found the way to her rival’s house easily enough; and, if she had come with bowl and dagger, would have been routed off the ground by the enemy with a volley of Billingsgate, which the fair person always kept by her.

Meanwhile, it has been said that for Harry Esmond his benefactress’ sweet face had lost none of its charms. It had always the kindest of looks and smiles for him—smiles, not so gay and artless perhaps as those which Lady Castlewood had formerly worn, when, a child herself playing with her children, her husband’s pleasure and authority were all she thought of; but out of her griefs and cares, as will happen, I think, when these trials fall upon a kindly heart, and are not too unbearable, grew up a number of thoughts and excellences which had never come into existence, had not her sorrow and misfortunes engendered them. Sure, occasion is the father of most that is good in us. As you have seen the awkward fingers and clumsy tools of a prisoner cut and fashion the most delicate little pieces of carved work, or achieve the most prodigious underground labors, and cut through walls of masonry and saw iron bars and fetters; 'tis misfortune that awakens ingenuity, or fortitude, or endurance, in hearts where these qualities had never come to life but for the circumstance which gave them a being.

'Twas after Jason left her, no doubt,' Lady Castlewood once said, with one of her smiles, to young Esmond (who was reading to her a version of certain lines out of Euripides), 'that Medea became a learned woman and a great enchantress.'

'And she could conjure the stars out of heaven,' the young tutor added, 'but she could not bring Jason back again,'

'What do you mean?' asked my lady, very angrily.

'Indeed I mean nothing,' said the other, 'save what I have read in books. What should I know about such matters? I have seen no woman save you and little Beatrix, and the parson's wife and my late mistress, and your ladyship's woman here.'

'The men who wrote your books,' says my lady, 'your Horaces and Ovids and Vergils, as far as I know of them, all thought ill of us, as all the heroes they wrote about used us basely. We were bred to be slaves always; and even of our own times, as you are still the only lawgivers, I think our sermons seem to say that the best woman is she who bears her master's chains most gracefully. 'Tis a pity there are no nunneries permitted by our Church. Beatrix and I would fly to one, and end our days in peace there away from you.'

'And is there no slavery in a convent?' says Esmond.

'At least if women are slaves there, no one sees them,' answered the lady. 'They don't work in street gangs with the public to jeer them; and if they suffer, suffer in private.
Here comes my lord home from hunting. Take away the books.
My lord does not love to see them. Lessons are over for today, Mr. Tutor.' And with a courtesy and a smile she would end this sort of colloquy.

Indeed, 'Mr. Tutor,' as my lady called Esmond, had now business enough on his hands in Castlewood House. He had three pupils, his lady and her two children, at whose lessons she would always be present; besides writing my lord's letters and arranging his accounts for him—when these could be got from Esmond's indolent patron.
Of the pupils the two young people were but lazy scholars, and as my lady would admit no discipline such as was then in use, my lord’s son only learned what he liked, which was but little, and never to his life’s end could be got to construe more than six lines of Vergil. Mistress Beatrix chattered French prettily from a very early age, and sang sweetly, but this was from her mother’s teaching—not Harry Esmond’s, who could scarce distinguish between ‘Green Sleeves’ and ‘Lillabullero’; although he had no greater delight in life than to hear the ladies sing. He sees them now (will he ever forget them)? as they used to sit together of the summer evenings, the two golden heads over the page, the child’s little hand, and the mother’s beating the time, with their voices rising and falling in unison.

But if the children were careless, ’twas a wonder how eagerly the mother learned from her young tutor—and taught him too. The happiest instinctive faculty was this lady’s—a faculty for discerning latent beauties and hidden graces of books, especially books of poetry, as in a walk she would spy out field flowers and make posies of them such as no other hand could. She was a critic, not by reason, but by feeling; the sweetest commentator of those books they read together; and the happiest hours of young Esmond’s life, perhaps, were those passed in the company of his kind mistress and her children.

These happy days were to end soon, however; and it was by the Lady Castlewood’s own decree that they were brought to a conclusion. It happened about Christmas time, Harry Esmond being now past sixteen years of age, that his old comrade, adversary, and friend, Tom Tusher, returned from his school in London, a fair, well-grown, and sturdy lad, who was about to enter college, with an exhibition from his school, and a prospect of after promotion in the Church. Tom Tusher’s talk was of nothing but Cambridge now; and the boys, who were good friends, examined each other eagerly about their progress in books. Tom had learned some Greek and Hebrew, besides Latin, in which he was pretty well skilled, and also had given himself to mathematical studies under his father’s guidance, who was a proficient in those sciences, of which Esmond knew nothing; nor could he write Latin so well as Tom, though he could talk it better, having been taught by his dear friend the Jesuit father, for whose memory the lad ever retained the warmest affection, reading his books, keeping his swords clean in the little crypt where the father had shown them to Esmond on the night of his visit; and often of a night sitting in the chaplain’s room, which he inhabited, over his books, his verses and rubbish, with which the lad occupied himself, he would look up at the window, thinking he wished it might open and let in the good father. He had come and passed away like a dream; but for the swords and books Harry might almost think the father was an imagination of his mind—and for two letters which had come to him, one from abroad full of advice and affection, another soon after he had been confirmed by the Bishop of Hinton, in which Father Holt deplored his falling away. But Harry Esmond felt so confident now of his being in the right, and of his own powers as a casuist, that he thought he was able to face the father himself in argument, and possibly convert him.

To work upon the faith of her young pupil, Esmond’s kind mistress sent to the library of her father the dean, who had been distinguished in the disputes of the late king’s reign; and, an old soldier now, had hung up his weapons of controversy.
These he took down from his shelves willingly for young Esmond, whom he benefited by his own personal advice and instruction. It did not require much persuasion to induce the boy to worship with his beloved mistress. And the good old nonjuring dean flattered himself with a conversion, which, in truth, was owing to a much gentler and fairer persuader.

Under her ladyship’s kind eyes (my lord’s being sealed in sleep pretty generally) Esmond read many volumes of the works of the famous British divines of the last age, and was familiar with Wake and Sherlock, with Stillingfleet and Patrick. His mistress never tired to listen or to read, to pursue the texts with fond comments, to urge those points which her fancy dwelt on most or her reason deemed most important. Since the death of her father, the dean, this lady had admitted a certain latitude of theological reading which her orthodox father would never have allowed: his favorite writers appealing more to reason and antiquity than to the passions or imaginations of their readers, so that the works of Bishop Taylor, nay, those of Mr. Baxter and Mr. Law, have in reality found more favor with my Lady Castlewood than the severer volumes of our great English schoolmen.

In later life, at the university, Esmond reopened the controversy, and pursued it in a very different manner, when his patrons had determined for him that he was to embrace the ecclesiastical life. But though his mistress’ heart was in this calling, his own never was much. After that first fervor of simple devotion, which his beloved Jesuit priest had inspired in him, speculative theology took but little hold upon the young man's mind. When his early credulity was disturbed, and his saints and virgins taken out of his worship to rank little higher than the divinities of Olympus, his belief became acquiescence rather than ardor; and he made his mind up to assume the cassock and bands as another man does to wear a breastplate and jack-boots, or to mount a merchant's desk for a livelihood, and from obedience and necessity rather than from choice. There were scores of such men in Mr. Esmond's time at the universities, who were going to the Church with no better calling than his.

When Thomas Tusher was gone, a feeling of no small depression and disquiet fell upon young Esmond, of which, though he did not complain, his kind mistress must have divined the cause; for soon after she showed not only that she understood the reason of Harry's melancholy, but could provide a remedy for it. Her habit was thus to watch, unobservedly, those to whom duty or affection bound her, and to prevent their designs, or to fulfill them, when she had the power. It was this lady's disposition to think kindnesses, and devise silent bounties, and to scheme benevolence, for those about her. We take such goodness, for the most part, as if it was our due; the Marys who bring ointment for our feet get but little thanks. Some of us never feel this devotion at all or are moved by it to gratitude or acknowledgment; others only recall it years after, when the days are past in which those sweet kindnesses were spent on us, and we offer back our return for the debt by a poor tardy payment of tears. The forgotten tones of love recur to us, and kind glances shine out of the past—oh, so bright and clear! oh, so longed after! because they are out of reach—as holiday music from within-side a prison wall, or sunshine seen through the bars; more prized because unattainable—more bright because of the contrast of present darkness and solitude, whence there is no escape.

All the notice, then, which Lady Castlewood seemed to take of Harry Esmond's melancholy, upon Tom Tusher's departure, was, by a gayety unusual to her, to attempt to dispel his gloom. She made his three scholars (herself being the chief one) more cheerful than ever they had been before, and more docile, too, all of them learning and reading much more than they had been accustomed to do. 'For who knows,' said the lady, 'what may happen, and whether we may be able to keep such a learned tutor long?'

Frank Esmond said he for his part did not want to learn any more, and Cousin Harry might shut up his book whenever he liked, if he would come out a-fishing; and little Beatrix declared she would send for Tom Tusher, and he would be glad enough to come to Castlewood, if Harry chose to go away.

At last comes a messenger from Winchester one day, bearer of a letter with a great black seal, from the dean there to say that his sister was dead, and had left her fortune of £2000 among her six nieces, the dean's daughters, and many a time since has Harry Esmond recalled the flushed face and eager look wherewith, after this intelligence, his kind lady regarded him. She did not pretend to any grief about the deceased relative, from whom she and her family had been many years parted.

When my lord heard of the news, he also did not make any very long face. 'The money will come very handy to furnish the music-room and the cellar, which is getting low, and buy your ladyship a coach and a couple of horses that will do indifferent to ride or for the coach. And, Beatrix, you shall have a spinet; and, Frank, you shall have a little horse from Hexton Fair; and, Harry, you shall have five pounds to buy some books,' said my lord, who was generous with his own, and indeed with other folks' money. 'I wish your aunt would die once a year, Rachel; we could spend your money and all your sisters', too.'

'I have but one aunt—and—and I have another use for the money, my lord,' says my lady, turning very red.

'Another use, my dear; and what do you know about money? cries my lord. 'And what the devil is there that I don't give you, which you want?'

'I intend to give this money—can't you fancy how, my lord? My lord swore one of his large oaths that he did not know in the least what she meant.

'I intend it for Harry Esmond to go to college. Cousin Harry,' says my lady, 'you mustn't stay longer in this dull place, but make a name to yourself, and for us too, Harry.'

'D—n it, Harry's well enough here,' says my lord, for a moment looking rather sulky.

'Is Harry going away? You don't mean to say you will go away?' cry out Frank and Beatrix at one breath.

'But he will come back; and this will always be his home,' cries my lady, with blue eyes looking a celestial kindness; 'and his scholars will always love him; won't they?'

'By G—d, Rachel, you're a good woman!' says my lord, seizing my lady's hand, at which she blushed very much, and shrank back, putting her children before her. 'I wish you joy, my kinsman,' he continued, giving Harry Esmond a hearty slap on the shoulder. 'I won't balk your luck. Go to Cambridge, boy; and when Tusher dies you shall have the living here, if you are not better provided by that time. We'll furnish the dining room and buy the horses another year. I'll give thee a nag out of the stable; take any one except my hack and the bay gelding and the coach horses; and God speed thee, my boy.'

'Have the sorrel, Harry; 'tis a good one. Father says 'tis the best in the stable,' says little Frank, clapping his hands, and jumping up. 'Let's come and see him in the stable.' And the other, in his delight and eagerness, was for leaving the room that instant to arrange about his journey.

The Lady Castlewood looked after him with sad, penetrating glances. 'He wishes to be gone already, my lord,' said she to her husband.

The young man hung back abashed. 'Indeed, I would stay forever if your ladyship bade me,' he said.

'And thou wouldst be a fool for thy pains, kinsman,' said my lord. 'Tut, tut, man. Go and see the world. Sow thy wild oats; and take the best luck that Fate sends thee. I wish I were a boy again, that I might go to college, and taste the Trumpington ale.'

'Ours, indeed, is but a dull home,' cries my lady, with a little of sadness and, maybe, of satire in her voice; 'an old glum house, half ruined, and the rest only half furnished; a woman and two children are but poor company for men that are accustomed to better. We are only fit to be your worship's handmaids, and your pleasures must of necessity lie elsewhere than at home.'

'Curse me, Rachel, if I know now whether thou art in earnest or not,' said my lord.

'In earnest, my lord!' says she, still clinging by one of her children. 'Is there much subject here for joke?' And she made him a grand courtesy, and, giving a stately look to Harry Esmond, which seemed to say, 'Remember; you understand me, though he does not,' she left the room with her children.'

'Since she found out that confounded Hexton business,' my lord said—'and be hanged to them that told her! she has not been the same woman. She, who used to be as humble as a milkmaid, is as proud as a princess,' says my lord. 'Take my counsel, Harry Esmond, and keep clear of women. Since I have had anything to do with the jades, they have given me nothing but disgust. I had a wife at Tangier, with whom, as she couldn't speak a word of my language, you'd have thought I might lead a quiet life. But she tried to poison me because she was jealous of a Jew girl. There was your aunt, for aunt she is—Aunt Jezebel; a pretty life your father led with her! and here's my lady. When I saw her on a pillion riding behind the dean, her father, she looked and was such a baby that a sixpenny doll might have pleased her. And now you see what she is—hands off, highty-tighty, high and mighty, an empress couldn't be grander. Pass us the tankard, Harry, my boy. A mug of beer and a toast at morn says my host. A toast and mug of beer at noon, says my dear. 'D—n it, Polly loves a mug of ale, too, and laced with brandy, by Jove!' Indeed, I suppose they drank it together, for my lord was often thick in his speech at midday dinner; and at night at supper, speechless altogether.

Harry Esmond's departure resolved upon, it seemed as if the Lady Castlewood, too, rejoiced to lose him; for more than once, when the lad, ashamed perhaps of his own secret eagerness to go away (at any rate stricken with sadness at the idea of leaving those from whom he had received so many proofs of love and kindness inestimable), tried to express to his mistress his sense of gratitude to her, and his sorrow at quitting those who had so sheltered and tended a nameless and houseless orphan, Lady Castlewood cut short his protests of love and his lamentations, and would hear of no grieves, but only look forward to Harry's fame and prospects in life. 'Our little legacy will keep you for four years like a gentleman. Heaven's providence, your own genius, industry, honor, must do the rest for you. Castlewood will always be a home for you; and these children, whom you have taught and loved, will not forget to love you. And, Harry,' said she (and this was only the time when she spoke with a tear in her eye, or a tremor in her voice), 'it may happen in the course of nature that I shall be called away from them; and their father—and—and they will need true friends and protectors. Promise me that you will be true to them—as—as I think I have been to you—and a mother's fond prayer and blessing go with you.'

'So help me God, madam, I will,' said Harry Esmond, falling on his knees, and kissing the hand of his dearest mistress. 'If you will have me stay now, I will. What matters whether or no I make my way in life, or whether a poor bastard dies as unknown as he is now? 'Tis enough that I have your love and kindness surely; and to make you happy is duty enough for me.'

'Happy!' says she; 'but indeed I ought to be, with my children, and—.'
‘Not happy!’ cried Esmond (for he knew what her life was, though he and his mistress never spoke a word concerning it). ‘If not happiness, it may be ease. Let me stay and work for you—let me stay and be your servant.’

‘Indeed, you are best away,’ said my lady, laughing, as she put her hand on the boy’s head for a moment. ‘You shall stay in no such dull place. You shall go to college and distinguish yourself as becomes your name. That is how you shall please me best; and—and if my children want you, or I want you, you shall come to us; and I know we may count on you.’

‘May Heaven forsake me if you may not!’ Harry said, getting up from his knee.

‘And my knight longs for a dragon this instant that he may fight,’ says my lady, laughing; which speech made Harry Esmond start and turn red; for indeed the very thought was in his mind that he would like that some chance should immediately happen whereby he might show his devotion. And it pleased him to think that his lady had called him ‘her knight,’ and often and often he recalled this to his mind, and prayed that he might be her true knight, too.

My lady’s bedchamber window looked out over the country, and you could see from it the purple hills beyond Castlewood village, the green common betwixt that and the Hall, and the old bridge which crossed over the river. When Harry Esmond went away for Cambridge, little Frank ran alongside his horse as far as the bridge, and there Harry stopped for a moment, and looked back at the house where the best part of his life had been passed. It lay before him with its gray familiar towers, a pinnacle or two shining in the sun, the buttresses and terrace walls casting great blue shades on the grass. And Harry remembered, all his life after, how he saw his mistress at the window looking out on him in a white robe, the little Beatrix’s chestnut curls resting at her mother’s side. Both waved a farewell to him, and little Frank sobbed to leave him. Yes, he would be his lady’s true knight, he vowed in his heart; he waved her an adieu with his hat. The village people had good-by to say to him too. All knew that Master Harry was going to college, and most of them had a kind word and a look of farewell. I do not stop to say what adventures he began to imagine, or what career to devise for himself before he had ridden three miles from home. He had not read M. Galland’s ingenious Arabian tales as yet; but be sure that there are other folks who build castles in the air, and have fine hopes, and kick them down too, besides honest Alnaschar.
Parting.
CHAPTER X.

I GO TO CAMBRIDGE, AND DO BUT LITTLE GOOD THERE.

My lord, who said he should like to revisit the old haunts of his youth, kindly accompanied Harry Esmond in his first journey to Cambridge. Their road lay through London, where my Lord Viscount would also have Harry stay a few days to show him the pleasures of the town before he entered upon his university studies, and while here Harry’s patron conducted the young man to my Lady Dowager’s house at Chelsey near London; the kind lady at Castlewood having specially ordered that the young gentleman and the old should pay a respectful visit in that quarter.

Her ladyship the Viscountess Dowager occupied a handsome new house in Chelsey, with a garden behind it, and facing the river, always a bright and animated sight with its swarms of sailors, barges, and wherries. Harry laughed at recognizing in the parlor the well-remembered old piece of Sir Peter Lely, wherein his father’s widow was represented as a virgin huntress, armed with a gilt bow and arrow, and encumbered only with that small quantity of drapery which it would seem the virgins in King Charles’ day were accustomed to wear.

My Lady Dowager had left off this particular habit of huntress when she married. But though she was now considerably past sixty years of age, I believe she thought that airy nymph of the picture could still be easily recognized in the venerable personage who gave an audience to Harry and his patron.

She received the young man with even more favor than she showed to the elder, for she chose to carry on the conversation in French, in which my Lord Castlewood was no great proficient, and expressed her satisfaction at finding that Mr. Esmond could speak fluently in that language. ‘Twas the only one fit for polite conversation,’ she condescended to say, ‘and suitable to persons of high breeding.’

My lord laughed afterward, as the gentlemen went away, at his kinswoman’s behavior. He said he remembered the time when she could speak English fast enough, and joked in his jolly way at the loss he had had of such a lovely wife as that.

My Lady Viscountess deigned to ask his lordship news of his wife and children; she had heard that Lady Castlewood had had the smallpox; she hoped she was not so very much disfigured as people said.

At this remark about his wife’s malady, my Lord Viscount winced and turned red; but the dowager, in speaking of the disfigurement of the young lady, turned to her looking-glass, and examined her old wrinkled countenance in it with such a grin of satisfaction that it was all her guests could do to refrain from laughing in her ancient face.

She asked Harry what his profession was to be; and my lord saying that the lad was to take orders, and have the living of Castlewood when old Dr. Tusher vacated it, she did not seem to show any particular anger at the notion of Harry’s becoming a Church of England clergyman; nay, was rather glad than otherwise that the youth should be so provided for. She bade Mr. Esmond not to forget to pay her a visit whenever he passed through London, and carried her graciousness so far as to send a purse with twenty guineas for him to the tavern at which my lord put up (the Greyhound, in Charing Cross); and along with this welcome gift for her kinsman she sent a little doll for a present to my lord’s little daughter Beatrice, who was growing beyond the age of dolls by this time, and was as tall almost as her venerable relative.

After seeing the town, and going to the plays, my Lord Castlewood and Esmond rode together to Cambridge, spending two pleasant days upon the journey. Those rapid new coaches were not established, as yet, that performed the whole journey between London and the university in a single day; however, the road was pleasant and short enough to Harry Esmond, and he always gratefully remembered that happy holiday which his kind patron gave him.

Mr. Esmond was entered a pensioner of Trinity College in Cambridge, to which famous college my lord had also in his youth belonged. Dr. Montague was master at this time, and received my Lord Viscount with great politeness; so did Mr. Bridge, who was appointed to be Harry’s tutor. Tom Tusher, who was of Emmanuel College, and was by this time a junior soph, came to wait upon my lord, and to take Harry under his protection; and comfortable rooms being provided for him in the great court close by the gate, and near to the famous Mr. Newton’s lodgings, Harry’s patron took leave of him with many kind words and blessings, and an admonition to him to behave better at the university than my lord himself had ever done.

’Tis needless in these memoirs to go at any length into the particulars of Harry Esmond’s college career. It was like that of a hundred young gentlemen of that day. But he had the ill fortune to be older by a couple of years than most of his fellow-students; and by his previous solitary mode of bringing up, the circumstances of his life, and the peculiar thoughtful-ness and melancholy that they had naturally engendered, he was in a great measure cut off from the society of comrades who were much younger and higher-spirited than he. His tutor, who had bowed down to the ground, as he walked my lord over the college grass-plots, changed his behavior as soon as the nobleman’s back was turned, and was—at least Harry thought so—harsh and overbearing. When the lads used to assemble in their greges in hall, Harry found himself alone in the midst of that little flock of boys; they raised a great laugh at him when he was set on to read Latin, which he did with the foreign pronunciation taught to him by his old master, the Jesuit, than which he knew no other. Mr. Bridge, the tutor, made him the object of clumsy jokes, in which he was fond of indulging. The young man’s spirit was chafed, and his vanity mortified; and he found himself for some time as lonely in this place as ever he had been at Castlewood, whither he longed to return. His birth was a source of shame to him, and he fancied a hundred slights and sneers from young and old, who, no doubt, had treated him better had he met them himself more frankly. And as he looks back in calmer days upon this period of his life which he thought so unhappy, he can see that his own pride and vanity caused no small part of the mortifications which he attributed to others’ ill will. The world deals good-naturedly with good-natured people, and I never knew a sulky misanthropist who quarreled with it, but it was he, and not it, that was in the wrong. Tom Tusher gave Harry plenty of good advice on this subject, for Tom had both good sense and good humor; but Mr. Harry chose to treat his senior with a great deal of superfluous disdain and absurd scorn, and would by no means part from his darling injuries, in which,
very likely, no man believed but himself. As for honest Dr.
Bridge, the tutor found, after a few trials of wit with the pupil, that the young man was an ugly subject for wit, and that the laugh was often turned against him. This did not make tutor and pupil any better friends; but had, so far, an advantage for Esmond, that Mr. Bridge was induced to leave him alone; and so long as he kept his chapels, and did the college exercises required of him, Bridge was content not to see Harry’s glum face in his class, and to leave him to read and sulk for himself in his own chamber.

A poem or two in Latin and English, which were pronounced to have some merit, and a Latin oration (for Mr. Esmond could write that language better than pronounce it), got him a little reputation both with the authorities of the university and among the young men, with whom he began to pass for more than he was worth. A few victories over their common enemy, Mr. Bridge, made them incline toward him, and look upon him as the champion of their order against the seniors. Such of the lads as he took into his confidence found him not so gloomy and haughty as his appearance led them to believe; and Don Dismallo, as he was called, became presently a person of some little importance in his college, and was, as he believes, set down by the seniors there as rather a dangerous character.

Don Dismallo was a stanch young Jacobite, like the rest of his family; gave himself many absurd airs of loyalty; used to invite young friends to burgundy, and give the king's health on King James' birthday; wore black on the day of his abdication; fasted on the anniversary of King William's coronation; and performed a thousand absurd antics, of which he smiles now to think.

These follies caused many remonstrances on Tom Tusher's part, who was always a friend to the powers that be, as Esmond was always in opposition to them. Tom was a Whig, while Esmond was a Tory. Tom never missed a lecture, and capped the proctor with the profoundest of bows. No wonder he sighed over Harry's insubordinate courses, and was angry when the others laughed at him. But that Harry was known to have my Lord Viscount's protection, Tom no doubt would have broken with him altogether. But honest Tom never gave up a comrade as long as he was the friend of a great man. This was not out of scheming on Tom's part, but a natural inclination toward the great. 'Twas no hypocrisy in him to flatter, but the bent of his mind, which was always perfectly good-humored, obliging, and servile.

Harry had very liberal allowances, for his dear mistress of Castlewood not only regularly supplied him, but the Dowager of Chelsey made her donation annual, and received Esmond at her house near London every Christmas; but, in spite of these benefactions, Esmond was constantly poor; while 'twas a wonder with how small a stipend from his father Tom Tusher contrived to make a good figure. 'Tis true that Harry both spent, gave, and lent his money very freely, which Thomas never did. I think he was like the famous Duke of Marlborough in this instance who, getting a present of fifty pieces, when a young man, from some foolish woman who fell in love with his good looks, showed the money to Cadogan in a drawer scores of years after, where it had lain ever since he had sold his beardless honor to procure it. I do not mean to say that Tom ever let out his good looks so profitably, for nature had not endowed him with any particular charms of person, and he ever was a pattern of moral behavior, losing no opportunity of giving the very best advice to his younger comrade; with which article, to do him justice, he parted very freely. Not but that he was a merry fellow, too, in his way; he loved a joke, if by good fortune he understood it, and took his share generously of a bottle if another paid for it, and especially if there was a young lord in company to drink it. In these cases there was not a harder drinker in the university than Mr.
Tusher could be; and it was edifying to behold him, fresh shaved and with smug face, singing out "Amen!" at early chapel in the morning. In his reading poor Harry permitted himself to go a-gadding after all the Nine Muses, and so very likely had but little favor from any one of them; whereas Tom Tusher, who had no more turn for poetry than a plowboy, nevertheless, by a dogged perseverance and obsequiousness in courting the divine Calliope, got himself a prize, and some credit in the university, and a fellowship at his college, as a reward for his scholarship. In this time of Mr. Esmond's life he got the little reading which he ever could boast of, and passed a good part of his days greedily devouring all the books on which he could lay hand. In this desultory way the works of most of the English, French, and Italian poets came under his eyes, and he had a smattering of the Spanish tongue likewise, besides the ancient languages, of which, at least of Latin, he was a tolerable master.

Then, about midway in the university career, he fell to reading for the profession to which worldly prudence rather than inclination called him, and was perfectly bewildered in theological controversy. In the course of his reading (which was neither pursued with that seriousness nor that devout mind which such a study requires) the youth found himself at the deck of one month a Papist, and was about to proclaim his faith; the next month a Protestant, with Chillingworth; and the third a skeptic with Hobbes and Bayle. Whereas honest Tom Tusher never permitted his mind to stray out of the prescribed university path, accepted the Thirty-nine Articles with all his heart, and would have signed and sworn to other nine-and-thirty with entire obedience. Harry's willfulness in this matter and disorderly thoughts and conversation so shocked and afflicted his senior that there grew up a coldness and estrangement between them, so that they became scarce more than mere acquaintances, from having been intimate friends when they came to college first. Politics ran high, too, at the university, and here, also, the young men were at variance. Tom professed himself, albeit a high churchman, a strong King William's man; whereas Harry brought his family Tory politics to college with him, to which he must add a dangerous admiration for Oliver Cromwell, whose side, or King James' by turns, he often chose to take in the disputes which the young gentlemen used to hold in each other's rooms, where they debated on the state of the nation, crowned and deposed kings, and toasted past and present heroes and beauties in flagons of college ale.

Thus, either from the circumstances of his birth, or the natural melancholy of his disposition, Esmond came to live very much by himself during his stay at the university, having neither ambition enough to distinguish himself in the college career, nor caring to mingle with the mere pleasures and boyish frolics of the students, who were, for the most part, two or three years younger than he. He fancied that the gentlemen of the common-room of his college slighted him on account of his birth, and hence kept aloof from their society. It may bethat he made theill will, which he imagined came from them, by his own behavior, which, as he looks back on it in after life, he now sees was morose and haughty. At any rate, he was as tenderly grateful for kindness as he was susceptible of slight and wrong; and, lonely as he was generally, yet had one or two very warm friendships for his companions of those days.

One of these was a queer gentleman that resided in the university, though he was no member of it, and was the professor of a science scarce recognized in the common course of college education. This was a French refugee officer, who had been driven out of his native country at the time of the Protestant persecutions there, and who came to Cambridge, where he taught the science of the small-sword and set up a saloon-of-arms. Though he declared himself a Protestant, 'twas said Mr. Moreau was a Jesuit in disguise; indeed he brought very strong recommendations to the Tory party, which was pretty strong in that university, and very likely was one of the many agents whom King James had in this country. Esmond found this gentleman's conversation very much more agreeable and to his taste than the talk of the college divines in the common room; he never wearied of Moreau's stories of the wars of Turenne and Condé, in which he had borne a part; and being familiar with the French tongue from his youth, and in a place where but few spoke it, his company became very agreeable to the brave old professor of arms, whose favorite pupil he was, and who made Mr. Esmond a very tolerable proficient in the noble science of escrime.

At the next term Esmond was to take his degree of Bachelor of Arts, and afterward, in proper season, to assume the cassock and bands which his fond mistress would have him wear. Tom Tusher himself was a parson and a fellow of his college by this time; and Harry felt that he would very gladly cede his right to the living of Castlewood to Tom, and that his own calling was in no way the pulpit. But as he was bound, before all things in the world, to his dear mistress at home, and knew that a refusal on his part would grieve her, he determined to give her no hint of his unwillingness to the clerical office; and it was in this unsatisfactory mood of mind that he went to spend the last vacation he should have at Castlewood before he took orders.

CHAPTER XI.

I COME HOME FOR A HOLIDAY TO CASTLEWOOD, AND FIND A SKELETON IN THE HOUSE.

At his third Long Vacation, Esmond came as usual to Castlewood, always feeling an eager thrill of pleasure when he found himself once more in the house where he had passed so many years, and beheld the kind familiar eyes of his mistress looking upon him. She and her children (out of whose company she scarce ever saw him) came to greet him. Miss Beatrix was grown so tall that Harry did not quite know whether he might kiss her or no; and she blushed and held back when he offered that salutation, though she took it, and even courted it, when they were alone. The young lord was shooting up to be like his gallant father in look, though with his mother's kind eyes; the lady of Castlewood herself seemed grown, too, since Harry saw her—in her look more stately, in her person fuller, in her face, still, as ever, most tender and friendly, a greater air of command and decision than had appeared in that guileless sweet countenance which Harry remembered so gratefully. The tone of her voice was so much deeper and sadder when she spoke and welcomed him that it quite startled Esmond, who looked up at her surprised as she spoke, when she withdrew her eyes from him; nor did she ever look at him afterward when his own eyes were gazing upon her. A something hinting at grief and secret, and filling his mind with alarm undefinable, seemed to speak with that low thrilling voice of hers, and look out of those clear sad eyes. Her greeting to Esmond was so cold that it almost pained the lad (who would have liked to fall on his knees, and kiss the skirt of her robe, so fond and ardent was his respect and regard for her), and he faltered in answering the questions which she, hesitating on her side, began to put to him. Was he happy at Cambridge? Did he study too hard? She hoped not. He had grown very tall, and looked very well.

'He has got a mustache!' cries out Master Esmond.

'Why does he not wear a peruke like my Lord Mohun?' asked Miss Beatrix. 'My lord says that nobody wears their own hair.'

'I believe you will have to occupy your old chamber,' says my lady. 'I hope the housekeeper has got it ready.'

'Why, mamma, you have been there ten times these three days yourself!' exclaims Frank.

'And she cut some flowers which you planted in my garden, —do you remember, ever so many years ago?—when I was quite a little girl,' cries out Miss Beatrix, on tiptoe. 'And mamma put them in your window.'

'I remember when you grew well after you were ill that you used to like roses,' said the lady, blushing like one of them. They all conducted Harry Esmond to his chamber; the children running before, Harry walking by his mistress hand-in-hand.

The old room had been ornamented and beautified not a little to receive him. The flowers were in the window in a china vase; and there was a fine new counterpane on the bed, which chatterbox Beatrix said mamma had made too. A fire was crackling on the hearth, although it was June. My lady thought the room wanted warming; everything was done to make him happy and welcome. 'And you are not to be a page any longer, but a gentleman and kinsman, and to walk with papa and mamma,' said the children. And as soon as his dear mistress and children had left him to himself, it was with a heart overflowing with love and gratefulness that he flung himself down on his knees by the side of the bed, and asked a blessing upon those who were so kind to him.

The children, who are always house tell-tales, soon made him acquainted with the little history of the house and family. Papa had been to London twice. Papa often went away now. Papa had taken Beatrix to Westlands, where she was taller than Sir George Harper's second daughter, though she was two years older. Papa had taken Beatrix and Frank both to Bellminster, where Frank had got the better of Lord Belminster's son in a boxing match—my lord, laughing, told Harry afterward. Many gentlemen came to stop with papa, and papa had gotten a new game from London, a French game, called a billiard—that the French king played it very well; and the Dowager Lady Castlewood had sent Miss Beatrix a present; and papa had gotten a new chaise, with two little horses, which he drove himself, beside the coach, which mamma went in; and Dr. Tusher was a cross old plague, and they did not like to learn from him at all; and papa did not care about them learning, and laughed when they were at their books, but mamma liked them to learn, and taught them; and 'I don't think papa is fond of mamma,' said Miss Beatrix, with her great eyes. She had come quite close up to Harry Esmond by the time this prattle took place, and was on his knee, and had examined all the points of his dress, and all the good or bad features of his homely face.

'You shouldn't say that papa is not fond of mamma,' said the boy, at this confession. 'Mamma never said so; and mamma forbade you to say it, Miss Beatrix.'

'Twas this, no doubt, that accounted for the sadness in Lady Castlewood's eyes, and the plaintive vibrations of her voice. Who does not know of eyes, lighted by love once, where the flame shines no more?—of lamps extinguished, once properly trimmed and tended? Every man has such in his house. Such mementoes make our splendidest chambers look blank and sad; such faces seen in a day cast a gloom upon our sunshine. So oaths mutually sworn, and invocations of heaven, and priestly ceremonies, and fond belief, and love, so fond and faithful that it never doubted but that it should live forever, are all of no avail toward making love eternal; it dies, in spite of the banns and the priest; and I have often thought there should be a visitation of the sick for it, and a funeral service, and an extreme unction, and an abj in pace. It has its course, like all mortal things—its beginning, progress, and decay. It buds and it blooms out into sunshine, and it withers and ends. Strephon and Chloe languish apart; join in a rapture; and presently you hear that Chloe is crying, and Strephon has broken his crook across her back. Can you mend it so as to show no marks of rupture? Not all the priests of Hymen, not all the incantations to the gods, can make it whole!

Waking up from dreams, books, and visions of college honors, in which for two years Harry Esmond had been immersed, he found himself, instantly, on his return home, in the midst of this actual tragedy of life, which absorbed and interested him more than all his tutor had taught him. The persons whom he loved best in the world, and to whom he owed most, were living unhappily together. The gentlest and kindest of women was suffering ill usage and shedding tears in secret; the man who made her wretched by neglect, if not by violence, was Harry’s benefactor and patron. In houses where, in place of that sacred, inmost flame of love, there is discord at the center, the whole household becomes hypocritical, and each lies to his neighbor. The husband (or it may be the wife) lies when the visitor comes in, and wears a grin of reconciliation or politeness before him. The wife lies (indeed, her business is to do that, and to smile, however much she is beaten), swallows her tears, and lies to her lord and master; lies in bidding little Jacky respect dear papa; lies in assuring grandpapa that she is perfectly happy. The servants lie, wearing grave faces behind their master’s chair, and pretending to be unconscious of the fighting; and so, from morning till bedtime, life is passed in falsehood. And wiseacres call this a proper regard of morals and point out Baucis and Philemon as examples of a good life.

If my lady did not speak of her griefs to Harry Esmond, my lord was by no means reserved when in his cups, and spoke his mind very freely, bidding Harry in his coarse way, and with his blunt language, beware of all women as cheats, jades, jilts, and using other unmistakable monosyllables in speaking of them. Indeed ’twas the fashion of the day, as I must own; and there’s not a writer of my time of any note, with the exception of poor Dick Steele, that does not speak of a woman as of a slave, and scorn and use her as such. Mr. Pope, Mr. Congreve, Mr. Addison, Mr. Gay, every one of ’em, sing in this key, each according to his nature and politeness, and louder and fouler than all in abuse is Dr. Swift, who spoke of them, as he treated them, worst of all.

Much of the quarrels and hatred which arise between married people comes in my mind from the husband’s rage and revolt at discovering that his slave and bedfellow, who is to minister to all his wishes, and is church-sworn to honor and obey him—is his superior; and that he, and not she, ought to be the subordinate of the twain; and in these controversies, I think, lay the cause of my lord’s anger against his lady. When he left her she began to think for herself, and her thoughts were not in his favor. After the illumination, when the love-lamp is put out that anon we spoke of, and by the common daylight we look at the picture, what a daub it looks! what a clumsy effigy! How many men and wives come to this knowledge, think you? And if it be painful to a woman to find herself mated for life to a boor, and ordered to love and honor a dullard; it is worse still for the man himself perhaps, whenever in his dim comprehension the idea dawns that his slave and drudge yonder is, in truth, his superior; that the woman who does his bidding, and submits to his humor, should be his lord; that she can think a thousand things beyond the power of his muddled brains; and that in yonder head, on the pillow opposite to him, lie a thousand feelings, mysteries of thought, latent scorns and rebellions, whereof he only dimly perceives the existence as they look out furtively from her eyes; treasures of love doomed to perish without a hand to gather them; sweet fancies and images of beauty that would grow and unfold themselves into flowers; bright wit that would shine like diamonds, could it be brought into the sun; and the tyrant in possession crushes the outbreak of all these, drives them back like slaves into the dungeons and darkness, and chafes without that his prisoner is rebellious, and his sworn subject undutiful and refractory. So the lamp was out in Castlewood Hall, and the lord and lady there saw each other as they were. With her illness and altered beauty my lord's fire for his wife disappeared; with his selfishness and faithlessness her foolish fiction of love and reverence was rent away. Love! who is to love what is base and unlovely? Respect! who is to respect what is gross and sensual? Not all the marriage oaths sworn before all the persons, cardinals, ministers, muftis, and rabbins in the world can bind to that monstrous allegiance. This couple was living apart then; the woman happy to be allowed to love and tend her children (who were never of her own good will away from her), and thankful to have saved such treasures as these out of the wreck in which the better part of her heart went down.

These young ones had had no instructors save their mother, and Dr. Tusher for their theology occasionally, and had made more progress than might have been expected under a tutor so indulgent and fond as Lady Castlewood. Beatrix could sing and dance like a nymph. Her voice was her father's delight after dinner. She ruled over the house with little imperial ways, which her parents coaxed and laughed at. She had long learned the value of her bright eyes, and tried experiments in coquetry, in corpore vili, upon rustics and country squires, until she should prepare to conquer the world and the fashion. She put on a new ribbon to welcome Harry Esmond, made eyes at him, and directed her young smiles at him, not a little to the amusement of the young man and the joy of her father, who laughed his great laugh, and encouraged her in her thousand antics. Lady Castlewood watched the child gravely and sadly; the little one was pert in her replies to her mother, yet eager in her protestations of love and promises of amendment; and as ready to cry (after a little quarrel brought on by her own giddiness) until she had won back her mamma's favor, as she was to risk the kind lady's displeasure by fresh outbreaks of restless vanity. From her mother's sad looks she fled to her father's chair and boozey laughter. She already set the one against the other; and the little rogue delighted in the mischief which she knew how to make so early.

The young heir of Castlewood was spoiled by father and mother both. He took their caresses as men do, and as if they were his right. He had his hawks and his spaniel dog, his little horse and his beagles. He had learned to ride, and to drink, and to shoot flying; and he had a small court, the sons of the huntsman and woodman, as became the heir apparent, taking after the example of my lord his father. If he had a headache, his mother was as much frightened as if the plague were in the house; my lord laughed and jeered in his abrupt way—(indeed, 'twas on the day after New Year's Day and an excess of mince pie)—and said with some of his usual oaths, 'D—n it, Harry Esmond, you see how my lady takes on about Frank's megrim. She used to be sorry about me, my boy (pass the tankard, Harry), and to be frightened if I had a headache once. She don't care about my head now. They're like that, women are; all the same, Harry, all jilts in their hearts. Stick to college; stick to punch and buttery ale; and never see a woman that's handsomer than an old cinder-faced bedmaker. That's my counsel.'

It was my lord's custom to fling out many jokes of this nature, in presence of his wife and children, at meals—clumsy sarcasms which my lady turned many a time, or which, sometimes, she affected not to hear, or which now and again would hit their mark and make the poor victim wince (as you could see by her flushing face and eyes filling with tears), or which again worked her up to anger and retort, when, in answer to one of these heavy bolts, she would flash back with a quivering reply. The pair were not happy; nor indeed was it happy to be with them. Alas that youthful love and truth should end in bitterness and bankruptcy! To see a young couple loving each other is no wonder; but to see an old couple loving each other is the best sight of all. Harry Esmond became the confidant of one and the other; that is, my lord told the lad all his griefs and wrongs (which were indeed of Lord Castlewood's own making), and Harry divined my lady's; his affection leading him easily to penetrate the hypocrisy under which Lady Castlewood generally chose to go disguised, and see her heart aching while her face wore a smile. 'Tis a hard task for women in life, that mask which the world bids them wear. But there is no greater crime than for a woman who is ill used and unhappy to show that she is so. The world is quite relentless about bidding her to keep a cheerful face; and our women, like the Malabar wives, are forced to go smiling and painted to sacrifice themselves with their husbands; their relations being the most eager to push them on to their duty, and, under their shouts and applauses, to smother and hush their cries of pain.

So, into the sad seerst of his patron's household, Harry Esmond became initiated, he scarce knew how. It had passed under his eyes two years before, when he could not understand it; but reading, and thought, and experience of men, had olden him; and one of the deepest sorrows of a life which had never, in truth, been very happy, came upon him now, when he was compelled to understand and pity a grief which he stood quite powerless to relieve.

It hath been said my lord would never take the oath of allegiance, nor his seat as a peer of the kingdom of Ireland, where, indeed, he had but a nominal estate; and refused an English peerage which King William's government offered him as a bribe to secure his loyalty.

He might have accepted this, and would doubtless, but for the earnest remonstrances of his wife, who ruled her husband's opinions better than she could govern his conduct, and who, being a simple-hearted woman, with but one rule of faith and right, never thought of swerving from her fidelity to the exiled family, or of recognizing any other sovereign but King James; and though she acquiesced in the doctrine of obedience to the reigning power, no temptation, she thought, could induce her to acknowledge the Prince of Orange as rightful monarch, nor to let her lord so acknowledge him. So my Lord Castlewood remained a nonjuror all his life nearly, though his self-denial caused him many a pang, and left him sulky and out of humor.

The year after the Revolution, and all through King William's life, 'tis known there were constant intrigues for the restoration of the exiled family; but if my Lord Castlewood took any share of these, as it is probable, it was only for a short time, and when Harry Esmond was too young to be introduced into such important secrets.

But in the year 1695, when that conspiracy of Sir John Fenwick, Colonel Lowick, and others, was set on foot, for waylaying King William as he came from Hampton Court to London, and a secret plot was formed, in which a vast number of the nobility and people of honor were engaged, Father Holt appeared at Castlewood, and brought a young friend with him, a gentleman whom ’twas easy to see that both my lord and the father treated with uncommon deference. Harry Esmond saw this gentleman, and knew and recognized him in after life, as shall be shown in its place; and he has little doubt now that my Lord Viscount was implicated somewhat in the transactions which always kept Father Holt employed and traveling hither and thither under a dozen of different names and disguises. The father’s companion went by the name of Captain James; and it was under a very different name and appearance that Harry Esmond afterward saw him.

It was the next year that the Fenwick conspiracy blew up, which is a matter of public history now, and which ended in the execution of Sir John and many more, who suffered manfully for their treason, and who were attended to Tyburn by my lady’s father Dean Armstrong, Mr. Collier, and other stout nonjuring clergymen, who absolved them at the gallows-foot.

’Tis known that when Sir John was apprehended, discovery was made of a great number of names of gentlemen engaged in the conspiracy; when, with a noble wisdom and clemency, the Prince burned the list of conspirators furnished to him, and said he would know no more. Now it was after this that Lord Castlewood swore his great oath that he would never, so help him Heaven, be engaged in any transaction against that brave and merciful man; and so he told Holt when the indefatigable priest visited him, and would have had him engage in a further conspiracy. After this my lord ever spoke of King William as he was—as one of the wisest, the bravest, and the greatest of men. My Lady Esmond (for her part) said she could never pardon the king, first, for ousting his father-in-law from his throne, and secondly, for not being constant to his wife, the Princess Mary. Indeed, I think if Nero were to rise again, and be King of England, and a good family man, the ladies would pardon him. My lord laughed at his wife’s objections; the standard of virtue did not fit him much.

The last conference which Mr. Holt had with his lordship took place when Harry was come home for his first vacation from college (Harry saw his old tutor but for a half-hour, and exchanged no private words with him), and their talk, whatever it might be, left my Lord Viscount very much disturbed in mind—so much so that his wife, and his young kinsman, Henry Esmond, could not but observe his disquiet. After Holt was gone my lord rebuked Esmond, and again treated him with the greatest deference; he shunned his wife’s questions and company, and looked at his children with such a face of gloom and anxiety, muttering, ‘Poor children—poor children!’ in a way that could not but fill those whose life it was to watch him and obey him with great alarm. For which gloom, each person interested in the Lord Castlewood framed in his or her own mind an interpretation.

My lady, with a laugh of cruel bitterness, said, ‘I suppose the person at Hexton has been ill, or has scolded him’ (for my lord’s infatuation about Mrs. Marwood was known only too well). Young Esmond feared for his money affairs, into the condition of which he had been initiated; and that the expenses, always greater than his revenue, had caused Lord Castlewood disquiet.

One of the causes why my Lord Viscount had taken young Esmond into his special favor was a trivial one, that hath not before been mentioned, though it was a very lucky accident in Henry Esmond’s life. A very few months after my lord’s coming to Castlewood, in the winter time—the little boy, being a child in a petticoat, trotting about—it happened that little Frank was with his father after dinner, who fell asleep over his wine, heedless of the child, who crawled to the fire; and as good fortune would have it, Esmond was sent by his mistress for the boy just as the poor little screaming urchin’s coat was set on fire by a log; when Esmond, rushing forward, tore the dress off the infant, so that his own hands were burned more than the child’s, who was frightened rather than hurt by this accident. But certainly ’twas providential that a resolute person should have come in at that instant, or the child had been burned to death probably, my lord sleeping very heavily after drinking, and not waking so cool as a man should who had a danger to face.

Ever after this the father, loud in his expressions of remorse and humility for being a tipsy good-for-nothing, and of admiration for Harry Esmond, whom his lordship would style a hero for doing a very trifling service, had the tenderest regard for his son’s preserver, and Harry became quite as one of the family. His burns were tended with the greatest care by his kind mistress, who said that Heaven had sent him to be the guardian of her children, and that she would love him all her life.

And it was after this and from the very great love and tenderness which had grown up in this little household, rather than from the exhortations of Dean Armstrong (though these had no small weight with him), that Harry came to be quite of the religion of his house and his dear mistress, of which he has ever since been a professing member. As for Dr. Tusher's boasts that he was the cause of this conversion—even in these young days Mr. Esmond had such a contempt for the doctor, that had Tusher bade him believe anything (which he did not, never meddling at all), Harry would that instant have questioned the truth on't.

My lady seldom drank wine; but on certain days of the year, such as birthdays (poor Harry had never a one) and anniversaries, she took a little; and this day, the 29th of December, was one. At the end, then, of this year, '99, it might have been a fortnight after Mr. Holt's last visit, Lord Castlewood being still very gloomy in mind, and sitting at table—my lady bidding a servant bring her a glass of wine, and looking at her husband with one of her sweet smiles, said:

'My lord, will you not fill a bumper too, and let me call a toast?'

'What is it, Rachel?' says he, holding his empty glass to be filled.

'Tis the 29th of December,' says my lady, with her fond look of gratitude; 'and my toast is, 'Harry—and God bless him, who saved my boy's life!''

My lord looked at Harry hard and drank the glass, but clapped it down on the table in a moment, and, with a sort of groan, rose up, and went out of the room. What was the matter? We all knew that some great grief was over him.

Whether my lord's prudence had made him richer, or legacies had fallen to him, which enabled him to support a greater establishment than that frugal one which had been too much for his small means, Harry Esmond knew not; but the house of Castlewood was now on a scale much more costly than it had been during the first years of his lordship's coming to the title. There were more horses in the stable and more servants in the hall, and many more guests coming and going now than formerly, when it was found difficult enough by the strictest economy to keep the house as befitted one of his lordship's rank, and the estate out of debt. And it did not require very much penetration to find that many of the new acquaintances at Castlewood were not agreeable to the lady there; not that she ever treated them or any mortal with anything but courtesy; but they were persons who could not be welcome to her; and whose society a lady so refined and reserved could scarce desire for her children. There came fuddling squires from the country round, who bawled their songs under her windows and drank themselves tipsy with my lord’s punch and ale; there came officers from Hexton, in whose company our little lord was made to hear talk and to drink, and swear, too, in a way that made the delicate lady tremble for her son. Esmond tried to console her by saying what he knew of his college experience; that with this sort of company and conversation a man must fall in sooner or later in his course through the world; and it mattered very little whether he heard it at twelve years old or twenty—the youths who quitted mother’s apron strings the latest being not uncommonly the wildest rakes. But it was about her daughter that Lady Castlewood was the most anxious, and the danger which she thought menaced the little Beatrice from the indulgences which her father gave her (it must be owned that my lord, since these unhappy domestic differences especially, was at once violent in his language to the children when angry as he was too familiar, not to say course, when he was in a good humor), and from the company into which the careless lord brought the child.

Not very far off from Castlewood is Sark Castle, where the Marchioness of Sark lived, who was known to have been a mistress of the late King Charles—and to this house, whither indeed a great part of the country gentry went, my lord insisted upon going, not only himself, but on taking his little daughter and son, to play with the children there. The children were nothing loath, for the house was splendid, and the welcome kind enough. But my lady, justly, no doubt, thought that the children of such a mother as that noted Lady Sark had been, could be no good company for her two; and spoke her mind to her lord. His own language when he was thwarted was not indeed of the gentlest; to be brief, there was a family dispute on this, as there had been on many other points—and the lady was not only forced to give in, for the other’s will was law—nor could she, on account of their tender age, tell her children what was the nature of her objection to their visit of pleasure, or indeed mention to them any objection at all—but she had the additional secret mortification to find them returning delighted with their new friends, loaded with presents from them, and eager to be allowed to go back to a place of such delights as Sark Castle. Every year she thought the company there would be more dangerous to her daughter, as from a child Beatrix grew to a woman, and her daily increasing beauty, and many faults of character too, expanded.

It was Harry Esmond's lot to see one of the visits which the old Lady of Sark paid to the lady of Castlewood Hall; whither she came in state with six chestnut horses and blue ribbons, a page on each carriage-step, a gentleman of the horse, and armed servants riding before and behind her. And but that it was unpleasant to see Lady Castlewood's face, it was amusing to watch the behavior of the two enemies; the frigid patience of the younger lady, and the unconquerable good humor of the elder, who would see no offense, whatever her rival intended, and who never ceased to smile and to laugh and to coax the children, and to pay compliments to every man, woman, child, nay, dog, or chair and table, in Castlewood, so bent was she upon admiring everything there. She lauded the chldren, and wished—as indeed she well might—that her own family had been brought up as well as those cherubs. She had never seen such a complexion as dear Beatrix's—though, to be sure, she had a right to it from father and mother—Lady Castlewood's was indeed a wonder of freshness, and Lady Sark sighed to think that she had not been born a fair woman; and remarking Harry Esmond, with a fascinating superannuated smile, she complimented him on his wit, which she said she could see from his eyes and forehead; and vowed that she would never have him at Sark until her daughters were out of the way.

CHAPTER XII.

MY LORD MOHU COMES AMONG US FOR NO GOOD.

There had ridden along with this old princess' cavalcade two gentlemen: her son, my Lord Firebrace, and his friend, my Lord Mohun, who both were greeted with a great deal of cordiality by the hospitable lord of Castlewood. My Lord Firebrace was but a feeble-minded and weak-limbed young nobleman, small in stature and limited in understanding, to judge from the talk young Esmond had with him; but the other was a person of a handsome presence, with the bel air and a bright, daring, warlike aspect, which, according to the chronicle of those days, had already achieved for him the conquest of several beauties and toasts. He had fought and conquered in France, as well as in Flanders; he had served a couple of campaigns with the Prince of Baden on the Danube, and witnessed the rescue of Vienna from the Turk. And he spoke of his military exploits pleasantly and with the manly freedom of a soldier, so as to delight all his hearers at Castlewood, who were little accustomed to meet a companion so agreeable.

On the first day this noble company came my lord would not hear of their departure before dinner, and carried away the gentlemen to amuse them, while his wife was left to do the honors of her house to the old marchioness and her daughter within. They looked at the stables, where my Lord Mohun praised the horses, though there was but a poor show there; they walked over the old house and gardens, and fought the siege of Oliver's time over again; they played a game of rackets in the old court, where my Lord Castlewood beat my Lord Mohun, who said he loved ball of all things and would quickly come back to Castlewood for his revenge. After dinner they played bowls, and drank punch in the green alley; and when they parted they were sworn friends, my Lord Castlewood kissing the other lord before he mounted on horseback, and pronouncing him the best companion he had met for many a long day. All night long, over his tobacco-pipe, Castlewood did not cease to talk to Harry Esmond in praise of his new friend, and in fact did not leave off speaking of him until his lordship was so tipsy that he could not speak plainly any more.

At breakfast next day it was the same talk renewed; and when my lady said there was something free in the Lord Mohun's looks and manner of speech which caused her to mistrust him, her lord burst out with one of his laughs and oaths; said that he never liked man, woman, or beast, but what she was sure to be jealous of it; that Mohun was the prettiest fellow in England; that he hoped to see more of him while in the country; and that he would let Mohun know what my Lady Prude said of him.

'Indeed,' Lady Castlewood said, 'I liked his conversation well enough. 'Tis more amusing than that of most people I know. I thought it, I own, too free, not from what he said, as rather from what he implied.'

'Psha! your ladyship does not know the world,' said her husband; 'and you have always been as squeamish as when you were a miss of fifteen.'

'You found no fault when I was a miss of fifteen.'

'Begad, madam, you are grown too old for a pinafore now; and I hold that 'tis for me to judge what company my wife shall see,' said my lord, slapping the table.
‘Indeed, Francis, I never thought otherwise,’ answered my lady, rising and dropping him a courtesy, in which stately action, if there was obedience, there was defiance too; and in which a bystander, deeply interested in the happiness of that pair, as Harry Esmond was, might see how hopelessly separated they were; what a great gulf of difference and discord had run between them.

‘By G—d! Mohun is the best fellow in England; and I’ll invite him here, just to plague that woman. Did you ever see such a frigid insolence as it is, Harry? That’s the way she treats me,’ he broke out, storming, and his face growing red as he clenched his fists and went on. ‘I’m nobody in my own house. I’m to be the humble servant of that parson’s daughter. By Jove I’d rather she should fling the dish at my head than sneer at me as she does. She puts me to shame before the children with her d—d airs; and, I’ll swear, tells Frank and Beaty that papa’s a reprobate, and that they ought to despise me.’

‘Indeed and indeed, sir, I never heard her say a word but of respect regarding you,’ Harry Esmond interposed.

‘No, curse it! I wish she would speak. But she never does. She scorns me, and holds her tongue. She keeps off from me as if I was a pestilence. By George! she was fond enough of her pestilence once. And when I came a-courting you would see miss blush—blush red, by George! for joy. Why, what do you think she said to me, Harry? She said herself, when I joked with her about her d—d smiling red cheeks, “’Tis as they do at St. James’; I put up my red flag when my king comes.” I was the king, you see, she meant. But now, sir, look at her! I believe she would be glad if I was dead; and dead I’ve been to her these five years—ever since you all of you had the smallpox; and she never forgave me for going away.’

‘Indeed my lord, though ’twas hard to forgive, I think my mistress forgave it,’ Harry Esmond said; ‘and remember how eagerly she watched your lordship’s return, and how sadly she turned away when she saw your cold looks.’

‘Damme!’ cries out my lord; ‘would you have had me wait and catch the smallpox?’ Where the deuce had been the good of that? I’ll bear danger with any man—but not useless danger—no, no. Thank you for nothing. And—you nod your head, and I know very well, Parson Harry, what you mean. There was the—the other affair to make her angry. But is a woman never to forgive a husband who goes a-tripping? Do you take me for a saint?’
'Indeed, sir, I do not,' says Harry, with a smile.

'Since that time my wife's as cold as the statue at Charing Cross. I tell thee she has no forgiveness in her, Henry. Her coldness blights my whole life, and sends me to the punch bowl or driving about the country. My children are not mine but hers, when we are together. 'Tis only when she is out of sight with her abominable cold glances, that run through me, that they'll come to me, and that I dare to give them so much as a kiss; and that's why I take 'em and love 'em in other people's houses, Harry. I am killed by the very virtue of that proud woman. Virtue! give me the virtue that can forgive; give me the virtue that thinks not of preserving itself, but of making other folks happy. Damme, what matters a scar or two if 'tis got in helping a friend in ill fortune?'

And my lord again slapped the table, and took a great draught from the tankard. Henry Esmond admired as he listened to him, and thought how the poor preacher of this self-sacrifice had fled from the smallpox, which the lady had borne so cheerfully, and which had been the cause of so much disunion in the lives of all in this house. 'How well men preach,' thought the young man, 'and each is the example in his own sermon. How each has a story in a dispute, and a true one, too, and both are right or wrong as you will!' Harry's heart was pained within him, to watch the struggles and pangs that tore the breast of this kind, manly friend and protector.

'Indeed, sir,' said he, 'I wish to God that my mistress could hear you speak as I have heard you; she would know much that would make her life the happier, could she hear it.' But my lord flung away with one of his oaths and a jeer; he said that Parson Harry was a good fellow; but that as for women, all women were alike—all jades and heartless. So a man dashes a fine vase down, and despises it for being broken. It may be worthless—true; but who had the keeping of it, and who shattered it?

Harry, who would have given his life to make his benefactress and her husband happy, bethought him, now that he saw what his lord's state of mind was, and that he really had a great deal of that love left in his heart, and ready for his wife's acceptance if she would take it, whether he could not be a means of reconciliation between these two persons, whom he revered the most in the world. And he cast about how he should break a part of his mind to his mistress, and warn her that in his, Harry's opinion, at least, her husband was still her admirer, and even her lover.
But he found the subject a very difficult one to handle, when he ventured to remonstrate, which he did in the very gravest tone (for long confidence and reiterated proofs of devotion and loyalty had given him a sort of authority in the house, which he resumed as soon as ever he returned to it), and with a speech that should have some effect, as, indeed, it was uttered with the speaker's own heart, he ventured most gently to hint to his adored mistress that she was doing her husband harm by her ill opinion of him, and that the happiness of all the family depended upon setting her right.

She, who was ordinarily calm and most gentle, and full of smiles and soft attentions, flushed up when young Esmond spoke to her, and rose from her chair, looking at him with a haughtiness and indignation that he had never before known her to display. She was quite an altered being for that moment; and looked an angry princess insulted by a vassal.

'Have you ever heard me utter a word in my lord's disparagement?' she asked hastily, hissing out her words, and stamping her foot.

'Indeed, no,' Esmond said, looking down.

'Are you come to me as his ambassador—you?' she continued. 'I would sooner see peace between you than anything else in the world,' Harry answered, 'and would go of any embassy that had that end.

'So you are my lord's go-between?' she went on, not regarding this speech. 'You are sent to bid me back into slavery again, and inform me that my lord's favor is graciously restored to his handmaid? He is weary of Covent Garden, is he, that he comes home and would have the fatted calf killed?'

'There's good authority for it, surely,' said Esmond.

'For a son, yes; but my lord is not my son. It was he who cast me away from him. It was he who broke our happiness down, and he bids me to repair it. It was he who showed himself to me at last, as he was, not as I had thought him. It is he who comes before my children stupid and senseless with wine—who leaves our company for that of frequenters of taverns and bagnios—who goes from his home to the city yonder and his friends there, and when he is tired of them returns hither, and expects that I shall kneel and welcome him. And he sends you as his chamberlain! What a proud embassy! Monsieur, I make you my compliment of the new place.'

'It would be a proud embassy, and a happy embassy too, could I bring you and my lord together,' Esmond replied.

'I presume you have fulfilled your mission now, sir. It was a pretty one for you to undertake. I don’t know whether ’tis your Cambridge philosophy, or time, that has altered your ways of thinking,? Lady Castlewood continued, still in a sarcastic tone. ‘Perhaps you too have learned to love drink and to hiccough over your wine or punch; which is your worship’s favorite liquor? Perhaps you too put up at the Rose on your way to London, and have your acquaintances in Covent Garden. My services to you, sir, to principal and ambassador, to master and—and lackey.’

‘Great Heavens! madam,’ cried Harry. ‘What have I done that thus, for a second time, you insult me?’ Do you wish me to blush for what I used to be proud of, that I lived on your bounty? Next to doing you a service (which my life would pay for), you know that to receive one from you is my highest pleasure. What wrong have I done you that you should wound me so, cruel woman?’

‘What wrong?’ she said, looking at Esmond with wild eyes. ‘Well none—none that you know of, Harry, or could help. Why did you bring back the smallpox,’ she added, after a pause, ‘from Castlewood village?’ You could not help it, could you? Which of us knows whither fate leads us? But we were all happy, Henry, till then.’ And Harry went away from this colloquy, thinking still that the estrangement between his patron and his beloved mistress were remediable, and that each had at heart a strong attachment to the other.

The intimaey between the Lords Mohun and Castlewood appeared to increase as long as the former remained in the country; and my lord of Castlewood especially seemed never to be happy out of his new comrade’s sight. They sported together, they drank, they played bowls and tennis; my Lord Castlewood would go for three days to Sark, and bring back my Lord Mohun to Castlewood; where indeed his lordship made himself very welcome to all persons, having a joke or a new game at romps for the children, all the talk of the town for my lord, and music and gallantry and plenty of the beau langage for my lady, and for Harry Esmond, who was never tired of hearing histories of his campaigns and his life at Vienna, Venice, Paris, and the famous cities of Europe which he had visited both in peace and war. And he sang at my lady’s harpsichord, and played cards or backgammon, or his new game of billiards with my lord (of whom he invariably got the better); always having a consummate good humor and bearing himself with a certain manly grace, that might exhibit somewhat of the camp and Alsatia perhaps, but that had its charm and stamped him a gentleman; and his manner to Lady Castlewood was so devoted and respectful that she soon recovered from the first feelings of dislike which she had conceived against him—nay, before long, began to be interested in his spiritual welfare, and hopeful of his conversion, lending him books of piety, which he promised dutifully to study. With her my lord talked of reform, of settling into quiet life, quitting the court and town, and buying some land in the neighborhood—though it must be owned that, when the two lords were together over their burgundy after dinner, their talk was very different, and there was very little question of conversion on my Lord Mohun's part. When they got to their second bottle Harry Esmond used commonly to leave these two noble topers, who, though they talked freely enough, Heaven knows, in his presence (Good Lord, what a set of stories of Alsatia and Spring Garden, of the taverns and gaming houses, of the ladies of the court and mesdames of the theaters, he can recall out of their godly conversation)—although, I say, they talked before Esmond freely, yet they seemed pleased when he went away, and then they had another bottle, and then they fell to cards, and then my Lord Mohun came to her ladyship's drawing room, leaving his boon companion to sleep off his wine.

'Twas a point of honor with the fine gentlemen of those days to lose or win magnificently at their horse matches or games of cards and dice, and you could never tell, from the demeanor of these two lords afterward, which had been successful and which the loser at their games. And when my lady hinted to my lord that he played more than she liked, he dismissed her with a 'pish,' and swore that nothing was more equal than play betwixt gentlemen, if they did but keep it up long enough. And these kept it up long enough, you may be sure. A man of fashion of that time often passed a quarter of his day at cards, and another quarter at drink; I have known many a pretty fellow, who was a wit too, ready of repartee and possessed of a thousand graces, who would be puzzled if he had to write more than his name.

There is scarce any thoughtful man or woman, I suppose, but can look back upon his course of past life, and remember some point, trifling as it may have seemed at the time of occurrence, which has nevertheless turned and altered his whole career. 'Tis with almost all of us, as in M. Massillon's magnificent image regarding King William, a grain de sable that perverts or perhaps overthrows us; and so it was but a light word flung in the air, a mere freak of a perverse child's temper, that brought down a whole heap of crushing woes upon that family whereof Harry Esmond formed a part.

Coming home to his dear Castlewood in the third year of his academical course (wherein he had now obtained some distinction, his Latin poem on the death of the Duke of Gloucester, Princess Anne of Denmark's son, having gained him a medal, and introduced him to the society of the university wits), Esmond found his little friend and pupil Beatrix grown to be taller than her mother, a slim and lovely young girl, with cheeks mantling with health and roses; with eyes like stars shining out of azure, with waving bronze hair clustered about the fairest young forehead ever seen; and a mien and shape haughty and beautiful, such as that of the famous antique statue of the huntress Diana—at one time haughty, rapid, imperious, with eyes and arrows that dart and kill. Harry watched and wondered at this young creature, and likened her in his mind to Artemis with the ringing bow and shafts flashing death upon the children of Niobe; at another time she was coy and melting as Luna shining tenderly upon Endymion. This fair creature, this lustrous Phæbe, was only young as yet, nor had nearly reached her full splendor, but crescent and brilliant, our young gentleman of the university, his head full of poetical fancies, his heart perhaps throbbing with desires undefined, admired this rising young divinity; and gazed at her (though only as at 'some bright particular star,' far above his earth) with endless delight and wonder. She had been a coquette from the earliest times almost, trying her freaks and jealousies, her wayward frolics and winning caresses, upon all that came within her reach; she set her women quarreling in the nursery, and practiced her eyes on the groom as she rode behind him on the pillion.

She was the darling and torment of father and mother. She intrigued with each secretly; and bestowed her fondness and withdrew it, plied them with tears, smiles, kisses, cajolments—when the mother was angry, as happened often, flew to the father, and sheltering behind him pursued her victim; when both were displeased, transferred her caresses to the domestics, or watched until she could win back her parents' good graces, either by surprising them into laughter and good humor, or appeasing them by submission and artful humility. She was severa laeta negotio, like that fickle goddess Horace describes, and of whose 'malicious joy' a great poet of our own has written so nobly; who, famous and heroic as he was, was not strong enough to resist the torture of women.

It was but three years before that the child, then but ten years old, had nearly managed to make a quarrel between Harry Esmond and his comrade, good-natured, phlegmatic Thomas Tusher, who never of his own seeking quarreled with anybody, by quoting to the latter some silly joke which Harry had made regarding him—(it was the merest idlest jest, though it near drove two old friends to blows, and I think such a battle would have pleased her),—and from that day Tom kept at a distance from her; and she respected him, and coaxed him sedulously whenever they met. But Harry was much more easily appeased, because he was fonder of the child; and when she made mischief, used cutting speeches, or caused her friends pain, she excused herself for her fault, not by admitting and deploring it but by pleading not guilty, and asserting innocence so constantly, and with such seeming artlessness, that it was impossible to question her plea. In her childhood, they were but mischiefs then which she did; but her power became more fatal as she grew older—as a kitten first plays with a ball, and then pounces on a bird and kills it. 'Tis not to be imagined that Harry Esmond had all his experience at this early stage of his life, whereof he is now writing the history,—many things here noted were but known to him in later days. Almost everything Beatrix did or undid seemed good, or at least pardonable, to him then, and years afterward.

It happened, then, that Harry Esmond came home to Castlewood for his last vacation with good hopes of a fellowship at his college, and a contented resolve to advance his fortune that way. 'Twas in the first year of the present century, Mr. Esmond (as far as he knew the period of his birth) being then twenty-two years old. He found his quondam pupil shot up into this beauty of which we have spoken, and promising yet more; her brother, my lord's son, a handsome, high-spirited, brave lad, generous and frank, and kind to everybody, save perhaps his sister, with whom Frank was at war (and not from his but her fault)—adoring his mother, whose joy he was; and taking her side in the unhappy matrimonial differences which were now permanent, while of course Mistress Beatrix ranged with her father. When heads of families fall out it must naturally be that their dependents wear the one or the other party's color; and even in the parliaments in the servants' hall or the stables, Harry, who had an early observant turn, could see which were my lord's adherents and which my lady's, and conjecture pretty shrewdly how their unlucky quarrel was debated. Our lackeys sit in judgment on us. My lord’s intrigues may be ever so stealthily conducted, but his valet knows them; and my lady’s woman carries her mistress’ private history to the servants’ scandal market, and exchanges it against the secrets of other abigails.

CHAPTER XIII.

MY LORD LEAVES US AND HIS EVIL BEHIND HIM.

My Lord Mohun (of whose exploits and fame some of the gentlemen of the university had brought down but ugly reports) was once more a guest at Castlewood, and seemingly more intimately allied with my lord even than before. Once in the spring these two noblemen had ridden to Cambridge from Newmarket, whither they had gone for the horse racing, and had honored Harry Esmond with a visit at his rooms; after which Dr. Montague, the master of the College, who had treated Harry somewhat haughtily, seeing his familiarity with these great folks, and that my Lord Castlewood laughed and walked with his hand on Harry’s shoulder, relented to Mr. Esmond, and condescended to be very civil to him; and some days after his arrival, Harry, laughing, told this story to Lady Esmond, remarking how strange it was that men famous for learning and renowned over Europe, should, nevertheless, so bow down to a title, and cringe to a nobleman, ever so poor. At this Miss Beatrix flung up her head, and said it became those of low origin to respect their betters; that the parsons made themselves a great deal too proud, she thought; and that she liked the way at Lady Sark’s best, where the chaplain, though he loved pudding, as all parsons do, always went away before the custard.

‘And when I am a parson,’ says Mr. Esmond, ‘will you give me no custard, Beatrix?’

‘You—you are different,’ Beatrix answered. ‘You are of our blood.’

‘My father was a parson, as you call him,’ said my lady.

‘But mine is a peer of Ireland,’ says Mistress Beatrix, tossing her head. ‘Let people know their places. I suppose you will have me go down on my knees and ask a blessing of Mr. Thomas Tusher, that has just been made a curate, and whose mother was a waiting-maid.’

And she tossed out of the room, being in one of her flighty humors then.
When she was gone, my lady looked so sad and grave that Harry asked the cause of her disquietude. She said it was not merely what he said of Newmarket, but what she had remarked, with great anxiety and terror, that my lord, ever since his acquaintance with the Lord Mohun especially, had recurred to his fondness for play, which he had renounced since his marriage.

'But men promise more than they are able to perform, in marriage,' said my lady, with a sigh. 'I fear he has lost large sums; and our property, always small, is dwindling away under this reckless dissipation. I heard of him in London with very wild company. Since his return letters and lawyers are constantly coming and going; he seems to me to have a constant anxiety, though he hides it under boisterousness and laughter. I looked through—through the door last night, and—and before' said my lady, 'and saw them at cards after midnight; no estate will bear that extravagance, much less ours, which will be so diminished that my son will have nothing at all, and my poor Beatrix no portion!'

'I wish I could help you, madam,' said Harry Esmond, sighing, and wishing that unavailingly, and for the thousandth time in his life.

'Who can? Only God,' said Lady Esmond—'only God, in whose hands we are.' And so it is, and for his rule over his family, and for his conduct to wife and children—subjects over whom his power is monarchical—anyone who watches the world must think with trembling sometimes of the account which many a man will have to render. For in our society there's no law to control the King of the Fireside. He is master of property, happiness—life, almost. He is free to punish, to make happy or unhappy—to ruin or to torture. He may kill a wife gradually, and be no more questioned than the Grand Seignor who drowns a slave at midnight. He may make slaves and hypocrites of his children, or friends and freemen, or drive them into revolt and enmity against the natural law of love. I have heard politicians and coffee-house wiseacres talking over the newspaper, and railing at the tyranny of the French king and the Emperor, and wondered how these (who are monarchs, too, in their way) govern their own dominions at home, where each man rules absolute? When the annals of each little reign are shown to the Supreme Master, under whom we hold sovereignty, histories will be laid bare of household tyrants as cruel as Amurath, and as savage as Nero, and as reckless and dissolute as Charles.
If Harry Esmond's patron erred, 'twas in the latter way, from a disposition rather self-indulgent than cruel; and he might have been brought back to much better feelings, had time been given to him to bring his repentance to a lasting reform.

As my lord and his friend Lord Mohun were such close companions, Mistress Beatrix chose to be jealous of the latter; and the two gentlemen often entertained each other by laughing, in their rude, boisterous way, at the child's freaks of anger and show of dislike. 'When thou art old enough, thou shalt marry Lord Mohun,' Beatrix's father would say; on which the girl would pout and say, 'I would rather marry Tom Tusher.' And because the Lord Mohun always showed an extreme gallantry to my Lady Castlewood, whom he professed to admire devotedly, one day, in answer to this old joke of her father's, Beatrix said, 'I think my lord would rather marry mamma than marry me; and is waiting till you die to ask her.'

The words were said lightly and pertly by the girl one night before supper as the family party were assembled near the great fire. The two lords, who were at cards, both gave a start; my lady turned as red as scarlet, and bade Mistress Beatrix go to her own chamber; whereupon the girl, putting on, as her wont was, the most innocent air, said, 'I am sure I meant no wrong; I am sure mamma talks a great deal more to Harry Esmond than she does to papa,—and she cried when Harry went away, and she never does when papa goes away! and last night she talked to Lord Mohun for ever so long, and sent us out of the room, and cried when we came back, and—'

'D—n!' cried out my Lord Castlewood, out of all patience. 'Go out of the room, you little viper!' and he started up and flung down his cards.

'Ask Lord Mohun what I said to him, Francis,' her ladyship said, rising up with a scared face, but yet with a great and touching dignity and candor in her look and voice. 'Come away with me, Beatrix.' Beatrix sprung up too; she was in tears now.

'Dearest mamma, what have I done?' she asked. 'Sure I meant no harm.' And she clung to her mother, and the pair went out sobbing together.

'I will tell you what your wife said to me, Frank,' my Lord Mohun cried. 'Parson Harry may hear it; and, as I hope for Heaven, every word I say is true. Last night, with tears in her eyes, your wife implored me to play no more with you at dice or at cards, and you know best whether what she asked was not for your good.'
‘Of course, it was, Mohun,’ says my lord, in a dry, hard voice. ‘Of course you are a model of a man; and the world knows what a saint you are.’

My Lord Mohun was separated from his wife, and had had many affairs of honor; of which women as usual had been the cause.

‘I am no saint, though your wife is; and I can answer for my actions as other people must for their words,’ said my Lord Mohun.

‘By G——, my lord, you shall,’ cried the other, starting up. ‘We have another little account to settle first, my lord,’ says Lord Mohun. Whereupon Harry Esmond, filled with alarm for the consequences to which this disastrous dispute might lead, broke out into the most vehement expostulations with his patron and his adversary. ‘Gracious Heavens!’ he said, ‘my lord, are you going to draw a sword upon your friend in your own house? Can you doubt the honor of a lady who is as pure as Heaven, and would die a thousand times rather than do you a wrong? Are the idle words of a jealous child to set friends at variance? Has not my mistress, as much as she dared to, besought your lordship, as the truth must be told, to break your intimacy with my Lord Mohun; and to give up the habit which may bring ruin on your family? But for my Lord Mohun’s illness, had he not left you?’

‘Faith, Frank, a man with a gouty toe can’t run after other men’s wives,’ broke out my Lord Mohun, who indeed was in that way, and with a laugh and a look at his swathed limb so frank and comical that the other, dashing his fist across his forehead, was caught by that infectious good humor, and said with his oath, ‘—— it, Harry, I believe thee,’ and so this quarrel was over, and the two gentlemen, at swords drawn but just now, dropped their points, and shook hands.

Beati pacifici. ‘Go, bring my lady back,’ said Harry’s patron. Esmond went away, only too glad to be bearer of such good news. He found her at the door; she had been listening there, but went back as he came. She took both his hands, hers were marble cold. She seemed as if she would fall on his shoulder. ‘Thank you, and God bless you, my dear brother Harry,’ she said. She kissed his hand, Esmond felt her tears upon it; and leading her into the room, and up to my lord, the Lord Castlewood, with an outbreak of feeling and affection such as he had not exhibited for many a long day, took his wife to his heart, and bent over and kissed her, and asked her pardon.

‘Tis time for me to go to roost. I will have my gruel abed,'
said my Lord Mohun; and limped off comically on Harry Esmond’s arm. ‘By George, that woman is a pearl!’ he said, ‘and ’tis only a pig that wouldn’t value her. Have you seen the vulgar trapesing orange-girl whom Esmond’—but here Mr. Esmond interrupted him, saying that these were not affairs for him to know.

My lord’s gentleman came in to wait upon his master, who was no sooner in his nightcap and dressing gown than he had another visitor whom his host insisted on sending to him; and this was no other than the Lady Castlewood herself, with the toast and gruel, which her husband bade her make and carry with her own hands in to her guest.

Lord Castlewood stood looking after his wife as she went on this errand, and as he looked Harry Esmond could not but gaze on him, and remarked in his patron’s face an expression of love, and grief, and care, which very much moved and touched the young man. Lord Castlewood’s hands fell down at his sides and his head on his breast, and presently he said:

‘You heard what Mohun said, parson?’

‘That my lady was a saint?’

‘That there are two accounts to settle. I have been going wrong these five years, Harry Esmond. Ever since you brought that damned smallpox into the house, there has been a fate pursuing me, and I had best have died of it, and not run away from it like a coward. I left Beatrix with her relations, and went to London; and I fell among thieves, Harry, and I got back to confounded cards and dice, which I hadn’t touched since my marriage—no, not since I was in the duke’s guard, with those wild Mohocks. And I have been playing worse and worse, and going deeper and deeper into it; and I owe Mohun two thousand pounds now; and when it’s paid I am little better than a beggar. I don’t like to look my boy in the face; he hates me, I know he does. And I have spent Beaty’s little portion; and the Lord knows what will come if I live; the best thing I can do is to die, and release what portion of the estate is redeemable for the boy.’

Mohun was as much master at Castlewood as the owner of the Hall itself; and his equipages filled the stables, where, indeed, there was room in plenty for many more horses than Harry Esmond’s impoverished patron could afford to keep. He had arrived on horseback with his people; but when his gout broke out my Lord Mohun sent to London for a light chaise he had, drawn by a pair of small horses, and running as swift, wherever roads were good, as a Laplander’s sledge.
When this carriage came his lordship was eager to drive the Lady Castlewood abroad in it, and did so many times, and at a rapid pace, greatly to his companion's enjoyment, who loved the swift motion and the healthy breezes over the downs which lie hard upon Castlewood, and stretch thence toward the sea. As this amusement was very pleasant to her, and her lord, far from showing any mistrust of her intimacy with Lord Mohun, encouraged her to be his companion—as if willing by his present extreme confidence to make up for any past mistrust which his jealousy had shown—the Lady Castlewood enjoyed herself freely in this harmless diversion, which, it must be owned, her guest was very eager to give her; and it seemed that she grew the more free with Lord Mohun, and pleased with his company, because of some sacrifice which his gallantry was pleased to make in her favor.

Seeing the two gentlemen constantly at cards still of evenings, Harry Esmond one day deplored to his mistress that this fatal infatuation of her lord should continue; and now they seemed reconciled together, begged his lady to hint to her husband that he should play no more.

But Lady Castlewood, smiling archly and gayly, said she would speak to him presently, and that, for a few nights more at least, he might be let to have his amusement.

'Indeed, madam,' said Harry, 'you know not what it costs you; and 'tis easy for any observer who knows the game, to see that Lord Mohun is by far the stronger of the two.'

'I know he is,' says my lady, still with exceeding good humor; 'he is not only the best player, but the kindest player in the world.'

'Madam, madam!' Esmond cried, transported and provoked. 'Debts of honor must be paid some time or other; and my master will be ruined if he goes on.'

'Harry, shall I tell you a secret?' my lady replied, with kindness and pleasure still in her eyes. 'Francis will not be ruined if he goes on; he will be rescued if he goes on. I repent of having spoken and thought unkindly of the Lord Mohun when he was here in the past year. He is full of much kindness and good; and 'tis my belief that we shall bring him to better things. I have lent him 'Tillotson' and your favorite 'Bishop Taylor,' and he is much touched, he says; and as a proof of his repentance—(and herein lies my secret)—what do you think he is doing with Francis? He is letting poor Frank win his money back again. He hath won already at the last four nights; and my Lord Mohun says that he will not be the means of injuring poor Frank and my dear children.'

'And in God's name, what do you return him for the sacrifice?' asked Esmond, aghast; who knew enough of men, and of this one in particular, to be aware that such a finished rake gave nothing for nothing. 'How, in Heaven's name, are you to pay him?'

'Pay him! With a mother's blessing and a wife's prayers!' cries my lady, clasping her hands together. Harry Esmond did not know whether to laugh, to be angry, or to love his dear mistress more than ever for the obstinate innocency with which she chose to regard the conduct of a man of the world, whose designs he knew better how to interpret. He told the lady, guardedly, but so as to make his meaning quite clear to her, what he knew in respect of the former life and conduct of this nobleman; of other women against whom he had plotted, and whom he had overcome; of the conversation which he, Harry himself, had had with Lord Mohun, wherein the lord made a boast of his libertinism, and frequently vowed that he held all women to be fair game (as his lordship styled this pretty sport), and that they were all, without exception, to be won. And the return Harry had for his entreaties and remonstrances was a fit of anger on Lady Castlewood's part, who would not listen to his accusations; she said and retorted that he himself must be very wicked and perverted to suppose evil designs where she was sure none were meant. 'And this is the good meddlers get of interfering,' Harry thought to himself with much bitterness; and his perplexity and annoyance were only the greater because he could not speak to my Lord Castlewood himself upon a subject of this nature, or venture to advise or warn him regarding a matter so very sacred as his own honor, of which my lord was naturally the best guardian.

But though Lady Castlewood would listen to no advice from her young dependent, and appeared indignantly to refuse it when offered, Harry had the satisfaction to find that she adopted the counsel which she professed to reject; for the next day she pleaded a headache when my Lord Mohun would have had her drive out, and the next day the headache continued; and the next day, in a laughing gay way, she proposed that the children should take her place in his lordship's car, for they would be charmed with a ride of all things; and she must not have all the pleasure for herself. My lord gave them a drive with a very good grace, though, I dare say, with rage and disappointment inwardly—not that his heart was very seriously engaged in his designs upon this simple lady; but the life of such men is often one of intrigue, and they can no more go through a day without a woman to pursue than a fox-hunter without his sport after breakfast.
Under an affected carelessness of demeanor, and though there was no outward demonstration of doubt upon his patron’s part since the quarrel between the two lords, Harry yet saw that Lord Castlewood was watching his guest very narrowly, and caught sight of distrust and smothered rage (as Harry thought) which foreboded no good. On the point of honor Esmond knew how touchy his patron was; and watched him almost as a physician watches a patient, and it seemed to him that this one was slow to take the disease, though he could not throw off the poison when once it had mingled with his blood. We read in Shakspere (whom the writer for his part considers to be far beyond Mr. Congreve, Mr. Dryden, or any of the wits of the present period) that when jealousy is once declared, nor poppy, nor mandragora, nor all the drowsy syrups of the East, will ever soothe it or medicine it away.
In fine the symptoms seemed to be so alarming to this young physician (who, indeed, young as he was, had felt the kind pulses of all those dear kinsmen) that Harry thought it would be his duty to warn my Lord Mohun, and let him know that his designs were suspected and watched. So one day, when in rather a pettish humor, his lordship had sent to Lady Cas-tlewood, who had promised to drive with him and now refused to come, Harry said, ‘My lord, if you will kindly give me a place by your side, I will thank you; I have much to say to you and would like to speak to you alone.’
‘You honor me by giving me your confidence, Mr. Henry Esmond,’ says the other, with a very grand bow. My lord was always a fine gentleman, and, young as he was, there was that in Esmond’s manner which showed that he was a gentleman too, and that none might take a liberty with him; so the pair went out and mounted the carriage, which was in waiting for them in the court, with its two little cream-colored Hanoverian horses covered with splendid furniture and champ-ing at the bit.
‘My lord,’ says Harry Esmond, after they were got into the country and pointing to my Lord Mohun’s foot, which was swathed in flannel, and put up rather ostentatiously on a cushion—‘my lord, I studied medicine at Cambridge.’ ‘Indeed, Parson Harry,’ says he; ‘and are you going to take out a diploma, and cure your fellow-students of the—’
'Of the gout,' says Harry interrupting him, and looking him hard in the face; 'I know a good deal about the gout.'
'I hope you may never have it. 'Tis an infernal disease,' says my lord, 'and its twinges are diabolical. Ah!' and he made a dreadful wry face, as if he just felt a twinge.
'Your lordship would be much better if you took off all that flannel, it only serves to inflame the toe,' Harry continued, looking his man full in the face.
'Oh! it only serves to inflame the toe, does it?' says the other, with an innocent air.
'If you took off that flannel, and flung that absurd slipper away, and wore a boot——' continues Harry.
'You recommend me boots, Mr. Esmond?' asks my lord.
'Yes, boots and spurs. I saw your lordship three days ago run down the gallery fast enough,' Harry goes on. 'I am sure that taking gruel at night is not so pleasant as claret to your lordship; and besides it keeps your lordship's head cool for play, while my patron's is hot and flustered with drink.'
'Sdeath, sir, you dare not say that I don't play fair?' cries my lord, whipping his horses, which went away at a gallop.
'You are cool when my lord is drunk,' Harry continued; 'you lordship gets the better of my patron. I have watched you as I looked up from my books.'
'You young Argus!' says Lord Mohun, who liked Harry Esmond—and for whose company and wit, and a certain daring manner, Harry had a great liking, too—'you young Argus! you may look with all your hundred eyes and see we play fair. I've played away an estate of a night, and I've played my shirt off my back; and I've played away my periwig and gone home in a nightcap. But no man can say I ever took an advantage of him beyond the advantage of the game. I played a dice cogging scoundrel in Alsatia for his ears and won 'em, and have one of 'em in my lodging in Bow Street in a bottle of spirits. Harry Mohun will play any man for anything—always would.'
'You are playing awful stakes, my lord, in my patron's house,' Harry said, 'and more games than are on the cards.'
'What do you mean, sir?' cries my lord, turning round, with a flush on his face.
'I mean,' answers Harry, in a sarcastic tone, 'that your gout is well; if ever you had it.'
'Sir!' cried my lord, getting hot.
'And to tell the truth, I believe your lordship has no more gout than I have. At any rate, change of air will do you good, my Lord Mohun. And I mean fairly that you had better go from Castlewood.'

'And were you appointed to give me this message?' cries the Lord Mohun. 'Did Frank Esmond commission you?'

'No one did. 'Twas the honor of my family that commissioned me.'

'And you are prepared to answer this?' cries the other, furiously lashing his horses.

'Quite, my lord; your lordship will upset the carriage if you whip so hotly.'

'By George, you have a brave spirit!' my lord cried out, bursting into a laugh. 'I suppose 'tis that infernal botte de Jesuite that makes you so bold,' he added.

'Tis the peace of the family I love best in the world,' Harry Esmond said warmly; 'tis the honor of a noble benefactor; the happiness of my dear mistress and her children. I owe them everything in life, my lord; and would lay it down for any one of them. What brings you here to disturb this quiet household? What keeps you lingering month after month in the country? What makes you feign illness and invent pretexts for delay? Is it to win my poor patron's money? Be generous, my lord, and spare his weakness for the sake of his wife and children. Is it to practice upon the simple heart of a virtuous lady? You might as well storm the Tower single-handed. But you may blemish her name by light comments on it, or by lawless pursuits, and I don't deny that 'tis in your power to make her unhappy. Spare these innocent people, and leave them.'

'By the Lord, I believe thou hast an eye to the pretty Puritan thyself, Master Harry,' says my lord, with his reckless, good-humored laugh, and as if he had been listening with interest to the passionate appeal of the young man. 'Whisper, Harry. Art thou in love with her thyself? Hath tipsy Frank Esmond come by the way of all flesh?'

'My lord, my lord,' cried Harry, his face flushing and his eyes filling as he spoke, 'I never had a mother, but I love this lady as one. I worship her as a devotee worships a saint. To hear her name spoken lightly seems blasphemy to me. Would you dare think of your own mother so, or suffer anyone so to speak of her? It is a horror to me to fancy that any man should think of her impurely. I implore you, I beseech you, to leave her. Danger will come out of it.'

'Danger, psha!' says my lord, giving a cut to the horses, which at this minute, for we were got on to the Downs, fairly ran off into a gallop that no pulling could stop. The rein broke in Lord Mohun’s hands, and the furious beasts scampered madly forward, the carriage swaying to and fro, and the persons within it holding on to the sides as best they might, until seeing a great ravine before them, where an upset was inevitable, the two gentlemen leaped for their lives, each out of his side of the chaise. Harry Esmond was quit for a fall on the grass, which was so severe that it stunned him for a minute; but he got up presently very sick, and bleeding at the nose, but with no other hurt. The Lord Mohun was not so fortunate; he fell on his head against a stone, and lay on the ground, dead to all appearance.

This misadventure happened as the gentlemen were on their return homeward; and my Lord Castlewood, with his son and daughter, who were going out for a ride, met the ponies as they were galloping with the car behind, the broken traces entangling their heels, and my lord’s people turned and stopped them. It was young Frank who spied out Lord Mohun’s scarlet coat as he lay on the ground, and the party made up to that unfortunate gentleman and Esmond, who was now standing over him. His large periwig and feathered hat had fallen off, and he was bleeding profusely from a wound on the forehead, and looking, and being, indeed, a corpse.

‘Great God, he’s dead!’ says my lord. ‘Ride, someone; fetch a doctor—stay. I’ll go home and bring back Tusher; he knows surgery,’ and my lord, with his son after him, galloped away.

They were scarce gone when Harry Esmond, who was indeed but just come to himself, bethought him of a similar accident which he had seen on a ride from Newmarket to Cambridge, and taking off a sleeve of my lord’s coat, Harry with a penknife opened a vein in his arm, and was greatly relieved, after a moment, to see the blood flow. He was near half an hour before he came to himself, by which time Dr. Tusher and little Frank arrived, and found my lord not a corpse indeed, but as pale as one.

After a time, when he was able to bear motion, they put my lord upon a groom’s horse, and gave the other to Esmond, the men walking on each side of my lord, to support him, if need were, and worthy Dr. Tusher with them. Little Frank and Harry rode together at a foot pace.

When we rode together home, the boy said, ‘We met mamma, who was walking on the terrace with the doctor, and papa frightened her, and told her you were dead—’

‘That I was dead?’ asks Harry.
"Yes. Papa says; "Here’s poor Harry killed, my dear;" on which mamma gives a great scream; and O Harry! she drops down; and I thought she was dead, too. And you never saw such a way as papa was in; he swore one of his great oaths; and he turned quite pale; and then he began to laugh somehow, and he told the doctor to take his horse, and me to follow him; and we left him. And I looked back, and saw him dashing water out of the fountain on to mamma. Oh, she was so frightened!"

Musing upon this curious history—for my Lord Mohun’s name was Henry too, and they called each other Frank and Harry often—and not a little disturbed and anxious, Esmond rode home. His dear lady was on the terrace still, one of her women with her, and my lord no longer there. There are steps and a little door thence down into the road. My lord passed, looking very ghastly, with a handkerchief over his head, and without his hat and periwig, which a groom carried, but his politeness did not desert him, and he made a bow to the lady above.

‘Thank Heaven you are safe,’ she said.

‘And so is Harry too, mamma,’ says little Frank—‘huzzay!’

Harry Esmond got off the horse to run to his mistress, as did little Frank, and one of the grooms took charge of the two beasts, while the other, hat and periwig in hand, walked by my lord’s bridle to the front gate, which lay half a mile away.

‘Oh, my boy! what a fright you have given me!’ Lady Castlewood said, when Harry Esmond came up, greeting him with one of her shining looks, and a voice of tender welcome; and she was so kind as to kiss the young man (‘twas the second time she had so honored him), and she walked into the house between him and her son, holding a hand of each.

CHAPTER XIV.
WE RIDE AFTER HIM TO LONDON.

After a repose of a couple of days, the Lord Mohun was so far recovered of his hurt as to be able to announce his departure for the next morning; when, accordingly, he took leave of Castlewood, proposing to ride to London by easy stages and lie two nights upon the road. His host treated him with a studied and ceremonious courtesy, certainly different from my lord’s usual frank and careless demeanor; but there was no reason to suppose that the two lords parted otherwise than good friends, though Harry Esmond remarked that my Lord Viscount only saw his guest in company with other persons, and seemed to avoid being alone with him. Nor did he ride any distance with Lord Mohun, as his custom was with most of his friends, whom he was always eager to welcome and unwilling to lose; but contented himself, when his lordship’s horses were announced, and their owner appeared, booted for his journey, to take a courteous leave of the ladies of Castlewood, by following the Lord Mohun downstairs to his horses, and by bowing and wishing him a good-day, in the court-yard. ‘I shall see you in London before very long, Mohun,’ my lord said, with a smile; ‘when we will settle our accounts together.’

‘Do not let them trouble you, Frank,’ said the other good-naturedly, and holding out his hand looked rather surprised at the grim and stately manner in which his host received his parting salutation; and so, followed by his people, he rode away. Harry Esmond was witness of the departure. It was very different to my lord’s coming, for which great preparation had been made (the old house putting on its best appearance to welcome its guest), and there was a sadness and constraint about all persons that day which filled Mr. Esmond with gloomy forebodings and sad, indefinite apprehensions. Lord Castlewood stood at the door watching his guest and his people as they went out under the arch of the outer gate. When he was there, Lord Mohun turned once more, my Lord Viscount slowly raised his beaver and bowed. His face wore a peculiar livid look, Harry thought. He cursed and kicked away his dogs, which came jumping about him; then he walked up to the fountain in the center of the court, and leaned against a pillar and looked into the basin. As Esmond crossed over to his own room, late the chaplain’s, on the other side of the court, and turned to enter in at the low door, he saw Lady Castlewood looking through the curtains of the great window of the drawing room overhead at my lord as he stood regarding the fountain. There was in the court a peculiar silence somehow; and the scene remained long in Esmond’s memory: the sky bright overhead; the buttresses of the building and the sun-dial casting shadow over the gilt memento mori inscribed underneath; the two dogs, a black greyhound and a spaniel nearly white, the one with his face up to the sun, and the other snuffing among the grass and stones, and my lord leaning over the fountain, which was bubbling audibly. ’Tis strange how that scene, and the sound of that fountain, remain fixed on the memory of a man who has beheld a hundred sights of splendor and danger too, of which he has kept no account.
It was Lady Castlewood—she had been laughing all the morning, and especially gay and lively before her husband and his guest—who, as soon as the two gentlemen went together from her room, ran to Harry, the expression of her countenance quite changed now, and with a face and eyes full of care, and said, 'Follow them, Harry, I am sure something has gone wrong.' And so it was that Esmond was made an eavesdropper at this lady's orders; and retired to his own chamber, to give himself time, in truth, to try and compose a story which would soothe his mistress, for he could not but have his own apprehension that some serious quarrel was pending between the two gentlemen.

And now for several days the little company at Castlewood sat at table as of evenings; this care, though unnamed and invisible, being nevertheless present alway, in the minds of at least three persons there. My lord was exceeding gentle and kind. Whenever he quitted the room, his wife's eyes followed him. He behaved to her with a kind of mournful courtesy and kindness remarkable in one of his blunt ways and ordinary rough manner. He called her by her Christian name often and fondly, was very soft and gentle with the children, especially with the boy, whom he did not love, and being lax about church generally, he went thither and performed all the offices (down even to listening to Dr. Tusher's sermon) with great devotion.

'He paces his room all night; what is it? Henry, find out what it is,' Lady Castlewood said constantly to her young dependant. 'He has sent three letters to London,' she said, another day.

'Indeed, madam, they were to a lawyer,' Harry answered, who knew of these letters, and had seen a part of the correspondence, which related to a new loan my lord was raising; and when the young man remonstrated with his patron, my lord said, 'He was only raising money to pay off an old debt on the property, which must be discharged.'

Regarding the money, Lady Castlewood was not in the least anxious. Few fond women feel money-distressed; indeed you can hardly give a woman a greater pleasure than to bid her pawn her diamonds for the man she loves; and I remember hearing Mr. Congreve say of my Lord Marlborough, that the reason why my lord was so successful with women as a young man was because he took money of them. 'There are few men who will make such a sacrifice for them,' says Mr. Congreve, who knew a part of the sex pretty well.
Harry Esmond's vacation was just over, and, as hath been said, he was preparing to return to the university for his last term before taking his degree and entering into the Church. He had made up his mind for this office, not indeed with that reverence which becomes a man about to enter upon a duty so holy, but with a worldly spirit of acquiescence in the prudence of adopting that profession for his calling. But his reasoning was that he owed all to the family of Castlewood, and loved better to be near them than anywhere else in the world; that he might be useful to his benefactors, who had the utmost confidence in him and affection for him in return; that he might aid in bringing up the young heir of the house and acting as his governor; that he might continue to be his dear patron's and mistress' friend and adviser, who both were pleased to say that they should ever look upon him as such; and so, by making himself useful to those he loved best, he proposed to console himself for giving up of any schemes of ambition which he might have had in his own bosom. Indeed, his mistress had told him that she would not have him leave her; and whatever she commanded was will to him.

The Lady Castlewood's mind was greatly relieved in the last few days of this well-remembered holiday time by my lord's announcing one morning, after the post had brought him letters from London, in a careless tone, that the Lord Mohun was gone to Paris and was about to make a great journey in Europe; and though Lord Castlewood's own gloom did not wear off or his behavior alter, yet this cause of anxiety being removed from his lady's mind, she began to be more hopeful and easy in her spirits, striving, too, with all her heart, and by all the means of soothing in her power, to call back my lord's cheerfulness and dissipate his moody humor.

He accounted for it himself by saying that he was out of health; that he wanted to see his physician, that he would go to London, and consult Dr. Cheyne. It was agreed that his lordship and Harry Esmond should make the journey as far as London together; and of a Monday morning the 11th of October, in the year 1700, they set forward toward London on horseback. The day before being Sunday, and the rain pouring down, the family did not visit church; and at night my lord read the service to his family very finely, and with a peculiar sweetness and gravity—speaking the parting benediction, Harry thought, as solemn as ever he heard it. And he kissed and embraced his wife and children before they went to their own chambers with more fondness than he was ordinarily wont to show, and with a solemnity and feeling of which they thought in after days with no small comfort.

They took horse the next morning (after adieus from the family as tender as on the night previous), lay that night on the road, and entered London at nightfall; my lord going to the Trumpet, in the Cockpit, Whitehall, a house used by the military in his time as a young man and accustomed by his lordship ever since.

An hour after my lord's arrival (which showed that his visit had been arranged beforehand), my lord's man of business arrived from Gray's Inn; and thinking that his patron might wish to be private with the lawyer Esmond was for leaving them; but my lord said his business was short; introduced Mr. Esmond particularly to the lawyer, who had been engaged for the family in the old lord's time; who said that he had paid the money, as desired that day, to my Lord Mohun himself, at his lodgings in Bow Street; that his lordship had expressed some surprise, as it was not customary to employ lawyers, he said, in such transactions between men of honor; but nevertheless, he had returned my Lord Viscount's note of hand, which he held at his client's disposition.

'I thought the Lord Mohun had been in Paris!' cried Mr. Esmond, in great alarm and astonishment.

'He is come back at my invitation,' said my Lord Viscount. 'We have accounts to settle together.'

'I pray Heaven they are over, sir,' says Esmond.

'Oh, quite,' replied the other, looking hard at the young man. 'He was rather troublesome about that money which I told you I had lost to him at play. And now 'tis paid, and we are quits on that score and we shall meet good friends again.'

'My lord,' cried out Esmond, 'I am sure you are deceiving me, and that there is a quarrel between the Lord Mohun and you.'

'Quarrel—pish! We shall sup together this very night and drink a bottle. Every man is ill-humored who loses such a sum as I have lost. But now 'tis paid, and my anger has gone with it.'

'Where shall we sup, sir?' says Harry.

'Well! Let some gentlemen wait till they are asked,' says my Lord Viscount, with a laugh. 'You go to Duke Street, and see Mr. Betterton. You love the play, I know. Leave me to follow my own devices; and in the morning we'll breakfast together, with what appetite we may, as the play says.'

'By G——! my lord, I will not leave you this night,' says Harry Esmond. 'I think I know the cause of your dispute.
I swear to you 'tis nothing. On the very day the accident befell Lord Mohun, I was speaking to him about it. I know that nothing has passed but idle gallantry on his part.'

'You know that nothing has passed but idle gallantry between Lord Mohun and my wife,' says my lord, in a thundering voice; 'you knew of this and did not tell me!'

'I knew more of it than my dear mistress did herself, sir—a thousand times more. How was she, who was as innocent as a child, to know what was the meaning of the covert addresses of a villain?'

'A villain he is, you allow, and would have taken my wife away from me.'

'Sir, she is as pure as an angel,' cried young Esmond.

'Have I said a word against her?' shrieks out my lord. 'Did I ever doubt that she was pure? It would have been the last day of her life when I did. Do you fancy I think that she would go astray? No, she hasn't passion enough for that. She neither sins nor forgives. I know her temper, and now I've lost her, by Heaven I love her ten thousand times more than ever I did—yes, when she was young and as beautiful as an angel; when she smiled at me in her old father's house, and used to lie in wait for me there as I came from hunting; when I used to fling my head down on her little knees and cry like a child on her lap, and swear I would reform, and drink no more, and play no more, and follow women no more; when all the men of the Court used to be following her—when she used to look with her child more beautiful, by George, than the Madonna in the Queen's Chapel. I am not good like her, I know it. Who is—by Heaven, who is? I tired and wearied her, I know that very well. I could not talk to her. You men of wit and books could do that, and I couldn't; I felt I couldn't. Why, when you was but a boy of fifteen I could hear you two together talking your poetry and your books till I was in such a rage that I was fit to strangle you. But you were always a good lad, Harry, and I loved you; you know I did. And I felt she didn't belong to me; and the children don't. And I besotted myself, and gambled and drank, and took to all sorts of devilries out of despair and fury. And now comes this Mohun, and she likes him; I know she likes him.'

'Indeed, and on my soul, you are wrong, sir,' Esmond cried.

'She takes letters from him,' cries my lord. 'Look here, Harry,' and he pulled out a paper with a brown stain of blood upon it. 'It fell from him that day he wasn't killed. One of the grooms picked it up from the ground and gave it me.
Here it is in their d—d comedy jargon. "Divine Gloriana, why look so coldly on your slave who adores you? Have you no compassion on the tortures you have seen me suffering? Do you vouchsafe no reply to billets that are written with the blood of my heart?" She had more letters from him.

'But she answered none!' cried Esmond.

'That's not Mohun's fault,' says my lord, 'and I will be revenged on him; as God's in Heaven, I will.'

'For a light word or two, will you risk your lady's honor and your family's happiness, my lord?' Esmond interposed beseeching.

'Psha! there shall be no question of my wife's honor,' said my lord; 'we can quarrel on plenty of grounds beside. 'If I live, that villain will be punished; if I fall, my family will be only the better; there will only be a spendthrift the less to keep in the world; and Frank has better teaching than his father.' My mind is made up, Harry Esmond, and whatever the event is I am easy about it. I leave my wife and you as guardians to the children.'

Seeing that my lord was bent upon pursuing this quarrel, and that no entreaties would draw them from it, Harry Esmond (then of a hotter and more impetuous nature than now, when care and reflection and gray hairs have calmed him) thought it was his duty to stand by his kind, generous patron, and said, 'My lord, if you are determined upon war, you must not go into it alone. 'Tis the duty of our house to stand by its chief; and I should neither forgive myself nor you if you did not call me, or I should be absent from you at a moment of danger.'

'Why, Harry, my poor boy, you are bred for a parson,' says my lord, taking Esmond by the hand very kindly; 'and it were a great pity that you should meddle in the matter.'

'Your lordship thought of being a churchman once,' Harry answered, 'and your father's orders did not prevent him fighting at Castlewood against the Roundheads. Your enemies are mine, sir; I can use the foils, as you have seen, indifferently well, and don't think I shall be afraid when the buttons are taken off 'em.' And then Harry explained, with some blushes and hesitations (for the matter was delicate, and he feared lest, by having put himself forward in the quarrel, he might have offended his patron), how he had himself expostulated with the Lord Mohun, and proposed to measure swords with him if need were and he could not be got to withdraw peaceably in this dispute. 'And I should have beat him, sir,' says Harry, laughing. 'He never could parry that botte I brought from Cambridge. Let us have half an hour of it, and rehearse, I can teach it your lordship; 'tis the most delicate point in the world, and, if you miss, your adversary's sword is through you.'

'By George, Harry, you ought to be the head of the house,' says my lord gloomily. 'You had been a better Lord Castlewood than a lazy sot like me,' he added, drawing his hand across his eyes, and surveying his kinsman with very kind and affectionate glances.

'Let us take our coats off and have half hour's practice before nightfall,' says Harry, after thankfully grasping his patron's manly hand.

'You are but a little bit of a lad,' says my lord goodhumoredly; 'but, in faith, I believe you could do for that fellow. No, my boy,' he continued, 'I'll have none of your feints and tricks of stabbing. I can use my sword pretty well, too, and will fight my own quarrel my own way.'

'But I shall be by to see fair play?' cries Harry.

'Yes, God bless you; you shall be by.'

'When is it, sir?' says Harry, for he saw that the matter had been arranged privately and beforehand by my lord.

'Tis arranged thus; I sent off a courier to Jack Westbury, to say that I wanted him specially. He knows for what, and will be here presently, and drink part of that bottle of sack. Then we shall go to the theater in Duke Street, where we shall meet Mohun; and then we shall all go sup at the Rose or the Greyhound. Then we shall call for cards, and there will be probably a difference over the cards—and then, God help us!—either a wicked villain and traitor shall go out of the world, or a poor worthless devil that doesn't care to remain in it. I am better away, Hal; my wife will be all the happier when I am gone,' says my lord, with a groan that tore the heart of Harry Esmond so that he fairly broke into a sob over his patron's kind hand.

'The business was talked over with Mohun before he left home—Castlewood, I mean,' my lord went on. 'I took the letter in to him, which I had read, and I charged him with his villany, and he could make no denial of it, only he said that my wife was innocent.'

'And so she is; before Heaven, my lord, she is!' cries Harry.

'No doubt, no doubt. They always are,' says my lord. 'No doubt, when she heard he was killed, she fainted from accident.'

'But my lord, my name is Harry,' cried out Esmond, burning red. 'You told my lady "Harry was killed!"'

'Damnation! shall I fight you too?' shouts my lord, in a fury. 'Are you, you little serpent, warmed by my fire, going to sting—you? No, my boy, you're an honest boy; you are a good boy.' (And here he broke from rage into tears even more cruel to see). 'You are an honest boy, and I love you; and, by Heavens, I am so wretched that I don't care what sword it is that ends me. Stop, here's Jack Westbury. Well, Jack! Welcome, old boy! This is my kinsman, Harry Esmond.'

'Who brought your bowls for you at Castlewood, sir,' says Harry, bowing; and the three gentlemen sat down and drank of that bottle of sack which was prepared for them.

'Harry is number three,' says my lord. 'You needn't be afraid of him, Jack.' And the colonel gave a look, as much as to say, 'Indeed, he don't look as if I need.' And then my lord explained what he had only told by hints before. When he quarreled with Lord Mohun he was indebted to his lordship in a sum of sixteen hundred pounds, for which Lord Mohun said he proposed to wait until my Lord Viscount should pay him. My lord had raised the sixteen hundred pounds and sent them to Lord Mohun that morning, and before quitting home had put his affairs into order, and was now quite ready to abide the issue of the quarrel.

When we had drunk a couple of bottles of sack, a coach was called, and the three gentlemen went to the Duke's Playhouse, as agreed. The play was one of Mr. Wycherley's—'Love in a Wood.'

Harry Esmond has thought of that play ever since with a kind of terror, and of Mrs. Bracegirdle, the actress who performed the girl's part in the comedy. She was disguised as a page, and came and stood before the gentlemen as they sat on the stage, and looked over her shoulder with a pair of arch black eyes, and laughed at my lord, and asked what ailed the gentleman from the country, and had he had bad news from Bullock fair?

Between the acts of the play the gentlemen crossed over and conversed freely. There were two of Lord Mohun's party, Captain Macartney, in a military habit, and a gentleman in a suit of blue velvet and silver, in a fair periwig, with a rich fall of point of Venice lace—my lord the Earl of Warwick and Holland. My lord had a paper of oranges, which he ate and offered to the actresses, joking with them. And Mrs. Bracegirdle, when my Lord Mohun said something rude, turned on him, and asked him what he did there, and whether he and his friends had come to stab anybody else, as they did poor Will Mountford? My lord's dark face grew darker at this taunt, and wore a mischievous, fatal look. They that saw it remembered it, and said so afterward.

When the play was ended the two parties joined company; and my Lord Castlewood then proposed that they should go to a tavern and sup. Lockit's, the Greyhound, in Charing Cross, was the house selected. All six marched together that way; the three lords going ahead, Lord Mohun's captain, and Colonel Westbury, and Harry Esmond, walking behind them. As they walked, Westbury told Harry Esmond about his old friend Dick the Scholar, who had got promotion, and was Cornet of the Guards, and had wrote a book called the 'Christian Hero,' and had all the Guards to laugh at him for his pains, for the Christian Hero was breaking the commandments constantly, Westbury said, and had fought one or two duels already. And, in a lower tone, Westbury besought young Mr. Esmond to take no part in the quarrel. 'There was no need for more seconds than one,' said the colonel, 'and the captain or Lord Warwick might easily withdraw.' But Harry said no; he was bent on going through with the business. Indeed, he had a plan in his head, which, he thought, might prevent my Lord Viscount from engaging.

They went in at the bar of the tavern, and desired a private room and wine and cards, and when the drawer had brought these, they began to drink and call healths, and as long as the servants were in the room appeared very friendly.

Harry Esmond's plan was no other than to engage in talk with Lord Mohun, to insult him, and so get the first of the quarrel. So when cards were proposed he offered to play. 'Psha!' says my Lord Mohun (whether wishing to save Harry, or not choosing to try the botte de Jesuite, it is not to be known)—'Young gentlemen from college should not play these stakes. You are too young.'

'Who dares say I am too young?' broke out Harry. 'Is your lordship afraid?'

'Afraid!' cries out Mohun.

But my good Lord Viscount saw the move. 'I'll play you for ten moidores, Mohun,' says he. 'You silly boy, we don't play for groats here as you do at Cambridge.' And Harry, who had no such sum in his pocket (for his half-year's salary was always pretty well spent before it was due), fell back with rage and vexation in his heart that he had not money enough to stake.

'I'll stake the young gentleman a crown,' says the Lord Mohun's captain.
‘I thought crowns were rather scarce with the gentlemen of the army,’ says Harry.
‘Do they birch at college?’ says the captain.
‘They birch fools,’ says Harry, ‘and they cane bullies, and they fling puppies into the water.’
‘Faith, then, there’s some escapes drowning,’ says the captain, who was an Irishman; and all the gentlemen began to laugh, and made poor Harry only more angry.
My Lord Mohun presently snuffed a candle. It was when the drawers brought in fresh bottles and glasses and were in the room—on which my Lord Viscount said, ‘The deuce take you, Mohun, how damned awkward you are! Light the candle, you drawer.’
‘Damned awkward is a damned awkward expression, my lord,’ says the other. ‘Town gentlemen don’t use such words, or ask pardon if they do.’
‘I’m a country gentleman,’ says my Lord Viscount.
‘I see it by your manner,’ says my Lord Mohun. ‘No man shall say damned awkward to me.’
‘I fling the words in your face, my lord,’ says the other;
shall I send the cards, too?’
‘Gentlemen, gentlemen! before the servants!’ cry out Colonel Westbury and my Lord Warwick in a breath. The drawers go out of the room hastily. They tell the people below of the quarrel upstairs.
‘Enough has been said,’ says Colonel Westbury. ‘Will your lordships meet to-morrow morning?’
‘Will my Lord Castlewood withdraw his words?’ asks the Earl of Warwick.
‘My Lord Castlewood will be—— first,’ says Colonel Westbury.
‘Then we have nothing for it. Take notice, gentlemen, there have been outrageous words—reparation asked and refused.’
‘And refused,’ says my Lord Castlewood, putting on his hat.
‘Where shall the meeting be? and when?’
‘Since my lord refuses me satisfaction, which I deeply regret, there is no time so good as now,’ says my Lord Mohun.
‘Let us have chairs and go to Leicester Field.’
‘Are your lordship and I to have the honor of exchanging a pass or two?’ says Colonel Westbury, with a low bow to my lord of Warwick and Holland.
‘It is an honor for me,’ says my lord, with a profound congée, ‘to be matched with a gentleman who has been at Mons and Namur.’
'Will your reverence permit me to give you a lesson?' says the captain.

'Nay, nay, gentlemen, two on a side are plenty,' says Harry's patron. 'Spare the boy, Captain Macartney,' and he shook Harry's hand, for the last time, save one, in his life.

At the bar of the tavern all the gentlemen stopped, and my Lord Viscount said, laughing, to the bar-woman, that those cards set people sadly a-qua[r]reling; but that the dispute was over now, and the parties were all going away to my Lord Mohun's house in Bow Street, to drink a bottle more before going to bed.

A half-dozen of chairs were now called, and the six gentlemen stepping into them, the word was privately given to the chairmen to go to Leicester Field, where the gentlemen were set down opposite the Standard Tavern. It was midnight, and the town was abed by this time, and only a few lights in the windows of the houses; but the night was bright enough for the unhappy purpose which the disputants came about; and so all six entered into that fatal square, the chairmen standing without the railing and keeping the gate, lest any persons should disturb the meeting.

All that happened there hath been matter of public notoriety, and is recorded, for warning to lawless men, in the annals of our country. After being engaged for not more than a couple of minutes, as Harry Esmond thought (though being occupied at the time with his own adversary's point, which was active, he may not have taken a good note of time), a cry from the chairmen without, who were smoking their pipes, and leaning over the railings of the field as they watched the dim combat within, announced that some catastrophe had happened, which caused Esmond to drop his sword and look round, at which moment his enemy wounded him in the right hand. But the young man did not heed this hurt much, and ran up to the place where he saw his dear master was down.

My Lord Mohun was standing over him.

'Are you much hurt, Frank?' he asked in a hollow voice.

'I believe I am a dead man,' my lord said from the ground.

'No, no, not so,' says the other; 'and I call God to witness, Frank Esmond, that I would have asked your pardon, had you but given me a chance. In—in the first cause of our falling out, I swear that no one was to blame but me, and—and that my lady—'

'Hush!' said my poor Lord Viscount, lifting himself on his elbow and speaking faintly. 'Twas a dispute about the cards, the cursed cards. Harry my boy, are you wounded too?
God help thee! I loved thee, Harry, and thou must watch over my little Frank, and—and carry this little heart to my wife.'

And here my dear lord felt in his breast for a locket he wore there, and, in the act, fell back fainting.

We were all at this terrified, thinking him dead; but Esmond and Colonel Westbury bade the chairmen come into the field; and so my lord was carried to one Mr. Aimes, a surgeon, in Long Acre, who kept a bath, and there the house was wakened up, and the victim of this quarrel carried in.

My Lord Viscount was put to bed, and his wound looked to by the surgeon, who seemed both kind and skillful. When he had looked to my lord, he bandaged up Harry Esmond's hand (who from loss of blood, had fainted too, in the house, and may have been some time unconscious); and when the young man came to himself, you may be sure he eagerly asked what news there were of his dear patron; on which the surgeon carried him to the room where the Lord Castlewood lay; who had already sent for a priest; and desired earnestly, they said, to speak with his kinsman. He was lying on a bed, very pale and ghastly, with that fixed, fatal look in his eyes which betokens death; and faintly beckoning all the other persons away from him with his hand, and crying out 'Only Harry Esmond,' the hand fell powerless down on the coverlet, as Harry came forward, and knelt down and kissed it.

'Thou art all but a priest, Harry,' my Lord Viscount gasped out, with a faint smile and pressure of his cold hand. 'Are they all gone? Let me make thee a deathbed confession.'

And with sacred Death waiting, as it were, at the bed-foot, as an awful witness of his words, the poor dying soul gasped out his last wishes in respect of his family, his humble profession of contrition for his faults, and his charity toward the world he was leaving. Some things he said concerned Harry Esmond as much as they astonished him. And my Lord Viscount, sinking visibly, was in the midst of these strange confessions, when the ecclesiastic for whom my lord had sent, Mr. Atterbury, arrived.

This gentleman had reached to no great church dignity as yet, but was only preacher at St. Bride's, drawing all the town thither by his eloquent sermons. He was godson to my lord, who had been pupil to his father; had paid a visit to Castlewood from Oxford more than once; and it was by his advice, I think, that Harry Esmond was sent to Cambridge rather than to Oxford, of which place Mr. Atterbury, though a distinguished member, spoke but ill.
Our messenger found the good priest already at his books at five o'clock in the morning, and he followed the man eagerly to the house where my poor Lord Viscount lay—Esmond watching him, and taking his dying words from his mouth.

My lord, hearing of Mr. Atterbury's arrival, and squeezing Esmond's hand, asked to be alone with the priest; and Esmond left them there for this solemn interview. You may be sure that his own prayers and grief accompanied that dying benefactor. My lord had said to him that which had confounded the young man—informed him of a secret which greatly concerned him. Indeed, after hearing it, he had had good cause for doubt and dismay; for mental anguish as well as resolution. While the colloquy between Mr. Atterbury and his dying penitent took place within, an immense contest of perplexity was agitating Lord Castlewood's young companion.

At the end of an hour—it may be more—Mr. Atterbury came out of the room, looking very hard at Esmond, and holding a paper.

"He is on the brink of God's awful judgment," the priest whispered. "He has made his breast clean to me. He forgives and believes, and makes restitution. Shall it be in public? Shall we call a witness to sign it?"

"God knows," sobbed out the young man, "my dearest lord has only done me kindness all his life."

The priest put the paper into Esmond's hand. He looked at it. It swam before his eyes.

"'Tis a confession," he said.

"'Tis as you please," said Mr. Atterbury.

There was a fire in the room, where the cloths were drying for the baths, and there lay a heap in a corner, saturated with the blood of my dear lord's body. Esmond went to the fire, and threw the paper into it. 'Twas a great chimney with glazed Dutch tiles. How we remember such trifles in such awful moments!—the scrap of the book that we have read in a great grief, the taste of that last dish that we have eaten before a duel, or some such supreme meeting or parting. On the Dutch tiles at the Bagnio was a rude picture representing Jacob in hairy gloves, cheating Isaac of Esau's birthright. The burning paper lighted it up.

"'Tis only a confession, Mr. Atterbury," said the young man. He leaned his head against the mantelpiece; a burst of tears came to his eyes. They were the first he had shed as he sat by his lord, scared by this calamity, and more yet by what the poor dying gentleman had told him, and shocked to think that he should be the agent of bringing this double misfortune on those he loved best.

'Let us go to him,' said Mr. Esmond. And accordingly they went into the next chamber, where by this time the dawn had broke, which showed my lord's poor pale face and wild appealing eyes, that wore that awful, fatal look of coming dissolution. The surgeon was with him. He went into the chamber as Atterbury came out thence. My Lord Viscount turned round his sick eyes toward Esmond. It choked the other to hear that rattle in his throat.

'My Lord Viscount,' says Mr. Atterbury, 'Mr. Esmond wants no witnesses, and hath burned the paper.'

'Very dearest master!' Esmond said, kneeling down, and taking his hand and kissing it.

My Lord Viscount sprang up in his bed, and flung his arms round Esmond. 'God bl—bless—' was all he said. The blood rushed from his mouth, deluging the young man. My dearest lord was no more. He was gone with a blessing on his lips, and love and repentance and kindness in his manly heart.

'Benedicti, benedicentes,' says Mr. Atterbury, and the young man, kneeling at the bedside, groaned out an 'Amen.'

'Who shall take the news to her?' was Mr. Esmond's next thought. And on this he besought Mr. Atterbury to bear the tidings to Castlewood. He could not face his mistress himself with those dreadful news. Mr. Atterbury complying kindly, Esmond writ a hasty note on his tablebook to my lord's man, bidding him get the horses for Mr. Atterbury and ride with him, and send Esmond's own valise to the Gatehouse prison, whither he resolved to go and give himself up.

BOOK II.
CONTAINS MR. ESMOND'S MILITARY LIFE AND OTHER MATTERS APPERTAINING TO THE ESMOND family.

CHAPTER I.
I AM IN PRISON AND VISITED, BUT NOT CONSOLED THERE.

Those may imagine, who have seen death untimely strike down persons revered and beloved, and know how unavailing consolation is, what was Harry Esmond's anguish after being an actor in that ghastly midnight scene of blood and homicide. He could not, he felt, have faced his dear mistress, and told her that story. He was thankful that kind Atterbury consented to break the sad news to her; but, besides his grief, which he took into prison with him, he had that in his heart which secretly cheered and consoled him.

A great secret had been told to Esmond by his unhappy, stricken kinsman, lying on his deathbed. Were he to disclose it, as in equity and honor he might do, the discovery would but bring greater grief upon those whom he loved best in the world, and who were sad enough already. Should he bring down shame and perplexity upon all those beings to whom he was attached by so many tender ties of affection and gratitude? degrade his father’s widow? impeach and sully his father’s and kinsman’s honor? and for what? for a barren title, to be worn at the expense of an innocent boy, the son of his dearest benefactress. He had debated this matter in his conscience, while his poor lord was making his dying confession. On one side were ambition, temptation, justice even; but love, gratitude, and fidelity pleaded on the other. And when the struggle was over in Harry’s mind, a glow of righteous happiness filled it, and it was with grateful tears in his eyes that he returned thanks to God for that decision which he had been enabled to make.

‘When I was denied by my own blood,’ thought he, ‘these dearest friends received and cherished me. When I was a nameless orphan myself, and needed a protector, I found one in yonder kind soul, who has gone to his account repenting of the innocent wrong he has done.’

And with this consoling thought he went away to give himself up at the prison, after kissing the cold lips of his benefactor. It was on the third day after he had come to the Gatehouse prison (where he lay in no small pain from his wound, which inflamed and ached severely), and with those thoughts and resolutions that have been just spoke of, to depress, and yet to console him, that H. Esmond’s keeper came and told him that a visitor was asking for him, and though he could not see her face, which was enveloped in a black hood, her whole figure, too, being veiled and covered with the deepest mourning, Esmond knew at once that his visitor was his dear mistress.

He got up from his bed, where he was lying, being very weak; and advancing toward her as the retiring keeper shut the door upon him and his guest in that sad place, he put forward his left hand (for the right was wounded and bandaged), and he would have taken that kind one of his mistress, which had done so many offices of friendship for him for so many years. But the Lady Castlewood went back from him, putting back her hood, and leaning against the great stanchioned door which the jailer had just closed upon them. Her face was ghastly white, as Esmond saw it, looking from the hood; and her eyes, ordinarily so sweet and tender, were fixed on him with such a tragic glance of woe and anger as caused the young man, unaccustomed to unkindness from that person, to avert his own glances from her face.

'And this, Mr. Esmond,' she said, 'is where I see you; and 'tis to this you have brought me!'

'You have come to console me in my calamity, madam,' said he (though, in truth, he scarce knew how to address her, his emotions at beholding her so overpowered him).

She advanced a little, but stood silent and trembling, looking out at him from her black draperies, with her small white hands clasped together, and quivering lips and hollow eyes.

'Not to reproach me,' he continued after a pause. 'My grief is sufficient as it is.'

'Take back your hand—do not touch me with it!' she cried.

'Look! there's blood on it!' 'I wish they had taken it all,' said Esmond; 'if you are unkind to me.'

'Where is my husband?' she broke out. 'Give me back my husband, Henry! Why did you stand by at midnight and see him murdered? Why did the traitor escape who did it? You, the champion of your house, who offered to die for us! You that he loved and trusted, and to whom I confided him; you that vowed devotion and gratitude, and I believed you; yes, I believed you—why are you here, and my noble Francis gone? Why did you come among us? You have only brought us grief and sorrow and repentance—bitter, bitter repentance—as a return for our love and kindness. Did I ever do you a wrong, Henry? You were but an orphan child when I first saw you—when he first saw you, who was so good and noble and trusting. He would have had you sent away, but, like a foolish woman, I besought him to let you stay. And you pretended to love us, and we believed you; and you made our house wretched, and my husband's heart went from me; and I lost him through you—I lost him—the husband of my youth, I say. I worshiped him; you know I worshiped him—and he was changed to me. He was no more my Francis of old—my dear, dear soldier. He loved me before he saw you; and I loved him. Oh, God is my witness how I loved him! Why did he not send you from among us? 'Twas only his kindness, that could refuse me nothing then. And young as you were—yes, and weak and alone—there was evil—I knew there was evil in keeping you. I read it in your face and eyes. I saw that they boded harm to us; and it came, I knew it would. Why did you not die when you had the smallpox, and I came myself and watched you, and you didn’t know me in your delirium, and you called out for me, though I was there at your side? All that has happened since was a just judgment on my wicked heart—my wicked, jealous heart. Oh, I am punished—awfully punished! My husband lies in his blood; murdered for defending me, my kind, kind, generous lord; and you were by, and you let him die, Henry!’

These words, uttered in the wildness of her grief, by one who was ordinarily quiet, and spoke seldom except with a gentle smile and a soothing tone, rung in Esmond’s ear; and ’tis said that he repeated many of them in the fever into which he now fell from his wound, and perhaps from the emotion which such passionate, undeserved upbraiding caused him. It seemed as if his very sacrifices and love for this lady and her family were to turn to evil and reproach; as if his presence among them was indeed a cause of grief, and the continuance of his life but woe and bitterness to theirs. As the Lady Castlewood spoke bitterly, rapidly, without a tear, he never offered a word of appeal or remonstrance; but sat at the foot of his prison-bed, stricken only with the more pain at thinking it was that soft and beloved hand which should stab him so cruelly, and powerless against her fatal sorrow. Her words as she spoke struck the chords of all his memory, and the whole of his boyhood and youth passed within him; while this lady, so fond and gentle but yesterday—this good angel whom he had loved and worshiped—stood before him, pursuing him with keen words and aspect malign.

‘I wish I were in my lord’s place,’ he groaned out. ‘It was not my fault that I was not there, madam. But Fate is stronger than all of us, and willed what has come to pass. It had been better for me to have died when I had the illness.’

‘Yes, Henry,’ said she—and as she spoke she looked at him with a glance that was at once so fond, so sad, that the young man, tossing up his arms, wildly fell back, hiding his head in the coverlet of the bed. As he turned he struck against the wall with his wounded hand, displacing the ligature; and he felt the blood rushing again from the wound. He remembered feeling a secret pleasure at the accident, and thinking, ‘Suppose I were to end now, who would grieve for me?’

This hemorrhage, or the grief and despair in which the luck-less young man was at the time of the accident, must have brought on a delirium presently; for he had scarce any recollection afterward, save of someone, his mistress probably, seizing his hand—and then of the buzzing noise in his ears as he awoke, with two or three persons of the prison around his bed, whereon he lay in a pool of blood from his arm.

It was now bandaged up again by the prison surgeon, who happened to be in the place; and the governor’s wife and servant, kind people both, were with the patient. Esmond saw his mistress still in the room when he awoke from his trance, but she went away without a word; though the governor’s wife told him that she sat in her room for some time afterward, and did not leave the prison until she heard that Esmond was likely to do well.

Days afterward, when Esmond was brought out of a fever which he had, and which attacked him that night pretty sharply, the honest keeper’s wife brought her patient a handkerchief fresh washed and ironed, and at the corner of which he recognized his mistress’ well-known cipher and viscountess’ crown. ‘The lady had bound it round his arm when he fainted, and before she called for help,’ the keeper’s wife said. ‘Poor lady! she took on sadly about her husband. He has been buried to-day, and many of the coaches of the nobility went with him—my Lord Marlborough’s and my Lord Sunderland’s, and many of the officers of the Guards, in which he served in the old king’s time; and my lady has been with her two children to the king at Kensington, and asked for justice against my Lord Mohun, who is in hiding, and my lord the Earl of Warwick and Holland, who is ready to give himself up and take his trial.’

Such were the news, coupled with assertions about her own honesty and that of Molly, her maid, who would never have stolen a certain trumpery gold sleeve button of Mr. Esmond’s, that was missing after his fainting fit, that the keeper’s wife brought to her lodger. His thoughts followed to that untimely grave the brave heart, the kind friend, the gallant gentleman, honest of word and generous of thought (if feeble of purpose, but are his betters much stronger than he?), who had given him bread and shelter when he had none; home and love when he needed them; and who, if he had kept one vital secret from him, had done that of which he repented ere dying—a wrong indeed, but one followed by remorse, and occasioned by almost irresistible temptation.

Esmond took his handkerchief when his nurse left him, and very likely kissed it, and looked at the bauble embroidered in the corner. 'It has cost thee grief enough,' he thought, 'dear lady, so loving and so tender. Shall I take it from thee and thy children? No, never! Keep it, and wear it, my little Frank, my pretty boy. If I cannot make a name for myself, I can die without one. Some day, when my dear mistress sees my heart, I shall be righted; or if not here or now, why, elsewhere; where Honor doth not follow us, but where Love reigns perpetual.'
'Tis needless to relate here, as the reports of the lawyers already have chronicled them, the particulars or issue of that trial which ensued upon my Lord Castlewood's melancholy homicide. Of the two lords engaged in that sad matter, the second, my lord the Earl of Warwick and Holland, who had been engaged with Colonel Westbury, and wounded by him, was found not guilty by his peers, before whom he was tried (under the presidency of the Lord Steward, Lord Somers); and the principal, the Lord Mohun, being found guilty of the manslaughter (which, indeed, was forced upon him, and of which he repented most sincerely,) pleaded his clergy, and so was discharged without any penalty. The widow of the slain nobleman, as it was told us in prison, showed an extraordinary spirit; and, though she had to wait for ten years before her son was old enough to compass it, declared she would have revenge of her husband's murderer. So much and suddenly had grief, anger, and misfortune appeared to change her. But fortune, good or ill, as I take it, does not change men and women. It but develops their characters. As there are a thousand thoughts lying within a man that he does not know till he takes up the pen to write, so the heart is a secret even to him (or her) who has it in his own breast. Who hath not found himself surprised into revenge, or action, or passion, for good or evil, whereof the seeds lay within him, latent and unsuspected, until the occasion called them forth? With the death of her lord a change seemed to come over the whole conduct and mind of Lady Castlewood; but of this we shall speak in the right season and anon.

The lords being tried then before their peers at Westminster, according to their privilege, being brought from the Tower with state processions and barges, and accompanied by lieu-teens and ax-men, the commoners engaged in that melancholy fray took their trial at Newgate, as became them; and,
being all found guilty, pleaded likewise their benefit of clergy.
The sentence, as we all know, in these cases, is that the culprit lies a year in prison or during the king's pleasure, and is burned in the hand or only stamped with a cold iron; or this part of the punishment is altogether remitted at the grace of the sovereign. So Harry Esmond found himself a criminal and a prisoner at two-and-twenty years old; as for the two colonels, his comrades, they took the matter very lightly. Duelling was a part of their business, and they could not in honor refuse any invitations of that sort.

But the case was different with Mr. Esmond. His life was changed by that stroke of the sword which destroyed his kind patron's. As he lay in prison old Dr. Tusher fell ill and died; and Lady Castlewood appointed Thomas Tusher to the vacant living, about the filling of which she had a thousand times fondly talked to Harry Esmond; how they never should part; how he should educate her boy; how to be a country clergyman, like saintly George Herbert or pious Dr. Ken, was the happiest and greatest lot in life; how (if he were obstinately bent on it, though, for her part, she owned rather to holding Queen Bess' opinion that a bishop should have no wife, and if not a bishop why a clergyman?) she would find a good wife for Harry Esmond; and so on, with a hundred pretty prospects told by fireside evenings, in fond prattle, as the children played about the hall. All these plans were overthrown now. Thomas Tusher wrote to Esmond as he lay in prison, announcing that his patroness had conferred upon him the living his reverend father had held for many years; that she never, after the tragical events which had occurred (whereof Tom spoke with a very edifying horror), could see in the revered Tusher's pulpit, or at her son's table, the man who was answerable for the father's life; that her ladyship bade him to say that she prayed for her kinsman's repentance and his worldly happiness; that he was free to command her aid for any scheme of life which he might propose to himself; but that on this side of the grave she would see him no more. And Tusher, for his own part, added that Harry should have his prayers as a friend of his youth, and commended him while he was in prison to read certain works of theology, which his reverence pronounced to be very wholesome for sinners in his lamentable condition.

And this was the return for a life of devotion—this the end of years of affectionate intercourse and passionate fidelity! Harry would have died for his patron, and was held as little better than his murderer; he had sacrificed she did not know how much for his mistress, and she threw him aside; he had endowed her family with all they had, and she talked about giving him alms as to a menial! The grief for his patron's loss, the pains of his own present position and doubts as to the future, all these were forgotten under the sense of the consummate outrage which he had to endure, and overpowered by the superior pang of that torture.

He writ back a letter to Mr. Tusher from his prison, congratulating his reverence upon his appointment to the living of Castlewood; sarcastically bidding him to follow in the footsteps of his admirable father, whose gown had descended upon him; thanking her ladyship for her offer of alms, which he said he should trust not to need; and beseeching her to remember that, if ever her determination should change toward him, he would be ready to give her proofs of a fidelity which had never wavered, and which ought never to have been questioned by that house. 'And if we meet no more, or only strangers in this world,' Mr. Esmond concluded, 'a sentence against the cruelty and injustice of which I disdain to appeal, hereafter she will know who was faithful to her, and whether she had any cause to suspect the love and devotion of her kinsman and servant.'

After the sending of this letter, the poor young fellow's mind was more at ease than it had been previously. The blow had been struck, and he had borne it. His cruel goddess had shaken her wings and fled, and left him alone and friendless, but virtute sua. And he had to bear him up, at once the sense of his right and the feeling of his wrongs, his honor and his misfortune. As I have seen men waking and running to arms at a sudden trumpet, before emergency a manly heart leaps up resolute; meets the threatening danger with undaunted countenance; and, whether conquered or conquering, faces it always. Ah! no man knows his strength or his weakness, till occasion proves them. If there be some thoughts and actions of his life from the memory of which a man shrinks with shame, sure there are some which he may be proud to own and remember; forgiven injuries, conquered temptations (now and then), and difficulties vanquished by endurance.

It was these thoughts regarding the living, far more than any great poignancy of grief respecting the dead, which af-acted Harry Esmond while in prison after his trial; but it may be imagined that he could take no comrade of misfortune into the confidence of his feelings, and they thought it was remorse and sorrow for his patron's loss which affected the young man, in error of which opinion he chose to leave them.
As a companion he was so moody and silent that the two officers, his fellow-sufferers, left him to himself mostly, liked little very likely what they knew of him, consoled themselves with dice, cards, and the bottle, and whiled away their own captivity in their own way. It seemed to Esmond as if he lived years in that prison, and was changed and aged when he came out of it. At certain periods of life we live years of emotion in a few weeks, and look back on those times, as on great gaps between the old life and the new. You do not know how much you suffer in those critical maladies of the heart, until the disease is over and you look back on it afterward. During the time the suffering is at least sufferable. The day passes in more or less of pain, and the night wears away somehow. 'Tis only in after days that we see what the danger has been—as a man out a hunting or riding for his life looks at a leap, and wonders how he should have survived the taking of it. Oh, dark months of grief and rage! of wrong and cruel endurance! He is old now who recalls you. Long ago he has forgiven and blessed the soft hand that wounded him; but the mark is there, and the wound is cicatrizized only—no time, tears, caresses, or repentance can obliterate the scar. We are indolent to put up with grief, however. Reficimus rates guassas; we tempt the ocean again and again, and try upon new ventures. Esmond thought of his early time as a novitiate, and of this past trial as an initiation before entering into life, as our young Indians undergo tortures silently before they pass to the rank of warriors in the tribe.

The officers, meanwhile, who were not let into the secret of the grief which was gnawing at the side of their silent young friend, and being accustomed to such transactions, in which one comrade or another was daily paying the forfeit of the sword, did not, of course, bemoan themselves very insconsolably about the fate of their late companion in arms. This one told stories of former adventures of love, or war, or pleasure, in which poor Frank Esmond had been engaged; t'other recollected how a constable had been bilked, or a tavern bully beaten; while my lord's poor widow was sitting at his tomb worshiping him as an actual saint and spotless hero—so the visitors said who had news of Lady Castlewood, and Westbury and Macartney had pretty nearly had all the town to come and see them.

The duel, its fatal termination, the trial of the two peers and the three commoners concerned, had caused the greatest excitement in the town. The prints and News Letters were full of them. The three gentlemen in Newgate were almost as much crowded as the bishops in the Tower, or a highwayman before execution. We were allowed to live in the governor’s house, as hath been said, both before trial and after condemnation, waiting the king’s pleasure; nor was the real cause of the fatal quarrel known, so closely had my lord and the two other persons who knew it kept the secret, but everyone imagined that the origin of the meeting was a gambling dispute. Except fresh air, the prisoners had, upon payment, most things they could desire. Interest was made that they should not mix with the vulgar convicts, whose ribald choruses and loud laughter and curses could be heard from their own part of the prison, where they and the miserable debtors were confined pell-mell.

CHAPTER II.

I COME TO THE END OF MY CAPTIVITY, BUT NOT OF MY TROUBLE.

Among the company which came to visit the two officers was an old acquaintance of Harry Esmond; that gentleman of the Guards, namely, who had been so kind to Harry when Captain Westbury’s troop had been quartered at Castlewood more than seven years before. Dick the Scholar was no longer Dick the Trooper now, but Captain Steele of Lucas’ Fusileers, and secretary to my Lord Cutts, that famous officer of King William’s, the bravest and most beloved man of the English army. The two jolly prisoners had been drinking with a party of friends (for our cellar and that of the keepers of Newgate, too, were supplied with endless hampers of burgundy and champagne that the friends of the colonel sent in); and Harry, having no wish for their drink or their conversation, being too feeble in health for the one and too sad in spirits for the other, was sitting apart in his little room, reading such books as he had, one evening, when honest Colonel Westbury, flushed with liquor, and always good-humored in and out of his cups, came laughing into Harry’s closet and said, ‘Ho, young Killjoy! here’s a friend come to see thee; he’ll pray with thee or he’ll drink with thee; or he’ll drink and pray turn about. Dick, my Christian hero, here’s the little scholar of Castlewood.’

Dick came up and kissed Esmond on both cheeks, imparting a strong perfume of burnt sack, along with his caress, to the young man.

‘What! is this the little man that used to talk Latin and fetch our bowls? How tall thou art grown! I protest I should have known thee anywhere. And so you have turned ruffian and fighter; and wanted to measure swords with Mohun, did you? I protest that Mohun said at the Guard dinner yesterday, where there was a pretty company of us, that the young fellow wanted to fight him, and was the better man of the two.

'I wish we could have tried and proved it, Mr. Steele,' said Esmond, thinking of his dead benefactor, and his eyes filling with tears.

With the exception of that one cruel letter which he had from his mistress Mr. Esmond heard nothing from her, and she seemed determined to execute her resolve of parting from him and disowning him. But he had news of her, such as it was, which Mr. Steele assiduously brought him from the Prince's and Princesses' Court, where our honest captain had been advanced to the post of gentleman waiter. When off duty there, Captain Dick often came to console his friends in captivity; a good nature and a friendly disposition toward all who were in ill fortune no doubt prompting him to make his visits, and good fellowship and good wine to prolong them.

'Faith,' says Westbury, 'the little scholar was the first to begin the quarrel—I mind me of it now—at Lockit's. I always hated that fellow Mohun. What was the real cause of the quarrel betwixt him and poor Frank? I would wager 'twas a woman.'

'Twas a quarrel about play—on my word, about play,' Harry said. 'My poor lord lost great sums to his guest at Castlewood. Angry words passed between them; and though Lord Castlewood was the kindest and most pliable soul alive, his spirit was very high; and hence that meeting which has brought us all here,' says Mr. Esmond, resolved never to acknowledge that there had ever been any other cause but cards for the duel.

'I do not like to use bad words of a nobleman,' says Westbury; 'but if my Lord Mohun were a commoner, I would say 'twas a pity he was not hanged. He was familiar with dice and women at a time other boys are at school being birched; he was as wicked as the oldest rake years ere he had done growing, and handled a sword and a foil, and a bloody one, too, before he ever used a razor. He held poor Will Mountford in talk that night when bloody Dick Hall ran him through. He will come to a bad end, will that young lord, and no end is bad enough for him,' says honest Mr. Westbury; whose prophecy was fulfilled twelve years after, upon that fatal day when Mohun fell, dragging down one of the bravest and greatest gentlemen in England in his fall.

From Mr. Steele, then, who brought the public rumor, as well as his own private intelligence, Esmond learned the movements of his unfortunate mistress. Steele's heart was of very inflammable composition; and the gentleman usher spoke in terms of boundless admiration both of the widow (that most beautiful woman, as he said) and of her daughter, who, in the captain's eyes, was a still greater paragon. If the pale widow whom Captain Richard, in his poetic rapture, compared to a Niobe in tears—to a Sigismunda—to a weeping Belvïdèra, was an object the most lovely and pathetic which his eyes had ever beheld, or for which his heart had melted, even her ripened perfections and beauty were as nothing compared to the promise of that extreme loveliness which the good captain saw in her daughter. It was matre pulcra filia pulcrior. Steele composed sonnets while he was on duty in his prince's ante-chamber, to the maternal and filial charms. He would speak for hours about them to Harry Esmond, and, indeed, he could have chosen few subjects more likely to interest the unhappy young man, whose heart was now as always devoted to these ladies, and who was thankful to all who loved them, or praised them, or wished them well.

Not that his fidelity was recompensed by any answering kindness, or show of relenting even, on the part of a mistress obdurate now after ten years of love and benefactions. The poor young man getting no answer, save Tusher's, to that letter which he had written, and being too proud to write more, opened a part of his heart to Steele, than whom no man, when unhappy, could find a kinder hearer or more friendly emissary; described (in words which were no doubt pathetic, for they came imo pectore, and caused honest Dick to weep plentifully) his youth, his constancy, his fond devotion to that household which had reared him; his affection, how earned, and how tenderly required until but yesterday, and (as far as he might) the circumstances and causes for which that sad quarrel had made of Esmond a prisoner under sentence, a widow and orphans of those whom in life he held dearest. In terms that might well move a harder-hearted man than young Esmond's confidant—for, indeed, the speaker's own heart was half broke as he uttered them—he described a part of what had taken place in that only sad interview which his mistress had granted him; how she had left him with anger and almost imprecation, whose words and thoughts until then had been only blessing and kindness; how she had accused him of the guilt of that blood, in exchange for which he would cheerfully have sacrificed his own (indeed, in this the Lord Mohun, the Lord Warwick, and all the gentlemen engaged, as well as the common rumor out of doors—Steele told him—bore out the luckless young man); and with all his heart and tears he besought Mr. Steele to inform his mistress of her kinsman's unhappiness, and to deprecate that cruel anger she showed him. Half frantic with grief at the injustice done him, and contrasting it with a thousand soft recollections of love and confidence gone by, that made his present misery inexpressibly more bitter, the poor wretch passed many a lonely day and wakeful night in a kind of powerless despair and rage against his iniquitous fortune. It was the softest hand that struck him, the gentlest and most compassionate nature that persecuted him. 'I would as lief,' he said, 'have pleaded guilty to the murder, and have suffered for it like any other felon, as have to endure the torture to which my mistress subjects me.'

Although the recital of Esmond's story, and his passionate appeals and remonstances, drew so many tears from Dick who heard them, they had no effect upon the person whom they were designed to move. Esmond's ambassador came back from the mission with which the poor young gentleman had charged him, with a sad blank face and a shake of the head which told that there was no hope for the prisoner; and scarce a wretched culprit in that prison of Newgate ordered for execution, and trembling for a reprieve, felt more cast down than Mr. Esmond, innocent and condemned.

As had been arranged between the prisoner and his counsel in their consultations, Mr. Steele had gone to the dowager's house in Chelsey, where it has been said the widow and her orphans were, had seen my Lady Viscountess, and pleaded the cause of her unfortunate kinsman. 'And I think I spoke well, my poor boy,' says Mr. Steele; 'for who would not speak well in such a cause, and before so beautiful a judge? I did not see the lovely Beatrix (sure her famous namesake of Florence was never half so beautiful), only the young viscount was in the room with the Lord Churchill, my Lord of Marlborough's eldest son. But these young gentlemen went off to the garden; I could see them from the window tilting at each other with poles in a mimic tournament (grief touches the young but lightly, and I remember that I beat a drum at the coffin of my own father). My Lady Viscountess looked out at the two boys at their game and said—"You see, sir, children are taught to use weapons of death as toys, and to make a sport of murder;" and as she spoke she looked so lovely, and stood there in herself so sad and beautiful, an instance of that doctrine whereof I am a humble preacher, that had I not dedicated my little volume of the "Christian Hero"—(I perceive, Harry, thou hast not cut the leaves of it. The sermon is good, believe me, though the preacher's life may not answer it)—I say, hadn't I dedicated the volume to Lord Cutts, I would have asked permission to place her ladyship's name on the first page. I think I never saw such a beautiful violet as that of her eyes, Harry. Her complexion is of the pink of the blush rose, she hath an exquisite turned wrist and dimpled hand, and I make no doubt—'

'Did you come to tell me about the dimples on my lady's hand?' broke out Mr. Esmond sadly.

'A lovely creature in affliction seems always doubly beautiful to me,' says the poor captain, who indeed was but too often in a state to see double, and so, checked, he resumed the interrupted thread of his story. 'As I spoke my business,' Mr. Steele said, 'and narrated to your mistress what all the world knows, and the other side hath been eager to acknowldge—that you had tried to put yourself between the two lords, and to take your patron's quarrel on your own point; I recounted the general praises of your gallantry, besides my Lord Mohun's particular testimony to it; I thought the widow listened with some interest, and her eyes—I have never seen such a violet, Harry—looked up at mine once or twice. But after I had spoken on this theme for a while she suddenly broke away with a cry of grief. "I would to God, sir," she said, "I never had heard that word gallantry which you use, or known the meaning of it. My lord might have been here but for that, my home might be happy, my poor boy have a father.
It was what you gentlemen call gallantry came into my home, and drove my husband on to the cruel sword that killed him.
You should not speak the word to a Christian woman, sir; a poor widowed mother of orphans, whose home was happy until the world came into it—the wicked godless world, that takes the blood of the innocent and lets the guilty go free."

'As the afflicted lady spoke in this strain, sir,' Mr. Steele continued, 'it seemed as if indignation moved her even more than grief. "Compensation!" she went on passionately, her cheeks and eyes kindling; "what compensation does your world give the widow for her husband, and the children for the mur-derer of their father? The wretch who did the deed has not even a punishment. Conscience! what conscience has he who can enter the house of a friend, whisper falsehood and insult to a woman that never harmed him, and stab the kind heart that trusted him? My Lord—my Lord Wretch's, my Lord Villain's, my Lord Murderer's peers meet to try him, and they dismiss him with a word or two of reproof, and send him into the world again, to pursue women with lust and falsehood, and to murder unsuspecting guests that harbor him. That day my Lord—my Lord Murderer—(I will never name him)—was let loose, a woman was executed at Tyburn for stealing in a shop.
But a man may rob another of his life, or a lady of her honor, and shall pay no penalty! I take my child, run to the throne, and on my knees ask for justice, and the king refuses me.
The king! he is no king of mine—he never shall be. He, too, robbed the throne from the king his father—the true king —and he has gone unpunished, as the great do.”

‘I then thought to speak for you,’ Mr. Steele continued, and I interposed by saying, “There was one, madam, who, at least, would have put his own breast between your husband’s and my Lord Mohun’s sword. Your poor young kinsman, Harry Esmond, hath told me that he tried to draw the quarrel on himself.”

“Are you come from him?” asked the lady,—so Mr. Steele went on,—‘rising up with a great severity and stateliness. “I thought you had come from the princess. I saw Mr. Esmond in his prison, and bade him farewell. He brought misery into my house. He never should have entered it.”

“Madam, madam, he is not to blame,” I interposed, continued
Mr. Steele.

“Do I blame him to you, sir?” asked the widow. “If ’tis he who sent you, say that I have taken counsel, where?”—she spoke with a very pallid cheek now, and a break in her voice—where all who ask may have it; and that it bids me to part from him, and to see him no more. We met in the prison for the last time—at least for years to come. It may be, in years hence, when,—when our knees and our tears and our contrition have changed our sinful hearts, sir, and wrought our pardon, we may meet again—but not now. After what has passed, I could not bear to see him. I wish him well, sir; but I wish him farewell, too; and if he has that—that regard toward us which he speaks of, I beseech him to prove it by obeying me in this.’

“I shall break the young man’s heart, madam, by this hard sentence,’” Mr. Steele said.

The lady shook her head,’ continued my kind scholar.
“The hearts of young men, Mr. Steele, are not so made,” she said. “Mr. Esmond will find other—other friends! The mistress of this house has relented very much toward the late lord’s son,” she added, with a blush, “and has promised me, that is, has promised that she will care for his fortune. While
I live in it, after the horrid, horrid deed which has passed, Castlewood must never be a home to him—never. Nor would
I have him write to me—except—no—I would have him never write to me, nor see him more. Give him, if you will, my parting—hush! not a word of this before my daughter."

'Here the fair Beatrice entered from the river, with her cheeks flushing with health, and looking only the more lovely and fresh for the mourning habiliments which she wore. And my Lady Viscountess said:

"'Beatrice, this is Mr. Steele, gentleman usher of the prince's highness. When does your new comedy appear, Mr. Steele?' I hope thou wilt be out of prison for the first night, Harry.'

The sentimental captain concluded his sad tale, saying, 'Faith, the beauty of Filia pulcior drove pulcrum matrem out of my head; and yet as I came down the river, and thought about the pair, the pallid dignity and exquisite grace of the matron had the uppermost, and I thought her even more noble than the virgin!'

The party of prisoners lived very well in Newgate, and with comforts very different to those which were awarded to the poor wretches there (his insensibility to their misery, their gayety still more frightful, their curses and blasphemy, hath struck with a kind of shame since—as proving how selfish, during his imprisonment, his own particular grief was, and how entirely the thoughts of it absorbed him); if the three gentlemen lived well under the care of the Warden of Newgate, it was because they paid well; and indeed the cost at the dearest ordinary or the grandest tavern in London could not have furnished a longer reckoning, than our host of the 'Handcuff Inn'—as Colonel Westbury called it. Our rooms were the three in the gate over Newgate—on the second story looking up Newgate Street toward Cheapside and Paul's Church. And we had leave to walk on the roof, and could see thence Smithfield and the Bluecoat Boys' School, Gardens, and the Chartreux, where, as Harry Esmond remembered, Dick the Scholar, and his friend Tom Tusher, had had their schooling.

Harry could never have paid his share of that prodigious heavy reckoning which my landlord brought to his guests once a week; for he had but three pieces in his pockets that fatal night before the duel, when the gentlemen were at cards and offered to play five. But while he was yet ill at the Gatehouse, after Lady Castlewood had visited him there, and before his trial, there came one in an orange-tawny coat and blue lace, the livery which the Esmonds always wore, and brought a sealed packet for Mr. Esmond, which contained twenty guineas and a note saying that a counsel had been appointed for him, and that more money would be forthcoming whenever he needed it.

'Twas a queer letter from the scholar as she was, or as she called herself, the Dowager Viscountess Castlewood; written in the strange barbarous French which she and many other fine ladies of that time—witness her Grace of Portsmouth—employed. Indeed, spelling was not an article of general commodity in the world then, and my Lord Marlborough's letters can show that he, for one, had but a little share of this part of grammar:

_Mong Cousain [my Lady Viscountess Dowager wrote], je scay que vous vous etes bravement batue et grieveusement blessey—du coste de feu M. le Vicomte. M. Le Compte de Varique ne se playt qua parlay de vous ; M. de Moon auncy. Il di que vous avey vouleu vous bastre avecque luy—que vous estes plus fort que luy fur l'asaycrime—qu'il y a surtout certaine Botte que vous scavay quil n'a jamay seue parlay : et que c'en eut ete fay de luy si vouleslay vous vous fussay battews ansamb. Alncy ce paue Vicompte est mort. Mort et peultay—Mon cousain, mon cousain jay dans la tayste que vous n'estes queng pey Monst—anqcy que les Esmonds ong tousjours esté. La venve est chay moy. J'ay recuull cet' pauve femme. Elle est furieuse cont vous, allans tous les jours chercher ley Roy (d'icy) demanrant a gran cri revanche pour son Mary. Elle ne veux voyre ni entende parlay de vous ; pourrant elle ne fay qu'en parlay milfoy par jour. Quand vous seray hor prison venay me voyre. J'auray soing de vous. Si cette petite Prude vont se defaire de song pey Monste (Hélas je craign quil ne soy trotar ) je m'en chargeray. J'ay encor quelque interay et quelques escus de costay.

La Venve se racommode vec Miladi Marlboro qui est tout mnicante avecque la Reine Anne. Cet dam sentéraysent pour la petite prude ; qui pourciant a un fi du meame age que vous savay.

En sortant de prisoyn venez icy. Je ne puy voue recevoir chaymoi a cause des méchansetez du monde, may pre du moy vous aures logement._

_Isabelle Vicomtesse D'Esmond._

Marchioness of Esmond this lady sometimes called herself, in virtue of that patent which had been given by the late King James to Harry Esmond's father; and in this state she had her train carried by a knight's wife, a cup and cover of assay to drink from, and fringed cloth.

He who was of the same age as little Francis, whom we shall henceforth call Viscount Castlewood here, was H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, born in the same year and month with Frank, and just proclaimed at Saint Germains, King of Great Britain, France, and Ireland.

CHAPTER III.

I TAKE THE QUEEN'S PAY IN QUIN'S REGIMENT.

The fellow in the orange-tawny livery with blue lace and facings was in waiting when Esmond came out of prison, and, taking the young gentleman's slender baggage, led the way out of that odious Newgate, and by Fleet Conduit, down to the Thames, where a pair of oars was called, and they went up the river to Chelsey. Esmond thought the sun had never shone so bright, nor the air felt so fresh and exhilarating. Temple Garden, as they rowed by, looked like the garden of Eden to him, and the aspect of the quays, wharves, and buildings by the river, Somerset House, and Westminster (where the splendid new bridge was just beginning), Lambeth tower and palace, and that busy shining scene of the Thames swarming with boats and barges, filled his heart with pleasure and cheerfulness—as well such a beautiful scene might one who had been a prisoner so long, and with so many dark thoughts deepening the gloom of his captivity. They rowed up at length to the pretty village of Chelsey, where the nobility have many handsome country houses; and so came to my Lady Viscountess' house, a cheerful new house in the row facing the river, with a handsome garden behind it, and a pleasant lookout both toward Surrey and Kensington, where stands the noble ancient palace of the Lord Warwick, Harry's reconciled adversary.

Here in her ladyship's saloon the young man saw again some of those pictures which had been at Castlewood, and which she had removed thence on the death of her lord, Harry's father. Specially, and in the place of honor, was Sir Peter Lely's picture of the Honorable Mistress Isabella Esmond as Diana, in yellow satin, with a bow in her hand and a crest in her forehead, and dogs frisking about her. 'Twas painted about the time when royal Endymions were said to find favor with this virgin huntress; and, as goddesses have youth perpetual, this one believed to the day of her death that she never grew older, and always persisted in supposing the picture was still like her.

After he had been shown to her room by the groom of the chamber, who filled many offices besides in her ladyship's modest household, and after a proper interval, his elderly goddess Diana vouchsafed to appear to the young man. A blackamoor in a Turkish habit, with red boots and a silver collar, on which the viscountess' arms were engraven, preceded her and bore her cushion; then came her gentlewoman; a little pack of spaniels barking and frisking about preceded the austere huntress—then, behold, the viscountess herself drop- ping odors. Esmond recollected from his childhood that rich aroma of musk which his mother-in-law (for she may be called so) exhaled. As the sky grows redder and redder toward sun- set, so, in the decline of her years, the cheeks of my Lady Dowager blushed more deeply. Her face was illuminated with vermilion, which appeared the brighter from the white paint employed to set it off. She wore the ringlets which had been in fashion in King Charles' time; whereas the ladies of King William's had headdresses like the towers of Cybele. Her eyes gleamed out from the midst of this queer structure of paint, dyes, and pomatums. Such was my Lady Viscountess, Mr. Esmond's father's widow.

He made her such a profound bow as her dignity and relationship merited, and advanced with the greatest gravity, and once more kissed that hand, upon the trembling knuckles of which glittered a score of rings—remembering old times when that trembling hand made him tremble. 'Marchioness,' says he, bowing, and on one knee, 'is it only the hand I may have the honor of saluting?' For, accompanying that inward laughter, which the sight of such an astonishing old figure might well produce in the young man, there was good will too, and the kindness of consanguinity. She had been his father's wife, and was his grandfather's daughter. She had suffered him in old days, and was kind to him now after her fashion. And now that bar sinister was removed from Esmond's thought, and that secret opprobrium no longer cast upon his mind, he was pleased to feel family ties and own them—perhaps secretly vain of the sacrifice he had made, and to think that he, Esmond, was really the chief of his house, and only prevented by his own magnanimity from advancing his claim.

At least, ever since he had learned that secret from his poor patron on his dying bed, actually as he was standing beside it, he had felt an independency which he had never known before, and which since did not desert him. So he called his old aunt Marchioness, but with an air as if he was the Marquis of Esmond who so addressed her.

Did she read in the young gentleman's eyes, which had now no fear of hers or their superannuated authority, that he knew or suspected the truth about his birth? She gave a start of surprise at his altered manner: indeed it was quite a different bearing to that of the Cambridge student who had paid her a visit two years since, and whom she had dismissed with five pieces sent by the groom of the chamber. She eyed him, then trembled a little more than was her wont, perhaps, and said, 'Welcome, cousin,' in a frightened voice.

His resolution, as has been said before, had been quite different, namely, so to bear himself through life as if the secret of his birth was not known to him; but he suddenly and rightly determined on a different course. He asked that her ladyship's attendants should be dismissed, and when they were private—'Welcome, nephew, at least, madam, it should be,' he said.
'A great wrong has been done to me and to you, and to my poor mother, who is no more.'
'I declare before Heaven that I was guiltless of it,' she cried out, giving up her cause at once. 'It was your wicked father who——'
'Who brought this dishonor on our family,' says Mr. Esmond. 'I know it full well. I want to disturb no one. Those who are in present possession have been my dearest benefactors, and are quite innocent of intentional wrong to me. The late lord, my dear patron, knew not the truth until a few months before his death, when Father Holt brought the news to him.'
'The wretch! he had it in confession! he had it in confession!' cried out the Dowager lady.
'Not so. He learned it elsewhere as well as in confession,' Mr. Esmond answered. 'My father, when wounded at the Boyne, told the truth to a French priest, who was in hiding after the battle, as well as to the priest there, at whose house he died. This gentleman did not think fit to divulge the story till he met with Mr. Holt at St. Omer's. And the latter kept it back for his own purpose, and until he had learned whether my mother was alive or no. She is dead years since, my poor patron told me with his dying breath, and I doubt him not. I do not know even whether I could prove a marriage. I would not if I could. I do not care to bring shame on our name, or grief upon those whom I love, however hardly they may use me. My father's son, madam, won't aggravate the wrong my father did you. Continue to be his widow, and give me your kindness. 'Tis all I ask from you; and I shall never speak of this matter again.'
'Mais vous êtes un noble jeune homme!' breaks out my lady, speaking, as usual with her when she was agitated, in the French language.
'Noblesse oblige,' says Mr. Esmond, making her a low bow. 'There are those alive to whom, in return for their love to me, I often fondly said I would give my life away. Shall I be their enemy now, and quarrel about a title? What matters who has it? 'Tis with the family still.'
'What can there be in that little prude of a woman that makes men so raffoler about her?' cries out my Lady Dowager. 'She was here for a month petitioning the king. She is pretty and well conserved; but she has not the bel air. In his late Majesty's Court all the men pretended to admire her, and she was no better than a little wax doll. She is better now, and looks the sister of her daughter; but what mean you all by bepraising her? Mr. Steele, who was in waiting on Prince George, seeing her with her two children going to Kensington, writ a poem about her, and says he shall wear her colors and dress in black for the future. Mr. Congreve says he will write a "Mourning Widow," that shall be better than his "Mourning Bride." Though their husbands quarreled and fought when that wretch Churchill deserted the king (for which he deserved to be hung), Lady Marlborough has again gone wild about the little widow; insulted me in my own drawing room by saying that 'twas not the old widow, but the young viscountess, she had come to see. Little Castlewood and little Lord Churchill are to be sworn friends, and have boxed each other twice or thrice like brothers already. 'Twas that wicked young Mohun who, coming back from the provinces, last year, where he had disinterred her, raved about her all the winter, and said she was a pearl set before swine, and killed poor stupid Frank. The quarrel was all about his wife. I know 'twas all about her. Was there anything between her and Mohun, nephew? Tell me now—was there anything? About yourself, I do not ask you to answer questions.

Mr. Esmond blushed up, 'My lady's virtue is like that of a saint in heaven, madam,' he cried out.

'Oh, mon neveu! Many saints get to heaven after having a deal to repent of. I believe you are like all the rest of the fools and madly in love with her.'

'Indeed, I loved and honored her before all the world,' Esmond answered. 'I take no shame in that.'

'And she has shut her door on you—given the living to that horrid young cub, son of that horrid old bear Tusher, and says she will never see you more. Monsieur mon neveu—we are all like that. When I was a young woman, I'm positive that a thousand duels were fought about me. And when poor M. de Souchy drowned himself in the canal at Bruges because I danced with Count Springbock, I couldn't squeeze out a single tear, but danced till five o'clock the next morning. 'Twas the count—no, 'twas my Lord Ormond that played the fiddles, and his Majesty did me the honor of dancing all night with me. How you are grown! You have got the bel air. You are a black man. Our Esmonds are all black. The little prude's son is fair; so was his father—fair and stupid. You were an ugly little wretch when you came to Castlewood—you were all eyes like a young crow. We intended you should be a priest. That awful Father Holt—how he used to frighten me when I was ill! I have a comfortable director now—the Abbé Douillette—a dear man. We make meager on Fridays always. My cook is a devout, pious man. You, of course, are of the right way of thinking. They say the Prince of Orange is very ill indeed.

In this way the old dowager rattled on remorselessly to Mr. Esmond, who was quite astounded with her present volubility, contrasting it with her former haughty behavior to him. But she had taken him into favor for the moment, and chose not only to like him, as far as her nature permitted, but to be afraid of him; and he found himself to be as familiar with her now as a young man, as, when a boy, he had been timorous and silent. She was as good as her word respecting him. She introduced him to her company, of which she entertained a good deal—of the adherents of King James of course—and a great deal of loud intriguing took place over her card tables. She presented Mr. Esmond as her kinsman to many persons of honor; she supplied him not illiberally with money, which he had no scruple in accepting from her, considering the relationship which he bore to her, and the sacrifices which he himself was making in behalf of the family. But he had made up his mind to continue at no woman’s apron-strings longer; and perhaps had cast about how he should distinguish himself, and make himself a name, which his singular fortune had denied him. A discontent with his former bookish life and quietude—a bitter feeling of revolt at that slavery in which he had chosen to confine himself for the sake of those whose harshness toward him made his heart bleed—a restless wish to see men and the world—led him to think of the military profession; at any rate, to desire to see a few campaigns, and accordingly he pressed his new patroness to get him a pair of colors; and one day had the honor of finding himself appointed an ensign in Colonel Quin’s regiment of Fusileers on the Irish establishment.

Mr. Esmond’s commission was scarce three weeks old when that accident befell King William which ended the life of the greatest, the wisest, the bravest, and most clement sovereign whom England ever knew. ’Twas the fashion of the hostile party to assail this great prince’s reputation during his life, but the joy which they and all his enemies in Europe showed at his death is a proof of the terror in which they held him. Young as Esmond was, he was wise enough (and generous enough too, let it be said) to scorn that indecency of gratulation which broke out among the followers of King James in London upon the death of this illustrious prince, this invincible warrior, this wise and moderate statesman. Loyalty to the exiled king's family was traditional, as has been said, in that house to which Mr. Esmond belonged. His father's widow had all her hopes, sympathies, recollections, prejudices, engaged on King James' side, and was certainly as noisy a conspirator as ever asserted the king's rights or abused his opponents over a quadrille table or a dish of bohea. Her ladyship's house swarmed with ecclesiastics in disguise and out, with tale-bearers from St. Germains, and quidnunces that knew the last news from Versailles, nay, the exact force and number of the next expedition which the French king was to send from Dunkirk, and which was to swallow up the Prince of Orange, his army, and his Court. She had received the Duke of Berwick when he landed here in '96. She kept the glass he drank from, vowing she never would use it till she drank King James III.'s health in it on his Majesty's return; she had tokens from the queen, and relics of the saint who, if the story was true, had not always been a saint as far as she and many others were concerned. She believed in the miracles wrought at his tomb, and had a hundred authentic stories of wondrous cures effected by the blessed king's rosaries, the medals which he wore, the locks of his hair, or what not. Esmond remembered a score of marvelous tales which the credulous old woman told him. There was the bishop of Autun that was healed of a malady he had for forty years, and which left him after he said mass for the repose of the king's soul. There was M. Marais, a surgeon in Auvergne, who had a palsy in both his legs, which was cured through the king's intercession. There was Philip Pitet, of the Benedictines, who had a suffocating cough which well-nigh killed him, but he besought relief of Heaven through the merits and intercession of the blessed king, and he straightway felt a profuse sweat breaking out all over him and was recovered perfectly. And there was the wife of M. Lepervier, dancing master to the Duke of Saxe-Gotha, who was entirely eased of a rheumatism by the king's intercession, of which miracle there could be no doubt, for her surgeon and his apprentice had given their testimony under oath that they did not in any way contribute to the cure. Of these tales, and a thousand like them, Mr. Esmond believed as much as he chose. His kinswoman's greater faith had swallow for them all.

The English High Church party did not adopt these legends. But truth and honor, as they thought, bound them to the exiled king's side, nor had the banished family any warmer supporter than that kind lady of Castlewood in whose house Esmond was brought up. She influenced her husband very much more perhaps than my lord knew, who admired his wife prodigiously though he might be inconstant to her, and who, advise to the trouble of thinking himself, gladly enough adopted the opinions which she chose for him. To one of her simple and faithful heart allegiance to any sovereign but the one was impossible. To serve King William for interest's sake would have been a monstrous hypocrisy and treason.
Her pure conscience could no more have consented to it than to a theft, a forgery, or any other base action. Lord Castle-wood might have been won over, no doubt, but his wife never could, and he submitted his conscience to hers in this case, as he did in most others when he was not tempted too sorely.
And it was from his affection and gratitude most likely, and from that eager devotion for his mistress which characterized all Esmond's youth, that the young man subscribed to this and other articles of faith which his fond benefactress set him. Had she been a Whig, he had been one; had she followed Mr. Fox and turned Quaker, no doubt he would have abjured ruffles and a periwig, and have forswned swords, lace coats, and clocked stockings. In the scholars' boyish disputes at the university, where parties ran very high, Esmond was noted as a Jacobite, and very likely from vanity as much as affection took the side of his family.

Almost the whole of the clergy of the country and more than a half of the nation were on his side. Ours is the most loyal people in the world surely; we admire our kings and are faithful to them long after they have ceased to be true to us.
'Tis a wonder to anyone who looks back at the history of the Stuart family to think how they kicked their crowns away from them; how they flung away chances after chances; what treasures of loyalty they dissipated, and how fatally they were bent on consummating their own ruin. If ever men had fidelity 'twas they; if ever men squandered opportunity 'twasthey; and of all the enemies they had, they themselves were the most fatal.*

When the Princess Anne succeeded the weary nation was glad enough to cry a truce from all these wars, controversies, and conspiracies, and to accept in the person of a princess of the blood royal a compromise between the parties into which the country was divided. The Tories could serve under her with easy consciences; though a Tory herself, she represented

* ὁ πόπος, οἷον ὅς ὁ νεόνυμος ἐστι καὶ ἱεράς, αὐτὸς ἐστίν ἐπὶ τὰ πάντα.
ἀνεξαντλήτως ἐπὶ τὸν πάντα ἐπιστήθης.
the triumph of the Whig opinion. The people of England, always liking that their princes should be attached to their own families, were pleased to think the princess was faithful to hers; and up to the very last day and hour of her reign, and but for that fatality which he inherited from his fathers along with their claims to the English crown, King James III. might have worn it. But he neither knew how to wait an opportunity nor to use it when he had it; but he was venturesome when he ought to have been cautious, and cautious when he ought to have dared everything. 'Tis with a sort of rage at his inaptitude that one thinks of his melancholy story. Do the Fates deal more specially with kings than with common men? One is apt to imagine so, in considering the history of that royal race, in whose behalf so much fidelity, so much valor, so much blood, were desperately and bootlessly expended.

The king dead then, the Princess Anne (ugly Anne Hyde's daughter, our dowager at Chelsey called her) was proclaimed by trumpeting heralds all over the town from Westminster to Ludgate Hill, amid immense jubilations of the people.

Next week my Lord Marlborough was promoted to the Garter, and to be captain general of her Majesty's forces at home and abroad. This appointment only inflamed the dowager's rage, or, as she thought it, her fidelity to her rightful sovereign. 'The princess is but a puppet in the hands of that fury of a woman, who comes into my drawing room and insults me to my face. What can come to a country that is given over to such a woman?' says the dowager. 'As for that double-faced traitor, my Lord Marlborough, he has betrayed every man and every woman with whom he has had to deal, except his horrid wife, who makes him tremble. 'Tis all over with the country when it has got into the clutches of such wretches as these.'

Esmond's old kinswoman saluted the new powers in this way; but some good fortune at last occurred to a family which stood in great need of it, by the advancement of these famous personages, who benefited humbler people that had the luck of being in their favor. Before Mr. Esmond left England in the month of August, and being then at Portsmouth, where he had joined his regiment, and was busy at drill, learning the practice and mysteries of the musket and pike, he heard that a pension in the stamp office had been got for his late beloved mistress, and that the young Mistress Beatrix was also to be taken into Court. So much good, at least, had come of the poor widow's visit to London, not revenge upon her husband's enemies, but reconciliation to old friends who pitied and seemed inclined to serve her. As for the comrades in prison and the late misfortune, Colonel Westbury was with the captain general gone to Holland; Captain Macartney was now at Portsmouth with his regiment of Fusileers, and the force under command of his Grace the Duke of Ormond, bound for Spain it was said; my Lord Warwick was returned home; and Lord Mohun, so far from being punished for the homicide which had brought so much grief and change into the Esmond family, was gone in company of my Lord Macclesfield's splendid embassy to the Elector of Hanover, carrying the Garter to his Highness, and a complimentary letter from the queen.

CHAPTER IV.

RECAPITULATIONS.

From such fitful lights as could be cast upon his dark history by the broken narrative of his poor patron, torn by remorse and struggling in the last pangs of dissolution, Mr. Esmond had been made to understand so far that his mother was long since dead; and so there could be no question as regarded her or her honor, tarnished by her husband's desertion and injury, to influence her son in any steps which he might take either for prosecuting or relinquishing his own just claims. It appeared from my poor lord's hurried confession that he had been made acquainted with the real facts of the case only two years since, when Mr. Holt visited him, and would have implicated him in one of those many conspiracies by which the secret leaders of King James' party in this country were ever endeavoring to destroy the Prince of Orange's life or power—conspiracies so like murder, so cowardly in the means used, so wicked in the end, that our nation has sure done well in throwing off all allegiance and fidelity to the unhappy family that could not vindicate its right except by such treachery—by such dark intrigue and base agents. There were designs against King William that were no more honorable than the ambushes of cut-throats and footpads. 'Tis humiliating to think that a great prince, possessor of a great and sacred right, and upholder of a great cause, should have stooped to such baseness of assassination and treasons as are proved by the unfortunate King James' own warrant and sign manual given to his supporters in this country. What he and they called levying war was, in truth, no better than instigating murder. The noble Prince of Orange burst magnanimously through these feeble meshes of conspiracy in which his enemies tried to envelop him; it seemed as if their cowardly daggers broke upon the breast of his undaunted resolution. After King James' death, the queen and her people at St. Germains—priests and women for the most part—continued their intrigues in behalf of the young prince, James III., as he was called in France and by his party here (this prince, or Chevalier de St. George, was born in the same year with Esmond's young pupil Frank, my Lord Viscoun't's son); and the prince's affairs being in the hands of priests and women, were conducted as priests and women will conduct them, artfully, cruelly, feebly, and to a certain bad issue. The moral of the Jesuit's story I think as wholesome a one as ever was writ: the artfulest, the wisest, the most toilsome and dexterous plot-builders in the world—there always comes a day when the roused public indignation kicks their flimsy edifice down, and sends its cowardly enemies a-flying. Mr. Swift hath finely described that passion for intrigue, that love of secrecy, slander, and lying, which belongs to weak people, hangers-on of weak Courts. 'Tis the nature of such to hate and envy the strong and conspire their ruin; and the conspiracy succeeds very well, and everything presages the satisfactory overthow of the great victim, until one day Gulliver rouses himself, shakes off the little vermin of an enemy, and walks away unmolested. Ah! the Irish soldiers might well say after the Boyne: 'Change kings with us, and we will fight it over again.' Indeed the fight was not fair between the two. 'Twas a weak, priest-ridden, woman-ridden man, with such puny allies and weapons as his own poor nature led him to choose, contending against the schemes, the generalship, the wisdom, and the heart of a hero.

On one of these many coward's errands then (for, as I view them now, I can call them no less), Mr. Holt had come to my lord at Castlewood, proposing some infallible plan for the Prince of Orange's destruction, in which my Lord Viscount, loyalist as he was, had indignantly refused to join. As far as Mr. Esmond could gather from his dying words, Holt came to my lord with a plan of insurrection and offer of the renewal, in his person, of that marquis' title which King James had conferred on the preceding viscount; and on refusal of this bribe a threat was made, on Holt's part, to upset my Lord Viscount's claim to his estate and title of Castlewood altogether. To back this astounding piece of intelligence, of which Henry Esmond's patron now had the first light, Holt came armed with the late lord's dying declaration, after the affair of the Boyne, at Trim, in Ireland, made both to the Irish priest and a French ecclesiastic of Holt's order that was with King James' army. Holt showed, or pretended to show, the marriage certificate of the late Viscount Esmond with my mother, in the city of Brussels, in the year 1677, when the viscount, then Thomas Esmond, was serving with the English army in Flanders; he could show, he said, that this Gertrude, deserted by her husband long since, was alive and a professed nun in the year 1685, at Brussels, in which year Thomas Esmond married his uncle's daughter Isabella, now called Viscountess Dowager of Castlewood; and leaving him for twelve hours to consider this astounding news, so the poor dying lord said, disappeared with the papers in the mysterious way in which he came. Esmond knew how, well enough; by that window from which he had seen the father issue; but there was no need to explain to my poor lord; only to gather from his parting lips the words which he would soon be able to utter no more.

Ere the twelve hours were over Holt himself was a prisoner, implicated in Sir John Fenwick's conspiracy, and locked up at Hexton first, whence he was transferred to the Tower, leaving the poor Lord Viscount, who was not aware of the others being taken, in daily apprehension of his return, when (as my Lord Castlewood declared, calling God to witness and with tears in his dying eyes) it had been his intention at once to give up his estate and his title to their proper owner, and to retire to his own house at Walcote with his family. 'And would to God I had done it,' the poor lord said. 'I would not be here now, wounded to death, a miserable, stricken man!'

My lord waited day after day, and, as may be supposed, no messenger came; but at a month's end Holt got means to convey to him a message out of the Tower which was to this effect: that he should consider all unsaid that had been said, and that things were as they were.

'I had a sore temptation,' said my poor lord. 'Since I had come into this cursed title of Castlewood, which hath never prospered with me, I have spent far more than the income of that estate, and my paternal one, too. I calculated all my means down to the last shilling, and found I never could pay you back, my poor Harry, whose fortune I had had for twelve years. My wife and children must have gone out of the house dishonored, and beggars. God knows, it hath been a miserable one for me and mine. Like a coward, I clung to that respite which Holt gave me. I kept the truth from Rachel and you. I tried to win money of Mohun, and only plunged deeper into debt; I scarce dared look thee in the face when I saw thee.
This sword hath been hanging over my head these two years, I swear I felt happy when Mohun's blade entered my side.'

After lying ten months in the Tower, Holt, against whom nothing could be found except that he was a Jesuit priest, known to be in King James' interest, was put on shipboard by the incorrigible forgiveness of King William, who promised him, however, a hanging if ever he should again set foot on English shore. More than once, while he was in prison himself, Esmond had thought where those papers could be, which the Jesuit had shown to his patron, and which had such an interest for himself. They were not found on Mr. Holt's person when that father was apprehended, for had such been the case my lords of the council had seen them, and this family history had long since been made public. However, Esmond cared not to seek the papers. His resolution being taken, his poor mother dead, what matter to him that documents existed proving his right to a title which he was determined not to claim, and of which he vowed never to deprive that family which he loved best in the world? Perhaps he took a greater pride out of his sacrifice than he would have had in those honors which he was resolved to forego. Again, as long as these titles were not forthcoming, Esmond's kinsman, dear young Francis, was the honorable and undisputed owner of the Castlewood estate and title. The mere word of a Jesuit could not overset Frank's right of occupancy, and so Esmond's mind felt actually at ease to think the papers were missing, and in their absence his dear mistress and her son the lawful lady and lord of Castlewood.

Very soon after his liberation Mr. Esmond made it his business to ride to that village of Ealing where he had passed his earliest years in this country, and to see if his old guardians were still alive and inhabitants of that place. But the only relic which he found of old M. Pastoureau was a stone in the churchyard, which told that Athanasius Pastoureau, a native of Flanders, lay there buried, aged eighty-seven years. The old man's cottage, which Esmond perfectly recollected, and the garden (where in his childhood he had passed many hours of play and reverie, and had many a beating from his termagant of a foster mother), were now in the occupation of quite a different family; and it was with difficulty that he could learn in the village what had become of Pastoureau's widow and children. The clerk of the parish recollected her—the old man was scarce altered in the fourteen years that had passed since last Esmond set eyes on him. It appeared she had pretty soon consoled herself after the death of her old husband, whom she ruled over, by taking a new one younger than herself, who spent her money and ill-treated her and her children. The girl died; one of the boys 'listed; the other had gone apprentice. Old Mr. Rogers, the clerk, said he had heard that Mrs. Paste- toureau was dead too. She and her husband had left Ealing this seven year; and so Mr. Esmond's hopes of gaining any information regarding his parentage from this family were brought to an end. He gave the old clerk a crown piece for his news, smiling to think of the time when he and his little playfellows had slunk out of the churchyard, or hidden behind the gravestones, at the approach of this awful authority.

Who was his mother? What had her name been? When did she die? Esmond longed to find someone who could answer these questions to him, and thought even of putting them to his aunt the viscountess, who had innocently taken the name which belonged of right to Harry's mother. But she knew nothing, or chose to know nothing on this subject, nor, indeed, could Mr. Esmond press her to speak much on it. Father Holt was the only man who could enlighten him, and Esmond felt he must wait until some fresh chance or new intrigue might put him face to face with his old friend, or bring that restless, indefatigable spirit back to England again.

The appointment to his ensigncy, and the preparations necessary for the campaign, presently gave the young gentleman other matters to think of. His new patroness treated him very kindly and liberally; she promised to make interest, and pay money, too, to get him a company speedily; she bade him procure a handsome outfit, both of clothes and of arms, and was pleased to admire him when he made his first appearance in his laced scarlet coat, and to permit him to salute her on the occasion of this interesting investure. 'Red,' says she, tossing up her old head, 'hath always been the color worn by the Esmonds.' And so her ladyship wore it on her own cheeks very faithfully to the last. She would have him be dressed, she said, as became his father's son, and paid cheerfully for his five-pound beaver, his black buckled periwig, and his fine holland shirts, and his swords, and his pistols, mounted with silver. Since the day he was born poor Harry had never looked such a fine gentleman: his liberal stepmother filled his purse with guineas, too, some of which Captain Steele and a few choice spirits helped Harry to spend in an entertainment which Dick ordered (and, indeed, would have paid for, but that he had no money when the reckoning was called for, nor would the landlord give him any more credit) at the Garter, over against the gate of the palace, in Pall Mall.

The old viscountess, indeed, if she had done Esmond any wrong formerly, seemed inclined to repair it by the present kindness of her behavior; she embraced him copiously at parting, wept plentifully, bade him write by every packet, and gave him an inestimable relic, which she besought him to wear round his neck—a medal, blessed by I know not what Pope, and worn by his late sacred Majesty King James. So Esmond arrived at his regiment with a better equipage than most young officers could afford. He was older than most of his seniors, and had a further advantage which belonged but to very few of the army gentlemen of his day—many of whom could do little more than write their names—that he had read much, both at home and at the university, was master of two or three languages, and had that further education which neither books nor years will give, but which some men get from the silent teaching of adversity. She is a great schoolmistress, as many a poor fellow knows that hath held his hand out to her ferrule and whimpered over his lesson before her awful chair.

CHAPTER V.

I GO ON THE VIGO BAY EXPEDITION, TASTE SALT WATER, AND SMELL POWDER.

The first expedition in which Mr. Esmond had the honor to be engaged rather resembled one of the invasions projected by the redoubted Captain Avery or Captain Kid than a war between crowned heads, carried on by generals of rank and honor. On the 1st day of July, 1602, a great fleet of a hundred and fifty sail set sail from Spithead, under the command of Admiral Shovell, having on board twelve thousand troops, with his Grace the Duke of Ormond as the captain general of the expedition. One of these twelve thousand heroes having never been to sea before, or, at least, only once in his infancy, when he made the voyage to England from that unknown country where he was born—one of these twelve thousand—the junior ensign of Colonel Quin's regiment of Fusileers—was in a quite unheroic state of corporal prostration a few hours after sailing, and an enemy, had he boarded the ship, would have had easy work of him. From Portsmouth we put into Plymouth, and took in fresh re-enforcements. We were off Finisterre on the 31st of July, so Esmond's table-book informs him; and on the 8th of August made the rock of Lisbon. By this time the ensign was grown as bold as an admiral, and a week afterward had the fortune to be under fire for the first time—and under water too—his boat being swamped in the surf in Toros Bay, where the troops landed. The ducking of his new coat was all the harm the young soldier got in this expedition, for, indeed, the Spaniards made no stand before our troops, and were not in strength to do so.

But the campaign, if not very glorious, was very pleasant. New sights of nature, by sea and land—a life of action beginning now for the first time—occupied and excited the young man. The many accidents and the routine of shipboard—the military duty—the new acquaintances, both of his comrades in arms and of the officers of the fleet—served to cheer and occupy his mind, and waken it out of that selfish depression into which his late unhappy fortunes had plunged him. He felt as if the ocean separated him from his past care, and welcomed the new era of life which was dawning for him. Wounds heal rapidly in a heart of two-and-twenty; hopes revive daily, and courage rallies in spite of a man. Perhaps, as Esmond thought of his late despondency and melancholy, and how irretrievable it had seemed to him, as he lay in his prison a few months back, he was almost mortified in his secret mind at finding himself so cheerful.

To see with one’s own eyes men and countries is better than reading all the books of travel in the world; and it was with extreme delight and exultation that the young man found himself actually on his grand tour and in the view of people and cities which he had read about as a boy. He beheld war for the first time—the pride, pomp, and circumstance of it, at least, if not much of the danger. He saw actually and with his own eyes those Spanish cavaliers and ladies whom he had beheld in imagination in that immortal story of Cervantes, which had been the delight of his youthful leisure. 'Tis forty years since Mr. Esmond visited those scenes, but they remain as fresh in his memory as on the day when first he saw them as a young man. A cloud as of grief that had lowered over him and had wrapped the last years of his life in gloom, seemed to clear away from Esmond during this fortunate voyage and campaign. His energies seemed to awaken and to expand under a cheerful sense of freedom. Was his heart secretly glad to have escaped from that fond but ignoble bondage at home? Was it that the inferiority to which the idea of his base birth had compelled him vanished with the knowledge of that secret which, though perforce kept to himself, was yet enough to cheer and console him? At any rate, young Esmond of the army was quite a different being to the sad little dependent of the kind Castlewood household and the melancholy student of TrinityWalks, discontented with his fate and with the vocation into which that drove him, and thinking with a secret indignation that the cassock and bands and the very sacred office with which he had once proposed to invest himself were, in fact, but marks of a servitude which was to continue all his life long. For disguise it as he might to himself, he had all along felt that to be Castlewood’s chaplain was to be Castlewood’s inferior still, and that his life was but to be a long, hopeless servitude. So, indeed, he was far from grudging his old friend Tom Tusher’s good fortune (as Tom no doubt thought it). Had it been a miter and Lambeth which his friends offered him, and not a small living and a country parsonage, he would have felt as much a slave in one case as in the other, and was quite happy and thankful to be free. The bravest man I ever knew in the army, and who had been present in King William’s actions as well as in the campaigns of the great Duke of Marlborough, could never be got to tell us of any achievement of his, except that once Prince Eugene ordered him up a tree to reconnoiter the enemy, which feat he could not achieve on account of the horseman’s boots he wore; and on another day that he was very nearly taken prisoner because of these jack-boots, which prevented him from running away. The present narrator shall imitate this laudable reserve, and doth not intend to dwell upon his military exploits, which were in truth not very different from those of a thousand other gentlemen. This first campaign of Mr. Esmond’s lasted but a few days; and as a score of books have been written concerning it, it may be dismissed very briefly here.

When our fleet came within view of Cadiz, our commander sent a boat with a white flag and a couple of officers to the Governor of Cadiz, Don Scipio de Brancaccio, with a letter from his Grace, in which he hoped that as Don Scipio had formerly served with the Austrians against the French, ‘twas to be hoped that his Excellency would now declare himself against the French king, and for the Austrian in the war between King Philip and King Charles. But his Excellency, Don Scipio, prepared a reply in which he announced that, having served his former king with honor and fidelity, he hoped to exhibit the same loyalty and devotion toward his present sovereign, King Philip V.; and by the time this letter was read, the two officers had been taken to see the town, and the alameda, and the theater, where bullfights are fought, and the convents, where the admirable works of Don Bartholomew Murillo inspired one of them with a great wonder and delight such as he had never felt before concerning this divine art of painting; and these sights over, and a handsome refection and chocolate being served to the English gentlemen, they were accompanied back to their shallop with every courtesy, and were the only two officers of the English army that saw at that time that famous city.

The general tried the power of another proclamation on the Spaniards, in which he announced that we only came in the interest of Spain and King Charles, and for ourselves wanted to make no conquest nor settlement in Spain at all. But all this eloquence was lost upon the Spaniards, it would seem; the Captain General of Andalusia would no more listen to us than the Governor of Cadiz; and in reply to his Grace's proclamation, the Marquis of Villadarias fired off another, which those who knew the Spanish thought rather the best of the two; and of this number was Harry Esmond, whose kind Jesuit in old days had instructed him, and now had the honor of translating for his Grace these harmless documents of war. There was a hard touch for his Grace, and indeed for other generals in her Majesty's service, in the concluding sentence of the don, 'That he and his council had the generous example of their ancestors to follow, who had never yet sought their elevation in the blood or in the flight of their kings. "Mori pro patria" was his device, which the duke might communicate to the princess who governed England.'

Whether the troops were angry at this repartee or no, 'tis certain something put them in a fury; for, not being able to get possession of Cadiz, our people seized upon Port St. Mary's and sacked it, burning down the merchants' storehouses, getting drunk with the famous wines there, pillaging and robbing quiet houses and convents, murdering and doing worse. And the only blood which Mr. Esmond drew in this shameful campaign was the knocking down an English sentinel with a half pike, who was offering insult to a poor trembling nun. Is she going to turn out a beauty? or a princess? or perhaps Esmond's mother that he had lost and never seen? Alas no, it was but a poor wheezy old dropsical woman, with a wart upon her nose. But having been early taught a part of the Roman religion, he never had the horror of it that some Protestants have shown, and seem to think to be a part of ours.

After the pillage and plunder of St. Mary's, and an assault upon a fort or two, the troops all took shipping, and finished their expedition, at any rate, more brilliantly than it had begun. Hearing that the French fleet with a great treasure was in Vigo Bay, our admirals, Rooke and Hopson, pursued the enemy thither; the troops landed and carried the forts that protected the bay, Hopson passing the boom first on board his ship the Torbay, and the rest of the ships, English and Dutch, following him. Twenty ships were burned or taken in the Port of Redondilla, and a vast deal more plunder than was ever accounted for; but poor men before that expedition were rich afterward; and so often was it found and remarked that the Vigo officers came home with pockets full of money that the notorious Jack Shafto, who made such a figure at the coffee-houses and gaming tables in London, and gave out that he had been a soldier at Vigo, owned, when he was about to be hanged, that Bagshot Heath had been his Vigo, and that he only spoke of La Redondilla to turn away people’s eyes from the real place where the booty lay. Indeed, Hounslow or Vigo—which matters much! The latter was a bad business, though Mr. Addison did sing its praises in Latin. That honest gentleman’s muse had an eye to the main chance; and I doubt whether she saw much inspiration in the losing side.

But though Esmond, for his part, got no share of this fabulous booty, one great prize which he had out of the campaign was that excitement of action and change of scene, which shook off a great deal of his previous melancholy. He learnt at any rate to bear his fate cheerfully. He brought back a browned face, a heart resolute enough, and a little pleasant store of knowledge and observation, from that expedition, which was over with the autumn, when the troops were back in England again; and Esmond, giving up his post of secretary to General Lumley, whose command was over, and parting with that officer with many kind expressions of good will on the general’s side, had leave to go to London, to see if he could push his fortunes in any way further, and found himself once more in his dowager aunt’s comfortable quarters at Chelsey, and in greater favor than ever with the old lady. He propitiated her with a present of a comb, a fan, and a black mantle, such as the ladies of Cadiz wear, and which my Lady Viscountess pronounced became her style of beauty mightily. And she was greatly edified at hearing of that story of his rescue of the nun, and felt very little doubt but that her King James’ relic, which he had always dutifully worn in his desk, had kept him out of danger, and averted the shot of the enemy. My lady made feasts for him, introduced him to more company, and pushed his fortunes with such enthusiasm and success that she got a promise of a company for him through the Lady Marlborough's interest, who was graciously pleased to accept of a diamond worth a couple of hundred guineas, which Mr. Esmond was enabled to present to her ladyship through his aunt's bounty, and who promised that she would take charge of Esmond's fortune. He had the honor to make his appearance at the queen's drawing room occasionally, and to frequent my Lord Marlborough's levees. That great man received the young one with very special favor, so Esmond's comrades said, and deigned to say that he had received the best reports of Mr. Esmond, both for courage and ability, whereon you may be sure the young gentleman made a profound bow, and expressed himself eager to serve under the most distinguished captain in the world.

While his business was going on thus prosperously, Esmond had his share of pleasure too, and made his appearance along with other young gentlemen at the coffeehouses, the theaters, and the Mall. He longed to hear of his dear mistress and her family; many a time, in the midst of the gayeties and pleasures of the town, his heart fondly reverted to them; and often as the young fellows of his society were making merry at the tavern, and calling toasts (as the fashion of that day was) over their wine, Esmond thought of persons—of two fair women, whom he had been used to adore almost, and emptied his glass with a sigh.

By this time the elder viscountess had grown tired again of the younger, and whenever she spoke of my lord's widow 'twas in terms by no means complimentary toward that poor lady; the younger woman not needing her protection any longer, the elder abused her. Most of the family quarrels that I have seen in life (saving those always arising from money disputes, when a division of twopence halfpenny will often drive the dearest relatives into war and estrangement) spring out of jealousy and envy. Jack and Tom, born of the same family and to the same fortune, live very cordially together, not until Jack is ruined, when Tom deserts him, but until Tom makes a sudden rise in prosperity, which Jack can't forgive. Ten times to one 'tis the unprosperous man that is angry, not the other who is in fault. 'Tis Mrs. Jack, who can only afford a chair, that sickens at Mrs. Tom's new coach and six, cries out against her sister's airs, and sets her husband against his brother. 'Tis Jack who sees his brother shaking hands with a lord (with whom Jack would like to exchange snuffboxes himself), and goes home and tells his wife how poor Tom is spoiled, he fears, and no better than a sneak, parasite, and beggar on horseback. I remember how furious the coffeehouse wits were with Dick Steele when he set up his coach and fine house in Bloomsbury; they began to forgive him when the bailiffs were after him, and abused Mr. Addison for selling Dick's country house. And yet Dick in the sponging house, or Dick in the Park, with his four mares and plated harness, was exactly the same gentle, kindly, improvident, jovial Dick Steele; and yet Mr. Addison was perfectly right in getting the money which was his, and not giving up the amount of his just claim, to be spent by Dick upon champagne and fiddlers, laced clothes, fine furniture, and parasites, Jew and Christian, male and female, who clung to him. As, according to the famous maxim of M. de Rochefoucault, 'in our friends' misfortunes there's something secretly pleasant to us,' so, on the other hand, their good fortune is disagreeable. If 'tis hard for a man to bear his own good luck 'tis harder still for his friends to bear it for him; and but few of them ordinarily can stand that trial; whereas one of the 'precious uses' of adversity is that it is a great reconciler; that it brings back averted kindness, disarms animosity, and causes yesterday's enemy to fling his hatred aside, and hold out a hand to the fallen friend of old days. There's pity and love, as well as envy, in the same heart and toward the same person. The rivalry stops when the competitor tumbles; and as I view it, we should look at these agreeable and disagreeable qualities of our humanity humbly alike. They are consequent and natural, and our kindness and meanness both manly.

So you may either read the sentence, that the elder of Esmond's two kinswomen pardoned the younger her beauty when that had lost somewhat of its freshness perhaps, and forgot most her grievances against the other when the subject of them was no longer prosperous and enviable; or we may say more benevolently (but the sum comes to the same figures, worked either way) that Isabella repented of her unkindness toward Rachel, when Rachel was unhappy; and, bestirring herself in behalf of the poor widow and her children, gave them shelter and friendship. The ladies were quite good friends as long as the weaker one needed a protector. Before Esmond went away on his first campaign his mistress was still on terms of friendship (though a poor little chit, a woman that had evidently no spirit in her, etc.) with the elder Lady Castlewood; and Mistress Beatrix was allowed to be a beauty.
But between the first year of Queen Anne’s reign and the second sad changes for the worse had taken place in the two younger ladies, at least in the elder’s description of them. Rachel, Viscountess Castlewood, had no more face than a dumpling, and Mrs. Beatrix was grown quite coarse, and was losing all her beauty. Little Lord Blandford (she never would call him Lord Blandford; his father was Lord Churchill—the king, whom he betrayed, had made him Lord Churchill, and he was Lord Churchill still) might be making eyes at her; but his mother, that vixen of a Sarah Jennings, would never hear of such a folly. Lady Marlborough had got her to be the maid of honor at court to the princess, but she would repent of it. The widow Francis (she was but Mrs. Francis Esmond) was a scheming, artful, heartless hussy. She was spoiling her brat of a boy, and she would end by marrying her chaplain.

‘What, Tusher?’ cried Mr. Esmond, feeling a strange pang of rage and astonishment.

‘Yes—Tusher, my maid’s son; and who has got all the qualities of his father the lackey in black, and his accomplished mamma the waiting woman,’ cries my lady. ‘What do you suppose that a sentimental widow, who will live down in that dingy dungeon of a Castlewood, where she spoils her boy, kills the poor with her drugs, has prayers twice a day and sees nobody but the chaplain—what do you suppose she can do, mon cousin, but let the horrid parson, with his great square toes and hideous little green eyes, make love to her? Cela c’est vu, mon cousin. When I was a girl at Castlewood all the chaplains fell in love with me—they’ve nothing else to do.’

My lady went on with more talk of this kind, though, in truth, Esmond had no idea of what she said further, so entirely did her first words occupy his thought. Were they true? Not all, nor half, nor tenth part of what the garrulous old woman said was true. Could this be so? No ear had Esmond for anything else, though his patroness chatted on for an hour.

Some young gentlemen of the town, with whom Esmond had made acquaintance, had promised to present him to that most charming of actresses and lively and agreeable of women Mrs. Bracegirdle, about whom Harry’s old adversary Mohun had drawn swords a few years before my poor lord and he fell out. The famous Mr. Congreve had stamped with high approval, to the which there was no gainsaying, this delightful person; and she was acting in Dick Steele’s comedies, and finally, and for twenty-four hours after beholding her, Mr. Esmond felt himself, or thought himself, to be as violently enamored of this lovely brunette as were a thousand other young fellows about the city. To have once seen her was to long to behold her again; and to be offered the delightful privilege of her acquaintance was a pleasure the very idea of which set the young lieutenant's heart on fire. A man cannot live with comrades under the tents without finding out that he too is five-and-twenty. A young fellow cannot be cast down by grief and misfortune ever so severe but some nights he begins to sleep sound, and some day when dinner time comes to feel hungry for a beefsteak. Time, youth, and good health, new scenes and the excitement of action and a campaign, had pretty well brought Esmond's mourning to an end; and his comrades said that Don Dismal, as they called him, was Don Dismal no more. So when a party was made to dine at the Rose, and go to the playhouse afterward, Esmond was as pleased as another to take his share of the bottle and the play.

How was it that the old aunt's news, or it might be scandal, about Tom Tusher, caused such a strange and sudden excitement in Tom's old playfellow? Hadn't he sworn a thousand times in his own mind that the Lady of Castlewood, who had treated him with such kindness once, and then had left him so cruelly, was, and was to remain henceforth, indifferent to him forever? Had his pride and his sense of justice not long since helped him to cure the pain of that desertion—was it even a pain to him now? Why, but last night as he walked across the fields and meadows to Chelsey from Pall Mall, had he not composed two or three stanzas of a song, celebrating Bracegirdle's brown eyes, and declaring them a thousand times more beautiful than the brightest blue ones that ever languished under the lashes of an insipid fair beauty! But Tom Tusher! Tom Tusher, the waiting woman's son, raising up his little eyes to his mistress? Tom Tusher presuming to think of Castlewood's widow. Rage and contempt filled Mr. Harry's heart at the very notion; the honor of the family, of which he was the chief, made it his duty to prevent so monstrous an alliance, and to chastise the upstart who could dare to think of such an insult to their house. 'Tis true Mr. Esmond often boasted of republican principles, and could remember many fine speeches he had made at college and elsewhere, with worth and not birth for a text; but Tom Tusher to take the place of the noble Castlewood—faugh! 'twas as monstrous as King Hamlet's widow taking off her weeds for Claudius. Esmond laughed at all widows, all wives, all women; and were the banns about to be published, as no doubt they were, that very next Sunday at Walcote Church, Esmond swore that he would be present to shout No! in the face of the congregation, and to take a private revenge upon the ears of the bridegroom.

Instead of going to dinner then at the Rose that night, Mr. Esmond bade his servant pack a portmanteau and get horses, and was at Farnham, halfway on the road to Walcote, thirty miles off, before his comrades had got to their supper after the play. He bade his man give no hint to my Lady Dowager's household of the expedition on which he was going; and as Chelsey was distant from London, the roads bad, and infested by footpads, and Esmond often in the habit, when engaged in a party of pleasure, of lying at a friend's lodging in town, there was no need that his old aunt should be disturbed at his absence—indeed, nothing more delighted the old lady than to fancy that mon cousin, the incorrigible young sinner, was abroad boxing the watch or scouring St. Giles'. When she was not at her books of devotion, she thought Etheridge and Sedley very good reading. She had a hundred pretty stories about Rochester, Henry Jermyn, and Hamilton; and if Esmond would but have run away with the wife even of a citizen, 'tis my belief she would have pawned her diamonds (the best of them went to our Lady of Chaillot) to pay his damages.

My lord's little house of Walcote—which he inhabited before he took his title and occupied the house at Castlewood—lies about a mile from Winchester, and his widow had returned to Walcote after my lord's death as a place always dear to her, and where her earliest and happiest days had been spent, cheerfuller than Castlewood, which was too large for her straitened means, and giving her, too, the protection of the ex-dean, her father. The young viscount had a year's schooling at the famous college there, with Mr. Tusher as his governor. So much news of them Mr. Esmond had had during the past year from the old viscountess, his own father's widow; from the young one there had never been a word.

Twice or thrice in his benefactor's lifetime Esmond had been to Walcote; and now, taking but a couple of hours' rest only at the inn on the road, he was up again long before daybreak, and made such good speed that he was at Walcote by two o'clock of the day. He rid to the end of the village, where he alighted and sent a man thence to Mr. Tusher, with a message that a gentleman from London would speak with him on urgent business. The messenger came back to say the doctor was in town, most likely at prayers in the cathedral. My Lady Viscountess was there too; she always went to cathedral prayers every day.
The horses belonged to the posthouse at Winchester. Esmond mounted again and rode on to the George; whence he walked, leaving his grumbling domestic at last happy with a dinner, straight to the cathedral. The organ was playing, the winter's day was already growing gray, as he passed under the street arch into the cathedral yard, and made his way into the ancient solemn edifice.

CHAPTER VI.
THE 29TH DECEMBER.

There was scarce a score of persons in the cathedral besides the dean and some of his clergy, and the choristers, young and old, that performed the beautiful evening prayer. But Dr. Tusher was one of the officiants, and read from the eagle in an authoritative voice, and a great black periwig; and in the stalls, still in her black widow's hood, sat Esmond's dear mistress, her son by her side, very much grown, and indeed a noble-looking youth, with his mother's eyes, and his father's curling brown hair, that fell over his point de Venise—a pretty picture such as Vandyke might have painted. M. Rigaud's portrait of my Lord Viscount, done at Paris, afterward, gives but a French version of his manly, frank English face. When he looked up there where two sapphire beams out of his eyes such as no painter's palette has the color to match, I think. On this day there was not much chance of seeing that particular beauty of my young lord's countenance; for the truth is he kept his eyes shut for the most part, and, the anthem being rather long, was asleep.

But the music ceasing, my lord woke up, looking about him, and his eyes lighting on Mr. Esmond, who was sitting opposite him, gazing with no small tenderness and melancholy upon two persons who had so much of his heart for so many years, Lord Castlewood, with a start, pulled at his mother's sleeve (her face had scarcely been lifted from her book), and said, 'Look, mother!' so loud that Esmond could hear on the other side of the church, and the old dean on his throned stall. Lady Castlewood looked for an instant as her son bade her, and held up a warning finger to Frank; Esmond felt his whole face flush, and his heart throbbing, as that dear lady beheld him once more. The rest of the prayers were speedily over; Mr. Esmond did not hear them; nor did his mistress, very likely, whose hood went more closely over her face, and who never lifted her head again until the service was over, the blessing given, and Mr. Dean, and his procession of ecclesiastics, out of the inner chapel.

Young Castlewood came clambering over the stalls before the clergy were fairly gone, and running up to Esmond, eagerly embraced him. "My dear, dearest old Harry!" he said, "are you come back? Have you been to the wars? You'll take me with you when you go again! Why didn't you write to us? Come to mother."

Mr. Esmond could hardly say more than a "God bless you, my boy," for his heart was very full and grateful at all this tenderness on the lad's part; and he was as much moved at seeing Frank as he was fearful about that other interview which was now to take place: for he knew not if the widow would reject him as she had done so cruelly a year ago.

"It was kind of you to come back to us, Henry," Lady Esmond said. "I thought you might come."

"We read of the fleet coming to Portsmouth. Why did you not come from Portsmouth?" Frank asked, or my Lord Viscount, as he now must be called.

Esmond had thought of that too. He would have given one of his eyes so that he might see his dear friends again once more; but believing that his mistress had forbidden him her house, he had obeyed her, and remained at a distance.

"You had but to ask and you knew I would be here," he said.

She gave him her hand, her little fair hand; there was only her marriage ring on it. The quarrel was all over. The year of grief and estrangement was passed. They never had been separated. His mistress never had been out of his mind all that time. No, not once. No, not in the prison; nor in the camp; nor on shore before the enemy; nor at sea under the stars of solemn midnight; nor as he watched the glorious rising of the dawn; nor even at the table, where he sat carousing with friends, or at the theater yonder, where he tried to fancy that other eyes were brighter than hers. Brighter eyes there might be, and faces more beautiful, but none so dear—no voice so sweet as that of his beloved mistress, who had been sister, mother, goddess to him during his youth—goddess now no more, for he knew of her weakness; and by thought, by suffering, and that experience it brings, was older now than she; but more fondly cherished as woman perhaps than ever she had been adored as divinity. What is it? Where lies it, the secret which makes one little hand the dearest of all? Whoever can unriddle that mystery? Here she was, her son by his side, his dear boy. Here she was, weeping and happy.
She took his hand in both hers; he felt her tears. It was a rupture of reconciliation.

‘Here comes Squaretoes,’ says Frank. ‘Here’s Tusher.’
Tusher, indeed, now appeared, creaking on his great heels.
Mr. Tom had divested himself of his alb or surplice, and came forward habited in his cassock and great black periwig. How had Esmond ever been for a moment jealous of this fellow?

‘Give us thy hand, Tom Tusher,’ he said. The chaplain made him a very low and stately bow. ‘I am charmed to see Captain Esmond,’ says he. ‘My lord and I have read the Reddas incolunem precor, and applied it, I am sure, to you.
You come back with Gaditanning laurels; when I heard you were bound thither I wished, I am sure, I was another Septimnius. My Lord Viscount, your lordship remembers Septimi, Gades aditure mecum?’

‘There’s an angle of earth that I love better than Gades, Tusher,’ says Mr. Esmond. ‘’Tis that one where your reverence hath a parsonage, and where our youth was brought up.’

‘A house that has so many sacred recollections to me,’ says Mr. Tusher (and Harry remembered how Tom’s father used to flog him there)—a house near to that of my respected patron, my most honored patroness, must ever be a dear abode to me. But, madam, the verger waits to close the gates on your ladyship.’

‘And Harry’s coming home to supper. Huzzay! huzzay!’
cries my lord. ‘Mother, I shall run home and bid Beatrix put her ribbons on. Beatrix is a maid of honor, Harry. Such a fine set-up minx!’

‘Your heart was never in the Church, Harry,’ the widow said, in her sweet, low tone, as they walked away together.
(Now it seemed they had never been parted, and again as if they had been ages asunder.) ‘I always thought you had no vocation that way; and that ’twas a pity to shut you out from the world. You would but have pined and chafed at Castle-wood: and ’tis better you should make a name for yourself.
I often said so to my dear lord. How he loved you! ’Twas my lord that made you stay with us.’

‘I asked no better than to stay near you always,’ said Mr.
Esmond.

‘But to go was best, Harry. When the world cannot give peace, you will know where to find it; but one of your strong imagination and eager desires must try the world first before he tires of it. ’Twas not to be thought of, or if it once was, it was only by my selfishness, that you should remain as chaplain to a country gentleman and tutor to a little boy. You are of the blood of the Esmonds, kinsman; and that was always wild in youth. Look at Francis. He is but fifteen, and I scarce can keep him in my nest. His talk is all of war and pleasure, and he longs to serve in the next campaign. Perhaps he and the young Lord Churchill shall go the next. Lord Marlborough has been good to us. You know how kind they were in my misfortune. And so was your—your father's widow. No one knows how good the world is till grief comes to try us. 'Tis through my Lady Marlborough's goodness that Beatrix hath her place at Court; and Frank is under my Lord Chamberlain. And the dowager lady, your father's widow, has promised to provide for you—has she not?'

Esmond said, 'Yes. As far as present favor went, Lady Castlewood was very good to him. And should her mind change,' he added gayly, 'as ladies' minds will, I am strong enough to bear my own burden, and make my way somehow.
Not by the sword very likely. Thousands have a better genius for that than I, but there are many ways in which a young man of good parts and education can get on in the world; and I am pretty sure, one way or other, of promotion!' Indeed, he had found patrons already in the army, and among persons very able to serve him too; and told his mistress of the flattering aspect of fortune. They walked as though they had never been parted, slowly, with the gray twilight closing round them.

'And now we are drawing near to home,' she continued,
'I knew you would come, Harry, if—if it was but to forgive me for having spoken unjustly to you after that horrid—horrid misfortune. I was half frantic with grief then when I saw you. And I know now—they have told me. That wretch, whose name I can never mention, even has said it: how you tried to avert the quarrel, and would have taken it on yourself, my poor child; but it was God's will that I should be punished, and that my dear lord should fall.'

'He gave me his blessing on his deathbed,' Esmond said.
'Thank God for that legacy.'

'Amen, amen! dear Henry,' said the lady, pressing his arm.
'I knew it. Mr. Atterbury of St. Bride's, who was called to him, told me so. And I thanked God, too, and in my prayers ever since remembered it.'

'You had spared me many a bitter night had you told me sooner,' Mr. Esmond said.

'I know it, I know it,' she answered in a tone of such sweet humility as made Esmond repent that he should ever have dared to reproach her. 'I know how wicked my heart has been; and I have suffered too, my dear. I confessed to Mr. Atterbury—I must not tell any more. He—I said I would not write to you or go to you—and it was better even that, having parted, we should part. But I knew you would come back—I own that. That is no one's fault. And to-day, Henry, in the anthem, when they sang it, "When the Lord turned the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream," I thought, yes, like them that dream—them that dream. And then it went, "They that sow in tears shall reap in joy; and he that goeth forth and weepeth shall doubtless come home again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." I looked up from the book, and saw you. I was not surprised when I saw you. I knew you would come, my dear, and saw the gold sunshine round your head.'

She smiled an almost wild smile as she looked up at him. The moon was up by this time, glittering keen in the frosty sky. He could see, for the first time now clearly, her sweet careworn face.

'Do you know what day it is?' she continued. 'It is the 29th of December; it is your birthday! But last year we did not drink it—no, no. My lord was cold, and my Harry was likely to die; and my brain was in a fever; and we had no wine. But now, now you are come again, bringing your sheaves with you, my dear.' She burst into a wild flood of weeping as she spoke; she laughed and sobbed on the young man's heart, crying out wildly, 'bringing your sheaves with you—your sheaves with you!'

As he had sometimes felt, gazing up from the deck at midnight into the boundless starlit depths overhead, in a rapture of devout wonder at that endless brightness and beauty—in some such a way now, the depth of this pure devotion (which was for the first time revealed to him) quite smote upon him, and filled his heart with thanksgiving. Gracious God, who was he, weak and friendless creature, that such a love should be poured out upon him? Not in vain—not in vain has he lived—hard and thankless should he be to think so—that has such a treasure given him. What is ambition compared to that, but selfish vanity? To be rich, to be famous? What do these profit a year hence, when other names sound louder than yours, when you lie hidden away under the ground, along with idle titles engraven on your coffin? But only true love lives after you, follows your memory with secret blessing; or precedes you, and intercedes for you. Non omnis moriar; if, dying, I yet live in a tender heart or two; nor am lost and hopeless living, if a sainted departed soul still loves and prays for me.

‘If—’tis so, dear lady,’ Mr. Esmond said, ‘why should I ever leave you? If God hath given me this great boon—and near or far from me, as I know now, the heart of my dearest mistress follows me—let me have that blessing near me, nor ever part with it till death separates us. Come away; leave this Europe, this place which has so many sad recollections for you. Begin a new life in a new world. My good lord often talked of visiting that land in Virginia which King Charles gave us—gave his ancestor. Frank will give us that. No man there will ask if there is a blot on my name, or inquire in the woods what my title is.’

‘And my children—and my duty—and my good father, Henry?’ she broke out. ‘He has none but me now! for soon my sister will leave him, and the old man will be alone. He has conformed since the new queen’s reign; and here in Winchester, where they love him, they have found a church for him. When the children leave me, I will stay with him. I cannot follow them into the great world, where their way lies; it scares me. They will come and visit me; and you will, sometimes, Henry; yes, sometimes, as now, in the Holy Advent season, when I have seen and blessed you once more.’

‘I would leave all to follow you,’ said Mr. Esmond; ‘and can you not be as generous for me, dear lady?’

‘Hush, boy!’ she said, and it was with a mother’s sweet plaintive tone and look that she spoke. ‘The world is beginning for you. For me, I have been so weak and sinful that I must leave it, and pray out an expiation, dear Henry. Had we houses of religion as there were once, and many divines of our Church would have them again, I often think I would retire to one and pass my life in penance. But I would love you still; yes, there is no sin in such a love as mine now; and my dear lord in heaven may see my heart; and knows the tears that have washed my sin away—and now—now my duty is here, by my children while they need me, and by my poor old father, and—’

‘And not by me?’ Henry said.

‘Hush!’ she said again, and raised her hand up to his lips. ‘I have been your nurse. You could not see me, Harry, when you were in the smallpox, and I came and sat by you. Ah! I prayed that I might die, but it would have been in sin, Henry. Oh, it is horrid to look back to that time. It is over now and past, and it has been forgiven me. When you need me again,
I will come ever so far. When your heart is wounded, then come to me, my dear. Be silent! let me say all. You never loved me, dear Henry; no, you do not now, and I thank Heaven for it. I used to watch you, and knew by a thousand signs that it was so. Do you remember how glad you were to go away to college? 'Twas I sent you. I told my papa that, and Mr. Atterbury too, when I spoke to them in London. And they both gave me absolution, both—and they are godly men, having authority to bind and to loose. And they forgave me, as my dear lord forgave me before he went to heaven.'

'I think the angels are not all in heaven,' Mr. Esmond said. And as a brother folds a sister to his heart, and as a mother cleaves to her son's breast—so for a few moments Esmond's beloved mistress came to him and blessed him.

CHAPTER VII.

I AM MADE WELCOME AT WALCOTE.

As they came up to the house at Walcote, the windows from within were lighted up with friendly welcome; the supper table was spread in the oak parlor; it seemed as if forgiveness and love were awaiting the returning prodigal. Two or three familiar faces of domestics were on the lookout at the porch—the old housekeeper was there, and young Lockwood from Castlewood in my lord's livery of tawny and blue. His dear mistress pressed his arm as they passed into the hall. Her eyes beamed out on him with affection indescribable. 'Welcome,' was all she said, as she looked up, putting back her fair curls and black hood. A sweet rosy smile blushed on her face; Harry thought he had never seen her look so charming. Her face was lighted with a joy that was brighter than beauty; she took a hand of her son who was in the hall waiting his mother—she did not quit Esmond's arm.

'Welcome, Harry!' my young lord echoed after her. 'Here we are all come to say so. Here's old Pincot; hasn't she grown handsome?' and Pincot, who was older, and no handsomer than usual, made a courtesy to the captain, as she called Esmond, and told my lord to 'Have done, now.'

'And here's Jack Lockwood. He'll make a famous grenadier, Jack; and so shall I; we'll both 'list under you, cousin. As soon as I am seventeen, I go to the army—every gentleman goes to the army. Look! who comes here; ho, ho!' he burst into a laugh. 'Tis Mistress 'Trix, with a new ribbon; I knew she would put one on as soon as she heard a captain was coming to supper.'
This laughing colloquy took place in the hall of Walcote House, in the midst of which is a staircase that leads from an open gallery, where are the doors of the sleeping chambers; and from one of these, a wax candle in her hand, and illuminating her, came Mistress Beatrix—the light falling indeed upon the scarlet ribbon which she wore, and upon the most brilliant white neck in the world.

Esmond had left a child and found a woman, grown beyond the common height, and arrived at such a dazzling completeness of beauty that his eyes might well show surprise and delight at beholding her. In hers there was a brightness so lustrous and melting that I have seen a whole assembly follow her as if by an attraction irresistible; and that night the great duke was at the playhouse after Ramillies, every soul turned and looked (she chanced to enter at the opposite side of the theater at the same moment) at her, and not at him. She was a brown beauty, that is, her eyes, hair, and eyebrows and eyelashes were dark, her hair curling with rich undulations and waving over her shoulders, but her complexion was as dazzling white as snow in sunshine, except her cheeks, which were a bright red, and her lips, which were of a still deeper crimson. Her mouth and chin, they said, were too large and full, and so they might be for a goddess in marble, but not for a woman whose eyes were fire, whose look was love, whose voice was the sweetest low song, whose shape was perfect symmetry, health, decision, activity, whose foot as it planted itself on the ground was firm but flexible, and whose motion, whether rapid or slow, was always perfect grace—agile as a nymph, lofty as a queen—now melting, now imperious, now sarcastic—there was no single movement of hers but was beautiful. As he thinks of her, he who writes feels young again and remembers a paragon.

So she came holding her dress with one fair rounded arm, and her taper before her, tripping down the stair to greet Esmond.

'She hath put on her scarlet stockings and white shoes,' says my lord, still laughing. 'Oh, my fine mistress! is this the way you set your cap at the captain?' She approached, shining smiles upon Esmond, who could look at nothing but her eyes. She advanced, holding forward her head, as if she would have him kiss her as he used to do when she was a child.

'Stop,' she said, 'I am grown too big! Welcome, Cousin Harry,' and she made him an arch courtesy, sweeping down to the ground almost with the most gracious bend, looking up the while with the brightest eyes and sweetest smile. Love seemed to radiate from her. Harry eyed her with such a rapture as the first lover is described as having by Milton.

'N'est-ce pas?' says my lady, in a low, sweet voice, still hanging on his arm.

Esmond turned round with a start and a blush, as he met his mistress' clear eyes. He had forgotten her, rapt in admiration of the filia pulcrior.

'Right foot forward, toe turned out, so; now drop the courtesy and show the red stockings,' Trix. 'They're silver clocks, Harry. The dowager sent 'em. She went to put 'em on,' cries my lord.

'Hush, you stupid child!' says miss, smothering her brother with kisses; and then she must come and kiss her mamma, looking all the while at Harry over his mistress' shoulder. And if she did not kiss him, she gave him both her hands and said, 'O Harry, we're so, so glad you're come!'

'There are woodcocks for supper,' says my lord. 'Huzzay! It was such a hungry sermon.'

'And it is the 29th of December, and our Harry has come home.'

'Huzzay, old Pincot!' again says my lord; and my dear lady's lips looked as if they were trembling with prayer. She would have Harry lead in Beatrix to the supper room, going herself with my young Lord Viscount, and to this party came Tom Tusher directly, whom four at least out of the company of five wished away. Away he went, however, as soon as the sweetmeats were put down, and then, by the great crackling fire, his mistress or Beatrix, with her blushing glances, filling his glass for him, Harry told the story of his campaign and passed the most delightful night his life had ever known. The sun was up long ere he was, so deep, sweet, and refreshing was his slumber. He woke as if angels had been watching at his bed all night. I dare say one that was as pure and loving as an angel had blessed his sleep with her prayers.

Next morning the chaplain read prayers to the little household at Walcote, as the custom was; Esmond thought Mistress Beatrix did not listen to Tusher's exhortation much; her eyes were wandering everywhere during the service, at least whenever he looked up he met them. Perhaps he also was not very attentive to his reverence the chaplain. 'This might have been my life,' he was thinking; 'this might have been my duty from now till old age. Well, were it not a pleasant one to be with these dear friends and part from 'em no more? Until—until the destined lover comes and takes away pretty Beatrix'— and the best part of Tom Tusher's exposition, which may have been very learned and eloquent, was quite lost to poor Harry by this vision of the destined lover, who put the preacher out.

All the while of the prayers Beatrix knelt a little way before Harry Esmond. The red stockings were changed for a pair of gray, and black shoes in which her feet looked to the full as pretty. All the roses of spring could not vie with the brightness of her complexion; Esmond thought he had never seen anything like the sunny luster of her eyes. My Lady Viscountess looked fatigued as if with watching, and her face was pale.

Miss Beatrix remarked these signs of indisposition in her mother and deplored them. 'I am an old woman,' says my lady with a kind smile; 'I cannot hope to look as young as you do, my dear.'

'She'll never look as good as you do if she lives till she's a hundred,' says my lord, taking his mother by the waist and kissing her hand.

'Do I look very wicked, cousin?' says Beatrix, turning full round on Esmond, with her pretty face so close under his chin that the soft perfumed hair touched it. She laid her finger tips on his sleeve as she spoke, and he put his other hand over hers.

'I'm like your looking-glass,' says she, 'and that can't flatter you.'

'He means that you are always looking at him, my dear,' says her mother archly. Beatrix ran away from Esmond at this, and flew to her mamma, whom she kissed, stopping my lady's mouth with her pretty hand.

'And Harry is very good to look at,' says my lady, with her fond eyes regarding the young man.

'If 'tis good to see a happy face,' says he, 'you see that.' My lady said 'Amen' with a sigh, and Harry thought the memory of her dear lord rose up and rebuked her back again into sadness, for her face lost the smile and resumed its look of melancholy.

'Why, Harry, how fine we look in our scarlet-and-silver and our black periwig,' cries my lord. 'Mother, I am tired of my own hair. When shall I have a periwig? Where did you get your steenkirk, Harry?'

'It's some of my lady dowager's lace,' says Harry; 'she gave me this and a number of other fine things.'

'My lady dowager isn't such a bad woman,' my lord continued.

'She's not so—so red as she's painted,' says Miss Beatrix. Her brother broke into a laugh. 'I'll tell her you said so; by the Lord, 'Trix, I will,' he cries out.
She'll know that you hadn't the wit to say it, my lord,' says Miss Beatrix.

'We won't quarrel the first day Harry's here, will we, mother?' said the young lord. 'We'll see if we can get on to the new year without a fight. Have some of this Christmas pie. And here comes the tankard; no, it's Pincot with the tea.'

'Will the captain choose a dish?' asked Mistress Beatrix.

'I say, Harry,' my lord goes on, 'I'll show thee my horses after breakfast, and we'll go a-bird-netting to-night, and on Monday there's a cock match at Winchester—do you love cock fighting, Harry?—between the gentlemen of Sussex and the gentlemen of Hampshire, at £10 the battle and £50 the odd battle, to show one-and-twenty cocks.'

'And what will you do, Beatrix, to amuse our kinsman?' asks my lady.

'I'll listen to him,' says Beatrix. 'I am sure he has a hundred things to tell us. And I'm jealous already of the Spanish ladies. Was that a beautiful nun at Cadiz that you rescued from the soldiers? Your man talked of it last night in the kitchen, and Mrs. Betty told me this morning as she combed my hair. And he says you must be in love, for you sat on deck all night and scribbled verses all day in your table-book.' Harry thought if he had wanted a subject for verses yesterday, to-day he had found one; and not all the Lindamiras and Ardélías of the poets were half so beautiful as this young creature; but he did not say so, though someone did for him.

This was his dear lady, who, after the meal was over and the young people were gone, began talking of her children with Mr. Esmond, and of the characters of one and the other, and of her hopes and fears for both of them. 'Tis not while they are at home,' she said, 'and in their mother's nest I fear for them—tis when they are gone into the world, whither I shall not be able to follow them. Beatrix will begin her service next year. You may have heard a rumor about—about my Lord Blandford. They were both children, and it is but idle talk. I know my kinswoman would never let him make such a poor marriage as our Beatrix would be. There's scarce a princess in Europe that she thinks is good enough for him or for her ambition.'

'There's not a princess in Europe to compare with her,' says Esmond.

'In beauty? No, perhaps not,' answered my lady. 'She is most beautiful, isn't she? 'Tis not a mother's partiality that deceives me. I marked you yesterday when she came down the stair, and read it in your face. We look when you don’t fancy us looking, and see better than you think, dear Harry; and just now, when they spoke about your poems—you writ pretty lines when you were but a boy—you thought Beatrix was a pretty subject for verse, did not you, Harry?’ (The gentleman could only blush for a reply.) ‘And so she is—nor are you the first her pretty face has captivated. ’Tis quickly done. Such a pair of bright eyes as hers learn their power very soon, and use it very early.’ And, looking at him keenly with hers, the fair widow left him.

And so it is—a pair of bright eyes with a dozen glances suffice to subdue a man; to enslave him and inflame him; to make him even forget; they dazzle him so that the past becomes straightway dim to him; and he so prizes them that he would give all his life to possess ’em. What is the fond love of dearest friends compared to this treasure? Is memory as strong as expectancy? fruition as hunger? gratitude as desire? I have looked at royal diamonds in the jewel rooms in Europe, and thought how wars have been made about ’em, Mogul sovereigns deposed and strangled for them, or ransomed with them; millions expended to buy them; and daring lives lost in digging out the little shining toys that I value no more than the button in my hat. And so there are other glittering baubles (of rare water too) for which men have been set to kill and quarrel ever since mankind began, and which last but for a score of years, when their sparkle is over. Where are those jewels now that beamed under Cleopatra’s forehead, or shone in the sockets of Helen?

The second day after Esmond’s coming to Walcote, Tom Tusher had leave to take a holiday, and went off in his very best gown and bands to court the young woman whom his reverence desired to marry, and who was not a viscount’s widow, as it turned out, but a brewer’s relict at Southampton, with a couple of thousand pounds to her fortune; for honest Tom’s heart was under such excellent control that Venus herself without a portion would never have caused it to flutter. So he rode away on his heavy-paced gelding to pursue his jog-trot loves, leaving Esmond to the society of his dear mistress and her daughter, and with his young lord for a companion, who was charmed not only to see an old friend, but to have the tutor and his Latin books put out of the way.

The boy talked of things and people, and not a little about himself in his frank, artless way. ’Twas easy to see that he and his sister had the better of their fond mother, for the first place in whose affections though they fought constantly, and though the kind lady persisted that she loved both equally, 'twas not difficult to understand that Frank was his mother's darling and favorite. He ruled the whole household (always excepting rebellious Beatrix) not less now than when he was a child marshaling the village boys in playing at soldiers, and caning them lustily too, like the sturdiest corporal. As for Tom Tusher, his reverence treated the young lord with that politeness and deference which he always showed for a great man, whatever his age or his stature was. Indeed, with respect to this young one, it was impossible not to love him, so frank and winning were his manners, his beauty, his gayety, the ring of his laughter, and the delightful tone of his voice. Wherever he went he charmed and domineered. I think his old grandfather the dean, and the grim old housekeeper Mrs. Pincot, were as much his slaves as his mother was; and as for Esmond, he found himself presently submitting to a certain fascination the boy had, and slaving it like the rest of the family. The pleasure which he had in Frank's mere company and converse exceeded that which he ever enjoyed in the society of any other man, however delightful in talk or famous for wit. His presence brought sunshine into a room, his laugh, his prattle, his noble beauty and brightness of look cheered and charmed indescribably. At the least tale of sorrow his hands were in his purse, and he was eager with sympathy and bounty. The way in which women loved and petted him, when a year or two afterward he came upon the world, yet a mere boy, and the follies which they did for him (as indeed he for them), recalled the career of Rochester, and outdid the successes of Grammont. His very creditors loved him, and the hardest usurers, and some of the rigid prudes of the other sex too, could deny him nothing. He was no more witty than another man, but what he said he said and looked as no man else could say or look it. I have seen the women at the comedy at Bruxelles crowd round him in the lobby; and as he sat on the stage more people looked at him than at the actors, and watched him; and I remember at Ramillies, when he was hit and fell, a great big red-haired Scotch sergeant flung his halbert down, burst out a-crying like a woman, seizing him up as if he had been an infant, and carrying him out of the fire. This brother and sister were the most beautiful couple ever seen, though, after he winged away from the maternal nest, this pair were seldom together.

Sitting at dinner two days after Esmond's arrival—it was the last day of the year, and so happy a one to Harry Esmond that to enjoy it was quite worth all the previous pain which he had endured and forgot—my young lord, filling a bumper, and bidding Harry take another, drank to his sister, saluting her under the title of 'Marchioness.'

'Marchioness!' says Harry, not without a pang of wonder, for he was curious and jealous already.

'Nonsense, my lord,' says Beatrix, with a toss of her head. My Lady Viscountess looked up for a moment at Esmond, and cast her eyes down.

'The Marchioness of Blandford,' says Frank. 'Don't you know—hath not Rouge Dragon told you?' (My lord used to call the Dowager of Chelsey by this and other names.)

'Blandford has a lock of her hair; the duchess found him on his knees to Mistress 'Trix, and boxed his ears, and said Dr. Hare should whip him.'

'I wish Mr. Tusher would whip you too,' said Beatrix.

My lady only said: 'I hope you will tell none of these silly stories elsewhere than at home, Francis.'

'Tis true, on my word,' continues Frank; 'look at Harry scowling, mother, and see how Beatrix blushes as red as the silver-clocked stockings.'

'I think we had best leave the gentlemen to their wine and their talk,' says Mistress Beatrix, rising up with the air of a young queen, tossing her rustling, flowing draperies about her, and quitting the room, followed by her mother.

Lady Castlewood again looked at Esmond, as she stooped down and kissed Frank. 'Do not tell those silly stories, child,' she said; 'do not drink much wine, sir. Harry never loved to drink wine.' And she went away, too, in her black robes, looking back on the young man with her fair, fond face.

'Egad! it's true,' says Frank, sipping his wine with the air of a lord. 'What think you of this Lisbon—real Collares? 'Tis better than your heady port; we got it out of one of the Spanish ships that came from Vigo last year; my mother bought it at Southampton as the ship was lying there—the Rose, Captain Hawkins.'

'Why, I came home in that ship,' said Harry.

'And it brought home a good fellow and good wine,' says my lord. 'Say, Harry, I wish thou hadst not that cursed barsinister.'

'And why not the bar sinister?' asks the other.

'Suppose I go to the army and am killed—every gentleman goes to the army—who is to take care of the women? 'Trix will never stop at home; mother's in love with you—yes, I think mother's in love with you. She was always praising you, and always talking about you; and when she went to Southampton, to see the ship, I found her out. But you see it is impossible: we are of the oldest blood in England; we came in with the Conqueror; we were only baronets—but what then? we were forced into that. James I. forced our great grandfather. We are above titles; we old English gentry don't want 'em; the queen can make a duke any day. Look at Blandford's father, Duke Churchill, and Duchess Jennings; what were they, Harry? Damn it, sir, what are they to turn up their noses at us? Where were they when our ancestor rode with King Henry at Agincourt, and filled up the French king's cup after Poictiers? 'Fore George, sir, why shouldn't Blandford marry Beatrix? By God! he shall marry Beatrix or tell me the reason why. We'll marry with the best blood of England, and none but the best blood of England. You are an Esmond, and you can't help your birth, my boy. Let's have another bottle. What! no more? I've drunk three parts of this myself. I had many a night with my father; you stood to him like a man, Harry. 'You backed your blood; you can't help your misfortune, you know; no man can help that.'

The elder said he would go in to his mistress' tea table. The young lad, with a heightened color and voice, began singing a snatch of a song, and marched out of the room. Esmond heard him presently calling his dogs about him, and cheering and talking to them; and by a hundred of his looks and gestures, tricks of voice and gait, was reminded of the dead lord, Frank's father.

And so, the sylvester night passed away; the family parted long before midnight, Lady Castlewood remembering, no doubt, former New Year's Eves, when healths were drunk, and laughter went round in the company of him, to whom years, past and present and future, were to be as one; and so cared not to sit with her children and hear the cathedral bells ringing the birth of the year 1703. Esmond heard the chimes as he sat in his own chamber, ruminating by the blazing fire there, and listened to the last notes of them, looking out from his window toward the city, and the great gray towers of the cathedral lying under the frosty sky, with the keen stars shining above.

The sight of these brilliant orbs no doubt made him think of other luminaries. 'And so her eyes had already done execution,' thought Esmond—'on whom? who can tell me?' Luckily his kinsman was by, and Esmond knew he would have no difficulty in finding out Mistress Beatrix' history from the simple talk of the boy.
CHAPTER VIII.

FAMILY TALK.

What Harry admired and submitted to in the pretty lad his kinsman was (for why should he resist it?) the calmness of patronage which my young lord assumed, as if to command was his undoubted right, and all the world (below his degree) ought to bow down to Viscount Castlewood.

'I know my place, Harry,' he said. 'I'm not proud; the boys at Winchester College say I'm proud, but I'm not proud. I am simply Francis James, Viscount Castlewood in the peerage of Ireland. I might have been (do you know what?) Francis James, Marquis and Earl of Esmond in that of England. The late lord refused the title which was offered to him by my godfather, his late Majesty. You should know that—you are of our family, you know; you cannot help your bar sinister, Harry, my dear fellow; and you belong to one of the best families in England, in spite of that; and you stood by my father, and, by G—! I'll stand by you. You shall never want a friend, Harry, while Francis James, Viscount Castlewood, has a shilling. It's now 1703; I shall come of age in 1709. I shall go back to Castlewood; I shall live at Castlewood; I shall build up the house. My property will be pretty well restored by then. The late viscount mismanaged my property and left it in a very bad state. My mother is living close, as you see, and keeps me in a way hardly befitting a peer of these realms, for I have but a pair of horses, a governor, and a man that is valet and groom. But when I am of age, these things will be set right, Harry. Our house will be as it should be. You will always come to Castlewood, won't you? You shall always have your two rooms in the court kept for you, and if anybody slight you, d— them! let them have a care of me. I shall marry early. 'Trix will be a duchess by that time, most likely, for a cannon-ball may knock over his Grace any day, you know.'

'How?' says Harry.

'Hush, my dear!' says my Lord Viscount. 'You are of the family—you are faithful to us, by George, and I tell you everything. Blandford will marry her—or?—and here he put his little hand on his sword—'you understand the rest. Blandford knows which of us two is the best weapon. At small-sword, or back-sword, or sword and dagger if he likes, I can beat him. I have tried him, Harry, and begad he knows I am a man not to be trifled with.'

'But you do not mean,' says Harry, concealing his laughter, but not his wonder, 'that you can force my Lord Blandford, the son of the first man of this kingdom, to marry your sister at sword's point?'

'I mean to say that we are cousins by the mother's side, though that's nothing to boast of. I mean to say that an Esmond is as good as a Churchill, and when the king comes back, the Marquis of Esmond's sister may be a match for any nobleman's daughter in the kingdom. There are but two marquises in all England, William Herbert, Marquis of Powis, and Francis James, Marquis of Esmond; and hark you, Harry—now swear you will never mention this. Give me your honor as a gentleman, for you are a gentleman, though you are a——'

'Well, well?' says Harry, a little impatient.

'Well, then, when after my late viscount's misfortune, my mother went up with us to London, to ask for justice against you all (as for Mohun, I'll have his blood, as sure as my name is Francis, Viscount Esmond)—we went to stay with our cousin my Lady Marlborough, with whom we had quarreled for ever so long. But when misfortune came, she stood by her blood!—so did the dowager viscountess stand by her blood—so did you. Well, sir, while my mother was petitioning the late Prince of Orange—for I will never call him king—and while you were in prison, we lived at my Lord Marlborough's house, who was only a little there, being away with the army in Holland. And then—I say, Harry, you won't tell, now?'

Harry again made a vow of secrecy.

'Well, there used to be all sorts of fun, you know; my Lady Marlborough was very fond of us, and she said I was to be her page; and she got 'Trix to be a maid of honor, and while she was up in her room crying, we used to be always having fun, you know; and the duchess used to kiss me, and so did her daughters, and Blandford fell tremendous in love with 'Trix, and she liked him; and one day he—he kissed her behind a door—he did though—and the duchess caught him, and she banged such a box of the ear both at 'Trix and Blandford—you should have seen it! And then she said that we must leave directly, and abused my mamma who was cognizant of the business; but she wasn't—never thinking about anything but father. And so we came down to Walcote, Blandford being locked up, and not allowed to see 'Trix. But I got at him. I climbed along the gutter, and in through the window, where he was crying.

"Marquis," says I, when he had opened it and helped me in, "you know I wear a sword," for I had brought it.
"Oh, viscount," says he; "oh, my dearest Frank!" and he threw himself into my arms and burst out a-crying. "I do love Mistress Beatrix so that I shall die if I don't have her."

"My dear Blandford," says I, "you are young to think of marrying;" for he was but fifteen, and a young fellow of that age can scarce do so, you know.

"But I'll wait twenty years, if she'll have me," says he. "I'll never marry—no, never, never, never marry anybody but her. No, not a princess, though they would have me do it ever so. If Beatrix will wait for me, her Blandford swears he will be faithful." And he wrote a paper (it wasn't spelled right, for he wrote "I'm ready to sine with my blode," which, you know, Harry, isn't the way of spelling it), and vowing that he would marry none other but the Honorable Mistress Gertrude Beatrix Esmond, only sister of his dearest friend Francis James, fourth Viscount Esmond. And so I gave him a locket of her hair.'

'A locket of her hair?' cries Esmond.

'Yes. 'Trix gave me one after the fight with the duchess that very day. I am sure I didn't want it; and so I gave it him, and we kissed at parting, and said—"Good-by, brother." And I got back through the gutter, and we set off home that very evening. And he went to King's College in Cambridge, and I'm going to Cambridge soon; and if he doesn't stand to his promise (for he's only wrote once)—he knows I wear a sword, Harry. Come along, and let's go see the cocking match at Winchester,'

'. . . But I say,' he added, laughing, after a pause, 'I don't think 'Trix will break her heart about him. La bless you! whenever she sees a man, she makes eyes at him; and young Sir Wilmot Crawley of Queen's Crawley, and Anthony Henley of Arlesford, were at swords drawn about her, at the Winchester Assembly, a month ago.'

That night Mr. Harry's sleep was by no means so pleasant or sweet as it had been on the first two evenings after his arrival at Walcote. 'So the bright eyes have been already shining on another,' thought he, 'and the pretty lips, or the cheeks at any rate, have begun the work which they were made for. Here's a girl not sixteen, and one young gentleman is already whimpering over a lock of her hair, and two country squires are ready to cut each other's throats that they may have the honor of a dance with her. What a fool am I to be dallying about this passion, and singeing my wings in this foolish flame. Wings!—why not say crutches? There is but eight years' difference between us, to be sure; but in life I am thirty years older. How could I ever hope to please such a sweet creature as that, with my rough ways and glum face? Say that I have merit ever so much, and won myself a name, could she ever listen to me? She must be my Lady Marchioness, and I remain a nameless bastard. Oh! my master, my master!' (Here he fell to thinking with a passionate grief of the vow which he had made to his poor dying lord.) 'Oh! my mistress, dearest and kindest, will you be contented with the sacrifice which the poor orphan makes for you, whom you love, and who so loves you?'

And then came a fiercer pang of temptation. 'A word from me,' Harry thought, 'a syllable of explanation, and all this might be changed; but no, I swore it over the dying bed of my benefactor. For the sake of him and his, for the sacred love and kindness of old days, I gave my promise to him, and may kind Heaven enable me to keep my vow!'

The next day, although Esmond gave no sign of what was going on in his mind, but strove to be more than ordinarily gay and cheerful when he met his friends at the morning meal, his dear mistress, whose clear eyes it seemed no emotion of his could escape, perceived that something troubled him, for she looked anxiously toward him more than once during the breakfast, and when he went up to his chamber afterward she presently followed him, and knocked at his door.

As she entered, no doubt the whole story was clear to her at once, for she found our young gentleman packing his valise, pursuant to the resolution which he had come to overnight of making a brisk retreat out of this temptation.

She closed the door very carefully behind her, and then leaned against it, very pale, her hands folded before her, looking at the young man, who was kneeling over his work of packing. 'Are you going so soon?' she said.

He rose up from his knees, blushing, perhaps, to be so discovered, in the very act, as it were, and took one of her fair little hands—it was that which had her marriage ring on—and kissed it.

'It is best that it should be so, dearest lady,' he said.

'I knew you were going, at breakfast. I—I thought you might stay. What has happened? Why can't you remain longer with us? What has Frank told you—you were talking together late last night?'

'I had but three days' leave from Chelsey,' Esmond said, as gayly as he could. 'My aunt—she lets me call her aunt—is my mistress now! I owe her my lieutenancy and my laced coat. She has taken me into high favor; and my new general is to dine at Chelsey to-morrow—General Lumley, madam—who has appointed me his aid-de-camp, and on whom I must have the honor of waiting. See, here is a letter from the dowager; the post brought it last night; and I would not speak of it, for fear of disturbing our last merry meeting.

My lady glanced at the letter, and put it down with a smile that was somewhat contemptuous. 'I have no need to read the letter,' says she (indeed 'twas as well she did not; for the Chelsey missive, in the poor dowager's usual French jargon, permitted him a longer holiday than he said. 'Je vous donne,' quoth her ladyship, 'oui jour, pour vous fatigay parfaitement de vos parens fatigans')—'I have no need to read the letter,' says she. 'What was it Frank told you last night?'

'He told me little I did not know,' Mr. Esmond answered. 'But I have thought of that little, and here's the result. I have no right to the name I bear, dear lady; and it is only by your sufferance that I am allowed to keep it. If I thought for an hour of what has perhaps crossed your mind too——'

'Yes, I did, Harry,' said she; 'I thought of it, and think of it. I would sooner call you my son than the greatest prince in Europe—yes, than the greatest prince. For who is there so good and so brave, and who would love her as you would? But there are reasons a mother can't tell.'

'I know them,' said Mr. Esmond, interrupting her with a smile. 'I know there's Sir Wilmot Crawley of Queen's Crawley, and Anthony Henley of the Grange, and my Lord Marquis of Blandford, that seems to be the favored suitor. You shall ask me to wear my Lady Marchioness' favors and to dance at her ladyship's wedding.'

'O Harry, Harry, it is none of these follies that frighten me' cried out Lady Castlewood. 'Lord Churchill is but a child; his outbreak about Beatrix was a mere boyish folly. His parents would rather see him buried than married to one below him in rank. And do you think that I would stoop to sue for a husband for Francis Esmond's daughter; or submit to have my girl smuggled into that proud family to cause a quarrel between son and parents, and to be treated only as an inferior? I would disdain such a meanness. Beatrix would scorn it. Ah, Henry! 'tis not with you the fault lies, 'tis with her. I know you both, and love you; need I be ashamed of that love now? No, never, never, and 'tis not you, dear Harry, that is unworthy. 'Tis for my poor Beatrix I tremble—whose headstrong will frightens me; whose jealous temper (they say I was jealous too, but, pray God, I am cured of that sin) and whose vanity no words or prayers of mine can cure—only suffering, only experience, and remorse afterward. O Henry! she will make no man happy who loves her. Go away, my son; leave her; love us always, and think kindly of us; and for me, my dear, you know that these walls contain all that I love in the world.'

In after life did Esmond find the words true which his fond mistress spoke from her sad heart? Warning he had; but I doubt others had warning before his time, and since; and he benefited by it as most men do.

My young Lord Viscount was exceeding sorry when he heard that Harry could not come to the cock match with him, and must go to London, but no doubt my lord consoled himself when the Hampshire cocks won the match; and he saw every one of the battles, and crowed properly over the conquered Sussex gentlemen.

As Esmond rode toward town his servant, coming up to him, informed him with a grin that Mistress Beatrix had brought out a new gown and blue stockings for that day's dinner, in which she intended to appear, and had flown into a rage and given her maid a slap on the face soon after she heard he was going away. Mistress Beatrix's woman, the fellow said, came down to the servants' hall crying, and with the mark of a blow still on her cheek; but Esmond peremptorily ordered him to fall back and be silent, and rode on with thoughts enough of his own to occupy him—some sad ones, some inexpressibly dear and pleasant.

His mistress, from whom he had been a year separated, was his dearest mistress again. The family from which he had been parted, and which he loved with the fondest devotion, was his family once more. If Beatrix's beauty shone upon him, it was with a friendly luster, and he could regard it with much such a delight as he brought away after seeing the beautiful pictures of the smiling Madonnas in the convent at Cadiz, when he was dispatched thither with a flag; and as for his mistress, 'twas difficult to say with what a feeling he regarded her. 'Twas happiness to have seen her, 'twas no great pang to part; a filial tenderness, a love that was at once respect and protection filled his mind as he thought of her; and near her or far from her, and from that day until now, and from now till death is past, and beyond it, he prays that sacred flame may ever burn.
CHAPTER IX.

I MAKE THE CAMPAIGN OF 1704.

Mr. Esmond rode up to London then, where, if the dowager had been angry at the abrupt leave of absence he took, she was mightily pleased at his speedy return.

He went immediately and paid his court to his new general, General Lumley, who received him graciously, having known his father, and also, he was pleased to say, having had the very best accounts of Mr. Esmond from the officer whose aid-de-camp he had been at Vigo. During this winter Mr. Esmond was gazetted to a lieutenancy in Brigadier Webb's regiment of Fusiliers, then with their colonel in Flanders; but being now attached to the suite of Mr. Lumley, Esmond did not join his own regiment until more than a year afterward, and after his return from the campaign of Blenheim, which was fought the next year. The campaign began very early, our troops marching out of their quarters before the winter was almost over, and investing the city of Bonn, on the Rhine, under the duke's command. His Grace joined the army in deep grief of mind, with crape on his sleeve, and his household in mourning; and the very same packet which brought the commander in chief over, brought letters to the forces which preceded him, and one from his dear mistress to Esmond, which interested him not a little.

The young Marquis of Blandford, his Grace's son, who had been entered in King's College in Cambridge (whither my Lord Viscount had also gone, to Trinity, with Mr. Tusher as his governor), had been seized with smallpox, and was dead at sixteen years of age, and so poor Frank's schemes for his sister's advancement were over, and that innocent childish passion nipped in the birth.

Esmond's mistress would have had him return, at least her letters hinted as much; but in the presence of the enemy this was impossible, and our young man took his humble share in the siege, which need not be described here, and had the good luck to escape without a wound of any sort, and to drink his general's health after the surrender. He was on constant military duty this year, and did not think of asking for a leave of absence, as one or two of his less fortunate friends did, who were cast away in that tremendous storm which happened toward the close of November, that 'which of late o'er pale Britannia past' (as Mr. Addison sang of it), and in which scores of our greatest ships and fifteen thousand of our seamen went down.
They said that our duke was quite heart-broken by the calamity which had befallen his family; but his enemies found that he could subdue them, as well as master his grief. Successful as had been this great general's operations in the past year, they were far enhanced by the splendor of his victory in the ensuing campaign. His Grace the Captain General went to England after Bonn, and our army fell back into Holland, where, in April, 1704, his Grace again found the troops, embarking from Harwich and landing at Maesland Sluys; thence his Grace came immediately to The Hague, where he received the foreign ministers, general officers, and other people of quality. The greatest honors were paid to his Grace everywhere—at The Hague, Utrecht, Ruremonde, and Maestricht; the civil authorities coming to meet his coaches; salvos of cannon saluting him, canopies of state being erected for him where he stopped, and feasts prepared for the numerous gentlemen following in his suite. His Grace reviewed the troops of the States General between Liège and Maestricht, and afterward the English forces, under the command of General Churchill, near Bois-le-Duc. Every preparation was made for a long march; and the army heard, with no small elation, that it was the commander in chief's intention to carry the war out of the Low Countries, and to march on the Mozelle. Before leaving our camp at Maestricht we heard that the French, under the Marshal Villeroy, were also bound toward the Mozelle.

Toward the end of May the army reached Coblentz, and next day his Grace and the generals accompanying him went to visit the Elector of Trèves at his castle of Ehrenbreitstein, the horse and dragoons passing the Rhine while the duke was entertained at a grand feast by the Elector. All as yet was novelty, festivity, and splendor—a brilliant march of a great and glorious army through a friendly country, and sure through some of the most beautiful scenes of nature which I ever witnessed.

The foot and artillery, following after the horse as quick as possible, crossed the Rhine under Ehrenbreitstein, and so to Castel, over against Mayntz, in which city his Grace, his generals, and his retinue were received at the landing place by the Elector's coaches, carried to his Highness' palace amid the thunder of cannon, and then once more magnificently entertained. Gidlingen, in Bavaria, was appointed as the general rendezvous of the army, and thither, by different routes, the whole forces of English, Dutch, Danes, and German auxiliaries took their way. The foot and artillery under General Churchill passed the Neckar at Heidelberg; and Esmond had an opportunity of seeing that city and palace, once so famous and beautiful (though shattered and battered by the French under Turenne in the late war), where his grandsire had served the beautiful and unfortunate Electress Palatine, the first King Charles' sister.

At Mindelsheim the famous Prince of Savoy came to visit our commander, all of us crowding eagerly to get a sight of that brilliant intrepid warrior; and our troops were drawn up in battalia before the prince, who was pleased to express his admiration of this noble English army. At length we came in sight of the enemy between Dillingen and Lawingen, the Brentz lying between the two armies. The Elector, judging that Donauwort would be the point of his Grace's attack, sent a strong detachment of his best troops to Count Darcos, who was posted at Schellenberg, near that place, where great intrenchments were thrown up and thousands of pioneers employed to strengthen the position.

On the 2d of July his Grace stormed the post, with what success on our part need scarce be told. His Grace advanced with six thousand foot, English and Dutch, thirty squadrons, and three regiments of Imperial Cuirassiers, the duke crossing the river at the head of the cavalry. Although our troops made the attack with unparalleled courage and fury—rushing up to the very guns of the enemy, and being slaughtered before their works—we were driven back many times, and should not have carried them, but that the Imperialists came up under the Prince of Baden, when the enemy could make no head against us; we pursued him into the trenches, making a terrible slaughter there, and into the very Danube, where a great part of his troops, following the example of their generals, Count Darcos and the Elector himself, tried to save themselves by swimming. Our army entered Donauwort, which the Bavarians evacuated, and where 'twas said the Elector proposed to have given us a warm reception by burning us in our beds; the cellars of the houses, when we took possession of them, being found stuffed with straw. But though the links were there the linkboys had run away. The townsmen saved their houses, and our general took possession of the enemy's ammunition in the arsenals, his stores and magazines. Five days afterward a great 'Te Deum,' was sung in Prince Lewis' army and a solemn day of thanksgiving held in our own; the Prince of Savoy's compliments coming to his Grace the Captain General during the day's religious ceremony, and concluding, as it were, with an Amen,
And now, having seen a great military march through a friendly country, the pompoms and festivities of more than one German Court, the severe struggle of a hotly contested battle, and the triumph of victory, Mr. Esmond beheld another part of military duty: our troops entering the enemy's territory, and putting all around them to fire and sword, burning farms, wasted fields, shrieking women, slaughtered sons and fathers, and drunken soldiery, cursing and carousing in the midst of tears, terror, and murder. Why does the stately Muse of History, that delights in describing the valor of heroes and the grandeur of conquest, leave out these scenes, so brutal, mean, and degrading, that yet form by far the greater part of the drama of war? You gentlemen of England, who live at home at ease and compliment yourselves in the songs of triumph with which our chieftains are bepraised, you pretty maidens that come tumbling down the stairs when the fife and drum call you, and huzza for the British Grenadiers—do you take account that these items go to make up the amount of triumph you admire, and form part of the duties of the heroes you fondle? Our chief, whom England and all Europe, saving only the Frenchmen, worshiped almost, had this of the godlike in him, that he was impassible before victory, before danger, before defeat. Before the greatest obstacle or the most trivial ceremony; before a hundred thousand men drawn in battalia, or a peasant slaughtered at the door of his burning hovel; before a carouse of drunken German lords, or a monarch's court or a cottage table, where his plans were laid, or an enemy's battery, vomiting flame and death and strewing corpses round about him; he was always cold, calm, resolute, like fate. He performed a treason or a court bow, he told a falsehood as black as Styx, as easily as he paid a compliment or spoke about the weather. He took a mistress and left her; he betrayed his benefactor and supported him, or would have murdered him, with the same calmness always, and having no more remorse than Clotho when she weaves the thread, or Lachesis when she cuts it. In the hour of battle I have heard the Prince of Savoy's officers say, the prince became possessed with a sort of warlike fury; his eyes lighted up; he rushed hither and thither, raging; he shrieked curses and encouragement, yelling and harking his bloody war dogs on, and himself always at the first of the hunt. Our duke was as calm at the mouth of the cannon as at the door of a drawing room. Perhaps he could not have been the great man he was, had he had a heart either for love or hatred, or pity or fear, or regret or remorse. He achieved the highest deed of daring, or deepest calculation of thought, as he performed the very meanest action of which a man is capable; told a lie or cheated a fond woman or robbed a poor beggar of a half-pu~ny, with a like awful serenity and equal capacity of the highest and lowest acts of our nature.
His qualities were pretty well known in the army, where there were parties of all politics, and of plenty of shrewdness and wit; but there existed such a perfect confidence in him, as the first captain of the world, and such a faith and admiration in his prodigious genius and fortune, that the very men whom he notoriously cheated of their pay, the chiefs whom he used and injured—for he used all men, great and small, that came near him, as his instruments alike, and took something of theirs, either some quality or some property; the blood of a soldier, it might be, or a jeweled hat or a hundred thousand crowns from a king, or a portion out of a starving sentinel's three farthings; or, when he was young, a kiss from a woman, and the gold chain off her neck, taking all he could from woman or man, and having, as I said, this of the godlike in him, that he could see a hero perish or a sparrow fall with the same amount of sympathy for either. Not that he had no tears; he could always order up this reserve at the proper moment to battle; he could draw upon tears or smiles alike, and whenever need was for using this cheap coin. He would creinge to a shoeblack, and he would flatter a minister or a monarch; be haughty, be humble, threaten, weep, grasp your hand, or stab you whenever he saw occasion—but yet those of the army who knew him best and had suffered most from him admired him most of all; and as he rode along the lines to battle, or galloped up in the nick of time to a battalion reeling from before the enemy's charge or shot, the fainting men and officers got new courage as they saw the splendid calm of his face, and felt that his will made them irresistible.
After the great victory of Blenheim the enthusiasm of the army for the duke, even of his bitterest personal enemies in it, amounted to a sort of rage—nay, the very officers who cursed him in their hearts were among the most frantic to cheer him. Who could refuse his meed of admiration to such a victory and such a victor? Not he who writes; a man may profess to be ever so much a philosopher, but he who fought on that day must feel a thrill of pride as he recalls it.
The French right was posted near to the village of Blenheim on the Danube, where the Marshal Tallard's quarters were; their line extending through, it may be a league and a half, before Lutzingen and up to a woody hill, round the base of which; and acting against the Prince of Savoy, were forty of his squadrons.

Here was a village that the Frenchmen had burned, the wood being, in fact, a better shelter and easier of guard than any village.

Before these two villages and the French lines ran a little stream not more than two feet broad, through a marsh (that was mostly dried up from the heats of the weather), and this stream was the only separation between the two armies—ours coming up and ranging themselves in line of battle before the French, at six o'clock in the morning; so that our line was quite visible to theirs; and the whole of this great plain was black and swarming with troops for hours before the cannonading begun.

On one side and the other this cannonading lasted many hours, the French guns being in position in front of their line, and doing severe damage among our horse especially, and on our right wing of Imperialists under the Prince of Savoy, who could neither advance his artillery nor his lines, the ground before him being cut up by ditches and morasses, and very difficult of passage for the guns.

It was past midday when the attack began on our left, where Lord Cutts commanded, the bravest and most beloved officer in the English army. And now, as if to make his experience in war complete, our young aid-de-camp having seen two great armies facing each other in line of battle, and had the honor of riding with orders from one end to other of the line, came in for a not uncommon accompaniment of military glory, and was knocked on the head, along with many hundred of brave fellows, almost at the very commencement of this famous day at Blenheim. A little after noon, the disposition for attack being completed with much delay and difficulty, and under a severe fire from the enemy's guns, that were better posted and more numerous than ours, a body of English and Hessians, with Major General Wilkes commanding at the extreme left of our line, marched upon Blenheim, advancing with great gallantry, the major general on foot, with his officers, at the head of the column, and marching with his hat off, intrepidly in the face of the enemy, who was pouring in a tremendous fire from his guns and musketry, to which our people were instructed not to reply except with pike and bayonet when they reached the French palisades. To these Wilkes walked intrepidly, and struck the woodwork with his sword before our people charged it. He was shot down at the instant, with his colonel, major, and several officers; and our troops, cheering and huzzaing, and coming on, as they did, with immense resolution and gallantry, were nevertheless stopped by the murderous fire from behind the enemy's defenses, and then attacked in flank by a furious charge of French horse, which swept out of Blenheim and cut down our men in great numbers. Three fierce and desperate assaults of our foot were made and repulsed by the enemy; so that our columns of foot were quite shattered, and fell back, scrambling over the little rivulet, which we had crossed so resolutely an hour before, and pursued by the French cavalry, slaughtering us and cutting us down.

And now the conquerors were met by a furious charge of English horse under Esmond's general, General Lumley, behind whose squadrons the flying foot found refuge and formed again, while Lumley drove back the French horse, charging up to the village of Blenheim and the palisades where Wilkes and many hundred more gallant Englishmen lay in slaughtered heaps. Beyond this moment, and of this famous victory, Mr. Esmond knows nothing; for a shot brought down his horse and our young gentleman on it, who fell crushed and stunned under the animal, and came to his senses he knows not how long after, only to lose them again from pain and loss of blood. A dim sense, as of people groaning round about him, a wild incoherent thought or two for her who occupied so much of his heart now, and that here his career and his hopes and misfortunes were ended, he remembers in the course of these hours. When he woke up, it was with a pang of extreme pain; his breastplate was taken off, his servant was holding his head up, the good and faithful lad of Hampshire* was blubbering over his master, whom he found and had thought dead, and a surgeon was probing a wound in the shoulder, which he must have got at the same moment when his horse was shot and fell over him. The battle was over at this end of the field by this time; the village was in possession of the English, its brave defenders prisoners or fled or drowned, many of them, in the neighboring waters of Donau. But for honest Lockwood's faithful search after his master, there had no doubt been an end of Esmond here, and of this his story. The marauders were out rifling the bodies as they lay on the field, and Jack had brained one of these gentry with the club-end of his musket, who had eased Esmond of his hat and periwig, his purse and fine silver-mounted pistols which the dowager gave him, and was fumbling in his pockets for further treasure, when Jack Lockwood came up and put an end to the scoundrel's triumph.

*My mistress, before I went this campaign, sent me John Lockwood out of Walcote, who hath ever since remained with me — H. E.

Hospitals for our wounded were established at Blenheim, and here for several weeks Esmond lay in very great danger of his life; the wound was not very great from which he suffered, and the ball extracted by the surgeon on the spot where our young gentleman received it; but a fever set in next day, as he was lying in hospital, and that almost carried him away. Jack Lockwood said he talked in the wildest manner during his delirium; that he called himself the Marquis of Esmond, and seizing one of the surgeon's assistants who came to dress his wounds swore that he was Madam Beatrix, and that he would make her a duchess if she would but say yes. He was passing the days in these crazy fancies, vana somnia, while the army was singing 'Te Deum' for the victory, and those famous festivities were taking place at which our duke, now made a prince of the empire, was entertained by the King of the Romans and his nobility. His Grace went home by Berlin and Hanover, and Esmond lost the festivities which took place at those cities, and which his general shared in company of the other general officers who traveled with our great captain. When he could move, it was by the Duke of Wirtenburg's city of Stuttgard that he made his way homeward, revisiting Heidelberg again, whence he went to Manheim, and hence had a tedious but easy water journey down the river of Rhine, which he had thought a delightful and beautiful voyage indeed, but that his heart was longing for home and something far more beautiful and delightful.

As bright and welcome as the eyes almost of his mistress shone the lights of Harwich as the packet came in from Holland. It was not many hours ere he, Esmond, was in London, of that you may be sure, and received with open arms by the old dowager of Chelsey, who vowed in her jargon of French and English that he had the air noble, that his pallor embellished him, that he was an Amadis and deserved a Gloriana; and oh, flames and darts! what was his joy at hearing that his mistress was come into waiting, and was now with her Majesty at Kensington! Although Mr. Esmond had told Jack Lockwood to get horses and they would ride for Winchester that night, when he heard this news he countermanded the horses at once; his business lay no longer in Hants; all his hope and desire lay within a couple of miles of him in Kensington Park wall. Poor Harry had never looked in the glass before so eagerly to see whether he had the bel air, and his paleness really did become him; he never took such pains about the curl of his periwig and the taste of his embroidery and point lace as now, before Mr. Amadis presented himself to Madam Gloriana. Was the fire of the French lines half so murderous as the killing glances from her ladyship’s eyes? Oh, darts and raptures, how beautiful were they!

And as, before the blazing sun of morning, the moon fades away in the sky almost invisible, Esmond thought, with a blush perhaps, of another sweet, pale face, sad and faint, and fading out of sight, with its sweet, fond gaze of affection; such a last look it seemed to cast as Eurydice might have given, yearning after her lover, when Fate and Pluto summoned her and she passed away into the shades.

CHAPTER X.

ANY taste for pleasure which Esmond had (and he liked to desipere in loco neither more nor less than most young men of his age) he could now gratify to the utmost extent and in the best company which the town afforded. When the army went into winter quarters abroad those of the officers who had interest or money easily got leave of absence, and found it much pleasanter to spend their time in Pall Mall and Hyde Park than to pass the winter away behind the fortifications of the dreary old Flanders towns, where the English troops were gathered. Yachts and packets passed daily between the Dutch and Flemish ports and Harwich; the roads thence to London and the great inns were crowded with army gentlemen; the taverns and ordinaries of the town swarmed with red-coats, and our great duke’s levées at St. James’ were as thronged as they had been at Ghent and Brussels, where we treated him, and he us, with the grandeur and ceremony of a sovereign. Though Esmond had been appointed to a lieutenancy in the Fusileer regiment, of which that celebrated officer, Brigadier John Richmond Webb, was colonel, he had never joined the regiment nor been introduced to its excellent commander, though they had made the same campaign together and been engaged in the same battle. But being aid-de-camp to General Lumley, who commanded the division of horse, and the army marching to its point of destination of the Danube by different routes, Esmond had not fallen in, as yet, with his commander and future comrades of the fort; and it was in London, in Golden Square, where Major General Webb lodged, that Captain Esmond had the honor of first paying his respects to his friend, patron, and commander of after days.

Those who remember this brilliant and accomplished gentleman may recollect his character, upon which he prided himself, I think, not a little, of being the handsomest man in the army. A poet who writ a dull copy of verses upon the battle of Oudenarde three years after, describing Webb, says:

To noble danger Webb conducts the way,
His great example all his troops obey;
Before the front the general sternly rides,
With such an air as Mars to battle strides;
Propitious Heaven must sure a hero save,
Like Paris handsome, and like Hector brave.

Mr. Webb thought these verses quite as fine as Mr. Addison's on the Blenheim campaign, and, indeed, to be Hector à la mode de Paris was part of this gallant gentleman's ambition. It would have been difficult to find an officer in the whole army, or among the splendid courtiers and cavaliers of the Maison du Roi that fought under Vendome and Villeroy in the army opposed to ours, who was a more accomplished soldier and perfect gentleman, and either braver or better looking. And if Mr. Webb believed of himself what the world said of him, and was deeply convinced of his own indisputable genius, beauty, and valor, who has a right to quarrel with him very much? This self-content of his kept him in general good humor, of which his friends and dependents got the benefit.

He came of a very ancient Wiltshire family, which he respected above all families in the world; he could prove a lineal descent from King Edward I., and his first ancestor, Roaldus de Richmond, rode by William the Conqueror's side on Hastings field. 'We were gentlemen, Esmond,' he used to say, 'when the Churchills were horseboys.' He was a very tall man, standing in his pumps six feet three inches (in his great jack-boots, with his tall, fair periwig and hat and feather, he could not have been less than eight feet high). 'I am taller than Churchill,' he would say, surveying himself in the glass, 'and I am a better made man; and if the women won't like a man that hasn't a wart on his nose, faith, I can't help myself, and Churchill has the better of me there.' Indeed he was always measuring himself with the duke, and always asking his friends to measure them. And talking in this frank way, as he would do over his cups, wags would laugh and encourage him, friends would be sorry for him, schemers and flatterers would egg him on, and talebearers carry the stories to headquarters and widen the difference which already existed there between the great captain and one of the ablest and bravest lieutenants he ever had.

His rancor against the duke was so apparent that one saw it in the first half hour's conversation with General Webb; and his lady, who adored her general and thought him a hundred times taller, handsomer, and braver than a prodigal nature had made him, hated the great duke with such an intensity as it becomes faithful wives to feel against their husband's enemies. Not that my lord duke was so yet; Mr. Webb had said a thousand things against him, which his superior had pardoned; and his Grace, whose spies were everywhere, had heard a thousand things more that Webb had never said. But it cost this great man no pains to pardon; and he passed over an injury or a benefit alike easily.

Should any child of mine take the pains to read these his ancestor's memoirs, I would not have him judge of the great duke* by what a contemporary has written of him. No man hath been so immensely landed and decried as this great statesman and warrior, as indeed no man ever deserved better the very greatest praise and the strongest censure. If the present writer joins with the latter faction, very likely a private pique of his own may be the cause of his ill feeling.

On presenting himself at the commander in chief's levée, his Grace had not the least remembrance of General Lumley's aid-de-camp, and though he knew Esmond's family perfectly well, having served with both lords (my Lord Francis and the Viscount Esmond's father) in Flanders and in the Duke of York's Guard, the Duke of Marlborough, who was friendly and serviceable to the (so-styled) legitimate representatives of the Viscount Castlewood, took no sort of notice of the poor lieutenant who bore their name. A word of kindness or acknowledgment, or a single glance of approbation, might have changed Esmond's opinion of the great man; and instead of a satire, which his pen cannot help writing, who knows but that the humble historian might have taken the other side of panegyric? We have but to change the point of view, and the greatest action looks mean as we turn the perspective glass, and a giant appears a pygmy. You may describe, but who can tell whether your sight is clear or not, or your means of information accurate? Had the great man said but a word of kindness to the small one (as he would have stepped out of his gilt chariot to shake hands with Lazarus in rags and sores, if he thought Lazarus could have been of any service to him), no doubt Esmond would have fought for him with pen and sword to the utmost of his might; but my Lord the Lion did not want Master Mouse at this moment, and so Muscipulus went off and nibbled in opposition.

* This passage in the Memoirs of Esmond is written on a leaf inserted into the MS book and dated 1744, probably after he had heard of the duchess' death.

So it was, however, that a young gentleman who in the eyes of his family and in his own, doubtless, was looked upon as a consummate hero, found that the great hero of the day took no more notice of him than of the smallest drummer in his Grace's army. The dowager at Chelsey was furious against this neglect of her family, and had a great battle with Lady Marlborough (as Lady Castlewood insisted on calling the duchess). Her Grace was now Mistress of the Robes to her Majesty, and one of the greatest personages in this kingdom, as her husband was in all Europe, and the battle between the two ladies took place in the queen's drawing room.

The duchess, in reply to my aunt's eager clamor, said haughtily that she had done her best for the legitimate branch of the Esmonds, and could not be expected to provide for the bastard brats of the family.

'Bastards!' says the viscountess in a fury. 'There are bastards among the Churchills, as your Grace knows, and the Duke of Berwick is provided for well enough.'

'Madam,' says the duchess, 'you know whose fault it is that there are no such dukes in the Esmond family too, and how that little scheme of a certain lady miscarried.'

Esmond's friend, Dick Steele, who was in waiting on the prince, heard the controversy between the ladies at Court. 'And faith,' says Dick, 'I think, Harry, thy kinswoman had the worst of it.'

He could not keep the story quiet; 'twas all over the coffee-houses ere night; it was printed in a news letter before a month was over, and 'The reply of her Grace the Duchess of M-rlb-r-gh to a popish lady of the Court, once a favorite of the late K—J-m-s,' was printed in half a dozen places, with a note stating that this duchess, when the head of this lady's family came by his death lately in a fatal duel, never rested until she got a pension for the orphan heir and widow, from her Majesty's bounty. The squabble did not advance poor Esmond's promotion much, and indeed made him so ashamed of himself that he dared not show his face at the commander in chief's levées again.

During those eighteen months which had passed since Esmond saw his dear mistress, her good father, the old dean, quit- ted this life, firm in his principles to the very last, and enjoining his family always to remember that the queen’s brother, King James III., was their rightful sovereign. He made a very edifying end, as his daughter told Esmond, and not a little to her surprise, after his death (for he had lived always very poorly) my lady found that her father had left no less a sum than £3000 behind him, which he bequeathed to her.

With this little fortune Lady Castlewood was enabled, when her daughter’s turn at Court came, to come to London, where she took a small genteel house at Kensington, in the neighborhood of the Court, bringing her children with her, and here it was that Esmond found his friends.

As for the young lord, his university career had ended rather abruptly. Honest Tusher, his governor, had found my young gentleman quite ungovernable. My lord worried his life away with tricks; and broke out, as homebred lads will, into a hundred youthful extravagances, so that Dr. Bentley, the new master of Trinity, thought fit to write to the Viscountess Castlewood, my lord’s mother, and beg her to remove the young nobleman from a college where he declined to learn, and where he only did harm by his riotous example. Indeed, I believe he nearly set fire to Nevil’s Court, that beautiful new quadrangle of our college, which Sir Christopher Wren had lately built. He knocked down a proctor’s man that wanted to arrest him in a midnight prank; he gave a dinner party on the Prince of Wales’ birthday, which was within a fortnight of his own, and the twenty young gentlemen then present sallied out after their wine, having toasted King James’ health with open windows, and sung cavalier songs, and shouted ‘God save the King!’ in the great court, so that the master came out of his lodge at midnight and dissipated the riotous assembly.

This was my lord’s crowning freak, and the Rev. Thomas Tusher, domestic chaplain to the Right Honorable the Lord Viscount Castlewood, finding his prayers and sermons of no earthly avail to his lordship, gave up his duties of governor; went and married his brewer’s widow at Southampton; and took her and her money to his parsonage house at Castlewood.

My lady could not be angry with her son for drinking King James’ health, being herself a loyal Tory, as all the Castlewood family were, and acquiesced with a sigh, knowing, perhaps, that her refusal would be of no avail to the young lord’s desire for a military life. She would have liked him to be in Mr. Esmond’s regiment, hoping that Harry might act as a guardian and adviser to his wayward young kinsman; but my young lord would hear of nothing but the guards, and a commission was got for him in the Duke of Ormonde's regiment; so Esmond found my lord ensign and lieutenant, when he returned from Germany after the Blenheim campaign.

The effect produced by both Lady Castlewood's children when they appeared in public was extraordinary, and the whole town speedily rang with their fame; such a beautiful couple, it was declared, never had been seen; the young maid of honor was toasted at every table and tavern, and as for my young lord, his good looks were even more admired than his sister's. A hundred songs were written about the pair, and as the fashion of that day was, my young lord was praised in these Anacreontics as warmly as Bathyllus. You may be sure that he accepted very complacently the town's opinion of him, and acquiesced with that frankness and charming good humor he always showed in the idea that he was the prettiest fellow in all London.

The old dowager at Chelsey, though she could never be got to acknowledge that Mistress Beatrix was any beauty at all (in which opinion, as it may be imagined, a vast number of the ladies agreed with her), yet on the very first sight of young Castlewood, she owned she fell in love with him; and Henry Esmond, on his return to Chelsey, found himself quite superseded in her favor by her younger kinsman. The feat of drinking the king's health at Cambridge would have won her heart, she said, if nothing else did. 'How had the dear young fellow got such beauty?' she asked. 'Not from his father—certainly not from his mother. How had he come by such noble manners and the perfect bel air? That countrified Walcote widow could never have taught him.' Esmond had his own opinion about the countrified Walcote widow, who had a quiet grace and serene kindness, who had always seemed to him the perfection of good breeding, though he did not try to argue this point with his aunt. But he could agree in most of the praises which the enraptured old dowager bestowed on my Lord Viscount, than whom he never beheld a more fascinating and charming gentleman. Castlewood had not wit so much as enjoyment. 'The lad looks good things,' Mr. Steele used to say; 'and his laugh lights up a conversation as much as ten repartees from Mr. Congreve.' I would as soon sit over a bottle with him as with Mr. Addison, and rather listen to his talk than hear Nicolini. Was ever man so gracefully drunk as my Lord Castlewood? I would give anything to carry my wine'(though, indeed, Dick bore his very kindly, and plenty of it too) 'like this incomparable young man. When he is sober he is delightful, and when tipsy, perfectly irresistible.' And referring to his favorite Shakspere (who was quite out of fashion until Steele brought him back into the mode), Dick compared Lord Castlewood to Prince Hal, and was pleased to dub Esmond as Ancient Pistol.

The Mistress of the Robes, the greatest lady in England after the queen, or even before her Majesty, as the world said, though she never could be got to say a civil word to Beatrix, whom she had promoted to her place as maid of honor, took her brother into instant favor. When young Castlewood, in his new uniform and looking like a prince out of a fairy tale, went to pay his duty to her Grace, she looked at him for a minute in silence, the young man blushing and in confusion before her, then fairly burst out a-crying, and kissed him before her daughters and company. 'He was my boy's friend,' she said through her sobs. 'My Blandford might have been like him.' And everybody saw, after this mark of the duchess' favor, that my young lord's promotion was secure, and people crowded round the favorite's favorite, who became vainer and gayer and more good-humored than ever.

Meanwhile Madam Beatrix was making her conquests on her own side, and among them was one poor gentleman, who had been shot by her young eyes two years before, and had never been quite cured of that wound; he knew, to be sure, how hopeless any passion might be directed in that quarter, and had taken that best, though ignoble, remedium amoris, a speedy retreat from before the charmer, and a long absence from her; and not being dangerously smitten in the first instance, Esmond pretty soon got the better of his complaint, and if he had it still, did not know he had it, and bore it easily. But when he returned after Blenheim, the young lady of sixteen, who had appeared the most beautiful object his eyes had ever looked on two years back, was now advanced to a perfect ripeness and perfection of beauty, such as instantly enthralled the poor devil, who had already been a fugitive from her charms. Then he had seen her for but two days and fled; now he beheld her day after day, and when she was at Court, watched after her; when she was at home, made one of the family party; when she went abroad, rode after her mother's chariot; when she appeared in public places, was in the box near her, or in the pit looking at her; when she went to church, was sure to be there (though he might not listen to the sermon) and be ready to hand her to her chair if she deigned to accept of his services and select him from a score of young men who were always hanging round about her. When she went away accompanying her Majesty to Hampton Court, a darkness fell over London. Gods, what nights has Esmond passed; thinking of her, rhyming about her, talking about her! His friend Dick Steele was at this time courting the young lady, Mrs. Seurlock, whom he married. She had a lodging in Kensington Square, hard by my Lady Castlewood's house there. Dick and Harry, being on the same errand, used to meet constantly at Kensington. They were always prowling about that place, or dismally walking thence, or eagerly running thither. They emptied scores of bottles at the King's Arms, each man prating of his love, and allowing the other to talk on condition that he might have his own turn as a listener. Hence arose an intimacy between them, though to all the rest of their friends they must have been insufferable. Esmond's verses to 'Gloriana at the Harpsichord,' to 'Gloriana's Nosegay,' to 'Gloriana at Court,' appeared this year in the Observer. Have you never read them? They were thought pretty poems, and attributed by some to Mr. Prior.

This passion did not escape—how should it?—the clear eyes of Esmond's mistress; he told her all; what will a man not do when frantic with love? To what baseness will he not demean himself? What pangs will he not make others suffer, so that he may ease his selfish heart of a part of its own pain? Day after day he would seek his dear mistress, pour insane hopes, supplications, rhapsodies, raptures, into her ear. She listened, smiled, consoled, with untiring pity and sweetness. Esmond was the eldest of her children, so she was pleased to say; and as far as kindness, who ever had or would look for aught else from one who was an angel of goodness and pity. After what has been said, 'tis needless almost to add that poor Esmond's suit was unsuccessful. What was a nameless, penniless lieutenant to do, when some of the greatest in the land were in the field? Esmond never so much as thought of asking permission to hope so far above his reach as he knew this prize was, and passed his foolish, useless life in mere abject sighs and impotent longing. What nights of rage, what days of torment, of passionate unfulfilled desire, of sickening jealousy can he recall? Beatrix thought no more of him than of the lackey that followed her chair. His complaints did not touch her in the least; his raptures rather fatigued her; she cared for his verses no more than for Dan Chaucer's, who's dead these ever so many hundred years; she did not hate him, she rather despised him, and just suffered him.

One day, after talking to Beatrix's mother, his dear, fond, constant mistress—for hours—for all day long, pouring out his flame and his passion, his despair and rage, returning again and again to the theme, pacing the room, tearing up the flowers on the table, twisting and breaking into bits the wax out of the stand-dish, and performing a hundred mad freaks of passionate folly; seeing his mistress at last quite pale and tired out with sheer weariness of compassion and watching over his fever for the hundredth time, Esmond seized up his hat and took his leave. As he got into Kensington Square, a sense of remorse came over him for the wearisome pain he had been inflicting upon the dearest and kindest friend ever man had. He went back to the house, where the servant still stood at the open door, ran up the stairs, and found his mistress where he had left her in the embrasure of the window, looking over the fields toward Chelsey. She laughed, wiping away at the same time the tears which were in her kind eyes; he flung himself down on his knees, and buried his head in her lap. She had in her hand the stalk of one of the flowers, a pink, that he had torn to pieces. ‘O, pardon me, pardon me, my dearest and kindest,’ he said; ‘I am in hell, and you are the angel that brings me a drop of water.’

‘I am your mother, you are my son, and I love you always,’ she said, holding her hands over him: and he went away comforted and humble in mind, as he thought of that amazing and constant love and tenderness with which this sweet lady ever blessed and pursued him.

CHAPTER XI.

THE FAMOUS MR. JOSEPH ADDISON.

The gentlemen ushers had a table at Kensington, and the Guard a very splendid dinner daily at St. James’, at either of which ordinaries Esmond was free to dine. Dick Steele liked the Guard table better than his own at the gentlemen ushers’, where there was less wine and more ceremony; and Esmond had many a jolly afternoon in company of his friend, and a hundred times at least saw Dick into his chair. If there is verity in wine, according to the old adage, what an amiable natured character Dick’s must have been! In proportion as he took in wine he overflowed with kindness. His talk was not witty so much as charming. He never said a word that could anger anybody, and only became the more benevolent the more tipsy he grew. Many of the wags derided the poor fellow in his cups, and chose him as a butt for their satire;
but there was a kindness about him, and a sweet playful fancy, that seemed to Esmond far more charming than the pointed talk of the brightest wits, with their elaborate repartees and affected severities. I think Steele shone rather than sparkled. Those famous beau esprits of the coffeehouses (Mr. William Congreve, for instance, when his gout and his grandeur permitted him to come among us) would make many brilliant hits,—half a dozen in a night sometimes—but, like sharpshooters, when they had fired their shot, they were obliged to retire under cover till their pieces were loaded again, and wait till they got another chance at their enemy; whereas Dick never thought that his bottle companion was a butt to aim at—only a friend to shake by the hand. The poor fellow had half the town in his confidence; everybody knew everything about his loves and his debts, his creditors or his mistress' obduracy. When Esmond first came on to the town, honest Dick was all flames and raptures for a young lady, a West India fortune, whom he married. In a couple of years the lady was dead, the fortune was all but spent, and the honest widower was as eager in pursuit of a new paragon of beauty as if he had never courted and married and buried the last one.

Quitting the Guard table one Sunday afternoon, when by chance Dick had a sober fit upon him, he and his friend were making their way down Germain Street, and Dick all of a sudden left his companion's arm, and ran after a gentleman who was poring over a folio volume at the bookshop near to St. James' Church. He was a fair, tall man, in a snuff-colored suit, with a plain sword, very sober, and almost shabby in appearance—at least when compared to Captain Steele, who loved to adorn his jolly round person with the finest of clothes, and shone in scarlet and gold lace. The captain rushed up, then, to the student of the bookstall, took him in his arms, hugged him, and would have kissed him—for Dick was always hugging and bussing his friends,—but the other stepped back with a flush on his pale face, seeming to decline this public manifestation of Steele's regard.

'My dearest Joe, where hast thou hidden thyself this age?' cries the captain, still holding both his friend's hands; 'I have been languishing for thee this fortnight.'

'A fortnight is not an age, Dick,' says the other very good-humoredly. (He had light blue eyes, extraordinary bright, and a face perfectly regular and handsome, like a tinted statue.) 'And I have been hiding myself—where do you think?'
'What! not across the water, my dear Joe?' says Steele, with a look of great alarm: 'thou knowest I have always—'

'No,' says his friend, interrupting him with a smile; 'we are not come to such straits as that, Dick. I have been hiding, sir, at a place where people never think of finding you—at my own lodgings, whither I am going to smoke a pipe now and drink a glass of sack. Will your honor come?'

'Harry Esmond, come hither,' cries out Dick. 'Thou hast heard me talk over and over again of my dearest Joe, my guardian angel?'

'Indeed,' says Mr. Esmond, with a bow, 'it is not from you only that I have learnt to admire Mr. Addison. We loved good poetry at Cambridge as well as at Oxford; and I have some of yours by heart, though I have put on a red coat...

"O qui canoro blandius Orpheo vocale ducis carmen"; shall I go on, sir?' says Mr. Esmond, who indeed, had read and loved the charming Latin poems of Mr. Addison, as every scholar of that time knew and admired them.

'This is Captain Esmond, who was at Blenheim,' says Steele. 'Lieutenant Esmond,' says the other, with a low bow, 'at Mr. Addison's service.'

'I have heard of you,' says Mr. Addison, with a smile; as, indeed, everybody about town had heard that unlucky story about Esmond's dowager aunt and the duchess.

'We were going to the George, to take a bottle before the play,' says Steele; 'wilt thou be one, Joe?'

Mr. Addison said his own lodgings were hard by, where he was still rich enough to give a good bottle of wine to his friends; and invited the two gentlemen to his apartment in the Haymarket, whither we accordingly went.

'I shall get credit with my landlady,' says he, with a smile, 'when she sees two such fine gentlemen as you come up my stair.' And he politely made his visitors welcome to his apartment, which was indeed but a shabby one, though no grandee of the land could receive his guests with a more perfect and courtly grace than this gentleman. A frugal dinner, consisting of a slice of meat and a penny loaf, was awaiting the owner of the lodgings. 'My wine is better than my meat,' says Mr. Addison. 'My Lord Halifax sent me the burgundy.' And he set a bottle and glasses before his friends, and ate his simple dinner in a very few minutes, after which the three fell to, and began to drink. 'You see,' says Mr. Addison, pointing to his writing table, whereon was a map of the action at Hochstedt, and several other gazettes and pamphlets relating to the battle,
'that I, too, am busy about your affairs, captain. I am engaged as a poetical gazetteer, to say truth, and am writing a poem on the campaign.'

So Esmond, at the request of his host, told him what he knew about the famous battle, drew the river on the table aliquo mero, and with the aid of some bits of tobacco pipe showed the advance of the left wing, where he had been engaged.

A sheet or two of the verses lay already on the table beside our bottles and glasses, and Dick, having plentifully refreshed himself from the latter, took up the pages of manuscript, wrote out with scarce a blot or correction, in the author’s slim, neat handwriting, and began to read therefrom with great emphasis and volubility. At pauses of the verse, the enthusiastic reader stopped and fired off a great salvo of applause.

Esmond smiled at the enthusiasm of Addison’s friend. ‘You are like the German burghers,’ says he, ‘and the princes on the Mozelle; when our army came to a halt, they always sent a deputation to compliment the chief, and fired a salute with all their artillery from their walls.’

‘And drunk the great chief’s health afterward, did not they?’ says Captain Steele, gayly filling up a bumper; he never was tardy at that sort of acknowledgment of a friend’s merit.

‘And the duke, since you will have me act his Grace’s part,’ says Mr. Addison, with a smile and something of a blush, ‘pledged his friends in return. Most Serene Elector of Covent Garden, I drink to your Highness’ health,’ and he filled himself a glass. Joseph required scarce more pressing than Dick to that sort of amusement; but the wine never seemed at all to fluster Mr. Addison’s brains; it only unloosed his tongue; whereas Captain Steele’s head and speech were quite overcome by a single bottle.

No matter what the verses were, and, to say truth, Mr. Esmond found some of them more than indifferent, Dick’s enthusiasm for his chief never faltered, and in every line from Addison’s pen Steele found a master-stroke. By the time Dick had come to that part of the poem wherein the bard describes, as blandly as though he were recording a dance at the opera, or a harmless bout of bucolic cudgeling at a village fair, that bloody and ruthless part of our campaign with the remembrance whereof every soldier who bore a part in it must sicken with shame—when we were ordered to ravage and lay waste the Elector’s country; and with fire and murder, slaughter and crime, a great part of his dominions was overrun; when Dick came to the lines,
In vengeance roused the soldier fills his hand
With sword and fire, and ravages the land;
In crackling flames a thousand harvests burn,
A thousand villages to ashes burn.
To the thick woods the woolly flocks retreat,
And mixed with bellowing herds confusedly beat;
Their trembling lords the common shade partake,
And cries of infants sound in every brake.
The listening soldier fixed in sorrow stands.
Loath to obey his leader's just commands.
The leader grieves, by generous pity swayed,
To see his just commands so well obeyed:

by this time wine and friendship had brought poor Dick to a perfectly maudlin state, and he hiccuped out the last line with a tenderness that set one of his auditors a-laughing.

'I admire the license of your poets,' says Esmond to Mr. Addison. (Dick, after reading of the verses, was fain to go off, insisting on kissing his two dear friends before his departure, and reeling away with his periwig over his eyes.) 'I admire your art; the murder of the campaign is done to military music, like a battle at the opera, and the virgins shriek in harmony, as our victorious grenadiers march into their villages. Do you know what a scene it was?'—by this time, perhaps, the wine had warmed Mr. Esmond's head too—'what a triumph you are celebrating? what scenes of shame and horror were enacted, over which the commander's genius presided, as calm as though he didn't belong to our sphere? You talk of the "listening soldier fixed in sorrow," the "leader's grief swayed by generous pity"; to my belief the leader cared no more for bleating flocks than he did for infants' cries, and many of our ruffians butchered one or the other with equal alacrity. I was ashamed of my trade when I saw those horrors perpetrated, which came under every man's eyes. You hew out of your polished verses a stately image of smiling victory: I tell you 'tis an uncouth, distorted, savage idol; hideous, bloody, and barbarous. The rites performed before it are shocking to think of. You great poets should show it as it is—ugly and horrible, not beautiful and serene. Oh, sir, had you made the campaign, believe me, you never would have sung it so.'

During this little outbreak Mr. Addison was listening, smoking out of his long pipe, and smiling very placidly. 'What would you have?' says he. 'In our polished days, and according to the rules of art, 'tis impossible that the Muse should depict tortures or begrime her hands with the horrors of war.' These are indicated rather than described; as in the Greek tragedies, that, I dare say, you have read (and sure there can be no more elegant specimens of compotion), Agamemnon is slain, or Medea’s children destroyed, away from the scene—the chorus occupying the stage and singing of the action to pathetic music. Something of this I attempt, my dear sir, in my humble way; ’tis a panegyric I mean to write, and not a satire. Were I to sing as you would have me, the town would tear the poet in pieces, and burn his book by the hands of the common hangman. Do you not use tobacco? Of all the weeds grown on earth, sure the nicotian is the most soothing and salutary. We must paint our great duke,’ Mr. Addison went on, ‘not as a man, which no doubt he is, with weaknesses like the rest of us, but as a hero. ’Tis in a triumph, not a battle, that your humble servant is riding his sleek Pegasus. We college poets trot, you know, on very easy nags; it hath been, time out of mind, part of the poet’s profession to celebrate the actions of heroes in verse, and to sing the deeds which you men of war perform. I must follow the rules of my art, and the composition of such a strain as this must be harmonious and majestic, not familiar, or too near the vulgar truth. Si para lia cet; if Vergil could invoke the divine Augustus, a humbler poet from the banks of the Isis may celebrate a victory and a conqueror of our own nation, in whose triumphs every Briton has a share, and whose glory and genius contribute to every citizen’s individual honor. When hath there been, since our Henrys’ and Edwards’ days, such a great feat of arms as that from which you yourself have brought away marks of distinction? If ’tis in my power to sing that song worthily, I will do so, and be thankful to my Muse. If I fail as a poet, as a Briton at least I will show my loyalty, and fling up my cap and huzza for the conqueror:

'Rheni pacator et Istri
Omnis in hoc uno variis discordia cessit
Votaque patricio certant plebeia favori.'

'There were as brave men on that field,’ says Mr. Esmond (who never could be made to love the Duke of Marlborough, nor to forget those stories which he used to hear in his youth regarding that great chief’s selfishness and treachery)—‘there were men at Blenheim as good as the leader, whom neither knights nor senators applauded, nor voices plebeian nor patrician favored, and who lie there forgotten, under the clods. What poet is there to sing them?’

‘To sing the gallant souls of heroes sent to Hades!’ says Mr. Addison, with a smile. ‘Would you celebrate them all? If I may venture to question anything in such an admirable work, the catalogue of the ships in Homer hath always appeared to me as somewhat wearisome; what had the poem been, supposing the writer had chronicled the names of captains, lieutenants, rank and file? One of the greatest of a great man's qualities is success; 'tis the result of all the others; 'tis a latent power in him which compels the favor of the gods and subjugates fortune. Of all his gifts I admire that one in the great Marlborough. To be brave? every man is brave. But in being victorious, as he is, I fancy there is something divine. In presence of the occasion, the great soul of the leader shines out, and the god is confessed. Death itself respects him, and passes by him to lay others low. War and carnage flee before him to ravage other parts of the field, as Hector from before the divine Achilles. You say he hath no pity; no more have the gods, who are above it, and superhuman. The fainting battle gathers strength at his aspect; and wherever he rides, victory charges with him.'

A couple of days after, when Mr. Esmond revisited his poetic friend, he found his thought, struck out in the fervor of conversation, improved and shaped into those famous lines which are in truth the noblest in the poem of the 'Campaign.' As the two gentlemen sat engaged in talk, Mr. Addison solacing himself with his customary pipe, the little maid-servant that waited on his lodging came up, preceding a gentleman in fine laced clothes, that had evidently been figuring at Court or a great man's levee. The courtier coughed a little at the smoke of the pipe, and looked round the room curiously, which was shabby enough, as was the owner in his worn snuff-colored suit and plain tie-wig.

'How goes on the magnumopus, Mr. Addison?' says the Court gentleman, on looking down on the papers that were on the table. 'We were but now over it,' says Addison (the greatest courtier in the land could not have a more splendid politeness, or greater dignity of manner). 'Here is the plan,' says he, 'on the table: hac ibat Simois, here ran the little river Nebel: hic est Sigeia tellus, here are Tallard's quarters, at the bowl of this pipe, at the attack of which Captain Esmond was present. I have the honor to introduce him to Mr. Boyle; and Mr. Esmond was but now depicting aliquo proelia mixta mero, when you came in.' In truth, the two gentlemen had been so engaged when the visitor arrived, and Addison, in his smiling way, speaking of Mr. Webb, colonel of Esmond's regiment (who commanded a brigade in the action, and greatly distinguished himself there), was lamenting that he could find never a suitable rhyme for Webb; otherwise the brigade should have had a place in the poet's verses. 'And for you, you are but a lieutenant,' says Addison, 'and the Muse can't occupy herself with any gentleman under the rank of a field officer.'

Mr. Boyle was all impatient to hear, saying that my Lord Treasurer and my Lord Halifax were equally anxious; and Addison, blushing, began reading of his verses, and, I suspect, knew their weak parts as well as the most critical hearer. When he came to the lines describing the angel, that

Inspired repulsed battalions to engage,
And taught the doubtful battle where to rage,

he read with great animation, looking at Esmond, as much as to say, 'You know where that simile came from—from our talk, and our bottle of burgundy, the other day.'

The poet's hearers were caught with enthusiasm, and applauded the verses with all their might. The gentleman of the Court sprang up in great delight. 'Not a word more, my dear sir,' says he. 'Trust me with the papers—I'll defend them with my life. Let me read them over to my Lord Treasurer, whom I am appointed to see in half an hour. I venture to promise the verses shall lose nothing by my reading, and then, sir, we shall see whether Lord Halifax has a right to complain that his friend's pension is no longer paid.' And without more ado, the courtier in lace seized the manuscript pages, placed them in his breast with his ruffled hand over his heart, executed a most gracious wave of the hat with the disengaged hand, and smiled and bowed out of the room, leaving an odor of pomander behind him.

'Does not the chamber look quite dark?' says Addison, surveying it, 'after the glorious appearance and disappearance of that gracious messenger? Why, he illuminated the whole room. Your scarlet, Mr. Esmond, will bear any light; but this threadbare old coat of mine, how very worn it looked under the glare of that splendor! I wonder whether they will do anything for me,' he continued. 'When I came out of Oxford into the world, my patrons promised me great things; and you see where their promises have landed me, in a lodging up two pair of stairs, with a sixpenny dinner from the cook's shop. Well, I suppose this promise will go after the others, and Fortune will jilt me, as the jade has been doing any time these seven years. 'I puff the prostitute away,' says he smiling, and blowing a cloud out of his pipe. 'There is no hardship in poverty, Esmond, that is not bearable; no hardship even in honest dependence that an honest man may not put up with. I came out of the lap of Alma Mater, puffed up with her praises of me, and thinking to make a figure in the world with the parts and learning which had got me no small name in our college. The world is the ocean, and Isis and Charwell are but little drops, of which the sea takes no account. My reputation ended a mile beyond Maudlin Tower; no one took note of me; and I learned this at least, to bear up against evil fortune with a cheerful heart. Friend Dick hath made a figure in the world, and has passed me in the race long ago. What matters a little name or a little fortune? There is no fortune that a philosopher cannot endure. I have been not unknown as a scholar, and yet forced to live by turning bearleader and teaching a boy to spell. What then? The life was not pleasant, but possible—the bear was bearable. Should this venture fail, I will go back to Oxford; and some day, when you are a general, you shall find me a curate in a cassock and bands, and I shall welcome your honor to my cottage in the country, and to a mug of penny ale. 'Tis not poverty that's the hardest to bear, or the least happy lot in life,' says Mr. Addison, shaking the ash out of his pipe. 'See, my pipe is smoked out. Shall we have another bottle? I have still a couple in the cupboard, and of the right sort. No more? Let us go abroad and take a turn on the Mall, or look in at the theater and see Dick's comedy. 'Tis not a masterpiece of wit; but Dick is a good fellow, though he doth not set the Thames on fire.'

Within a month after this day Mr. Addison's ticket had come up a prodigious prize in the lottery of life. All the town was in an uproar of admiration of his poem, the 'Campaign,' which Dick Steele was spouting at every coffeehouse in Whitehall and Covent Garden. The wits on the other side of Temple Bar saluted him at once as the greatest poet the world had seen for ages; the people huzzaed for Marlborough and for Addison, and more than this, the party in power provided for the meritorious poet, and Mr. Addison got the appointment of commissioner of excise, which the famous Mr. Locke vacated, and rose from this place to other dignities and honors; his prosperity from henceforth to the end of his life being scarce ever interrupted. But I doubt whether he was not happier in his garret in the Haymarket than ever he was in his splendid palace at Kensington; and I believe the fortune that came to him in the shape of the countess his wife was no better than a shrew and a vixen.

Gay as the town was, 'twas but a dreary place for Mr. Esmond, whether his charmer was in or out of it, and he was glad when his general gave him notice that he was going back to his division of the army which lay in winter quarters at Bois-le-Duc. His dear mistress bade him farewell with a cheerful face; her blessing he knew he had always, and wheresoever fate carried him. Mistress Beatrix was away in attendance on her Majesty at Hampton Court, and kissed her fair finger-tips to him, by way of adieu, when he rode thither to take his leave. She received her kinsman in a waiting room where there were half a dozen more ladies of the Court, so that his high-flown speeches, had he intended to make any (and very likely he did), were impossible; and she announced to her friends that her cousin was going to the army, in as easy a manner as she would have said he was going to a chocolate house. He asked, with a rather rueful face, if she had any orders for the army? and she was pleased to say that she would like a mantle of Mechlin lace. She made him a saucy courtesy in reply to his own dismal bow. She deigned to kiss her finger-tips from the window, where she stood laughing with the other ladies, and chanced to see him as he made his way to the 'Toy.' The Dowager at Chelsey was not sorry to part with him this time. 'Mon cher, vous êtes triste comme un sermon,' she did him the honor to say to him; indeed, gentlemen in his condition are by no means amusing companions, and besides, the fickle old woman had now found a much more amiable favorite, and raflolé for her darling lieutenant of the Guard. Frank remained behind for a while, and did not join the army till later, in the suite of his Grace the Commander in Chief. His dear mother, on the last day before Esmond went away, and when the three dined together, made Esmond promise to befriend her boy, and besought Frank to take the example of his kinsman as of a loyal gentleman and brave soldier, so she was pleased to say; and, at parting, betrayed not the least sign of faltering or weakness, though, God knows, that fond heart was fearful enough when others were concerned, though so resolute in bearing its own pain.

Esmond's general embarked at Harwich. 'Twas a grand sight to see Mr. Webb, dressed in scarlet, on the deck, waving his hat as our yacht put off, and the guns saluted from the shore. Harry did not see his viscount again until three months after, at Bois-le-Duc, when his Grace the Duke came to take the command, and Frank brought a budget of news from home: how he had supped with this actress, and got tired of that; how he had got the better of Mr. St. John, both over the bottle and with Mrs. Mountford of the Haymarket Theater (a veteran charmer of fifty, with whom the young sripegrace chose to fancy himself in love); how his sister was always at her tricks, and had jilted a young baron for an old earl. 'I can't make out Beatrix,' he said; 'she cares for none of us; she only thinks about herself; she is never happy unless she is quarreling; but as for my mother—my mother, Harry, is an angel.' Harry tried to impress on the young fellow the necessity of doing everything in his power to please that angel; not to drink too much; not to go into debt; not to run after the pretty Flemish girls, and so forth, as became a senior speaking to a lad. 'But Lord bless thee!' the boy said; 'I may do what I like, and I know she will love me all the same;' and so, indeed, he did what he liked. Everybody spoiled him, and his grave kinsman as much as the rest.

CHAPTER XII.

I GET A COMPANY IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1706.

On Whitsunday, the famous 23d of May, 1706, my young lord first came under the fire of the enemy, whom we found posted in order of battle, their lines extending three miles or more over the high ground behind the little Gheet River, and having on his left the little village of Anderkirk or Autre-église, and on his right Ramillies, which has given its name to one of the most brilliant and disastrous days of battle that history ever hath recorded.

Our duke here once more met his old enemy of Blenheim, the Bavarian Elector and the Maréchal Villeroy, over whom the Prince of Savoy had gained the famous victory of Chiari. What Englishman or Frenchman doth not know the issue of that day? Having chosen his own ground, having a force superior to the English, and besides the excellent Spanish and Bavarian troops, the whole Maison du Roy with him, the most splendid body of horse in the world; in an hour (and in spite of the prodigious gallantry of the French Royal Household, who charged through the center of our line and broke it), this magnificent army of Villeroy was utterly routed by troops that had been marching for twelve hours, and by the intrepid skill of a commander, who did, indeed, seem in the presence of the enemy to be the very Genius of Victory.

I think it was more from conviction than policy, though that policy was surely the most prudent in the world, that the great duke always spoke of his victories with an extraordinary modesty, and as if it was not so much his own admirable genius and courage which achieved these amazing successes, but as if he was a special and fatal instrument in the hands of Providence, that willed irresistibly the enemy's overthrow. Before his actions he always had the church service read solemnly, and professed an undoubting belief that our queen's arms were blessed and our victory sure. All the letters which he writ after his battles show awe rather than exultation; and he attributes the glory of these achievements, about which I have heard mere petty officers and men bragging with a pardonable vainglory, in no wise to his own bravery or skill, but to the superintending protection of Heaven, which he ever seemed to think was our especial ally. And our army got to believe so, and the enemy learned to think so too; for we never entered into a battle without a perfect confidence that it was to end in a victory; nor did the French, after the issue of Blenheim, and that astonishing triumph of Ramillies, ever meet us without feeling that the game was lost before it was begun to be played, and that our general's fortune was irresistible. Here, as at Blenheim, the duke's charger was shot, and 'twas thought for a moment he was dead. As he mounted another, Binfield, his master of the horse, kneeling to hold his Grace's stirrup, had his head shot away by a cannon-ball. A French gentleman of the Royal Household, that was a prisoner with us, told the writer that at the time of the charge of the Household, when their horse and ours were mingled, an Irish officer recognized the prince- duke, and calling out, 'Marlborough, Marlborough!' fired his pistol at him à bout portant, and that a score more carbines and pistols were discharged at him. Not one touched him: he rode through the French cuirassiers sword in hand and entirely unhurt, and calm and smiling, rallied the German horse, that was reeling before the enemy, brought these and twenty squadrons of Orkneys back upon them, and drove the French across the river, again leading the charge himself, and defeating the only dangerous move the French made that day.

Major General Webb commanded on the left of our line, and had his own regiment under the orders of their beloved colonel. Neither he nor they belied their character for gallantry on this occasion; but it was about his dear young lord that Esmond was anxious, never having sight of him save once, in the whole course of the day, when he brought an order from the commander in chief to Mr. Webb. When our horse, having charged round the right flank of the enemy by Over-kirk, had thrown him into entire confusion, a general advance was made, and our whole line of foot, crossing the little river and the morass, ascended the high ground where the French were posted, cheering as they went, the enemy retreating before them. 'Twas a service of more glory than danger, the French battalions never waiting to exchange push of pike or bayonet with ours; and the gunners flying from their pieces, which our line left behind us as they advanced and the French fell back.

At first it was a retreat orderly enough; but presently the retreat became a rout, and a frightful slaughter of the French ensued on this panic; so that an army of sixty thousand men was utterly crushed and destroyed in the course of a couple of hours. It was as if a hurricane had seized a compact, numerous fleet, flung it all to the winds, shattered, sunk, and annihilated it: _afflavit Deus, et dissipati sunt_. The French army of Flanders was gone, their artillery, their standards, their treasure, provisions, and ammunition were all left behind them; the poor devils had even fled without their soup-kettles, which are as much the palladia of the French infantry as of the Grand Seignior’s Janizaries, and round which they rally even more than round their lilies.

The pursuit, and a dreadful carnage which ensued (for the dregs of a battle, however brilliant, are ever a base residue of rapine, cruelty, and drunken plunder), were carried far beyond the field of Ramillies.

Honest Lockwood, Esmond’s servant, no doubt wanted to be among the marauders himself and take his share of the booty; for when, the action over, and the troops got to their ground for the night, the captain bade Lockwood get a horse, he asked, with a very rueful countenance, whether his honor would have him come too; but his honor only bade him go about his own business, and Jack hopped away quite delighted as soon as he saw his master mounted. Esmond made his way, and not without danger and difficulty, to his Grace’s headquarters, and found for himself very quickly where the aids-de-camp quarters were, in an outbuilding of a farm, where several of these gentlemen were seated, drinking and singing, and at supper. If he had any anxiety about his boy, ’twas relieved at once. One of the gentlemen was singing a song to a tune that Mr. Farquhar and Mr. Gay both had used in their admirable comedies, and very popular in the army of that day; and after the song came a chorus, ‘Over the hills and far away’; and Esmond heard Frank’s fresh voice, soaring, as it were, over the songs of the rest of the young men—a voice that had always a certain artless, indescribable pathos with it, and indeed which caused Mr. Esmond's eyes to fill with tears now, out of thankfulness to God the child was safe and still alive to laugh and sing.

When the song was over Esmond entered the room, where he knew several of the gentlemen present, and there sat my young lord, having taken off his cuirass, his waistcoat open, his face flushed, his long yellow hair hanging over his shoulders, drinking with the rest; the youngest, gayest, handsomest there. As soon as he saw Esmond he clapped down his glass, and running toward his friend, put both his arms round him and embraced him. The other's voice trembled with joy as he greeted the lad; he had thought but now as he stood in the courtyard under the clear-shining moonlight: 'Great God! what a scene of murder is here within a mile of us; what hundreds and thousands have faced danger to-day; and here are these lads singing over their cups, and the same moon that is shining over yonder horrid field is looking down on Walcot very likely, while my lady sits and thinks about her boy that is at the war.' As Esmond embraced his young pupil now, 'twas with the feeling of quite religious thankfulness, and an almost paternal pleasure, that he beheld him.

Round his neck was a star with a striped ribbon, that was made of small brilliants and might be worth a hundred crowns. 'Look,' says he, 'won't that be a pretty present for mother?'

'Who gave you the order?' says Harry, saluting the gentlemen; 'did you win it in battle?'

'I won it,' cried the other, 'with my sword and my spear. There was a mousquetaire that had it round his neck—such a big mousquetaire, as big as General Webb. I called out to him to surrender, and that I'd give him quarter; he called me a petit polisson and fired his pistol at me, and then sent it at my head with a curse. I rode at him, sir, drove my sword right under his arm-hole, and broke it in the rascal's body. I found a purse in his holster with sixty-five Louis in it, and a bundle of love letters, and a flask of Hungary water. Vive la guerre! there are the ten pieces you lent me. I should like to have a fight every day;' and he pulled at his little mustache and bade a servant bring a supper to Captain Esmond.

Harry fell to with a very good appetite; he had tasted nothing since twenty hours ago, at early dawn. Master Grandson, who read this, do you look for the history of battles and sieges? Go find them in the proper books; this is only the story of your grandfather and his family. Far more pleasant to him than the victory, though for that too he may say "meminisse juvat," it was to find that the day was over, and his dear young Castlewood was unhurt.

And would you, sirrah, wish to know how it was that a sedate captain of foot, a studious and rather solitary bachelor of eight or nine and twenty years of age, who did not care very much for the jollities which his comrades engaged in, and was never known to lose his heart in any garrison town—should you wish to know why such a man had so prodigious a tenderness, and tended so fondly a boy of eighteen, wait, my good friend, until thou art in love with thy schoolfellow's sister, and then see how mighty tender thou wilt be toward him. Esmond's general and his Grace the Prince-Duke were notoriously at variance, and the former's friendship was in no wise likely to advance any man's promotion of whose services Webb spoke well; but rather likely to injure him, so the army said, in the favor of the greater man. However, Mr. Esmond had the good fortune to be mentioned very advantageously by Major General Webb in his report after the action; and the major of his regiment and two of the captains having been killed upon the day of Ramillies, Esmond, who was second of the lieutenants, got his company, and had the honor of serving as Captain Esmond in the next campaign.

My lord went home in the winter, but Esmond was afraid to follow him. His dear mistress wrote him letters more than once, thanking him, as mothers know how to thank, for his care and protection of her boy, extolling Esmond's own merits with a great deal more praise than they deserved; for he did his duty no better than any other officer; and speaking sometimes, though gently and cautiously, of Beatrix. News came from home of at least half a dozen grand matches that the beautiful maid of honor was about to make. She was engaged to an earl, our gentlemen of St. James' said, and then jilted him for a duke, who, in his turn, had drawn off. Earl or duke it might be who should win this Helen, Esmond knew she would never bestow herself on a poor captain. Her conduct, it was clear, was little satisfactory to her mother, who scarcely mentioned her, or else the kind lady thought it was best to say nothing, and leave time to work out its cure. At any rate, Harry was best away from the fatal object which always wrought him so much mischief; and so he never asked for leave to go home, but remained with his regiment that was garrisoned in Brussels, which city fell into our hands when the victory of Ramillies drove the French out of Flanders.
CHAPTER XIII.

I MEET AN OLD ACQUAINTANCE IN FLANDERS, AND FIND MY MOTHER'S GRAVE AND MY OWN CRADLE THERE.

Being one day in the Church of St. Gudule at Brussels, admiring the antique splendor of the architecture (and always entertaining a great tenderness and reverence for the Mother Church, that hath been as wickedly persecuted in England as ever she herself persecuted in the days of her prosperity), Esmond saw kneeling at a side altar an officer in a green uniform coat, very deeply engaged in devotion. Something familiar in the figure and posture of the kneeling man struck Captain Esmond, even before he saw the officer's face. As he rose up, putting away into his pocket a little black breviary such as priests use, Esmond beheld a countenance so like that of his friend and tutor of early days, Father Holt, that he broke out into an exclamation of astonishment and advanced a step toward the gentleman, who was making his way out of church. The German officer, too, looked surprised when he saw Esmond, and his face from being pale grew suddenly red. By this mark of recognition the Englishman knew that he could not be mistaken; and though the other did not stop, but on the contrary rather hastily walked away toward the door, Esmond pursued him and faced him once more as the officer, helping himself to holy water, turned mechanically toward the altar, to bow to it ere he quitted the sacred edifice.

'My father!' says Esmond in English.

'Silence! I do not understand. I do not speak English,' says the other in Latin.

Esmond smiled at this sign of confusion, and replied in the same language—'I should know my father in any garment, black or white, shaven or bearded;' for the Austrian officer was habited quite in the military manner, and had as warlike a mustache as any Pandour.

He laughed—we were on the church steps by this time, passing through the crowd of beggars that usually is there holding up little trinkets for sale and whining for alms. 'You speak Latin,' says he, 'in the English way, Harry Esmond; you have forsaken the old true Roman tongue you once knew.' His tone was very frank and friendly, quite the kind voice of fifteen years back; he gave Esmond his hand as he spoke.

'Others have changed their coats too, my father,' says Esmond, glancing at his friend's military decoration.

'Hush! I am Mr. or Captain von Holtz, in the Bavarian Elector's service, and on a mission to his Highness the Prince of Savoy. You can keep a secret, I know from old times.'

'Captain von Holtz,' says Esmond, 'I am your very humble servant.'

'And you, too, have changed your coat,' continues the other in his laughing way; 'I have heard of you at Cambridge and afterward; we have friends everywhere; and I am told that Mr. Esmond at Cambridge was as good a fencer as he was a bad theologian.' (So, thinks Esmond, my old maître d'armes was a Jesuit, as they said.)

'Perhaps you are right,' says the other, reading his thoughts quite as he used to do in old days; 'you were all but killed at Hochstedt of a wound in the left side. You were before that at Vigo, aid-de-camp to the Duke of Ormonde. You got your company the other day after Ramillies; your general and the prince-duc e are not friends; he is of the Webbs of Lydiard, Tregoze, in the county of York, a relation of my Lord St. John. Your cousin, M. de Castlewood, served his first campaign this year in the Guard; yes, I do know a few things, as you see.'

Captain Esmond laughed in his turn. 'You have indeed a curious knowledge,' he says. A foible of Mr. Holt's, who did know more about books and men than, perhaps, almost any person Esmond had ever met, was omniscience; thus in every point he here professed to know he was nearly right, but not quite. Esmond's wound was in the right side, not the left; his first general was General Lumley; Mr. Webb came out of Wiltshire, not out of Yorkshire; and so forth. Esmond did not think fit to correct his old master in these trifling blunders, but they served to give him a knowledge of the other's character, and he smiled to think that this was his oracle of early days; only now no longer infallible or divine.

'Yes,' continues Father Holt, or Captain von Holtz, 'for a man who has not been in England these eight years, I know what goes on in London very well. The old dean is dead, my Lady Castlewood's father. Do you know that your recusant bishops wanted to consecrate him Bishop of Southampton, and that Collier is Bishop of Thetford by the same imposition? The Princess Anne has the gout and eats too much; when the king returns Collier will be an archbishop.'

'Amen!' says Esmond, laughing; 'and I hope to see your Eminence no longer in jack-boots, but red stockings, at Whitehall.'

'You were always with us—I know that—I heard of that when you were at Cambridge; so was the late lord; so is the young viscount.'
'And so was my father before me,' said Mr. Esmond, looking calmly at the other, who did not, however, show the least sign of intelligence in his impenetrable gray eyes—how well Harry remembered them and their look! only crow's-feet were wrinkled round them—marks of black old Time had settled there.

Esmond's face chose to show no more sign of meaning than the father's. There may have been on the one side and the other just the faintest glitter of recognition, as you see a bayonet shining out of an ambush; but each party fell back, when everything was again dark.

'And you, mon capitaine, where have you been?' says Esmond, turning away the conversation from this dangerous ground, where neither chose to engage.

'I may have been in Pekin,' says he, 'or I may have been in Paraguay—who knows where? I am now Captain von Holtz, in the service of his Electoral Highness, come to negotiate exchange of prisoners with his Highness of Savoy.'

'Twas well known that very many officers in our army were well affected toward the young king at St. Germains, whose right to the throne was undeniable, and whose accession to it, at the death of his sister, by far the greater part of the English people would have preferred to the having a petty German prince for a sovereign, about whose cruelty, rapacity, boorish manners and odious foreign ways, a thousand stories were current. It wounded our English pride to think that a shabby High-Dutch duke, whose revenues were not a tithe as great as those of many of the princes of our ancient English nobility, who could not speak a word of our language, and whom we chose to represent as a sort of German boor, feeding on train-oil and sauerkraut, with a bevy of mistresses in a barn, should come to reign over the proudest and most polished people in the world. Were we, the conquerors of the Grand Monarch, to submit to that ignoble domination? What did the Hanoverian's Protestantism matter to us? Was it not notorious—we were told and led to believe so—that one of the daughters of this Protestant hero was being bred up with no religion at all, as yet, and ready to be made Lutheran or Roman, according as the husband might be whom her parents should find for her? This talk, very idle and abusive most of it was, went on at a hundred mess tables in the army; there was scarce an ensign that did not hear it, or join in it, and everybody knew, or affected to know, that the commander in chief himself had relations with his nephew, the Duke of Berwick ('twas by an Englishman, thank God, that we were beaten at Almanza), and that his Grace was most anxious to restore the royal race of his benefactors and to repair his former treason.

This is certain, that for a considerable period no officer in the duke's army lost favor with the commander in chief for entertaining or proclaiming his loyalty toward the exiled family. When the Chevalier de St. George, as the King of England called himself, came with the dukes of the French blood royal to join the French army under Vendosme, hundreds of ours saw him and cheered him, and we all said he was like his father in this, who, seeing the action of La Hogue fought between the French ships and ours, was on the side of his native country during the battle. But this, at least, the chevalier knew, and everyone knew, that, however well our troops and their general might be inclined toward the prince personally, in the face of the enemy there was no question at all. Wherever my Lord Duke found a French army he would fight and beat it, as he did at Oudenarde two years after Ramillies, where his Grace achieved another of his transcendent victories; and the noble young prince, who charged gallantly along with the magnificent Maison du Roy, sent to compliment his conquerors after the action.

In this battle, where the young Electoral Prince of Hanover behaved himself very gallantly, fighting on our side, Esmond's dear General Webb distinguished himself prodigiously, exhibiting consummate skill and coolness as a general, and fighting with the personal bravery of a common soldier. Esmond's good luck again attended him; he escaped without a hurt, although more than a third of his regiment was killed, had again the honor to be favorably mentioned in his commander's report, and was advanced to the rank of major. But of this action there is little need to speak, as it hath been related in every gazette, and talked of in every hamlet in this country. To return from it to the writer's private affairs, which here, in his old age, and at a distance, he narrates for his children who come after him. Before Oudenarde, after that chance encounter with Captain von Holtz at Brussels, a space of more than a year elapsed, during which the captain of Jesuits and the captain of Webb's Fusileers were thrown very much together. Esmond had no difficulty in finding out (indeed the other made no secret of it to him, being assured from old times of his pupil's fidelity) that the negotiator of prisoners was an agent from St. Germains, and that he carried intelligence between great personages in our camp and that of the French. 'My business,' said he—'and I tell you, both because I can trust you, and your keen eyes have already discovered it—is between the King of England and his subjects here engaged in fighting the French king. As between you and them, all the Jesuits in the world will not prevent your quarreling; fight it out, gentlemen. St. George for England, I say—and you know who says so wherever he may be.'

I think Holt loved to make a parade of mystery, as it were, and would appear and disappear at our quarters as suddenly as he used to return and vanish in the old days at Castlewood. He had passes between both armies, and seemed to know (but with that inaccuracy which belonged to the good father's omniscience) equally well what passed in the French camp and in ours. One day he would give Esmond news of a great fête that took place in the French quarters, of a supper of M. de Rohan's, where there were play and violins, and then dancing and masques; the king drove thither in Marshal Villars' own guingette. Another day he had the news of his Majesty's ague; the king had not had a fit these ten days and might be said to be well. Captain Holtz made a visit to England during this time, so eager was he about negotiating prisoners; and 'twas on returning from this voyage that he began to open himself more to Esmond, and to make him, as occasion served, at their various meetings, several of those confidences which are here set down altogether.

The reason of his increased confidence was this: upon going to London, the old director of Esmond's aunt, the dowager, paid her ladyship a visit at Chelsey, and there learned from her that Captain Esmond was acquainted with the secret of his family, and was determined never to divulge it. The knowledge of this fact raised Esmond in his old tutor's eyes, so Holt was pleased to say, and he admired Harry very much for his abnegation.

'The family at Castlewood have done far more for me than my own ever did,' Esmond said. 'I would give my life for them. Why should I grudge the only benefit that 'tis in my power to confer on them?' The good father's eyes filled with tears at this speech, which to the other seemed very simple; he embraced Esmond and broke out into many admiring expressions; he said he was a noble cœur, that he was proud of him and fond of him as his pupil and friend—regretted more than ever that he had lost him and been forced to leave him in those early times, when he might have had an influence over him, have brought him into that only true Church to which the father belonged, and enlisted him in the noblest army in which a man ever engaged—meaning his own Society of Jesus, which numbers (says he) in its troops the greatest heroes the world ever knew; warriors brave enough to dare or endure anything, to encounter any odds, to die any death; soldiers that have won triumphs a thousand times more brilliant than those of the greatest general; that have brought nations on their knees to their sacred banner, the cross; that have achieved glories and palms incomparably brighter than those awarded to the most splendid earthly conquerors—crowns of immortal light and seats in the high places of heaven.

Esmond was thankful for his old friend’s good opinion, however little he might share the Jesuit father’s enthusiasm. ‘I have thought of that question too,’ says he, ‘dear father,’ and he took the other’s hand—thought it out for himself, as all men must, and contrive to do the right, and trust to Heaven as devoutly in my way as you in yours. Another six months of you as a child, and I had desired no better. I used to weep upon my pillow at Castlewood as I thought of you, and I might have been a brother of your order; and who knows, Esmond added with a smile, ‘a priest in full orders, and with a pair of mustaches, and a Bavarian uniform.’

‘My son,’ says Father Holt, turning red, ‘in the cause of religion and loyalty all disguises are fair.’

‘Yes,’ broke in Esmond, ‘all disguises are fair, you say; and all uniforms, say I, black or red—a black cockade or a white one, or a laced hat, or a sombrero, with a tonsure under it. I cannot believe that St. Francis Xavier sailed over the sea in a cloak or raised the dead—I tried, and very nearly did once—but cannot. Suffer me to do the right, and to hope for the best in my own way.’

Esmond wished to cut short the good father’s theology, and succeeded; and the other, sighing over his pupil’s invincible ignorance, did not withdraw his affection from him, but gave him his utmost confidence—as much, that is to say, as a priest can give; more than most do; for he was naturally garrulous and too eager to speak.

Holt’s friendship encouraged Captain Esmond to ask what he long wished to know, and none could tell him, some history of the poor mother whom he had often imagined in his dreams, and whom he never knew. He described to Holt those circumstances which are already put down in the first part of this story—the promise he had made to his dear lord, and that dying friend’s confession, and he besought Mr. Holt to tell him what he knew regarding the poor woman from whom he had been taken.
'She was of this very town,' Holt said, and took Esmond to see the street where her father lived, and where, as he believed, she was born. 'In 1676, when your father came hither in the retinue of the late king, then Duke of York, and banished hither in disgrace, Captain Thomas Esmond became acquainted with your mother, pursued her, and made a victim of her; he hath told me in many subsequent conversations, which I felt bound to keep private then, that she was a woman of great virtue and tenderness, and in all respects a most fond, faithful creature. He called himself Captain Thomas, having good reason to be ashamed of his conduct toward her, and hath spoken to me many times with sincere remorse for that, as with fond love for her many amiable qualities. He owned to having treated her very ill, and that at this time his life was one of profligacy, gambling, and poverty. She became with child of you; was cursed by her own parents at that discovery, though she never upbraided, except by her involuntary tears and the misery depicted on her countenance, the author of her wretchedness and ruin.

'Thomas Esmond—Captain Thomas, as he was called—became engaged in a gambling-house brawl, of which the consequence was a duel, and a wound so severe that he never—his surgeon said—could outlive it. Thinking his death certain, and touched with remorse, he sent for a priest of the very Church of St. Gudule where I met you, and on the same day, after his making submission to our Church, was married to your mother a few weeks before you were born. My Lord Viscount Castlewood, Marquis of Esmond, by King James' patent, which I myself took to your father, your lordship was christened at St. Gudule by the same curé who married your parents, and by the name of Henry Thomas, son of E. Thomas, officier Anglois, and Gertrude Maes. You see you belonged to us from your birth, and why I did not christen you when you became my dear little pupil at Castlewood.

'Your father's wound took a favorable turn—perhaps his conscience was eased by the right he had done—and to the surprise of the doctors he recovered. But as his health came back, his wicked nature, too, returned. He was tired of the poor girl whom he had ruined, and receiving some remittance from his uncle, my lord the old viscount, then in England, he pretended business, promised return, and never saw your poor mother more.

'He owned to me, in confession first, but afterward in talk before your aunt, his wife, else I never could have disclosed what I now tell you, that on coming to London he writ a pretended confession to poor Gertrude Maes—Gertrude Esmond—of his having been married in England previously, before uniting himself with her, said that his name was not Thomas, that he was about to quit Europe for the Virginian plantations, where, indeed, your family had a grant of land from King Charles I., sent her a supply of money, the half of the last hundred guineas he had, entreated her pardon, and bade her farewell.

'Poor Gertrude never thought that the news in this letter might be untrue as the rest of your father's conduct to her. But though a young man of her own degree, who knew her history, and whom she liked before she saw the English gentleman who was the cause of all her misery, offered to marry her, and to adopt you as his own child and give you his name, she refused him. This refusal only angered her father, who had taken her home; she never held up her head there, being the subject of constant unkindness after her fall; and some devout ladies of her acquaintance offering to pay a little pension for her, she went into a convent and you were put out to nurse.

'A sister of the young fellow who would have adopted you as his son was the person who took charge of you. Your mother and this person were cousins. She had just lost a child of her own, which you replaced, your own mother being too sick and feeble to feed you; and presently your nurse grew so fond of you that she even grudged letting you visit the convent where your mother was, and where the nuns petted the little infant as they pitied and loved its unhappy parent. Her vocation became stronger every day, and at the end of two years she was received as a sister of the house.

'Your nurse's family were silk weavers out of France, whither they returned to Arras, in French Flanders, shortly before your mother took her vows, carrying you with them, then a child of three years old. 'Twas a town, before the late vigorous measures of the French king, full of Protestants, and here your nurse's father, old Pastoureau, he with whom you afterward lived at Ealing, adopted the reformed doctrines, perverting all his house with him. They were expelled thence by the edict of his Most Christian Majesty, and came to London and set up their looms in Spittlefields. The old man brought a little money with him and carried on his trade, but in a poor way. He was a widower; by this time his daughter, a widow too, kept house for him, and his son and he labored together at their vocation. Meanwhile your father had pub-likely owned his conversion just before King Charles' death (in whom our Church had much such another convert), was reconciled to my Lord Viscount Castlewood, and married, as you know, to his daughter.
HISTORY OF HENRY ESMOND.

'It chanced that the younger Pastoureau, going with a piece of brocade to the mercer who employed him, on Ludgate Hill, met his old rival coming out of an ordinary there. Pastoureau knew your father at once, seized him by the collar, and upbraided him as a villain, who had seduced his mistress and afterward deserted her and her son. Mr. Thomas Esmond also recognized Pastoureau at once, besought him to calm his indignation and not to bring a crowd round about them; and bade him to enter into the tavern out of which he had just stepped, when he would give him any explanation. Pastoureau entered, and heard the landlord order the drawer to show Captain Thomas to a room; it was by his Christian name that your father was familiarly called at his tavern haunts, which, to say the truth, were none of the most reputable.

'I must tell you that Captain Thomas, or my Lord Viscount afterward, was never at a loss for a story, and could cajole a woman or a dun with a volubility, and an air of simplicity at the same time, of which many a creditor of his has been the dupe. His tales used to gather verisimilitude as he went on with them. He strung together fact after fact with a wonderful rapidity and coherence. It required, saving your presence, a very long habit of acquaintance with your father to know when his lordship was l—telling the truth or no.

'He told me with rueful remorse when he was ill—for the fear of death set him instantly repenting, and with shrieks of laughter when he was well, his lordship having a very great sense of humor—how in half an hour's time, and before a bottle was drunk, he had completely succeeded in biting poor Pastoureau. The seduction he owned to; that he could not help; he was quite ready with tears at a moment's warning, and shed them profusely to melt his credulous listener. He wept for your mother even more than Pastoureau did, who cried very heartily, poor fellow, as my lord informed me; he swore upon his honor that he had twice sent money to Brussels, and mentioned the name of the merchant with whom it was lying for poor Gertrude's use. He did not even know whether she had a child or no, or whether she was alive or dead; but got these facts easily out of honest Pastoureau's answers to him. When he heard that she was in a convent, he said he hoped to end his days in one himself, should he survive his wife, whom he hated, and had been forced by a cruel father to marry; and when he was told that Gertrude's son was alive, and actually in London, "I started," says he; "for then, damme, my wife was expecting to lie in, and I thought should this old Put, my father-in-law, run rusty, here would be a good chance to frighten him."

'He expressed the deepest gratitude to the Pastoureaux family for the care of the infant; you were now near six years old; and on Pastoureaux bluntly telling him, when he proposed to go that instant and see the darling child, that they never wished to see his ill-omened face again within their doors; that he might have the boy, though they should all be very sorry to lose him; and that they would take his money, they being poor, if he gave it; or bring him up by God's help, as they had hitherto done, without; he acquiesced in this at once, with a sigh, said, "Well, 'twas better that the dear child should remain with friends who had been so admirably kind to him;" and, in his talk to me afterward, honestly praised and admired the weaver's conduct and spirit; owned that the Frenchman was a right fellow, and he, the Lord have mercy upon him, a sad villain.

'Your father,' Mr. Holt went on to say, 'was good-natured with his money when he had it; and having that day received a supply from his uncle, gave the weaver ten pieces with perfect freedom, and promised him further remittances. He took down eagerly Pastoureaux's name and place of abode in his tablebook, and when the other asked him for his own, gave, with the utmost readiness, his name as Captain Thomas, New Lodge, Penzance, Cornwall; he said he was in London for a few days only on business connected with his wife's property; described her as a shrew, though a woman of kind disposition; and depicted his father as a Cornish squire, in an infirm state of health, at whose death he hoped for something handsome, when he promised richly to reward the admirable protector of his child, and to provide for the boy. "And by Gad, sir," he said to me in his strange, laughing way, "I ordered a piece of brocade of the very same pattern as that which the fellow was carrying, and presented it to my wife for a morning wrapper, to receive company after she lay in of our little boy."

'Your little pension was paid regularly enough, and when your father became Viscount Castlewood on his uncle's demise, I was employed to keep a watch over you, and 'twas at my instance that you were brought home. Your foster mother was dead; her father made acquaintance with a woman whom he married, who quarreled with his son. The faithful creature came back to Brussels to be near the woman he loved, and died, too, a few months before her. Will you see her cross in the convent cemetery? The Superior is an old penitent of mine, and remembers Sœur Marie Madeleine fondly still.

Esmond came to this spot in one sunny evening of spring, and saw, amid a thousand black crosses, casting their shadows across the grassy mounds, that particular one which marked his mother's resting place. Many more of those poor creatures that lay there had adopted that same name, with which sorrow had rebaptized her, and which fondly seemed to hint their individual story of love and grief. He fancied her in tears and darkness, kneeling at the foot of her cross, under which her cares were buried. Surely he knelt down and said his own prayer there, not in sorrow so much as in awe (for even his memory had no recollection of her), and in pity for the pangs which the gentle soul in life had been made to suffer. To this cross she brought them; for this heavenly bridegroom she exchanged the husband who had wooed her, the traitor who had left her. A thousand such hillocks lay round about, the gentle daisies springing out of the grass over them, and each bearing its cross and requiescat. A nun, veiled in black, was kneeling hard by, at a sleeping sister's bedside (so fresh made, that the spring had scarce had time to spin a coverlid for it); beyond the cemetery walls you had glimpses of life and the world, and the spires and gables of the city. A bird came down from a roof opposite, and lit first on a cross, and then on the grass below it, whence it flew away presently with a leaf in its mouth; then came a sound as of chanting, from the chapel of the sisters hard by; others had long since filled the place which poor Mary Madeleine once had there, were kneeling at the same stall, and hearing the same hymns and prayers in which her stricken heart had found consolation. Might she sleep in peace—might she sleep in peace; and we, too, when our struggles and pains are over! But the earth is the Lord's as the heaven is; we are alike his creatures here and yonder. I took a little flower off the hillock and kissed it, and went my way, like the bird that had just lighted on the cross by me, back into the world again. Silent receptacle of death; tranquil depth of calm, out of reach of tempest and trouble! I felt as one who had been walking below the sea, and treading amid the bones of shipwrecks.
CHAPTER XIV.

THE CAMPAIGN OF 1707, 1708.

During the whole of the year which succeeded that in which the glorious battle of Ramillies had been fought, our army made no movement of importance, much to the disgust of very many of our officers remaining inactive in Flanders, who said that his Grace the Captain General had had fighting enough, and was all for money now, and the enjoyment of his five thousand a year and his splendid palace at Woodstock, which was now being built. And his Grace had sufficient occupation fighting his enemies at home this year, where it began to be whispered that his favor was decreasing, and his duchess losing her hold on the Queen, who was transferring her royal affections to the famous Mrs. Masham, and Mrs. Masham's humble servant, Mr. Harley. Against their intrigues, our duke passed a great part of his time intriguing. Mr. Harley was got out of office, and his Grace, in so far, had a victory. But her Majesty, convinced against her will, was of that opinion still, of which the poet says people are when so convinced, and Mr. Harley before long had his revenge.

Meanwhile the business of fighting did not go on any way to the satisfaction of Marlborough's gallant lieutenants. During all 1707, with the French before us, we had never so much as a battle: our army in Spain was utterly routed at Almanza by the gallant Duke of Berwick; and we of Webb's, which regiment the young duke had commanded before his father's abdication, were a little proud to think that it was our colonel who had achieved this victory. 'I think if I had had Galway's place, and my Fusileers,' says our general, 'we would not have laid down our arms, even to our old colonel, as Galway did; and Webb's officers swore if we had had Webb, at least we would not have been taken prisoners. Our dear old general talked incautiously of himself and of others; a braver or a more brilliant soldier never lived than he; but he blew his honest trumpet rather more loudly than became a commander of his station, and, mighty man of valor as he was, shook his great spear and blustered before the army too fiercely.

Mysterious Mr. Holtz went off on a secret expedition in the early part of 1708, with great elation of spirits and a prophecy to Esmond that a wonderful something was about to take place. This secret came out on my friend's return to the army, whither he brought a most rueful and dejected countenance, and owned that the great something he had been engaged upon had failed utterly. He had been indeed with that luckless expedition of the Chevalier de St. George, who was sent by the French king with ships and an army from Dunkirk, and was to have invaded and conquered Scotland. But that ill wind which ever opposed all the projects upon which the prince ever embarked, prevented the chevalier's invasion of Scotland, as 'tis known, and blew poor Monsieur von Holtz back into our camp again, to scheme and foretell and to pry about as usual. The chevalier (the King of England as some of us held him) went from Dunkirk to the French army to make the campaign against us. The Duke of Burgundy had the command this year, having the Duke of Berry with him, and the famous Mareschal Vendosme and the Duke of Matignon to aid him in the campaign. Holtz, who knew everything that was passing in Flanders and France (and the Indies for what I know) insisted that there would be no more fighting in 1708 than there had been in the previous year, and that our commander had reasons for keeping him quiet. Indeed, Esmond's general, who was known as a grumbler, and to have a hearty mistrust of the great duke, and hundreds more officers besides, did not scruple to say that these private reasons came to the duke in the shape of crown pieces from the French king, by whom the generalissimo was bribed to avoid a battle. There were plenty of men in our lines, quidnuncs, to whom Mr. Webb listened only too willingly, who could specify the exact sums the duke got, how much fell to Cadogan's share, and what was the precise fee given to Dr. Hare.

And the successes with which the French began the campaign of 1708 served to give strength to these reports of treason which were in everybody's mouth. Our general allowed the enemy to get between us and Ghent, and declined to attack him, though for eight-and-forty hours the armies were in presence of each other. Ghent was taken, and on the same day M. de la Mothe summoned Bruges; and these two great cities fell into the hands of the French without firing a shot. A few days afterward La Mothe seized upon the fort of Plashendall; and it began to be supposed that all Spanish Flanders, as well as Brabant, would fall into the hands of the French troops; when the Prince Eugene arrived from the Mozelle, and then there was no more shilly-shallying.

The Prince of Savoy always signalized his arrival at the army by a great feast (my Lord Duke's entertainments were both seldom and shabby); and I remember our general returning from this dinner with the two commanders in chief; his honest head a little excited by wine, which was dealt out much more liberally by the Austrian than by the English commander. ‘Now,’ says my general, slapping the table, with an oath, ‘he must fight; and when he is forced to it, d—— it, no man in Europe can stand up against Jack Churchill.’ Within a week the battle of Oudenarde was fought, when, hate each other as they might, Esmond’s general and the commander in chief were forced to admire each other, so splendid was the gallantry of each upon this day.

The brigade commanded by Major General Webb gave and received about as hard knocks as any that were delivered in that action, in which Mr. Esmond had the fortune to serve at the head of his own company in his regiment, under the command of their own colonel as major general; and it was his good luck to bring the regiment out of action as commander of it, the four senior officers above him being killed in the prodigious slaughter which happened on that day. I like to think that Jack Haythorn, who sneered at me for being a bastard and a parasite of Webb’s, as he chose to call me, and with whom I had had words, shook hands with me the day before the battle begun. Three days before poor Bruce, our lieutenant colonel, had heard of his elder brother’s death, and was heir to a baronetcy in Norfolk, and four thousand a year. Fate, that had left him harmless through a dozen campaigns, seized on him just as the world was worth living for, and he went into action knowing, as he said, that the luck was going to turn against him. The major had just joined us—a creature of Lord Marlborough, put in much to the dislike of the other officers, and to be a spy upon us, as it was said. I know not whether the truth was so, nor who took the tattle of our mess to headquarters, but Webb’s regiment, as its colonel, was known to be in the commander in chief’s black books. ‘And if he did not dare to break it up at home,’ our gallant old chief used to say, ‘he was determined to destroy it before the enemy,’ so that poor Major Proudfoot was put into a post of danger.

Esmond’s dear young viscount, serving as aid-de-camp to my Lord Duke, received a wound and won an honorable name for himself in the Gazette; and Captain Esmond’s name was sent in for promotion by his general, too, whose favorite he was. It made his heart beat to think that certain eyes at home, the brightest in the world, might read the page on which his humble services were recorded; but his mind was made up steadily to keep out of their dangerous influence, and to let time and absence conquer that passion he had still lurking about him. Away from Beatrix it did not trouble him, but he knew as certain that if he returned home his fever would break out again, and avoided Walcote as a Lincolnshire man avoids returning to his fens, where he is sure that the ague is lying in wait for him.

We of the English party in the army, who were inclined to sneer at everything that came out of Hanover, and to treat as little better than boors and savages the Elector's Court and family, were yet forced to confess that on the day of Oudenarde the young Electoral Prince, then making his first campaign, conducted himself with the spirit and courage of an approved soldier. On this occasion his Electoral Highness had better luck than the King of England, who was with his cousins in the enemy's camp, and had to run with them at the ignominious end of the day. With the most consummate generals in the world before them, and an admirable commander on their own side, they chose to neglect his counsels, and to rush into a combat with the former which would have ended in the utter annihilation of their army but for the great skill and bravery of the Duke of Vendosme, who remedied, as far as courage and genius might, the disasters occasioned by the squabbles and follies of his kinsmen, the legitimate princes of the blood royal.

"If the Duke of Berwick had but been in the army, the fate of the day would have been very different," was all that poor Mr. Von Holtz could say, "and you would have seen that the hero of Almanza was fit to measure swords with the conqueror of Blenheim."

The business relative to the exchange of prisoners was always going on, and was at least that ostensible one which kept Mr. Holtz perpetually on the move between the forces of the French and the Allies. I can answer for it that he was once very near hanged as a spy by Major General Wayne, when he was released and sent on to headquarters by a special order of the commander in chief. He came and went, always favored, wherever he was, by some high though occult protection. He carried messages between the Duke of Berwick and his uncle, our duke. He seemed to know as well what was taking place in the prince's quarter as our own; he brought the compliments of the King of England to some of our officers, the gentlemen of Webb's among the rest, for their behavior on that great day; and after Wynendale, when our general was chafing at the neglect of our commander in chief, he said he knew how that action was regarded by the chiefs of the French army, and that the stand made before Wynendael wood was the passage by which the Allies entered Lille.

'Ah!' said Holtz (and some folks were very willing to listen to him), 'if the king came by his own, how changed the conduct of affairs would be! His Majesty's very exile has this advantage, that he is enabled to read England impartially, and to judge honestly of all the eminent men. His sister is always in the hand of one greedy favorite or another, through whose eyes she sees, and to whose flattery or dependents she gives away everything. Do you suppose that his Majesty, knowing England so well as he does, would neglect such a man as General Webb? He ought to be in the House of Peers, as Lord Lydiard. The enemy and all Europe know his merit; it is that very reputation which certain great people who hate all equality and independence can never pardon.' It was intended that these conversations should be carried to Mr. Webb. They were welcome to him, for great as his services were, no man could value them more than John Richmond Webb did himself, and the differences between him and Marlborough being notorious, his Grace's enemies in the army and at home began to court Webb and set him up against the all-grasping domineering chief. And soon after the victory of Oudenarde a glorious opportunity fell into General Webb's way, which that gallant warrior did not neglect, and which gave him the means of immensely increasing his reputation at home.

After Oudenarde, and against the counsels of Marlborough, it was said, the Prince of Savoy sat down before Lille, the capital of French Flanders, and commenced that siege, the most celebrated of our time, and almost as famous as the siege of Troy itself, for the feats of valor performed in the assault and the defense. The enmity of that Prince of Savoy against the French king was a furious personal hate, quite unlike the calm hostility of our great English general, who was no more moved by the game of war than that of billiards, and pushed forward his squadrons, and drove his red battalions hither and thither as calmly as he would combine a stroke or make a cannon with the balls. The game over (and he played it so as to be pretty sure to win it), not the least animosity against the other party remained in the breast of this consummate tactician; whereas, between the Prince of Savoy and the French, it was guerre à mort. Beaten off in one quarter, as he had been at Toulon in the last year, he was back again on another frontier of France, assailing it with his indefatigable fury. When the prince came to the army, the smoldering fires of war were lighted up and burst out into a flame. Our phlegmatic Dutch allies were made to advance at a quick march, our calm duke forced into action. The prince was an army in himself against the French; the energy of his hatred, prodigious, indefatigable—infectious over hundreds of thousands of men. The Emperor's general was repaying, and with a vengeance, the slight the French king had put upon the fiery little abbé of Savoy. Brilliant and famous as a leader himself, and beyond all measure daring and intrepid, and enabled to cope with almost the best of those famous men of war who commanded the armies of the French king, Eugene had a weapon the equal of which could not be found in France, since the cannon-shot of Salzbach laid low the noble Turenne, and could hurl Marlborough at the heads of the French host, and crush them as with a rock, under which all the gathered strength of their strongest captains must go down.

The English duke took little part in that vast siege of Lille, which the Imperial generalissimo pursued with all his force and vigor, further than to cover the besieging lines from the Duke of Burgundy's army, between which and the Imperialists our duke lay. Once, when Prince Eugene was wounded, our duke took his Highness' place in the trenches; but the siege was with the Imperialists, not with us. A division under Webb and Rantzau was detached in Artois and Picardy upon the most painful and odious service that Mr. Esmond ever saw in the course of his military life. The wretched towns of the defenseless provinces, whose young men had been drafted away into the French armies, which year after year the insatiable war devoured, were left at our mercy; and our orders were to show them none. We found places garrisoned by invalids and children and women; poor as they were, and as the costs of this miserable war had made them, our commission was to rob these almost starving wretches—to tear the food out of their granaries and strip them of their rags. 'Twas an expedition of rape and murder we were sent on; our soldiers did deeds such as an honest man must blush to remember. We brought back money and provisions in quantity to the duke's camp; there had been no one to resist us, and yet who dares to tell with what murder and violence, with what brutal cruelty, outrage, insult, that ignoble booty had been ravished from the innocent and miserable victims of the war?

Meanwhile, gallantly as the operations before Lille had been conducted, the Allies had made but little progress, and 'twas said when we returned to the Duke of Marlborough's camp, that the siege would never be brought to a satisfactory end, and that the Prince of Savoy would be forced to raise it. My Lord Marlborough gave this as his opinion openly; those who mistrusted him, and Mr. Esmond owns himself to be of the number, hinted that the duke had his reasons why Lille should not be taken, and that he was paid to that end by the French king. If this was so, and I believe it, General Webb had now a remarkable opportunity of gratifying his hatred of the commander in chief, of balking that shameful avarice which was one of the basest and most notorious qualities of the famous duke, and of showing his own consummate skill as a commander. And when I consider all the circumstances preceding the event, which will now be related; that my Lord Duke was actually offered certain millions of crowns provided that the siege of Lille should be raised; that the Imperial army before it was without provisions and ammunition, and must have decamped but for the supplies that they received; that the march of the convoy destined to relieve the siege was accurately known to the French; and that the force covering it was shamefully inadequate to that end, and by six times inferior to Count de la Mothe's army, which was sent to intercept the convoy; when 'tis certain that the Duke of Berwick, De la Mothe's chief, was in constant correspondence with his uncle, the English generalissimo; I believe on my conscience that 'twas my Lord Marlborough's intention to prevent those supplies, of which the Prince of Savoy stood in absolute need, from ever reaching his Highness; that he meant to sacrifice the little army which covered this convoy, and to betray it as he had betrayed Tollemache at Brest; as he had betrayed every friend he had, to further his own schemes of avarice or ambition. But for the miraculous victory which Esmond's general won over an army six or seven times greater than his own, the siege of Lille must have been raised; and it must be remembered that our gallant little force was under the command of a general whom Marlborough hated, that he was furious with the conqueror, and tried by the most open and shameless injustice afterward to rob him of the credit of his victory.

CHAPTER XV.

GENERAL WEBB WINS THE BATTLE OF WYNENDAEL.

By the besiegers and besieged of Lille, some of the most brilliant feats of valor were performed that ever illustrated any war. On the French side (whose gallantry was prodigious, the skill and bravery of Marshal Boufflers actually eclipsing those of his conqueror, the Prince of Savoy) may be mentioned that daring action of MM. de Luxembourg and Tournefort, who, with a body of horse and dragoons, carried powder into the town, of which the besieged were in extreme want, each soldier bringing a bag with forty pounds of powder behind him; with which perilous provision they engaged our own horse, faced the fire of the foot brought out to meet them, and though half of the men were blown up in the dreadful errand they rode on, a part of them got into the town with the succors of which the garrison was so much in want. A French officer, M. du Bois, performed an act equally daring, and perfectly successful.
The duke's great army lying at Helchin, and covering the siege, and it being necessary for M. de Vendorsme to get news of the condition of the place, Captain Dubois performed his famous exploit; not only passing through the lines of the siege, but swimming afterward no less than seven moats and ditches, and coming back the same way, swimming with his letters in his mouth.

By these letters M. de Boufflers said that he could undertake to hold the place till October; and that if one of the convoys of the allies could be intercepted, they must raise the siege altogether.

Such a convoy as hath been said was now prepared at Ostend, and about to march for the siege; and on the 27th September we (and the French too) had news that it was on its way. It was composed of 700 wagons, containing ammunition of all sorts, and was escorted out of Ostend by 2000 infantry and 300 horse. At the same time M. de la Mothe quitted Bruges, having with him five-and-thirty battalions, and upward of sixty squadrons and forty guns, in pursuit of the convoy.

Major General Webb had meanwhile made up a force of twenty battalions and three squadrons of dragoons at Turout, whence he moved to cover the convoy and pursue La Mothe:
with whose advanced guard ours came up upon the great plain of Turout, and before the little wood and castle of Wynendael; behind which the convoy was marching.

As soon as they came in sight of the enemy, our advanced troops were halted, with the wood behind them, and the rest of our force brought up as quickly as possible, our little body of horse being brought forward to the opening of the plain, as our general said, to amuse the enemy. When M. la Mothe came up, he found us posted in two lines in front of the wood; and formed his own army in battle facing ours, in eight lines, four of infantry in front, and dragoons and cavalry behind.
The French began the action, as usual, with a cannonade which lasted three hours, when they made their attack, advancing in eight lines, four of foot and four of horse, upon the allied troops in the wood where we were posted. The infantry behaved ill; they were ordered to charge with the bayonet, but, instead, began to fire, and almost at the very first discharge from our men, broke and fled. The cavalry behaved better; with these alone, who were three or four times as numerous as our whole force, M. de la Mothe might have won victory; but only two of our battalions were shaken in the least, and these speedily rallied; nor could the repeated attacks of the French horse cause our troops to budge an inch from the position in the wood in which our general had placed them.

After attacking for two hours the French retired at nightfall, entirely foiled. With all the loss we had inflicted upon him, the enemy was still three times stronger than we: and it could not be supposed that our general could pursue M. de la Mothe, or do much more than hold our ground about the wood, from which the Frenchman had in vain attempted to dislodge us. La Mothe retired behind his forty guns, his cavalry protecting them better than it had been enabled to annoy us; and meanwhile the convoy, which was of more importance than all our little force, and the safe passage of which we would have dropped to the last man to accomplish, marched away in perfect safety during the action, and joyfully reached the besieging camp before Lille.

Major General Cadogan, my Lord Duke’s quartermaster general (and between whom and Mr. Webb there was no love lost), accompanied the convoy, and joined Mr. Webb with a couple of hundred horse just as the battle was over and the enemy in full retreat. He offered, readily enough, to charge with his horse upon the French as they fell back; but his force was too weak to inflict any damage upon them; and Mr. Webb, commanding as Cadogan’s senior, thought enough was done in holding our ground before an enemy that might still have overwhelmed us had we engaged him in the open territory, and in securing the safe passage of the convoy. Accordingly, the horse brought up by Cadogan did not draw a sword; and only prevented, by the good countenance they showed, any disposition the French might have had to renew the attack on us. And no attack coming, at nightfall General Cadogan drew off with his squadron, being bound for headquarters, the two generals, at parting, grimly saluting each other.
'He will be at Roncq time enough to lick my Lord Duke's trenchers at supper,' says Mr. Webb.

Our own men lay out in the woods of Wynendael that night, and our general had his supper in the little castle there.

'If I was Cadogan, I would have a peerage for this day's work,' General Webb said; 'and, Harry, thou shouldst have a regiment. Thou hast been reported in the last two actions; thou wast near killed in the first. I shall mention thee in my dispatch to his Grace the Commander in Chief, and recommend thee to poor Dick Harwood's vacant majority. Have you ever a hundred guineas to give Cardonnel? Slip them into his hand to-morrow, when you go to headquarters with my report.'

In this report the major general was good enough to mention Captain Esmond's name with particular favor; and that gentleman carried the dispatch to headquarters the next day, and was not a little pleased to bring back a letter by his Grace's secretary addressed to Lieutenant General Webb. The Dutch officer dispatched by Count Nassau Woudenbourg, Vaelt-Mareschal Auverquerque's son, brought back also a complimentary letter to his commander, who had seconded Mr. Webb in the action with great valor and skill.

Esmond, with a low bow and a smiling face, presented his dispatch, and saluted Mr. Webb as lieutenant general, as he gave it in. The gentlemen round about him—he was riding with his suite on the road to Menin as Esmond came up with him—gave a cheer, and he thanked them, and opened the dispatch with rather a flushed, eager face.

He slapped it down on his boot in a rage after he had read it. 'Tis not even writ with his own hand. Read it out, Esmond.' And Esmond read it out:

Sir: Mr. Cadogan is just now come in, and has acquainted me with the success of the action you had yesterday in the afternoon against the body of troops commanded by M. de la Mothe, at Wynendael, which must be attributed chiefly to your good conduct and resolution. You may be sure I shall do you justice at home, and be glad on all occasions to own the service you have done in securing this convoy.

Yours, etc., M.

'Two lines by that d—d Cardonnel, and no more, for the taking of Lille, for beating five times our number, for an action as brilliant as the best he ever fought,' says poor Mr. Webb. 'Lieutenant General! That's not his doing. I was the oldest major general. By ——, I believe he had been better pleased if I had been beat.'

The letter to the Dutch officer was in French, and longer and more complimentary than that to Mr. Webb.

'And this is the man,' he broke out, 'that's gorged with gold—that's covered with titles and honors that we won for him—and that grudges even a line of praise to a comrade in arms! Hasn't he enough? Don't we fight that he may roll in riches? Well, well, wait for the Gazette, gentlemen. The queen and the country will do us justice if his Grace denies it us.' There were tears of rage in the brave warrior's eyes as he spoke, and he dashed them off his face on to his glove. He shook his fist in the air. 'Oh, by the Lord!' says he, 'I know what I'd rather have than a peerage!'

'And what is that, sir?' some of them asked.

'I had rather have a quarter of an hour with John Churchill, on a fair green field, and only a pair of rapiers between my shirt and his—'

'Sir?' interposes one.

'Tell him so! I know that's what you mean. I know every word goes to him that's dropped from every general officer's mouth. I don't say he's not brave. Curse him! he's brave enough; but we'll wait for the Gazette, gentlemen. God save her Majesty! she'll do us justice.'

The Gazette did not come to us till a month afterward, when my general and his officers had the honor to dine with Prince Eugene in Lille; his Highness being good enough to say that we had brought the provisions and ought to share in the banquet. 'Twas a great banquet. His Grace of Marlborough was on his Highness' right, and on his left the Maréchal de Boufflers, who had so bravely defended the place. The chief officers of either army were present; and you may be sure Esmond's general was splendid this day; his tall, noble person, and manly beauty of face, made him remarkable anywhere; he wore, for the first time, the star of the Order of Generosity, that his Prussian Majesty had sent to him for his victory. His Highness the Prince of Savoy called a toast to the conqueror of Wynendael. My Lord Duke drank it with rather a sickly smile. The aids-de-camp were present; and Harry Esmond and his dear young lord were together, as they always strove to be when duty would permit; they were over against the table where the generals were, and could see all that passed pretty well. Frank laughed at my Lord Duke's glum face; the affair of Wynendael, and the captain general's conduct to Webb, had been the talk of the whole army. When his Highness spoke, and gave—'Le vainqueur de Wynendael; son armée et sa victoire,' adding, 'qui nous font diner à Lille aujourd'hui?—there was a great cheer through the hall; for Mr. Webb's bravery, generosity, and very weaknesses of character caused him to be beloved in the army.
'Like Hector, handsome, and like Paris, brave!' whispers Frank Castlewood. 'A Venus, an elderly Venus, couldn't refuse him a pippin. Stand up, Harry. See, we are drinking the army of Wynendael. Ramillies is nothing to it. Huzzay! huzzay!'

At this very time, and just after our general had made his acknowledgment, someone brought in an English Gazette—and was passing it from hand to hand down the table. Officers were eager enough to read it; mothers and sisters at home must have sickened over it. There scarce came out a Gazette for six years that did not tell of some heroic death or some brilliant achievement.

'Here it is—Action of Wynendael—here you are, general,' says Frank, seizing hold of the little dingy paper that soldiers love to read so; and, scrambling over from our bench, he went to where the general sat, who knew him, and had seen many a time at his table his laughing, handsome face, which everybody loved who saw. The generals in their great perukes made way for him. He handed the paper over General Dohna's buff coat to our general on the opposite side.

He came hobbling back, and blushing at his feat. 'I thought he'd like it, Harry,' the young fellow whispered. 'Didn't I like to read my name after Ramillies, in the London Gazette? 'Viscount Castlewood serving a volunteer'—I say, what's yonder?'

Mr. Webb, reading the Gazette, looked very strange—slapped it down on the table—then sprang up in his place and began to—'Will your Highness please to—'

His Grace the Duke of Marlborough here jumped up too—'There's some mistake, my dear General Webb.'

'Your Grace had better rectify it,' says Mr. Webb, holding out the letter; but he was five off his Grace the Prince-Duke, who, besides, was higher than the general (being seated with the Prince of Savoy, the Electoral Prince of Hanover, and the envoys of Prussia and Denmark, under a baldachin), and Webb could not reach him, tall as he was.

'Stay,' says he, with a smile, as if catching at some idea, and then, with a perfect courtesy, drawing his sword, he ran the Gazette through with the point, and said, 'Permit me to hand it to your Grace.'

The duke looked very black. 'Take it,' says he, to his master of the horse, who was waiting behind him.

The lieutenant general made a very low bow, and retired and finished his glass. The Gazette in which Mr. Cardonnel, the duke's secretary, gave an account of the victory of Wynendaal, mentioned Mr. Webb's name, but gave the sole praise and conduct of the action to the duke's favorite, Mr. Cadogan.

There was no little talk and excitement occasioned by this strange behavior of General Webb, who had almost drawn a sword upon the commander in chief; but the general, after the first outbreak of his anger, mastered it outwardly altogether; and, by his subsequent behavior, had the satisfaction of even more angering the commander in chief than he could have done by any public exhibition of resentment.

On returning to his quarters, and consulting with his chief adviser, Mr. Esmond, who was now entirely in the general's confidence, and treated by him as a friend, and almost a son, Mr. Webb writ a letter to his Grace the Commander in Chief, in which he said:

Your Grace must be aware that the sudden perusal of the London Gazette, in which your Grace's secretary, Mr. Cardonnel, hath mentioned Major General Cadogan's name as the officer commanding in the late action of Wynendaal, must have caused a feeling of anything but pleasure to the general who fought that action.

Your Grace must be aware that Mr. Cadogan was not even present at the battle, though he arrived with squadrons of horse at its close and put himself under the command of his superior officer. And as the result of the battle of Wynendaal, in which Lieutenant General Webb had the good fortune to command, was the capture of Lille, the relief of Brussels, then invested by the enemy under the Elector of Bavaria, the restoration of the great cities of Ghent and Bruges, of which the enemy (by treason within the walls) had got possession in the previous year, Mr. Webb cannot consent to forego the honors of such a success and service for the benefit of Mr. Cadogan or any other person.

As soon as the military operations of the year are over, Lieutenant General Webb will request permission to leave the army and return to his place in Parliament, where he gives notice to his Grace the Commander in Chief, that he shall lay his case before the House of Commons, the country, and her Majesty the Queen.

By his eagerness to rectify that false statement of the Gazette, which had been written by his Grace's secretary, Mr. Cardonnel, Mr. Webb, not being able to reach his Grace the Commander in Chief on account of the gentlemen seated between them, placed the paper containing the false statement on his sword, so that it might more readily arrive in the hands of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, who surely would wish to do justice to every officer of his army.

Mr. Webb knows his duty too well to think of insubordination to his superior officer, or of using his sword in a campaign against any but the enemies of her Majesty. He solicits permission to return to England immediately the military duties will permit, and take with him to England Captain Esmond of his regiment, who acted as his aide-de-camp and was present during the entire action, and noted by his watch the time when Mr. Cadogan arrived at its close.

The commander in chief could not but grant this permission, nor could he take notice of Webb's letter, though it was couched in terms the most insulting. Half the army believed that the cities of Ghent and Bruges were given up by a treason which some in our army very well understood; that the commander in chief would not have relieved Lille if he could have helped himself; that he would not have fought that year had not the Prince of Savoy forced him. When the battle once began, then, for his own renown, my Lord Marlborough would fight as no man in the world ever fought better, and no bribe on earth could keep him from beating the enemy.*

But the matter was taken up by the subordinates, and half the army might have been by the ears if the quarrel had not been stopped. General Cadogan sent an intimation to General Webb to say that he was ready if Webb liked, and would meet him. This was a kind of invitation our stout old general was always too ready to accept, and ’twas with great difficulty we got the general to reply that he had no quarrel with Mr. Cadogan, who had behaved with perfect gallantry, but only with those at headquarters who had belied him. Mr. Cardonnel offered General Webb reparation. Mr. Webb said he had a cane at the service of Mr. Cardonnel, and the only satisfaction he wanted from him was one he was not likely to get, namely, the truth. The officers in our staff of Webb’s and those in the immediate suite of the general were ready to come to blows, and hence arose the only affair in which Mr. Esmond was engaged as principal, and that was from a revengeful wish to wipe off an old injury.

My Lord Mohun, who had a troop in Lord Macclesfield’s regiment of the Horse Guards, rode this campaign with the duke. He had sunk by this time to the very worst reputation; he had had another fatal duel in Spain; he had married and forsaken his wife; he was a gambler, a profligate, and debauchee. He joined just before Oudenarde, and, as Esmond feared, as soon as Frank Castlewood heard of his arrival, Frank was for seeking him out and killing him. The wound my lord got at Oudenarde prevented their meeting, but that was nearly healed, and Mr. Esmond trembled daily lest any chance should bring his boy and this known assassin together. They met at the mess table of Handyside’s regiment at Lille, the officer commanding not knowing of the feud between the two noblemen.

Esmond had not seen the hateful handsome face of Mohun for nine years, since they had met on that fatal night in Leices-

* Our grandfather’s hatred of the Duke of Marlborough appears all through his account of these campaigns. He always persisted that the duke was the greatest traitor and soldier history ever told of, and declared that he took bribes on all hands during the war. My Lord Marquis (for so we may call him here, though he never went by any other name than Colonel Esmond) was in the habit of telling many stories which he did not put down in his memoirs and which he had from his friend the Jesuit, who was not always correctly informed, and who persisted that Marlborough was looking for a bribe of two millions of crowns before the campaign of Ramillies.

And our grandmother used to tell us children that in his first presentation to my Lord Duke, the duke turned his back upon my grandfather, and said to the duchess, who told me Lady Dowager at Chelsey, who afterward told Colonel Esmond, ‘Tom Esmond’s bastard has been to my levee: he has the hang-dog look of his rogue of a father’—an expression which my grandfather never forgave. He was as constant in his dislikes as in his attachments, and exceedingly partial to Webb, whose side he took against the more celebrated genera. We have General Webb’s portrait now at Castlewood, Va.
ter Field. It was degraded with crime and passion now; it wore the anxious look of a man who has three deaths, and who knows how many hidden shames, and lusts, and crimes on his conscience. He bowed with a sickly low bow, and slunk away when our host presented us round to one another. Frank Castlewood had not known him till then, so changed was he. He knew the boy well enough.

'Twas curious to look at the two—especially the young man, whose face flushed up when he heard the hated name of the other; and who said in his bad French and his brave boyish voice—'He had long been anxious to meet my Lord Mohun.' The other only bowed, and moved away from him. I do him justice, he wished to have no quarrel with the lad.

Esmond put himself between them at table. 'D—it,' says Frank, 'why do you put yourself in the place of a man who is above you in degree? My Lord Mohun should walk after me. I want to sit by my Lord Mohun.'

Esmond whispered to Lord Mohun that Frank was hurt in the leg at Oudenarde, and besought the other to be quiet. Quiet enough he was for some time, disregarding the many taunts which young Castlewood flung at him, until after several healths, when my Lord Mohun got to be rather in liquor.

'Will you go away, my lord?' Mr. Esmond said to him, imploring him to quit the table.

'No, by G——,' said my Lord Mohun. 'I'll not go away for any man;' he was quite flushed with wine by this time.

The talk got round to the affairs of yesterday. Webb had offered to challenge the commander in chief; Webb had been ill-used; Webb was the bravest, handsomest, vainest man in the army. Lord Mohun did not know that Esmond was Webb's aid-de-camp. He began to tell some stories against the general; which, from t'other side of Esmond, young Castlewood contradicted.

'I can't bear any more of this,' says my Lord Mohun.

'Nor can I, my lord,' says Mr. Esmond, starting up. 'The story my Lord Mohun has told respecting General Webb is false, gentlemen—false, I repeat;' and making a low bow to Lord Mohun, and without a single word more, Esmond got up and left the dining room. These affairs were common enough among the military of those days. There was a garden behind the house, and all the party turned instantly into it; and the two gentlemen's coats were off and their points engaged within two minutes after Esmond's words had been spoken. If Captain Esmond had put Mohun out of the world, as he might, a villain would have been punished and spared further villainies—but who is one man to punish another? I declare upon my honor that my only thought was to prevent Lord Mohun from mischief with Frank, and the end of this meeting was that, after half a dozen passes, my lord went home with a hurt which prevented him from lifting his right arm for three months.

'O Harry! why didn't you kill the villain?' young Castlewood asked. 'I can't walk without a crutch; but I could have met him on horseback with sword and pistol.' But Harry Esmond said, 'Twas best to have no man's life on one's conscience, not even that villain's.' And this affair, which did not occupy three minutes, being over, the gentlemen went back to their wine, and my Lord Mohun to his quarters, where he was laid up with a fever which had spared mischief had it proved fatal. And very soon after this affair Harry Esmond and his general left the camp for London; whither a certain reputation had preceded the captain, for my Lady Castlewood of Chelsey received him as if he had been a conquering hero.

She gave a great dinner to Mr. Webb, where the general's chair was crowned with laurels; and her ladyship called Esmond's health in a toast, to which my kind general was graciously pleased to bear the strongest testimony; and took down a mob of at least forty coaches to cheer our general as he came out of the House of Commons, the day when he received the thanks of Parliament for his action. The mob huzzaed and applauded him, as well as the fine company: it was splendid to see him waving his hat, and bowing, and laying his hand upon his Order of Generosity. He introduced Mr. Esmond to Mr. St. John and the Right Honorable Robert Harley, Esquire, as he came out of the House, walking between them; and was pleased to make many flattering observations regarding Mr. Esmond's behavior during the three last campaigns.

Mr. St John (who had the most winning presence of any man I ever saw, excepting always my peerless young Frank Castlewood) said he had heard of Mr. Esmond before from Captain Steele, and how he had helped Mr. Addison to write his famous poem of the 'Campaign.'

'Twas as great an achievement as the victory of Blenheim itself,' Mr. Harley said, who was famous as a judge and patron of letters, and so, perhaps, it may be—though for my part I think there are twenty beautiful lines, but all the rest is commonplace, and Mr. Addison's hymn worth a thousand such poems.

All the town was indignant at my Lord Duke's unjust treatment of General Webb, and applauded the vote of thanks which the House of Commons gave to the general for his victory of Wynendael. 'Tis certain that the capture of Lille was the consequence of that lucky achievement, and the humiliation of the old French king, who was said to suffer more at the loss of this great city than from any of the former victories our troops had won over him. And, I think, no small part of Mr. Webb's exultation at his victory arose from the idea that Marlborough had been disappointed of a great bribe the French king had promised him, should the siege be raised. The very sum of money offered to him was mentioned by the duke's enemies and honest Mr. Webb chuckled at the notion, not only of beating the French, but of beating Marlborough too, and intercepting a convoy of three millions of French crowns, that were on their way to the generalissimo's insatiable pockets. When the general's lady went to the queen's drawing room, all the Tory women crowded round her with congratulations, and made her a train greater than the Duchess of Marlborough's own. Feasts were given to the general by all the chiefs of the Tory party, who vaunted him as the duke's equal in military skill; and perhaps used the worthy soldier as their instrument, while he thought they were but acknowledging his merits as a commander. As the general's aid-de-camp and favorite officer, Mr. Esmond came in for a share of his chief's popularity, and was presented to her Majesty, and advanced to the rank of lieutenant colonel at the request of his grateful chief.

We may be sure there was one family in which any good fortune that happened to Esmond caused such a sincere pride and pleasure that he, for his part, was thankful he could make them so happy. With these fond friends, Blenheim and Oudenarde seemed to be mere trifling incidents of the war, and Wynendael was its crowning victory. Esmond's mistress never tired to hear accounts of the battle; and I think General Webb's lady grew jealous of her, for the general was forever at Kensington, and talking on that delightful theme. As for his aid-de-camp, though, no doubt, Esmond's own natural vanity was pleased at the little share of reputation which his good fortune had won him, yet it was chiefly precious to him he may say so, now that he hath long since outlived it) because it pleased his mistress, and, above all, because Beatrix valued it.

As for the old dowager of Chelsey, never was an old woman in all England more delighted nor more gracious than she. Esmond had his quarters in her ladyship's house, where the domestics were instructed to consider him as their master. She bade him give entertainments, of which she defrayed the charges, and was charmed when his guests were carried away tipsy in their coaches. She must have his picture taken; and accordingly he was painted by Mr. Jervas, in his red coat, and smiling upon a bombshell, which was bursting at the corner of the piece. She vowed that unless he made a great match she should never die easy, and was forever bringing young ladies to Chelsey, with pretty faces and pretty fortunes, at the disposal of the colonel. He smiled to think how times were altered with him, and of the early days in his father's lifetime, when a trembling page he stood before her, with her ladyship's basin and ewer, or crouched on her coach-step. The only fault she found with him was that he was more sober than an Esmond ought to be; and would neither be carried to bed by his valet, nor lose his heart to any beauty, whether of St. James' or Covent Garden.

What is the meaning of fidelity in love, and whence the birth of it? 'Tis a state of mind that men fall into, and depending on the man rather than the woman. We love being in love, that's the truth on't. If we had not met Joan, we should have met Kate, and adored her. We know our mistresses are no better than many other women, nor no prettier, nor no wiser, nor no wittier. 'Tis not for these reasons we love a woman, or for any special quality or charm I know of; we might as well demand that a lady should be the tallest woman in the world, like the Shropshire giantess,* as that she should be a paragon in any other character, before we began to love her. Esmond's mistress had a thousand faults besides her charms; he knew both perfectly well! She was imperious, she was light-minded, she was flighty, she was false, she had no reverence in her character; she was everything, even in beauty, the contrast of her mother, who was the most devoted and the least selfish of women. Well, from the very first moment he saw her on the stairs at Walcote, Esmond knew he loved Beatrix. There might be better women—he wanted that one. He cared for none other. Was it because she was gloriously beautiful? Beautiful as she was, he had heard people say a score of times in their company that Beatrix's mother looked as young, and was the handsomer of the two. Why did her voice thrill in his ear so? She could not sing near so well as Nicolini or Mrs. Tofts; nay, she sang out of tune, and yet he liked to hear her better than St. Cecilia. She had not a finer complexion than Mrs. Steele (Dick's wife, whom he had now got, and who

* 'Tis not thus woman loves: Col. E. hath owned to this, folly for a score of women besides.—R. ruled poor Dick with a rod of pickle), and yet to see her dazzled Esmond: he would shut his eyes, and the thought of her dazzled him all the same. She was brilliant and lively in talk, but not so incomparably witty as her mother, who, when she was cheerful, said the finest things; but yet to hear her, and to be with her, was Esmond's greatest pleasure. Days passed away between him and these ladies, he scarce knew how. He poured his heart out to them, so as he never could in any other company, where he had generally passed for being moody, or supercilious and silent. This society* was more delightful than that of the greatest wits to him. May Heaven pardon him the lies he told the dowager of Chelsey, in order to get a pretext for going away to Kensington; the business at the Ordnance which he invented; the interview with his general, the courts and statesmen's levées which he didn't frequent and describe; who wore a new suit on Sunday at St. James' or at the queen's birthday; how many coaches filled the street at Mr. Harley's levée; how many bottles he had had the honor to drink overnight with Mr. St. John at the Cocoa-Tree, or at the Garter with Mr. Walpole and Mr. Steele.

Mistress Beatrix Esmond had been a dozen times on the point of making great matches, so the Court scandal said; but for his part Esmond never would believe the stories against her; and came back after three years' absence from her, not so frantic as he had been, perhaps, but still hungering after her and no other; still hopeful, still kneeling, with his heart in his hand for the young lady to take. We were now got to 1709. She was near twenty-two years old, and three years at Court, and without a husband.

'Tis not for want of being asked,' Lady Castlewood said, looking into Esmond's heart, as she could, with that perceptiveness affection gives. 'But she will make no mean match, Harry; she will not marry as I would have her; the person whom I should like to call my son, and Henry Esmond knows who that is, is best served by my not pressing his claim. Beatrix is so willful that what I would urge on her, she would be sure to resist. The man who would marry her will not be happy with her, unless he be a great person, and can put her in a great position. Beatrix loves admiration more than love; and longs, beyond all things, for command. Why should a mother speak so of her child? You are my son, too, Harry.
You should know the truth about your sister. I thought you might cure yourself of your passion,' my lady added fondly.

* And, indeed, so was his to them, a thousand thousand times more charming, for where was his equal?—R.
'Other people can cure themselves of that folly, you know. But I see you are still as infatuated as ever. When we read your name in the Gazette, I pleaded for you, my poor boy. Poor boy, indeed! You are growing a grave old gentleman, now, and I am an old woman. She likes your fame well enough, and she likes your person. She says you have wit and fire and good-breeding, and are more natural than the fine gentlemen of the Court. But this is not enough. She wants a commander in chief, and not a colonel. Were a duke to ask her, she would leave an earl whom she had promised. I told you so before. I know not how my poor girl is so worldly.'

'Well,' says Esmond, 'a man can but give his best and his all. She has that from me. What little reputation I have won, I swear I cared for it because I thought Beatrix would be pleased with it. What care I to be a colonel or a general? Think you 'twill matter a few score years hence, what our foolish honors to-day are? I would have had a little fame, that she might wear it in her hat. If I had anything better, I would endow her with it. If she wants my life, I would give it her. If she marries another, I will say God bless him. I make no boast, nor no complaint. I think my fidelity is folly, perhaps. But so it is. I cannot help myself. I love her. You are a thousand times better; the fondest, the fairest, the dearest of women. Sure, my dear lady, I see all Beatrix's faults as well as you do. But she is my fate. 'Tis endurable. I shall not die for not having her. I think I should be no happier if I won her. Que voulez-vous? as my lady of Chelsey would say. Je l'aime.'

'I wish she would have you,' said Harry's fond mistress, giving a hand to him. He kissed the fair hand ('twas the prettiest dimpled little hand in the world, and my Lady Castlewood, though now almost forty years old, did not look to be within ten years of her age.) He kissed and kept her fair hand, as they talked together.

'Why,' says he, 'should she hear me? She knows what I would say. Far or near, she knows I'm her slave. I have sold myself for nothing, it may be. Well, 'tis the price I choose to take. I am worth nothing, or I am worth all.'

'You are such a treasure,' Esmond's mistress was pleased to say, 'that the woman who has your love shouldn't change it away against a kingdom, I think. I am a country-bred woman, and cannot say but the ambitions of the town seem mean to me. I never was awe-stricken by my Lady Duchess' rank and finery, or afraid,' she added with a sly laugh, 'of anything but her temper. I hear of Court ladies who pine because her Majesty looks cold on them; and great noblemen who would give a limb that they might wear a Garter on the other. This worldliness, which I can't comprehend, was born with Beatrix, who, on the first day of her waiting, was a perfect courtier. We are like sisters, and she the eldest sister, somehow. She tells me I have a mean spirit. I laugh, and say she adores a coach and six. I cannot reason her out of her ambition. 'Tis natural to her, as to me to love quiet and be indifferent about rank and riches. What are they, Harry? and for how long do they last? Our home is not here.' She smiled as she spoke, and looked like an angel that was only on earth on a visit. 'Our home is where the just are, and where our sins and sorrows enter not. My father used to rebuke me, and say that I was too hopeful about heaven. But I cannot help my nature, and grow obstinate as I grow to be an old woman; and as I love my children so, sure our Father loves us with a thousand and a thousand times greater love. It must be that we shall meet yonder, and be happy. Yes, you—and my children, and my dear lord. Do you know, Harry, since his death, it has always seemed to me as if his love came back to me, and that we are parted no more. Perhaps he is here now, Harry—I think he is. Forgiven I am sure he is; even Mr. Atterbury absolved him, and he died forgiving. Oh, what a noble heart he had! How generous he was! I was but fifteen and a child when he married me. How good he was to stoop to me! He was always good to the poor and humble.' She stopped, then presently, with a peculiar expression, as if her eyes were looking into heaven, and saw my lord there; she smiled, and gave a little laugh. 'I laugh to see you, sir,' she says; 'when you come, it seems as if you never were away.' One may put her words down, and remember them, but how describe her sweet tones, sweeter than music!

My young lord did not come home at the end of the campaign, and wrote that he was kept at Bruxelles on military duty. Indeed, I believe he was engaged in laying siege to a certain lady, who was of the suite of Mme. de Soissons, the Prince of Savoy's mother, who was just dead, and who, like the Flemish fortresses, was taken and retaken a great number of times during the war, and occupied by French, English, and Imperialists. Of course, Mr. Esmond did not think fit to enlighten Lady Castlewood regarding the young scapegrace's doings; nor had he said a word about the affair with Lord Mohun, knowing how abhorrent that man's name was to his mistriss. Frank did not waste much time or money on pen and ink; and, when Harry came home with his general, only wrote two lines to his mother, to say his wound in the leg was almost healed, that he would keep his coming of age next year—that the duty aforesaid would keep him at Bruxelles, and that Cousin Harry would tell all the news.

But from Bruxelles, knowing how the Lady Castlewood always liked to have a letter about the famous 29th of December, my lord wrote her a long and full one, and in this he must have described the affair with Mohun; for when Mr. Esmond came to visit his mistres one day, early in the new year, to his great wonderment she and her daughter both came up and saluted him, and after them the dowager of Chelsey, too, whose chairman had just brought her ladyship from her village to Kensington across the fields. After this honor, I say, from the two ladies of Castlewood, the dowager came forward in great state, with her grand tall headdress of King James' reign, that she never forsook, and said, 'Cousin Henry, all our family have met, and we thank you, cousin, for your noble conduct toward the head of our house.' And pointing to her blushing cheek, she made Mr. Esmond aware that he was to enjoy the rapture of an embrace there. Having saluted one cheek, she turned to him the other. 'Cousin Harry,' said both the other ladies, in a little chorus, 'we thank you for your noble conduct,' and then Harry became aware that the story of the Lille affair had come to his kinswomen's ears. It pleased him to hear them all saluting him as one of their family.

The tables of the dining room were laid for a great entertainment; and the ladies were in gala dresses—my Lady of Chelsey in her highest tour, my Lady Viscountess out of black; and looking fair and happy à ravir; and the maid of honor attired with that splendor which naturally distinguished her, and wearing on her beautiful breast the French officer's star which Frank had sent home after Ramillies.

'You see, 'tis a gala day with us,' says she, glancing down to the star, 'and we have our orders on. Does not mamma look charming? 'Twas I dressed her!' Indeed, Esmond's dear mistres, blushing as he looked at her, with her beautiful fair hair, and an elegant dress, according to the mode, appeared to have the shape and complexion of a girl of twenty.

On the table was a fine sword, with a red velvet scabbard, and a beautiful chased silver handle, with a blue ribbon for a sword knot. 'What is this?' says the captain, going up to look at this pretty piece.
Mrs. Beatrix advanced toward it. 'Kneel down,' says she; 'we dub you our knight with this'—and she waved the sword over his head. 'My Lady Dowager hath given the sword, and I give the ribbon, and mamma hath sewn on the fringe.'

'Put the sword on him, Beatrix,' says her mother. 'You are our knight, Harry—our true knight. Take a mother's thanks and prayers for defending her son, my dear, dear friend.' She could say no more, and even the dowager was affected, for a couple of rebellious tears made sad marks down those wrinkled old roses which Esmond had just been allowed to salute.

'We had a letter from dearest Frank,' his mother said, 'three days since, while you were on your visit to your friend Captain Steele at Hampton. He told us all that you had done, and how nobly you had put yourself between him and that—that wretch.'

'And I adopt you from this day,' says the dowager; 'and I wish I was richer for your sake, son Esmond,' she added with a wave of her hand; and as Mr. Esmond dutifully went down on his knee before her ladyship, she cast her eyes up to the ceiling (the gilt chandelier, and the twelve wax candles in it, for the party was numerous) and invoked a blessing from that quarter upon the newly adopted son.

'Dear Frank,' says the other vicountess, 'how fond he is of his military profession! He is studying fortification very hard. I wish he were here. We shall keep his coming of age at Castlewood next year.'

'If the campaign permit us,' says Mr. Esmond.

'I am never afraid when he is with you,' cries the boy's mother. 'I am sure my Henry will always defend him.'

'But there will be a peace before next year; we know it for certain,' cries the maid of honor. 'Lord Marlborough will be dismissed and that horrible duchess turned out of all her places. Her Majesty won't speak to her now. Did you see her at Bushy, Harry? She is furious, and she ranges about the Park like a lioness, and tears people's eyes out.'

'And the Princess Anne will send for somebody,' says my lady of Chelsey, taking out her medal and kissing it.

'Did you see the king at Oudenarde, Harry?' his mistress asked. She was a stanch Jacobite, and would no more have have thought of denying her king than her God.

'I saw the young Hanoverian only,' Harry said. 'The Chevalier de St. George——'

'The king, sir, the king!' said the ladies and Miss Beatrix, and she clapped her pretty hands and cried, 'Vive le Roy.'
By this time there came a thundering knock that drove in the doors of the house almost. It was three o'clock and the company were arriving, and presently the servant announced Captain Steele and his lady.

Captain and Mrs. Steele, who were the first to arrive, had driven to Kensington from their country house, the Hovel at Hampton Wick. 'Not from our mansion in Bloomsbury Square,' as Mrs. Steele took care to inform the ladies. Indeed Harry had ridden away from Hampton that very morning, leaving the couple by the ears; for from the chamber where he lay in a bed that was none of the cleanest, and kept awake by the company which he had in his own bed, and the quarrel which was going on in the next room, he could hear both night and morning the curtain lecture which Mrs. Steele was in the habit of administering to poor Dick.

At night it did not matter so much for the culprit; Dick was fuddled, and when in that way no scolding could interrupt his benevolence. Mr. Esmond could hear him coaxing and speaking in that maudlin manner, which punch and claret produce, to his beloved Prue, and beseeching her to remember that there was a distinguished officer the rex roob who would overhear her. She went on, nevertheless, calling him a drunken wretch, and was only interrupted in her harangues by the captain's snoring.

In the morning the unhappy victim awoke to a headache and consciousness, and the dialogue of the night was resumed. 'Why do you bring captains home to dinner when there's not a guinea in the house?' How am I to give dinners when you leave me without a shilling? How am I to go trapesing to Kensington in my yellow satin sack before all the fine company! I've nothing fit to put on; I never have;' and so the dispute went on—Mr. Esmond interrupting the talk when it seemed to be growing too intimate by blowing his nose as loudly as ever he could, at the sound of which trumpet there came a lull. But Dick was charming, though his wife was odious, and 'twas to give Mr. Steele pleasure that the ladies of Castlewood, who were ladies of no small fashion, invited Mrs. Steele.

Besides the captain and his lady there was a great and notable assemblage of company; my lady of Chelsey having sent her lackeys and liveries to aid the modest attendance at Kensington. There was Lieutenant General Webb, Harry's kind patron, of whom the dowager took possession, and who resplended in velvet and gold lace; there was Harry's new acquaintance, the Right Honorable Henry St. John, Esquire, the general's kinsman, who was charmed with the Lady Castlewood, even more than with her daughter; there was one of the greatest noblemen in the kingdom, the Scots Duke of Hamilton, just created Duke of Brandon in England; and two other noble lords of the Tory party, my Lord Ashburnham, and another I have forgot; and for ladies, her Grace the Duchess of Ormonde and her daughters, the Lady Mary and the Lady Betty, the former one of Mistress Beatrix's colleagues in waiting on the queen.

'What a party of Tories!' whispered Captain Steele to Esmond, as we were assembled in the parlor before dinner. Indeed, all the company present, save Steele, were of that faction.

Mr. St. John made his special compliments to Mrs. Steele, and so charmed her that she declared she would have Steele a Tory too.

'Or will you have me a Whig?' says Mr. St. John. 'I think, madam, you could convert a man to anything.'

'If Mr. St. John ever comes to Bloomsbury Square I will teach him what I know,' says Mrs. Steele, dropping her handsome eyes. 'Do you know Bloomsbury Square?'

'Do I know the Mall? Do I know the opera? Do I know the reigning toast? Why, Bloomsbury is the very height of the mode,' says Mr. St. John. 'Tis rus in urbe. You have gardens all the way to Hampstead, and palaces round about you—Southampton House and Montague House.'

'Where you wretches go and fight duels,' cries Mrs. Steele, 'Of which the ladies are the cause!' says her entertainer. 'Madam, is Dick a good swordsman? How charming the Tatler is! We all recognized your portrait in the forty-ninth number, and I have been dying to know you ever since I read it. "Aspasia must be allowed to be the first of the beauteous order of love." Doth not the passage run so? 'In this accomplished lady love is the constant effect, though it is never the design; yet though her mien carries much more invitation than command, to behold her is an immediate check to loose behavior, and to love her is a liberal education.'

'Oh, indeed!' says Mrs. Steele, who did not seem to understand a word of what the gentleman was saying.

'Who could fail to be accomplished under such a mistress?' says Mr. St. John, still gallant and bowing.

'Mistress! upon my word, sir!' cried the lady. 'If you mean me, sir, I would have you know that I am the captain's wife.'

'Sure we all know it,' answers Mr. St. John, keeping his countenance very gravely; and Steele broke in, saying, 'Twas not about Mrs. Steele I writ that paper—though I am sure she is worthy of any compliment I can pay her—but of the Lady Elizabeth Hastings.'

'I hear Mr. Addison is equally famous as a wit and a poet,' says Mr. St. John. 'Is it true that his hand is to be found in your Tatler, Mr. Steele?'

'Whether 'tis the sublime or the humorous, no man can come near him,' cries Steele.

'A fig, Dick, for your Mr. Addison!' cries out his lady; 'a gentleman who gives himself such airs and holds his head so high now. I hope your ladyship thinks as I do; I can't bear those very fair men with white eyelashes—a black man for me.' (All the black men at table applauded, and made Mrs. Steele a bow for this compliment.) 'As for this Mr. Addison,' she went on, 'he comes to dine with the captain sometimes, never says a word to me, and then they walk upstairs, both tipsy, to a dish of tea. I remember your Mr. Addison when he had but one coat to his back, and that with a patch at the elbow.'

'Indeed—a patch at the elbow! You interest me,' says Mr. St. John. 'Tis charming to hear of one man of letters from the charming wife of another.'

'La, I could tell you ever so much about 'em,' continues the voluble lady. 'What do you think the captain has got now?—a little hunchback fellow—a little hop-o'-my-thumb creature that he calls a poet—a little popish brat!'

'Hush, there are two in the room,' whispers her companion.

'Well, I call him popish because his name is Pope,' says the lady. 'Tis only my joking way. And this little dwarf of a fellow has wrote a pastoral poem—all about shepherds and shepherdesses, you know.'

'A shepherd should have a little crook,' says my mistress, laughing from her end of the table; on which Mrs. Steele said, 'She did not know, but the captain brought home this queer little creature when she was in bed with her first boy, and it was a mercy he had come no sooner; and Dick raved about his genus, and was always raving about some nonsense or other.'

'Which of the Tatlers do you prefer, Mrs. Steele?' asked Mr. St. John.

'I never read but one, and think it all a pack of rubbish, sir,' says the lady. 'Such stuff about Bickerstaff, and Distaff, and Quarterstaff, as it all is! There's the captain going on still with the burgundy—I know he'll be tipsy before he stops—Captain Steele!

"I drink to your eyes, my dear," says the captain, who seemed to think his wife charming, and to receive as genuine all the satiric compliments which Mr. St. John paid her.

All this while the maid of honor had been trying to get Mr. Esmond to talk, and no doubt voted him a dull fellow. For, by some mistake, just as he was going to pop into the vacant place, he was placed far away from Beatriz's chair, who sat between his Grace and my Lord Ashburnham, and shrugged her lovely white shoulders, and cast a look as if to say, 'Pity me,' to her cousin. My Lord Duke and his young neighbor were presently in a very animated and close conversation. Mrs. Beatriz could no more help using her eyes than the sun can help shining, and setting those it shines on a-burning. By the time the first course was done the dinner seemed long to Esmond; by the time the soup came he fancied they must have been hours at table; and as for the sweets and jellies he thought they never would be done.

At length the ladies rose, Beatriz throwing a Parthian glance at her duke as she retreated; a fresh bottle and glasses were fetched, and toasts were called. Mr. St. John asked his Grace the Duke of Hamilton and the company to drink to the health of his Grace the Duke of Brandon. Another lord gave General Webb's health, 'and may he get the command the bravest officer in the world deserves.' Mr. Webb thanked the company, complimented his aid-de-camp, and fought his famous battle over again.

"Il est fatiguant," whispers Mr. St. John, 'avec sa trompette de Wynendael.'

Captain Steele, who was not of our side, loyally gave the health of the Duke of Marlborough, the greatest general of the age.

'I drink to the greatest general with all my heart,' says Mr. Webb; 'there can be no gainsaying that character of him. My glass goes to the general, and not to the duke, Mr. Steele.' And the stout old gentleman emptied his bumper; to which Dick replied by filling and emptying a pair of brimmers, one for the general and one for the duke.

And now his Grace of Hamilton, rising up with flashing eyes (we had all been drinking pretty freely), proposed a toast to the lovely, to the incomparable Mrs. Beatriz Esmond; we all drank it with cheers, and my Lord Ashburnham especially, with a shout of enthusiasm.
'What a pity there is a Duchess of Hamilton,' whispers St. John, who drank more wine and yet was more steady than most of the others, and we entered the drawing room where the ladies were at their tea. As for poor Dick, we were obliged to leave him alone at the dining table, where he was hiccupping out the lines from the 'Campaign,' in which the greatest poet had celebrated the greatest general in the world; and Harry Esmond found him, half an hour afterward, in a more advanced stage of liquor, and weeping about the treachery of Tom Boxer.

The drawing room was all dark to poor Harry, in spite of the grand illumination. Beatrix scarce spoke to him. When my Lord Duke went away, she practiced upon the next in rank, and plied my young Lord Ashburnham with all the fire of her eyes and the fascinations of her wit. Most of the party were set to cards, and Mr. St. John, after yawning in the face of Mrs. Steele, whom he did not care to pursue any more, and talking in his most brilliant animated way to Lady Castlewood, whom he pronounced to be beautiful, of a far higher order of beauty than her daughter, presently took his leave, and went his way. The rest of the company speedily followed, my Lord Ashburnham the last, throwing fiery glances at the smiling young temptress, who had bewitched more hearts than his in her thrall.

No doubt, as a kinsman of the house, Mr. Esmond thought fit to be the last of all in it; he remained after the coaches had rolled away—after his dowager aunt's chair and flambeaus had marched off in the darkness toward Chelsey, and the town's-people had gone to bed, who had been drawn into the square to gape at the unusual assemblage of chairs and chariots, lackeys and torchmen. The poor mean wretch lingered yet for a few minutes, to see whether the girl would vouchsafe him a smile, or a parting word of consolation. But her enthusiasm of the morning was quite died out, or she chose to be in a different mood. She fell to joking about the dowdy appearance of Lady Betty, and mimicked the vulgarity of Mrs. Steele; and then she put up her little hand to her mouth and yawned, lighted a taper and shrugged her shoulders, and dropping Mr. Esmond a saucy courtesy, sailed off to bed.

'The day began so well, Henry, that I had hoped it might have ended better,' was all the consolation that poor Esmond's fond mistress could give him; and as he trudged home through the dark alone, he thought with bitter rage in his heart and a feeling of almost revolt against the sacrifice he had made. 'She would have me,' thought he, 'had I but a name to give her. But for my promise to her father I might have my rank and my mistress too.'

I suppose a man's vanity is stronger than any other passion in him; for I blush even now as I recall the humiliation of those distant days, the memory of which still smarts, though the fever of balked desire has passed away more than a score of years ago. When the writer's descendants come to read this memoir, I wonder will they have lived to experience a similar defeat and shame? Will they ever have knelt to a woman, who has listened to them and played with them and laughed with them—who, beckoning them with lures and caresses, and with Yes smiling from her eyes, has tricked them on to their knees, and turned her back and left them. All this shame Mr. Esmond had to undergo; and he submitted, and revolted, and presently came crouching back for more.

After this festa my young Lord Ashburnham's coach was forever rolling in and out of Kensington Square; his lady mother came to visit Esmond's mistress, and at every assembly in the town, wherever the maid of honor made her appearance, you might be pretty sure to see the young gentleman in a new suit every week, and decked out in all the finery that his tailor or embroiderer could furnish for him. My lord was forever paying Mr. Esmond compliments, bidding him to dinner, offering him horses to ride, and giving him a thousand uncouth marks of respect and good will. At last, one night at the coffeehouse, whither my lord came considerably flushed and excited with drink, he rushes up to Mr. Esmond and cries out, 'Give me joy, my dearest colonel; I am the happiest of men,'

'The happiest of men needs no dearest colonel to give him joy,' says Mr. Esmond. 'What is the cause of this supreme felicity?'

' Haven't you heard?' says he. 'Don't you know? I thought the family told you everything. The adorable Beatrix hath promised to be mine.'

' What!' cries out Mr. Esmond who had spent happy hours with Beatrix that very morning; had writ verses for her that she had sung at the harpsichord.

'Yes,' says he, 'I waited on her to-day. I saw you walking toward Knightsbridge as I passed in my coach; and she looked so lovely and spoke so kind that I couldn't help going down on my knees, and—and—sure I am the happiest of men in all the world; and I'm very young; but she says I shall get older; and you know I shall be of age in four months; and there's very little difference between us; and I'm so happy. I should like to treat the company to something. Let us have a bottle—a dozen bottles—and drink the health of the finest woman in England.'

Esmond left the young lord tossing off bumper after bumper, and strolled away to Kensington to ask whether the news was true. 'Twas only too sure; his mistress' sad, compassionate face told him the story; and then she related what particulars of it she knew, and how my young lord had made his offer half an hour after Esmond went away that morning, and in the very room where the song yet lay on the harpsichord which Esmond had writ and they had sung together.

BOOK III.

CONTAINING THE END OF MR. ESMOND'S ADVENTURES IN ENGLAND.

CHAPTER I.

I COME TO AN END OF MY BATTLES AND BRUISES.

That feverish desire to gain a little reputation which Esmond had had left him now, perhaps, that he had attained some portion of his wish, and the great motive of his ambition was over. His desire for military honor was that it might raise him in Beatrix's eyes. 'Twas, next to nobility and wealth, the only kind of rank she valued. It was the stake quickest won or lost too; for law is a very long game that requires a life to practice; and to be distinguished in letters or the church would not have forwarded the poor gentleman's plans in the least. So he had no suit to play but the red one, and he played it; and this, in truth, was the reason of his speedy promotion, for he exposed himself more than most gentlemen do, and risked more to win more. Is he the only man that hath set his life against a stake which may not be worth the winning? Another risks his life (and his honor, too, sometimes) against a bundle of banknotes or a yard of blue ribbon or a seat in Parliament; and some for the mere pleasure and excitement of the sport, as a field of a hundred huntsmen will do, each outbawling and outgalloping the other at the tail of a dirty fox that is to be the prize of the foremost happy conqueror.

When he heard this news of Beatrix's engagement in marriage, Colonel Esmond knocked under to his fate and resolved to surrender his sword, that could win him nothing now he cared for; and in this dismal frame of mind he determined to retire from the regiment, to the great delight of the captain next in rank to him, who happened to be a young gentleman of good fortune, who eagerly paid Mr. Esmond a thousand guineas for his majority in Webb's regiment, and was knocked on the head the next campaign. Perhaps Esmond would not have been sorry to share his fate. He was more the Knight of the Woeful Countenance than ever he had been. His moodiness must have made him perfectly odious to his friends under the tents, who like a jolly fellow, and laugh at a melancholy warrior always sighing after Dulcinea at home.

Both the ladies of Castlewood approved of Mr. Esmond quitting the army, and his kind general coincided in his wish of retirement and helped in a transfer of his commission, which brought a pretty sum into his pocket. But when the commander in chief came home, and was forced, in spite of himself, to appoint Lieutenant General Webb to the command of a division of the army in Flanders, the lieutenant general prayed Colonel Esmond so urgently to be his aid-de-camp and military secretary that Esmond could not resist his kind patron's entreaties, and again took the field, not attached to any regiment, but under Webb's orders. What must have been the continued agonies of fears* and apprehensions which racked the gentle breasts of wives and matrons in those dreadful days, when every Gazette brought accounts of deaths and battles, and when, the present anxiety over, and the beloved persons escaped, the doubt still remained that a battle might be fought, possibly, of which the next Flanders letter would bring the account; so they, the poor, tender creatures, had to go on sickening and trembling through the whole campaign.

Whatever these terrors were on the part of Esmond's mistress (and that tenderest of women must have felt them most keenly for both her sons, as she called them), she never allowed them outwardly to appear, but hid her apprehension as she did her charities and devotions. 'Twas only by chance that Esmond, wandering in Kensington, found his mistress coming out of a mean cottage there, and heard that she had a score of poor retainers whom she visited and comforted in their sickness and poverty, and who blessed her daily. She attended the early church daily (though of a Sunday, especially, she encouraged and advanced all sorts of cheerfulness and innocent gayety in her little household), and by notes entered into a tablebook of hers at this time, and devotional compositions writ with a sweet, artless fervor, such as the best divines could not surpass, showed how fond her heart was, how humble and pious her spirit, what pangs of apprehension she endured silently, and with what a faithful reliance she committed the care of those she loved to the awful Dispenser of death and life. As for her ladyship at Chelsey, Esmond's newly adopted mother, she was now of an age when the danger of any second party doth not disturb the rest much. She cared for trumps more than for most things in life. She was firm enough in her own faith, but no longer very bitter against ours. She had a very good-natured, easy French director, M. Gauthier by name, who was a gentleman of the world, and would take a hand of cards with Dean Atterbury, my lady's neighbor at Chelsey, and was well with all the High Church party. No doubt M. Gauthier knew what Esmond's peculiar position was, for he corresponded with Holt and always treated Colonel Esmond with particular respect and kindness; but for good reasons the colonel and the abbé never spoke on this matter together, and so they remained perfect good friends.

*What indeed? Ps. xci. 2, 3, 7.—R. E.

All the frequenters of my lady of Chelsey's house were of the Tory and High Church party. Madam Beatrix was as frantic about the king as her elderly kinswoman; she wore his picture on her heart; she had a piece of his hair; she vowed he was the most injured, and gallant, and accomplished, and unfortunate, and beautiful of princes. Steele, who quarreled with very many of his Tory friends, but never with Esmond, used to tell the colonel that his kinswoman's house was a rendezvous of Tory intrigues; that Gauthier was a spy; that Atterbury was a spy; that letters were constantly going from that house to the queen at St. Germans; on which Esmond, laughing, would reply, that they used to say in the army the Duke of Marlborough was a spy too, and as much in correspondence with that family as any Jesuit. And without entering very eagerly into the controversy, Esmond had frankly taken the side of his family. It seemed to him that King James II. was undoubtedly King of England by right; and at his sister's death it would be better to have him than a foreigner over us. No man admired King William more; a hero and a conqueror, the bravest, justest, wisest of men—but 'twas by the sword he conquered the country, and held and governed it by the very same right that the great Cromwell held it, who was truly and greatly a sovereign. But that a foreign despotic prince out of Germany, who happened to be descended from King James I., should take possession of this empire, seemed to Mr. Esmond a monstrous injustice—at least, every Englishman had a right to protest, and the English prince, the heir at law, the first of all. What man of spirit with such a cause would not back it? What man of honor with such a crown to win would not fight for it? But that race was destined. That prince had himself against him, an enemy he could not overcome. He never dared to draw his sword, though he had it. He let his chances slip by as he lay in the lap of opera girls, or sniveled at the knees of priests, asking pardon; and the blood of heroes, and the devotedness of honest hearts, and endurance, courage, fidelity, were all spent for him in vain.

But let us return to my lady of Chelsey, who, when her son Esmond announced to her ladyship that he proposed to make the ensuing campaign, took leave of him with perfect alacrity, and was down to piquet with her gentlewoman before he had well quitted the room on his last visit. 'Tierce to a king,' were the last words he ever heard her say: the game of life was pretty nearly over for the good lady, and three months afterward she took to her bed, where she flickered out without any pain, so the Abbé Gauthier wrote over to Mr. Esmond, then with his general on the frontier of France. The Lady Castlewood was with her at her ending, and had written too, but these letters must have been taken by a privateer in the packet that brought them, for Esmond knew nothing of their contents until his return to England.

My Lady Castlewood had left everything to Colonel Esmond; 'as a reparation for the wrong done to him,' 'twas writ in her will. But her fortune was not much, for it never had been large, and the honest viscountess had wisely sunk most of the money she had upon the annuity which terminated with her life. However, there was the house and furniture, plate and pictures at Chelsey, and a sum of money lying at her merchant's, Sir Josiah Child, which altogether would realize a sum of near £300 per annum, so that Mr. Esmond found himself, if not rich, at least easy for life. Likewise there were the famous diamonds, which had been said to be worth fabulous sums, though the goldsmith pronounced they would fetch no more than £4000. These diamonds, however, Colonel Esmond reserved, having a special use for them: but the Chelsey house, plate, goods, etc., with the exception of a few articles which he kept back, were sold by his orders; and the sums resulting from the sale invested in the public securities so as to realize the aforesaid annual income of £300.
Having now something to leave, he made a will and dispatched it home. The army was now in presence of the enemy; and a great battle expected every day. 'Twas known that the general in chief was in disgrace, and the parties at home strong against him; and there was no stroke this great and resolute player would not venture to recall his fortune when it seemed desperate. Frank Castlewood was with Colonel Esmond, his general having gladly taken the young nobleman on to his staff. His studies of fortifications at Bruxelles were over by this time. The fort he was besieging had yielded, I believe, and my lord had not only marched in with flying colors, but marched out again. He used to tell his boyish wickednesses with admirable humor, and was the most charming young scapegrace in the army.

'Tis needless to say that Colonel Esmond had left every penny of his little fortune to this boy. It was the colonel's firm conviction that the next battle would put an end to him; for he felt aweary of the sun, and quite ready to bid that and the earth farewell. Frank would not listen to his comrade's gloomy forebodings, but swore they would keep his birthday at Castlewood that autumn, after the campaign. He had heard of the engangement at home. 'If Prince Eugene goes to London,' says Frank, 'and 'Trix can get hold of him, she'll jilt Ashburnham for his Highness. I tell you, she used to make eyes at the Duke of Marlborough, when she was only fourteen and ogling poor little Blandford. I wouldn't marry her, Harry —no, not if her eyes were twice as big. I'll take my fun. I'll enjoy for the next three years every possible pleasure. I'll sow my wild oats then, and marry some quiet, steady, modest, sensible viscountess, hunt my harriers, and settle down at Castlewood. Perhaps I'll represent the county—no, damme, you shall represent the county. You have the brains of the family. By the Lord, my dear old Harry, you have the best head and the kindest heart in all the army; and every man says so—and when the queen dies, and the king comes back, why shouldn't you go to the House of Commons, and be a minister, and be made a peer, and that sort of thing? You be shot in the next action! I wager a dozen of burgundy you are not touched. Mohun is well of his wound. He is always with Corporal John now. As soon as ever I see his ugly face I'll spit in it. I took lessons of Father—of Captain Holt at Bruxelles. What a man that is! He knows everything.' Esmond bade Frank have a care; that Father Holt's knowledge was rather dangerous; not, indeed, knowing as yet how far the father had pushed his instructions with his young pupil.

The gazetteers and writers, both of the French and English side, have given accounts sufficient of that bloody battle of Blarignies or Malplaquet, which was the last and the hardest earned of the victories of the great Duke of Marlborough. In that tremendous combat near upon two hundred and fifty thousand men were engaged, more than thirty thousand of whom were slain or wounded (the Allies lost twice as many men as they killed of the French, whom they conquered); and this dreadful slaughter very likely took place because a great general's credit was shaken at home, and he thought to restore it by a victory. If such were the motives which induced the Duke of Marlborough to venture that prodigious stake, and desperately sacrifice thirty thousand brave lives, so that he might figure once more in a Gazette, and hold his places and pensions a little longer, the event defeated the dreadful and selfish design, for the victory was purchased at a cost which no nation, greedy of glory as it may be, would willingly pay for any triumph. The gallantry of the French was as remarkable as the furious bravery of their assailants. We took a few score of their flags and a few pieces of their artillery; but we left twenty thousand of the bravest soldiers of the world round about the intrenched lines, from which the enemy was driven. He retreated in perfect good order; the panic-spell seemed to be broke under which the French had labored ever since the disaster of Hochstedt; and, fighting now on the threshold of their country, they showed an heroic ardor of resistance such as had never met us in the course of their aggressive war. Had the battle been more successful, the conqueror might have got the price for which he waged it. As it was (and justly, I think), the party adverse to the duke in England were indignant at the lavish extravagance of slaughter, and demanded more eagerly than ever the recall of a chief whose cupidity and desperation might urge him farther still. After this bloody fight at Malplaquet, I can answer for it, that in the Dutch quarters and our own, and among the very regiments and commanders whose gallantry was most conspicuous upon this frightful day of carnage, the general cry was, that there was enough of the war. The French were driven back into their own boundary, and all their conquests and booty of Flanders disgorged. As for the Prince of Savoy, with whom our commander in chief, for reasons of his own, consorted more closely than ever, 'twas known that he was animated not merely by a political hatred, but by personal rage against the old French king; the Imperial generalissimo never forgot the slight put by Lewis upon the Abbé de Savoie; and in the humiliation or ruin of his Most Christian Majesty, the Holy Roman Emperor found his account. But what were these quarrels to us, the free citizens of England and Holland? Despot as he was, the French monarch was yet the chief of European civilization, more venerable in his age and misfortunes than at the period of his most splendid successes; while his opponent was but a semi-barbarous tyrant, with a pillaging, murderous host of Croats and Pandours composing a half of his army, filling our camp with their strange figures, bearded like the miscreant Turks their neighbors, and carrying into Christian warfare their native heathen habits of rapine, lust, and murder. Why should the best blood in England and France be shed in order that the Holy Roman and Apostolic master of these ruffians should have his revenge over the Christian king? And it was to this end we were fighting; for this that every village and family in England was deploiring the death of beloved sons and fathers. We dared not speak to each other, even at table, of Malplaquet, so frightful were the gaps left in our army by the cannon of that bloody action. 'Twas heartrending for an officer who had a heart to look down his line on a parade day afterward, and miss hundreds of faces of comrades—humble or of high rank—that had gathered but yesterday full of courage and cheerfulness round the torn and blackened flags. Where were our friends? As the great duke reviewed us, riding along our lines with his fine suite of prancing aids-de-camp and generals, stopping here and there to thank an officer, with those eager smiles and bows of which his Grace was always lavish, scarce a huzza could be got for him, though Cadogan, with an oath, rode up and cried, 'D—n you, why don't you cheer?' But the men had no heart for that; not one of them but was thinking, 'Where's my comrade? where's my brother that fought by me, or my dear captain that led me yesterday?' 'Twas the most gloomy pageant I ever looked on; and the 'Te Deum' sung by our chaplains, the most woeful and dreary satire.

Esmond's general added one more to the many marks of honor which he had received in the front of a score of battles, and got a wound in the groin, which laid him on his back; and you may be sure he consoled himself by abusing the commander in chief, as he lay groaning. 'Corporal John's as fond of me,' he used to say, 'as King David was of General Uriah; and so he always gives me the post of danger.' He persisted till his dying day in believing that the duke intended that he should be beat at Wynendael, and sent him purposely with a small force, hoping that he might be knocked on the head there. Esmond and Frank Castlewood both escaped without hurt, though the division which our general commanded suffered even more than any other, having to sustain not only the fury of the enemy's cannonade, which was very hot and well served, but the furious and repeated charges of the famous Maison du Roy, which we had received and beat off again and again, with volleys of shot and hedges of iron, and our four lines of musketeers and pikemen. They said the King of England charged us no less than twelve times that day, along with the French household. Esmond's late regiment, General Webb's own Fusileers, served in the division which their colonel commanded. The general was thrice in the center of the square of the Fusileers, calling the fire at the French charges, and, after the action, his Grace the Duke of Berwick sent his compliments to his old regiment and their colonel for their behavior on the field.

We drank my Lord Castlewood's health and majority, the 25th of September, the army being then before Mons; and here Colonel Esmond was not so fortunate as he had been in actions much more dangerous, and was hit by a spent ball just above the place where his former wound was, which caused the old wound to open again, fever, spitting of blood, and other ugly symptoms to ensue; and, in a word, brought him near to death's door. The kind lad, his kinsman, attended his elder comrade with a very praiseworthy affectionateness and care until he was pronounced out of danger by the doctors, when Frank went off, passed the winter at Bruxelles, and besieged, no doubt, some other fortress there. Very few lads would have given up their pleasures so long and so gayly as Frank did; his cheerful prattle soothed many long days of Esmond's pain and languor. Frank was supposed to be still at his kinsman's bedside for a month after he had left it, for letters came from his mother at home full of thanks to the younger gentleman for his care of his elder brother (so it pleased Esmond's mistress now affectionately to style him); nor was Mr. Esmond in a hurry to undeceive her, when the good young fellow was gone for his Christmas holiday. It was as pleasant to Esmond on his couch to watch the young man's pleasure at the idea of being free, as to note his simple efforts to disguise his satisfaction on going away. There are days when a flask of champagne at a cabaret, and a red-cheeked partner to share it, are too strong temptations for any young fellow of spirit. I am not going to play the moralist and cry 'Fie.' For ages past, I know how old men preach and what young men practice, and that patriarchs have had their weak moments too, long since Father Noah toppled over after discovering the vine. Frank went off then to his pleasures at Bruxelles, in which capital many young fellows of our army declared they found infinitely greater diversion even than in London, and Mr. Henry Esmond remained in his sick room, where he wrote a fine comedy that his mistress pronounced to be sublime, and that was acted no less than three successive nights in London in the next year.

Here, as he lay nursing himself, ubiquitous Mr. Holt reappeared and stopped a whole month at Mons, where he not only won over Colonel Esmond to the king's side in politics (that side being always held by the Esmond family), but where he endeavored to reopen the controversial question between the churches once more, and to recall Esmond to that religion in which in his infancy he had been baptized. Holt was a casuist, both dexterous and learned, and presented the case between the English Church and his own in such a way that those who granted his premises ought certainly to allow his conclusions. He touched on Esmond's delicate state of health, chance of dissolution, and so forth, and enlarged upon the immense benefits that the sick man was likely to forego—benefits which the Church of England did not deny to those of the Roman communion, as how should she, being derived from that church and only an offshoot from it? But Mr. Esmond said that his church was the church of his country, and to that he chose to remain faithful; other people were welcome to worship and to subscribe any other set of articles, whether at Rome or at Augsburg. But if the good father meant that Esmond should join the Roman communion for fear of consequences, and that all England ran the risk of being damned for heresy, Esmond, for one, was perfectly willing to take his chance of the penalty along with the countless millions of his fellow-countrymen who were bred in the same faith, and along with some of the noblest, the truest, the purest, the wisest, the most pious and learned men and women in the world.

As for the political question, in that Mr. Esmond could agree with the father much more readily, and had come to the same conclusion, though, perhaps, in a different way. The right divine, about which Dr. Sacheverel and the High Church party in England were just now making a bother, they were welcome to hold as they chose. If Richard Cromwell and his father before him had been crowned and anointed (and bishops enough would have been found to do it), it seemed to Mr. Esmond that they would have had the right divine just as much as any Plantagenet or Tudor or Stuart. But the desire of the country being unquestionably for an hereditary monarchy, Esmond thought an English king out of St. Germains was better and fitter than a German prince from Herrenhausen, and that if he failed to satisfy the nation, some other Englishman might be found to take his place; and so, though with no frantic enthusiasm or worship of that monstrous pedigree which the Tories choose to consider divine, he was ready to say, 'God save King James!' when Queen Anne went the way of kings and commoners.

'I fear, colonel, you are no better than a republican at heart,' says the priest, with a sigh.

'I am an Englishman,' says Harry, 'and take my country as I find her. The will of the nation being for church and king, I am for church and king too, but English church and English king; and that is why your church isn't mine, though your king is.'

Though they lost the day at Malplaquet, it was the French who were elated by that action, while the conquerors were dispirited by it; and the enemy gathered together a larger army than ever, and made prodigious efforts for the next campaign. Marshal Berwick was with the French this year; and we heard that Mareschal Villars was still suffering of his wound, was eager to bring our duke to action, and vowed he would fight us in his coach. Young Castlewood came flying back from Bruxelles as soon as he heard that fighting was to begin, and the arrival of the Chevalier de St. George was announced about May. 'It's the king's third campaign and it's mine,' Frank liked saying. He was come back a greater Jacobite than ever, and Esmond suspected that some fair conspirators at Bruxelles had been inflaming the young man's ardor. Indeed, he owned that he had a message from the queen, Beatrix' godmother, who had given her name to Frank's sister the year before he and his sovereign were born.

However desirous Marshal Villars might be to fight, my Lord Duke did not seem disposed to indulge him this campaign. Last year his Grace had been all for the Whigs and Hanoverians; but finding, on going to England, his country cold toward himself, and the people in a ferment of High Church loyalty, the duke comes back to his army, cooled toward the Hano-verians, cautious with the Imperialists, and particularly civil and polite toward the Chevalier de St. George. 'Tis certain that messages and letters were continually passing between his Grace and his brave nephew the Duke of Berwick in the opposite camp. No man's caresses were more opportune than his Grace's, and no man ever uttered expressions of regard and affection more generously. He professed to M. de Torcy, so Mr. St. John told the writer, quite an eagerness to be cut in pieces for the exiled queen and her family; nay, more, I believe, this year he parted with a portion of the most precious part of himself—his money—which he sent over to the royal exiles.
Mr. Tunstal, who was in the prince's service, was twice or thrice in and out of our camp; the French in theirs of Arlieu and about Arras. A little river, the Canihe I think 'twas called (but this is writ away from books and Europe; and the only map the writer hath of these scenes of his youth bears no mark of this little stream), divided our pickets from the enemy's.
Our sentries talked across the stream when they could make themselves understood to each other, and when they could not grinned and handed each other their brandy-flasks or their pouches of tobacco. And one fine day of June, riding thither with the officer who visited the outposts (Colonel Esmond was taking an airing on horseback, being too weak for military duty), they came to this river where a number of English and Scots were assembled, talking to the good-natured enemy on the other side.

Esmond was especially amused with the talk of one long fellow, with a great curling red mustache, and blue eyes, that was half a dozen inches taller than his swarthy little comrades on the French side of the stream, and being asked by the colonel, saluted him, and said that he belonged to the Royal Cravats.

From his way of saying 'Royal Cravats,' Esmond at once knew that the fellow's tongue had first wagged on the banks of the Liffey and not the Loire; and the poor soldier—a deserter probably—did not like to venture very deep into French conversation lest his unlucky brogue should peep out. He chose to restrict himself to such few expressions in the French language as he thought he had mastered easily, and his attempt at disguise was infinitely amusing. Mr. Esmond whistled Lillibullero, at which Teague's eyes began to twinkle, and then flung him a dollar, when the poor boy broke out with a 'God bless—that is, Dieu benisse votre honor,' that would infallibly have sent him to the provost marshal had he been on our side of the river.
While this parley was going on three officers on horseback, on the French side, appeared at some little distance and stopped as if eying us, when one of them left the other two and rode close up to us who were by the stream. 'Look, look!' says the Royal Cravat with great agitation, 'pas lui, that's he; not him, l'autre,' and pointed to the distant officer on a chestnut horse, with a cuirass shining in the sun and over it a broad blue ribbon.

'Please to take Mr. Hamilton's services to my Lord Marlborough—my lord duke,' says the gentleman in English; and looking to see that the party were not hostilely disposed, he added with a smile, 'There's a friend of yours, gentlemen, yonder; he bids me to say that he saw some of your faces on the 11th of September last year.'

As the gentleman spoke the other two officers rode up and came quite close. We knew at once who it was. It was the king, then two-and-twenty years old, tall and slim, with deep brown eyes that looked melancholy, though his lips wore a smile. We took off our hats and saluted him. No man, sure, could see for the first time without emotion the youthful inheritor of so much fame and misfortune. It seemed to Mr. Esmond that the prince was not unlike young Castlewood, whose age and figure he resembled. The Chevalier de St. George acknowledged the salute and looked at us hard. Even the idlers on our side of the river set up a hurrah. As for the Royal Cravat, he ran to the prince's stirrup, knelt down and kissed his boot, and bawled and looked a hundred ejaculations and blessings. The prince bade the aid-de-camp give him a piece of money; and when the party, saluting us, had ridden away, Cravat spat upon the piece of gold by way of benediction and swaggered away, pouching his coin and twirling his honest carotty mustache.

The officer in whose company Esmond was, the same little captain of Handyside's regiment, Mr. Sterne, who had proposed the garden at Lille, when my Lord Mohun and Esmond had their affair, was an Irishman too, and as brave a little soul as ever wore a sword. 'Bedad,' says Roger Sterne, 'that long fellow spoke French so beautiful that I shouldn't have known he wasn't a foreigner till he broke out with his hulla-balloing, and only an Irish calf can bellow like that.' And Roger made another remark in his wild way in which there was sense as well as absurdity—'If that young gentleman,' says he, 'would but ride over to our camp instead of Villars', toss up his hat and say, "Here am I, the king; who'll follow me?" by the Lord, Esmond, the whole army would rise and carry him home again, and beat Villars, and take Paris by the way."

The news of the prince's visit was all through the camp quickly, and scores of ours went down in hopes to see him. Major Hamilton, whom we had talked with, sent back by a trumpet several silver pieces for officers with us. Mr. Esmond received one of these; and that medal, and a recompense not uncommon among princes, were the only rewards he ever had from a royal person whom he endeavored not very long after to serve.

Esmond quitted the army almost immediately after this, following his general home; and, indeed, being advised to travel in the fine weather and attempt to take no further part in the campaign. But he heard from the army that, of the many who crowded to see the Chevalier de St. George, Frank Castlewood had made himself most conspicuous: my Lord Viscount riding across the little stream bareheaded to where the prince was, and dismounting and kneeling before him to do him homage. Some said that the prince had actually knighted him, but my lord denied that statement, though he acknowledged the rest of the story, and said: 'From having been out of favor with Corporal John,' as he called the duke, 'before, his Grace warned him not to commit those follies, and smiled on him cordially ever after.'

'And he was so kind to me,' Frank writ, 'that I thought I would put in a good word for Master Harry, but when I mentioned your name he looked as black as thunder, and said he had never heard of you.'

CHAPTER II.

I. GO HOME, AND HARP ON THE OLD STRING.

After quitting Mons and the army, and as he was waiting for a packet at Ostend, Esmond had a letter from his young kinsman Castlewood at Bruxelles, conveying intelligence whereof Frank besought him to be the bearer to London, and which caused Colonel Esmond no small anxiety.

The young scapegrace, being one-and-twenty years old, and being anxious to sow his 'wild otes,' as he wrote, had married Mile. de Wertheim, daughter of Count de Wertheim, chamberlain to the Emperor, and having a post in the household of the governor of the Netherlands. 'P. S. [the young gentleman wrote]: 'Clotilda is older than me, which perhaps may be objected to her; but I am so old a raik that the age makes no difference, and I am determined to reform. We were married at St. Gudule, by Father Holt. She is heart and soul for the good cause. And here the cry is Vič-le-Roy, which my mother will join in, and ’Trix too. Break this news to ’em gently; and tell Mr. Finch, my agent, to press the people for their rents, and send me the ryno anyhow. Clotilda sings, and plays on the Spinet beautifully. She is a fair beauty. And if it’s a son, you shall stand Godfather. I’m going to leave the army, having had enuf of soldering; and my Lord Duke recommends me. I shall pass the winter here: and stop at least until Clo’s lying-in. I call her old Clo, but nobody else shall. She is the cleverest woman in all Bruxelles: understanding painting, music, poetry, and perfect at cookery and puddens. I borded with the Count, that’s how I came to know her. There are four Counts her brothers. One an Abbey—three with the Prince’s army. They have a lawsuit for an immense fortune: but are now in a pore way. Break this to mother, who’ll take anything from you. And write, and bid Finch write amediately. Hostel de l’Aigle Noire, Bruxelles, Flanders.’

So Frank had married a Roman Catholic lady, and an heir was expected, and Mr. Esmond was to carry this intelligence to his mistress at London. ’Twas a difficult embassy; and the colonel felt not a little tremor as he neared the capital.

He reached his inn late, and sent a messenger to Kensington to announce his arrival and visit the next morning. The messenger brought back news that the Court was at Windsor, and the fair Beatrix absent and engaged in her duties there. Only Esmond’s mistress remained in her house at Kensington. She appeared in Court but once in the year; Beatrix was quite the mistress and ruler of the little mansion, inviting the company thither, and engaging in every conceivable frolic of town pleasure; while her mother, acting as the young lady’s protectress and elder sister, pursued her own path, which was quite modest and secluded.

As soon as ever Esmond was dressed (and he had been awake long before the town), he took a coach for Kensington, and reached it so early that he met his dear mistress coming home from morning prayers. She carried her prayer-book, never allowing a footman to bear it, as everybody else did; and it was by this simple sign Esmond knew what her occupation had been. He called to the coachman to stop, and jumped out as she looked toward him. She wore her hood as usual, and she turned quite pale when she saw him. To feel that kind little hand near to his heart seemed to give him strength. They were soon at the door of her ladyship’s house—and within it.
With a sweet, sad smile she took his hand and kissed it.

'How ill you have been; how weak you look, my dear Henry,' she said.

'Tis certain the colonel did look like a ghost, except that ghosts do not look very happy, 'tis said. Esmond always felt so on returning to her after absence, indeed whenever he looked in her sweet, kind face.

'I am come back to be nursed by my family,' says he. 'If Frank had not taken care of me after my wound, very likely I should have gone altogether.'

'Poor Frank, good Frank!' says his mother. 'You'll always be kind to him, my lord,' she went on. 'The poor child never knew he was doing you a wrong.'

'My lord!' cries out Colonel Esmond. 'What do you mean, dear lady?'

'I am no lady,' says she; 'I am Rachel Esmond, Francis Esmond's widow, my lord. I cannot bear that title. Would we never had taken it from him who has it now. But we did all in our power, Henry, we did all in our power; and my lord and I—that is—'

'Who told you this tale, dearest lady?' asked the colonel.

'Have you not had the letter I writ you? I writ to you at Mons directly I heard it,' says Lady Esmond.

'And from whom?' again asked Colonel Esmond—and his mistress then told him that on her deathbed the dowager countess, sending for her, had presented her with this dismal secret as a legacy. 'Twas very malicious of the dowager,' Lady Esmond said, 'to have had it so long, and to have kept the truth from me. "Cousin Rachel," she said—and Esmond's mistress could not forbear smiling as she told the story—"Cousin Rachel," cries the dowager, 'I have sent for you, as the doctors say I may go off any day in this dysentery, and to ease my conscience of a great load that has been on it. You always have been a poor creature and unfit for great honor, and what I have to say won't, therefore, affect you so much. You must know, Cousin Rachel, that I have left my house, plate, and furniture, £3000 in money, and my diamonds that my late revered saint and sovereign King James presented me with, to my Lord Viscount Castlewood."

"To my Frank?" says Lady Castlewood; "I was in hopes—"

"To Viscount Castlewood, my dear; Viscount Castlewood and Baron Esmond of Shandon in the Kingdom of Ireland, Earl and Marquis of Esmond under patent of his Majesty King James II., conferred on my husband, the late marquis—for I am Marchioness of Esmond before God and man.”

“"And have you left poor Harry nothing, dear marchioness?” asks Lady Castlewood (she hath told me the story completely since with her quiet, arch way, the most charming any woman ever had, and I set down the narrative here at length so as to have done with it). “And have you left poor Harry nothing?” asks my dear lady; for you know, Henry,” she says, with her sweet smile, “I used always to pity Esau, and I think I am on his side, though papa tried very hard to convince me the other way.”

“Poor Harry!” says the old lady. “So you want something left to poor Harry, he, he! (Reach me the drops, cousin.) Well then, my dear, since you want poor Harry to have a fortune, you must understand that ever since the year 1691, a week after the battle of the Boyne, where the Prince of Orange defeated his royal sovereign and father, for which crime he is now suffering in flames (ugh! ugh!) Henry Esmond hath been Marquis of Esmond and Earl of Castlewood in the United Kingdom, and Baron and Viscount Castlewood of Shandon in Ireland, and a baronet, and his eldest son will be by courtesy styled Earl of Castlewood—he, he! What do you think of that, my dear?”

“Gracious mercy! how long have you known this?” cries the other lady, thinking perhaps that the old marchioness was wandering in her wits.

“My husband, before he was converted, was a wicked wretch,” the sick sinner continued. “When he was in the Low Countries he seduced a weaver’s daughter, and added to his wickedness by marrying her. And then he came to this country and married me—a poor girl—a poor innocent young thing, I say”—though she was past forty, you know, Harry, when she married; and as for being innocent—“Well,” she went on, “I knew nothing of my lord’s wickedness for three years after our marriage, and after the burial of our poor little boy I had it done over again, my dear; I had myself married by Father Holt in Castlewood chapel as soon as ever I heard the creature was dead, and having a great illness then, arising from another sad disappointment I had, the priest came and told me that my lord had a son before our marriage, and that the child was at nurse in England; and I consented to let the brat be brought home, and a queer little melancholy child it was when it came.

“"Our intention was to make a priest of him; and he was bred for this, until you perverted him from it, you wicked woman. And I had again hopes of giving an heir to my lord, when he was called away upon the king's business, and died fighting gloriously at the Boyne water.

"Should I be disappointed—I owed your husband no love, my dear, for he had jilted me in the most scandalous way; and I thought there would be time to declare the little weaver's son for the true heir. But I was carried off to prison, where your husband was so kind to me—urging all his friends to obtain my release, and using all his credit in my favor—that I relented toward him, especially as my director counseled me to be silent; and that it was for the good of the king's service that the title of our family should continue with your husband the late viscount, whereby his fidelity would be always secured to the king. And a proof of this is that a year before your husband's death, when he thought of taking a place under the Prince of Orange, Mr. Holt went to him, and told him what the state of the matter was, and obliged him to raise a large sum for his majesty; and engaged him in the true cause so heartily that we were sure of his support on any day when it should be considered advisable to attack the usurper. Then his sudden death came; and there was a thought of declaring the truth. But 'twas determined to be best for the king's service to let the title still go with the younger branch; and there's no sacrifice a Castlewood wouldn't make for that cause, my dear.

"As for Colonel Esmond, he knew the truth already. ['And then, Harry,' my mistress said, 'she told me of what had happened at my dear husband's deathbed.'] He doth not intend to take the title, though it belongs to him. But it eases my conscience that you should know the truth, my dear. And your son is lawfully Viscount Castlewood so long as his cousin doth not claim the rank.'

This was the substance of the dowager's revelation. Dean Atterbury had knowledge of it, Lady Castlewood said, and Esmond very well knows how; that divine being the clergyman for whom the late lord had sent on his deathbed; and when Lady Castlewood would instantly have written to her son, and conveyed the truth to him, the dean's advice was that a letter should be writ to Colonel Esmond rather; that the matter should be submitted to his decision, by which alone the rest of the family were bound to abide.

'And can my dearest lady doubt what that will be?' says the colonel.

'It rests with you, Harry, as the head of our house.'
‘It was settled twelve years since, by my dear lord’s bedside,’ says Colonel Esmond. ‘The children must know nothing of this. Frank and his heirs after him must bear our name. ’Tis his rightfully; I have not even a proof of that marriage of my father and mother, though my poor lord, on his deathbed, told me that Father Holt had brought such a proof to Castlewood. I would not seek it when I was abroad. I went and looked at my poor mother’s grave in her convent. What matter to her now? No court of law on earth, upon my mere word, would deprive my Lord Viscount and set me up. I am the head of the house, dear lady; but Frank is Viscount of Castlewood still. And rather than disturb him, I would turn monk, or disappear in America.’

As he spoke so to his dearest mistress, for whom he would have been willing to give up his life, or to make any sacrifice any day, the fond creature flung herself down on her knees before him, and kissed both his hands in an outbreak of passionate love and gratitude, such as could not but melt his heart, and make him feel very proud and thankful that God had given him the power to show his love for her, and to prove it by some little sacrifice on his own part. To be able to bestow benefits or happiness on those one loves is sure the greatest blessing conferred upon a man—and what wealth or name, or gratification of ambition or vanity, could compare with the pleasure Esmond now had of being able to confer some kindness upon his best and dearest friends?’

‘Dearest saint,’ says he—‘purest soul, that has had so much to suffer, that has blessed the poor lonely orphan with such a treasure of love—’tis for me to kneel, not for you; ’tis for me to be thankful that I can make you happy. Hath my life any other aim? Blessed be God that I can serve you! What pleasure, think you, could all the world give me compared to that?’

‘Don’t raise me,’ she said, in a wild way to Esmond, who would have lifted her. ‘Let me kneel—let me kneel, and—and—worship you.’

Before such a partial judge as Esmond’s dear mistress owned herself to be, any cause which he might plead was sure to be given in his favor; and accordingly he found little difficulty in reconciling her to the news whereof he was bearer, of her son’s marriage to a foreign lady, papist though she was. Lady Castlewood never could be brought to think so ill of that religion as other people in England thought of it; she held that ours was undoubtedly a branch of the Catholic Church, but that the Roman was one of the main stems on which, no doubt, many errors had been grafted (she was, for a woman, extraordinarily well versed in this controversy, having acted, as a girl, as secretary to her father, the late dean, and written many of his sermons, under his dictation); and if Frank had chosen to marry a lady of the Church of South Europe, as she would call the Roman communion, there was no need why she should not welcome her as a daughter-in-law: and, accordingly, she wrote to her new daughter a very pretty, touching letter (as Esmond thought, who had cognizance of it before it went), in which the only hint of reproof was a gentle remonstrance that her son had not written to herself to ask a fond mother's blessing for that step which he was about taking. 'Castlewood knew very well,' so she wrote to her son, 'that she never denied him anything in her power to give, much less would she think of opposing a marriage that was to make his happiness, as she trusted, and keep him out of wild courses, which had alarmed her a good deal;' and she besought him to come quickly to England, to settle down in his family house of Castlewood ('It is his family house,' says she to Colonel Esmond, 'though only his own house by your forbearance'), and to receive the account of her stewardship during his ten years' minority. By care and frugality she had got the estate into a better condition than ever it had been since the Parliamentary wars; and my lord was now master of a pretty small income, not encumbered of debts, as it had been during his father's ruinous time. 'But in saving my son's fortune,' says she, 'I fear I have lost a great part of my hold on him.' And, indeed, this was the case, her ladyship's daughter complaining that their mother did all for Frank and nothing for her, and Frank himself being dissatisfied at the narrow, simple way of his mother's living at Walcote, where he had been brought up more like a poor parson's son than a young nobleman that was to make a figure in the world. 'Twas this mistake in his early training, very likely, that set him so eager upon pleasure when he had it in his power; nor is he the first lad that has been spoiled by the overcareful fondness of women. No training is so useful for children, great or small, as the company of their betters in rank or natural parts; in whose society they lose the overweening sense of their own importance, which stay at home people very commonly learn. But as a prodigal that's sending in a schedule of his debts to his friends never puts all down, and, you may be sure, the rogue keeps back some immense swingeing bill, that he doesn't dare to own, so the poor Frank had a very heavy piece of news to break to his mother, and which he hadn't the courage to introduce into his first confession. Some misgivings Esmond might have upon receiving Frank's letter, and knowing into what hands the boy had fallen; but whatever these misgivings were, he kept them to himself, not caring to trouble his mistress with any fears that might be groundless.

However, the next mail which came from Bruxelles, after Frank had received his mother's letters there, brought back a joint composition from himself and his wife, who could spell no better than her young scapegrace of a husband, full of expressions of thanks, love, and duty to the dowager viscountess, as my poor lady now was styled; and along with this letter (which was read in a family council, namely, the viscountess, Mistress Beatrix, and the writer of this memoir, and which was pronounced to be vulgar by the maid of honor, and felt to be so by the other two), there came a private letter for Colonel Esmond from poor Frank, with another dismal commission for the colonel to execute at his best opportunity; and this was to announce that Frank had seen fit, 'by the exhortation of Mr. Holt, the influence of his Clotilda, and the blessing of Heaven and the saints,' says my lord demurely, 'to change his religion, and be received into the bosom of that Church of which his sovereign, many of his family, and the greater part of the civilized world were members.' And his lordship added a postscript—of which Esmond knew the inspiring genius very well, for it had the genuine twang of the seminary, and was quite unlike poor Frank's ordinary style of writing and thinking—in which he reminded Colonel Esmond that he too was, by birth, of that Church; and that his mother and sister should have his lordship's prayers to the saints (an inestimable benefit, truly!) for their conversion.

If Esmond had wanted to keep this secret he could not; for a day or two after receiving this letter, a notice from Bruxelles appeared in the Post-Boy and other prints, announcing that 'a young Irish lord, the Viscount C-stlew—d, just come to his majority, and who had served the last campaigns with great credit, as aid-de-camp to his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, had declared for the popish religion at Bruxelles, and had walked in a procession barefoot, with a wax taper in his hand. The notorious Mr. Holt, who had been employed as a Jacobite agent during the last reign, and many times pardoned by King William, had been, the Post-Boy said, the agent of this conversion.

The Lady Castlewood was as much cast down by this news as Miss Beatrix was indignant at it. 'So,' says she, 'Castle-wood is no longer a home for us, mother. Frank's foreign wife will bring her confessor, and there will be frogs for dinner; and all Tusher's and my grandfather's sermons are flung away upon my brother. I used to tell you that you killed him with the catechism, and that he would turn wicked as soon as he broke from his mammy's leading-strings. Oh, mother, you would not believe that the young seapegrace was playing you tricks, and that sneak of a Tusher was not a fit guide for him. Oh, those parsons, I hate 'em all!' says Mistress Beatrix, clapping her hands together; 'yes, whether they wear cassocks and buckles, or beards and bare feet. There's a horrid Irish wretch who never misses a Sunday at Court, and who pays me compliments there, the horrible man; and if you want to know what parsons are, you should see his behavior, and hear him talk of his own cloth. They're all the same, whether they're bishops or bonzes or Indian fakirs. They try to domineer, and they frighten us with kingdom come; and they wear a sanctified air in public, and expect us to go down on our knees and ask their blessing; and they intrigue, and they grasp, and they backbite, and they slander worse than the worst courtier or the wickedest old woman. I heard this Mr. Swift sneering at my Lord Duke of Marlborough's courage the other day. He! that Teague from Dublin! because his Grace is not in favor, dares to say this of him; and he says this that it may get to her Majesty's ear, and to coax and wheedle Mrs. Masham. They say the Elector of Hanover has a dozen of mistresses in his Court at Herrenhausen, and if he comes to be king over us, I wager that the bishops and Mr. Swift, that wants to be one, will coax and wheedle them. Oh, those priests and their grave airs! I'm sick of their square toes and their rustling cassocks. I should like to go to a country where there was not one, or turn Quaker, and get rid of 'em; and I would, only the dress is not becoming, and I've much too pretty a figure to hide it. Haven't I, cousin?' and here she glanced at her person and the looking-glass, which told her rightly that a more beautiful shape and face never were seen.

'I made that onslaught on the priests,' says Miss Beatrix afterward, 'in order to divert my poor dear mother's anguish about Frank. Frank is as vain as a girl, cousin. Talk of us girls being vain, what are we to you? It was easy to see that the first woman who chose would make a fool of him, or the first robe—I count a priest and a woman all the same. We are always cabaling; we are not answerable for the fibs we tell; we are always cajoling and coaxing, or threatening; and we are always making mischief, Colonel Esmond—mark my word for that, who know the world, sir, and have to make my way in it. I see as well as possible how Frank's marriage hath been managed. The count, our papa-in-law, is always away at the coffeehouse. The countess our mother is always in the kitchen looking after the dinner. The countess our sister is at the spinet. When my lord comes to say he is going on the campaign, the lovely Clotilda bursts into tears, and faints—so; he catches her in his arms—no, sir, keep your distance, cousin, if you please,—she cries on his shoulder, and he says, "Oh, my divine, my adored, my beloved Clotilda, are you sorry to part with me?" "Oh, my Francisco," says she; "oh, my lord!" and at this very instant mamma and a couple of young brothers, with mustaches and long rapiers, come in from the kitchen, where they have been eating bread and onions. Mark my word, you will have all this woman's relations at Castlewood three months after she has arrived there. The old count and countess, and the young counts and all the little countesses her sisters. Counts! every one of these wretches says he is a count. Guiscard, that stabbed Mr. Harvey, said he was a count; and I believe he was a barber. All Frenchmen are barbers—fiddle-dee! don't contradict me—or else dancing masters, or else priests.' And so she rattled on.

'Who was it taught you to dance, Cousin Beatrix?' says the colonel.

She laughed out the air of a minuet, and swept a low courtesy, coming up to recover with the prettiest little foot in the world pointed out. Her mother came in as she was in this attitude; my lady had been in her closet, having taken poor Frank's conversion in a very serious way; the madcap girl ran up to her mother, put her arms round her waist, kissed her, tried to make her dance, and said: 'Don't be silly, you kind little mamma, and cry about Frank turning papist. What a figure he must be, with a white sheet and a candle, walking in a procession barefoot!' And she kicked off her little slippers (the wonderfulest little shoes with wonderful tall red heels; Esmond pounced upon one as it fell close beside him), and she put on the drollest little mouse, and marched up and down the room holding Esmond's cane by way of taper. Serious as her mood was, Lady Castlewood could not refrain from laughing; and as for Esmond, he looked on with that delight with which the sight of this fair creature always inspired him: never had he seen any woman so arch, so brilliant, and so beautiful.

Having finished her march, she put out her foot for her slipper. The colonel knelt down: 'If you will be Pope I will turn papist,' says he; and her Holiness gave him gracious leave to kiss the little stockinged foot before he put the slipper on.

Mamma's feet began to pat on the floor during this operation, and Beatrix, whose bright eyes nothing escaped, saw that little mark of impatience. She ran up and embraced her mother, with her usual cry of, 'Oh, you silly little mamma; your feet are quite as pretty as mine,' says she; 'they are, cousin, though she hides 'em; but the shoemaker will tell you that he makes for both off the same last.'

'You are taller than I am, dearest,' says her mother, blushing over her whole sweet face—'and—and it is your hand, my dear, and not your foot he wants you to give him;' and she said it with a hysterical laugh, that had more of tears than laughter in it; laying her head on her daughter's fair shoulder, and hiding it there. They made a very pretty picture together, and looked like a pair of sisters—the sweet, simple matron seeming younger than her years, and her daughter, if not older, yet somehow, from a commanding manner and grace which she possessed above most women, her mother's superior and protectress.

'But oh!' cries my mistress, recovering herself after this scene, and returning to her usual sad tone, 'tis a shame that we should laugh and be making merry on a day when we ought to be down on our knees and asking pardon.'

'Asking pardon for what?' says saucy Mrs. Beatrix—'because Frank takes it into his head to fast on Fridays and worship images? You know if you had been born a papist, mother, a papist you would have remained to the end of your days. 'Tis the religion of the king and of some of the best quality. For my part, I'm no enemy to it, and think Queen Bess was not a penny better than Queen Mary.'

'Hush, Beatrix! Do not jest with sacred things, and remember of what parentage you come,' cries my lady. Beatrix was ordering her ribbons, and adjusting her tucker, and performing a dozen provokingly pretty ceremonies, before the glass. The girl was no hypocrite at least. She never at that time could be brought to think but of the world and her beauty; and seemed to have no more sense of devotion than some people have of music, that cannot distinguish one air from another. Esmond saw this fault in her, as he saw many others—a bad wife would Beatrix Esmond make, he thought, for any man under the degree of a prince. She was born to shine in great assemblies, and to adorn palaces, and to command everywhere—to conduct an intrigue of politics, or to glitter in a queen's train. But to sit at a homely table, and mend the stockings of a poor man's children! that was no fitting duty for her, or at least one that she wouldn't have broke her heart in trying to do. She was a princess, though she had scarce a shilling to her fortune; and one of her subjects—the most abject and devoted wretch, sure, that ever drivel'd at a woman's knees—was this unlucky gentleman; who bound his good sense, and reason, and independence, hand and foot, and submitted them to her.

And who does not know how ruthlessly women will tyrannize when they are let to domineer? And who does not know how useless advice is? I could give good counsel to my descendants, but I know they'll follow their own way, for all their grandfather's sermon. A man gets his own experience about women, and will take nobody's hearsay; nor, indeed, is the young fellow worth a fig that would. 'Tis I that am in love with my mistress, not my old grandmother that counsels me;
'tis I that have fixed the value of the thing I would have, and know the price I would pay for it. It may be worthless to you, but 'tis all my life to me. Had Esmond possessed the Great Mogul's crown and all his diamonds, or all the Duke of Marlborough's money, or all the ingots sunk at Vigo, he would have given them all for this woman. A fool he was, if you will; but so is a sovereign a fool, that will give half a principality for a little crystal as big as a pigeon's egg, and called a diamond; so is a wealthy nobleman a fool, that will face danger or death, and spend half his life, and all his tranquillity, caballing for a blue ribbon; so is a Dutch merchant a fool, that hath been known to pay ten thousand crowns for a tulip. There's some particular prize we all of us value, and that every man of spirit will venture his life for. With this, it may be to achieve a great reputation for learning; with that, to be a man of fashion, and the admiration of the town; with another, to consummate a great work of art or poetry, and go to immortality that way; and with another, for a certain time of his life, the sole object and aim is a woman.

While Esmond was under the domination of this passion, he remembers many a talk he had with his intimates, who used to rally Our Knight of the Rueful Countenance at his devotion, whereof he made no disguise, to Beatrix; and it was with replies such as the above he met his friends' satire. 'Granted, I am a fool,' says he, 'and no better than you; but you are no better than I. You have your folly you labor for; give me the charity of mine. What flatteries do you, Mr. St. John, stoop to whisper in the ears of a queen's favorite? What nights of labor doth not the laziest man in the world endure, foregoing his bottle and his boon companions, foregoing Lais, in whose lap he would like to be yawning, that he may prepare a speech full of lies, to cajole three hundred stupid country gentlemen in the House of Commons, and get the hiccupping cheers of the October Club? What days will you spend in your jolting chariot [Mr. Esmond often rode to Windsor, and especially of later days, with the secretary]. What hours will you pass on your gouty feet—and how humbly will you kneel down to present a dispatch—you, the proudest man in the world, that has not knelt to God since you were a boy, and in that posture whisper, flatter, adore almost, a stupid woman, that's often boozing with too much meat and drink, when Mr. Secretary goes for his audience! If my pursuit is vanity, sure yours is too.' And then the secretary would fly out in such a rich flow of eloquence as this pen cannot pretend to recall; advocating his scheme of ambition, showing the great good he would do for his country when he was the undisputed chief of it; backing his opinion with a score of pat sentences from Greek and Roman authorities (of which kind of learning he made rather an ostentatious display), and scornfully vaunting the very arts and meannesses by which fools were to be made to follow him, opponents to be bribed or silenced, doubters converted, and enemies overawed.

'I am a Diogenes,' says Esmond, laughing, 'that is taken up for a ride in Alexander's chariot. I have no desire to vanquish Darius or to tame Bucephalus. I do not want what you want—a great name or a high place; to have them would bring me no pleasure. But my moderation is taste, not virtue; and I know that what I do want is as vain as that which you long after. Do not grudge me my vanity, if I allow yours; or rather let us laugh at both indifferently, and at ourselves and at each other.'

'If your charmer holds out,' says St. John, 'at this rate she may keep you twenty years besieging her, and surrender by the time you are seventy, and she is old enough to be a grandmother. I do not say the pursuit of a particular woman is not as pleasant a pastime as any other kind of hunting,' he added; 'only, for my part, I find the game won't run long enough. They knock under too soon—that's the fault I find with 'em.'

'The game which you pursue is in the habit of being caught, and used to being pulled down,' says Mr. Esmond.
‘But Dulcinea del Toboso is peerless, eh?’ says the other. ‘Well, honest Harry, go and attack windmills—perhaps thou art not more mad than other people,’ St. John added, with a sigh.

CHAPTER III.

A PAPER OUT OF THE ‘SPECTATOR.’

DOTH any young gentleman of my progeny, who may read his old grandfather’s papers, chance to be presently suffering under the passion of love? There is a humiliating cure, but one that is easy and almost specific for the malady—which is, to try an alibi. Esmond went away from his mistress and was cured a half-dozen times; he came back to her side, and instantly fell ill again of the fever. He vowed that he could leave her and think no more of her, and so he could pretty well, at least, succeed in quelling that rage and longing he had whenever he was with her; but as soon as he returned he was as bad as ever again. Truly a ludicrous and pitiable object, at least exhausting everybody’s pity but his dearest mistress’, Lady Castlewood’s, in whose tender breast he reposed all his dreary confessions, and who never tired of hearing him and pleading for him.

Sometimes Esmond would think there was hope. Then again he would be plagued with despair, at some impertinence or coquetry of his mistress. For days they would be like brother and sister, or the dearest friends—she, simple, fond, and charming—he, happy beyond measure at her good behavior. But this would all vanish on a sudden. Either he would be too pressing and hint his love, when she would rebuff him instantly, and give his vanity a box on the ear; or he would be jealous, and with perfect good reason, of some new admirer that had sprung up, or some rich young gentleman newly arrived in the town, that this incorrigible flirt would set her nets and baits to draw in. If Esmond remonstrated, the little rebel would say, ‘Who are you? I shall go my own way, sirrah, and that way is toward a husband, and I don’t want you on the way. I am for your betters, colonel; for your betters, do you hear that? You might do if you had an estate and were younger; only eight years older than I, you say! pish, you are a hundred years older. You are an old, old Graveairs, and I should make you miserable, that would be the only comfort I should have in marrying you. But you have not money enough to keep a cat decently after you have paid your man his wages, and your landlady her bill. Do you think I am going to live in a lodging, and turn the mutton at a string while your honor nurses the baby? Fiddlestick, and why did you not get this nonsense knocked out of your head when you were in the wars?
You are come back more dismal and dreary than ever. You and mamma are fit for each other. You might be Darby and Joan, and play cribbage to the end of your lives.'

'At least you own to your worldliness, my poor 'Trix,' says her mother.

'Worldliness! Oh, my pretty lady! Do you think that I am a child in the nursery, and to be frightened by Bogey! Worldliness, to be sure; and pray, madam, where is the harm of wishing to be comfortable? When you are gone, you dearest old woman, or when I am tired of you and have run away from you, where shall I go? Shall I go and be head nurse to my popish sister-in-law, take the children their physic, and whip 'em and put 'em to bed when they are naughty? Shall I be Castle-wood's upper servant, and perhaps marry Tom Tusher? Merci!
I have been long enough Frank's humble servant. Why am I not a man? I have ten times his brains, and had I worn the —well, don't let your ladyship be frightened—had I worn a sword and a periwig instead of this mantle and commode to which nature has condemned me—(though 'tis a pretty stuff, too—Cousin Esmond? you will go to the Exchange to-morrow, and get the exact counterpart of this ribbon, sir; do you hear?)—I would have made our name talked about. So would Graveairs here have made something out of our name, if he had represented it. My Lord Graveairs would have done very well. Yes, you have a very pretty way, and would have made a very decent, grave speaker.' And here she began to imitate Esmond's way of carrying himself and speaking, to his face, and so ludicrously that his mistress burst out a-laughing, and even he himself could see there was some likeness in the fantastical, malicious caricature.

'Yes,' says she, 'I solemnly vow, own, and confess, that I want a good husband. Where's the harm of one? My face is my fortune. Who'll come?—buy, buy, buy! I cannot toil, neither can I spin, but I can play twenty-three games on the cards. I can dance the last dance, I can hunt the stag, and I think I could shoot flying. I can talk as wicked as any woman of my years, and know enough stories to amuse a sulky husband for at least one thousand and one nights. I have a pretty taste for dress, diamonds, gambling, and old china. I love sugar-plums, Malines lace (that you brought me, cousin, is very pretty), the opera, and everything that is useless and costly. I have got a monkey and a little black boy—Pompey, sir, go and give a dish of chocolate to Colonel Graveairs—and a parrot and a spaniel, and I must have a husband. Cupid, you hear?’

‘Iss, missis!’ says Pompey, a little grinning negro Lord Peterborow gave her, with a bird of Paradise in his turban, and a collar with his mistress’ name on it.

‘Iss, missis!’ says Beatrix, imitating the child. ‘And if husband not come, Pompey must go fetch one.’

And Pompey went away grinning, with his chocolate tray, as Miss Beatrix ran up to her mother and ended her sally of mischief in her common way, with a kiss—no wonder that upon paying such a penalty her fond judge pardoned her.

When Esmond came home, his health was still shattered, and he took a lodging near to his mistresses, at Kensington, glad enough to be served by them, and to see them day after day. He was enabled to see a little company—and of the sort he liked best. Mr. Steele and Mr. Addison both did him the honor to visit him; and drank many a glass of good claret at his lodging, while their entertainer, through his wound, was kept to diet drink and gruel. These gentlemen were Whigs, and great admirers of my Lord Duke of Marlborough; and Esmond was entirely of the other party. But their different views of politics did not prevent the gentlemen from agreeing in private, nor from allowing, on one evening when Esmond’s kind old patron, Lieutenant General Webb, with a stick and a crutch, hobbled up to the colonel’s lodging (which was prettily situate at Knightsbridge, between London and Kensington, and looking over the gardens), that the lieutenant general was a noble and gallant soldier—and even that he had been hardly used in the Wynendael affair. He took his revenge in talk, that must be confessed; and if Mr. Addison had had a mind to write a poem about Wynendael, he might have heard from the commander’s own lips the story a hundred times over.

Mr. Esmond, forced to be quiet, betook himself to literature for a relaxation, and composed his comedy, whereof the prompter’s copy lieth in my walnut escritoire, sealed up and docketed, ‘The Faithful Fool; a comedy, as it was performed by her Majesty’s Servants.’ ‘Twas a very sentimental piece; and Mr. Steele, who had more of that kind of sentiment than Mr. Addison, admired it, while the other rather sneered at the performance; though he owned that, here and there, it contained some pretty strokes. He was bringing out his own play of ‘Cato’ at the time, the blaze of which quite extinguished Esmond’s farthing candle; and his name was never put to the piece, which was printed as by a person of quality. Only nine copies were sold, though Mr. Dennis, the great critic, praised it, and said 'twas a work of great merit; and Colonel Esmond had the whole impression burned one day in a rage, by Jack Lockwood, his man.

All this comedy was full of bitter satirical strokes against a certain young lady. The plot of the piece was quite a new one. A young woman was represented with a great number of suitors, selecting a pert frivole of a peer, in place of the hero (but ill-acted, I think, by Mr. Wilkes, the Faithful Fool), who persisted in admiring her. In the fifth act, Teraminta was made to discover the merits of Eugenio (the F. F.), and to feel a partiality for him too late; for he announced that he had bestowed his hand and estate upon Rosaria, a country lass, endowed with every virtue. But it must be owned that the audience yawned through the play; and that it perished on the third night, with only half a dozen persons to behold its agonies. Esmond and his two mistresses came to the first night, and Miss Beatrix fell asleep; while her mother, who had not been to a play since King James II. 's time, thought the piece, though not brilliant, had a very pretty moral.

Mr. Esmond dabbled in letters, and wrote a deal of prose and verse at this time of leisure. When displeased with the conduct of Miss Beatrix, he would compose a satire, in which he relieved his mind. When smarting under the faithlessness of women, he dashed off a copy of verses in which he held the whole sex up to scorn. One day, in one of these moods, he made a little joke, in which (swearing him to secrecy) he got his friend Dick Steele to help him; and, composing a paper, he had it printed exactly like Steele's paper, and by his printer, and laid on his mistress' breakfast table the following:

No. 341.
SPECTATOR.
TUESDAY, April 1, 1712.

Mutato nomine de te Fabula narratur.—HORACE.
Thyself the moral of the Fable see.—CREECH.

Jocasta is known as a woman of learning and fashion, and as one of the most amiable persons of this Court and country. She is at home two mornings of the week, and all the wits and a few of the beauties of London flock to her assemblies. When she goes abroad to Tunbridge or the Bath, a retinue of adorers ride the journey with her; and besides the London beaux, she has a crowd of admirers at the Wells, the polite among the natives of Sussex and Somerset pressing round her tea-tables, and being anxious for a nod from her chair. Jocasta's acquaintance is thus very numerous. Indeed, 'tis one smart writer's work to keep her visiting book—a strong footman is engaged to carry it—and it would require a much stronger head even than Jocasta's own to remember the names of all her dear friends.

Either at Epsom Wells or at Tunbridge (for of this important matter Jocasta cannot be certain) it was her ladyship's fortune to become acquainted with a young gentleman, whose conversation was so sprightly, and manners amiable, that she invited the agreeable young spark to visit her if ever he came to London, where her house in Spring Garden should be open to him. Charming as he was, and without any manner of doubt a pretty fellow, Jocasta hath such a regiment of the like continually marching.
round her standard that 'tis no wonder her attention is distracted among them. And so, though this gentleman made a considerable impression upon her, and touched her heart for at least three-and-twenty minutes, it must be owned that she has forgotten his name. He is a dark man, and may be eight-and-twenty years old. His dress is sober, though of rich materials. He has a mole on his forehead over his left eye, has a blue ribbon to his cane and sword, and wears his own hair.

Jocasta was much flattered by beholding her admirer (for that everybody admires who sees her is a point which she never can for a moment doubt) in the next pew to her at St. James' Church last Sunday, and the manner in which he appeared to go to sleep during the sermon—though from under his fringed eyelids it was evident he was casting glances of respectful rapture toward Jocasta—deeply moved and interested her. On coming out of church he found his way to her chair, and made her an elegant bow as she stepped into it. She saw him at Court afterward, when he carried himself with a most distinguished air, though none of her acquaintances knew his name; and the next night he was at the play, where her ladyship was pleased to acknowledge him from the side-box.

During the whole of the comedy she raked her brains so to remember his name that she did not hear a word of the piece: and having the happiness to meet him once more in the lobby of the playhouse, she went up to him in a flutter, and bade him remember that she kept two nights in the week, and that she longed to see him at Spring Garden.

He appeared on Tuesday in a rich suit, showing a very fine taste both in the tailor and wearer; and though a knot of us were gathered round the charming Jocasta, fellows who pretended to know every face upon the town, not one could tell the gentleman's name in reply to Jocasta's eager inquiries, flung to the right and left of her as he advanced up the room with a bow that would become a duke.

Jocasta acknowledged this salute with one of those emilie and courtesies of which that lady hath the secret. She courtesies with a languishing air, as if to say, 'You are come at last. I have been pining for you;' and then she finishes her victim with a killing look, which declares; 'Ô Phyllander! I have no eyes but for you.' Camilla hath as good a courtesy perhaps, and Thalestris much such another look; but the glance and courtly together belong to Jocasta of all the English beauties alone.

'Welcome to London sir,' says she. 'One can see you are from the country by your looks.' She would have said 'Epsom,' or 'Tunbridge,' had she remembered rightly at which place she had met the stranger; but alas! she had forgotten.

The gentleman said, 'He had been in town but three days; and one of his reasons for coming hither was to have the honor of paying his court to Jocasta.'

She said, 'The waters had agreed with her but indifferently.'

'The waters were for the sick,' the gentleman said: 'the young and beautiful came but to make them sparkle. And as the clergyman read the service on Sunday,' he added, 'your ladyship reminded me of the angel that visited the pool.' A murmur of approbation saluted this sally. Manillo, who is a wit when he is not at cards, was in such a rage he revoked when he heard it.

Jocasta was an angel visiting the waters; but at which of the Bethesdas? She was puzzled more and more: and, as her way always is, looked the more innocent and simple, the more artful her intentions were.

We were discoursing,' says she, 'about spelling of names and words when you cannot. Why should we say good and write gold, and call china chaynay, and Caven-dish Candeil, and cholmondeley Chumley? If we call Pulteney Pultney, why shouldn't we call poultry pultry—and—'

'Such an enchantress as your ladyship,' says he, 'is mistress of all sorts of spells.' But this was Dr. Swift's pun, and we all knew it.

And—how do you spell your name?' says she, coming to the point at length; for this sprightly conversation had lasted much longer than is here set down, and been carried on through at least three dishes of tea.

'Oh, madam,' says he, 'I spell my name with the y.' And laying down his dish my gentleman made another elegant bow and was gone in a moment.

Jocasta had no sleep since this mortification and the stranger's disappearance. If balked in anything, she is sure to lose her health and temper; and we, her servants, suffer, as well, during the angry fits of our queen. Can you help us, Mr. Spectator, who know everything, to read this riddle for her, and set at rest all our minds? We find in her list, Mr. Berty, Mr. Smith, Mr. Pike, Mr. Tyler—who may be Mr. Bertie, Mr. Smyth, Mr. Pyke, Mr. Tiler, for what we know. She hath turned away the clerk of her visiting book, a poor fellow with a great family of children. Read me this riddle, good Mr. Shortface, and oblige your admirer—'

EDIPUS.

THE TRUMPET COFFEEHOUSE, WHITEHALL.

MR. SPECTATOR: I am a gentleman but little acquainted with the town, though I have had a university education, and passed some years serving my country abroad, where my name is better known than in the coffeehouses and St. James'.

THE TRUMPET COFFEEHOUSE, WHITEHALL.
Two years since my uncle died, leaving me a pretty estate in the county of Kent; and being at Tunbridge Wells last summer, after my mourning was over, and on the lookout, if truth must be told, for some young lady who would share with me the solitude of my great Kentish house, and be kind to my tenantry (for whom a woman can do a great deal more good than the best-intentioned man can), I was greatly fascinated by a young lady of London, who was the toast of all the company at the Wells. Everyone knows Saccharissa's beauty; and I think, Mr. Spectator, no one better than herself.

My tablebook informs me that I danced no less than seven-and-twenty sets with her at the Assembly. I treated her to the fiddles twice. I was admitted on several days to her lodging, and received by her with a great deal of distinction, and for a time was entirely her slave. It was only when I found, from common talk of the company at the Wells, and from narrowly watching one, who I once thought of asking the most sacred question a man can put to a woman, that I became aware how unfit she was to be a country gentleman's wife; and that this fair creature was but a heartless worldly jilt, playing with affections that she never meant to return, and, indeed, incapable of returning them. 'Tis admiration such women want, not love that touches them; and I can conceive, in her old age, no more wretched creature than this lady will be, when her beauty hath deserted her, when her admirers have left her, and she hath neither friendship nor religion to console her.

Business calling me to London, I went to St. James's Church last Sunday, and there opposite me sat my beauty of the Wells. Her behavior during the whole service was so pert, languishing, and absurd; she flirted her fan, and ogled and eyed me in a manner so indecent that I was obliged to shut my eyes so as actually not to see her, and whenever I opened them beheld hers (and very bright they are) still staring at me. I fell in with her afterward at Court and at the playhouse; and here nothing would satisfy her but she must elbow through the crowd and speak to me, and invite me to the assembly which she holds at her house not very far from Charing Cr-is.

Having made her a promise to attend, of course I kept my promise, and found the young widow in the midst of a half-dozen card tables, and a crowd of wits and admirers. I made the best bow I could and advanced toward her, and saw by a peculiar puzzled look in her face, though she tried to hide her perplexity, that she had forgotten even my name.

Her talk, artful as it was, convinced me that I had guessed aright. She turned the conversation most ridiculously upon the spelling of names and words, and I replied with as ridiculous fulsome compliments as I could pay her; indeed, one, in which I compared her to an angel visiting the sick wells, went a little too far; nor should I have employed it, but that the allusion came from the second lesson last Sunday, which we both had heard, and I was pressed to answer her.

Then she came to the question which I knew was awaiting me, and asked how I spell my name. 'Madam,' says I, turning on my heel, 'I spell it with a y.' And so I left her, wondering at the light-heartedness of the town people, who forget and make friends so easily, and resolved to look elsewhere for a partner for your constant reader.

CYMON WYLDOWAT.

You know my real name, Mr. Spectator, in which there is no such a letter as hup- silon. But if the lady, whom I have called Saccharissa, wonders that I have appeared no more at the tea tables, she is hereby respectfully informed the reason y.

The above is a parable whereof the writer will now expound the meaning. Jocasta was no other than Miss Esmond, maid of honor to her Majesty. She had told Mr. Esmond this little story of having met a gentleman somewhere and forgetting his name, when the gentleman, with no such malicious intentions as those of 'Cymon' in the above fable, made the answer simply as above; and we all laughed to think how little Mistress Jocasta-Beatrix had profited by her artifice and precautions.

As for Cymon, he was intended to represent your and her very humble servant, the writer of the apologue and of this story, which we had printed on a Spectator paper at Mr. Steele's office, exactly as those famous journals were printed, and which was laid on the table at breakfast in place of the real newspaper. Mistress Jocasta, who had plenty of wit, could not live without her Spectator to her tea, and this sham Spectator was intended to convey to the young woman that she herself was a flirt, and that Cymon was a gentleman of honor and resolution, seeing all her faults, and determined to break the chains once and forever.

For though enough hath been said about this love business already—enough, at least, to prove to the writer’s heirs what a silly, fond fool their old grandfather was, who would like them to consider him as a very wise old gentleman; yet not near all has been told concerning this matter, which, if it were allowed to take in Esmond’s journal the space it occupied in his time, would weary his kinsmen and women of a hundred years’ time beyond all endurance; and form such a diary of folly and driveling, raptures and rage, as no man of ordinary vanity would like to leave behind him.

The truth is that, whether she laughed at him or encouraged him, whether she smiled or was cold, and turned her smiles on another; worldly and ambitious as he knew her to be, hard and careless as she seemed to grow with her court life, and a hundred admirers that came to her and left her, Esmond, do what he would, never could get Beatrix out of his mind; thought of her constantly at home or away. If he read his name in a Gazette, or escaped the shot of a cannon-ball or a greater danger in the campaign, as has happened to him more than once, the instant thought after the honor achieved or the danger avoided was, ‘What will she say of it? Will this distinction or the idea of this peril elate her or touch her so as to be better inclined toward me?’ He could no more help this passionate fidelity of temper than he could help the eyes he saw with—one or the other seemed a part of his nature, and knowing every one of her faults as well as the keenest of her detractors, and the folly of an attachment to such a woman, of which the fruition could never bring him happiness for above a week, there was yet a charm about this Circe from which the poor deluded gentleman could not free himself; and for a much longer period than Ulysses (another middle-aged officer, who had traveled much and been in the foreign wars) Esmond felt himself enthralled and besotted by the wiles of this enchantress. Quit her! He could no more quit her, as the Cymon of this story was made to quit his false one, than he could lose his consciousness of yesterday. She had but to raise her finger and he would come back from ever so far; she had but to say ‘I have discarded such and such an adorer, and the poor infatuated wretch would be sure to come and ride about her mother’s house, willing to be put on the ranks of suitors, though he knew he might be cast off the next week. If he were like Ulysses in his folly, at least she was in so far like Penelope that she had a crowd of suitors, and undid day after day and night after night the handiwork of fascination and the web of coquetry with which she was wont to allure and entertain them.

Part of her coquetry may have come from her position about the Court, where the beautiful maid of honor was the light about which a thousand beaux came and fluttered; where she was sure to have a ring of admirers round her, crowding to listen to her repartees as much as to admire her beauty, and where she spoke and listened to much free talk, such as one never would have thought the lips or ears of Rachel Castlewood’s daughter would have uttered or heard. While in waiting at Windsor or Hampton, the Court ladies and gentlemen would be making riding parties together; Mrs. Beatrix in a horseman’s coat and hat, the foremost after the stag hounds and over the park fences, a crowd of young fellows at her heels. If the English country ladies at this time were the most pure and modest of any ladies in the world—the English town and Court ladies permitted themselves words and behavior that were neither modest nor pure, and claimed, some of them, a freedom which those who love that sex most would never wish to grant them. The gentlemen of my family that follow after me (for I don’t encourage the ladies to pursue any such studies) may read in the works of Mr. Congreve and Dr. Swift and others what was the conversation and what the habits of our time.

The most beautiful woman in England in 1712, when Esmond returned to this country, a lady of high birth, and though of no fortune to be sure, with a thousand fascinations of wit and manners, Beatrix Esmond was now six-and-twenty years old and Beatrix Esmond still. Of her hundred adorers she had not chosen one for a husband, and those who had asked had been jilted by her, and more still had left her. A succession of near ten years’ crop of beauties had come up since her time, and had been reaped by proper husbands, if we may make an agricultural simile, and had been housed comfortably long ago. Her own contemporaries were sober mothers by this time; girls with not a tithe of her charms or her wit having made good matches, and now claiming precedence over the spinster who but lately had derided and outshone them. The young beauties were beginning to look down on Beatrix as an old maid, and sneeर, and call her one of Charles II.'s ladies, and ask whether her portrait was not in the Hampton Court Gallery? But still she reigned, at least in one man's opinion, superior over all the little misses that were the toasts of the young lads, and in Esmond's eyes was ever perfectly lovely and young.

Who knows how many were nearly made happy by possessing her, or, rather, how many were fortunate in escaping this siren? 'Tis a marvel to think that her mother was the purest and simplest woman in the whole world, and that this girl should have been born from her. I am inclined to fancy my mistress, who never said a harsh word to her children (and but twice or thrice only to one person), must have been too fond and pressing with the maternal authority; for her son and her daughter both revolted early, nor after their first flight from the nest could they ever be brought back quite to the fond mother's bosom. Lady Castlewood, and perhaps it was as well, knew little of her daughter's life and real thoughts. How was she to apprehend what passes in queens' antechambers and at Court tables? Mrs. Beatrix asserted her own authority so resolutely that her mother quickly gave in. The maid of honor had her own equipage; went from home and came back at her own will; her mother was alike powerless to resist her or to lead her, or to command or to persuade her.

She had been engaged once, twice, thrice, to be married, Esmond believed. When he quitted home, it hath been said, she was promised to my Lord Ashburnham, and now on his return, behold his lordship was just married to Lady Mary Butler, the Duke of Ormonde's daughter, and his fine houses and twelve thousand a year of fortune, for which Miss Beatrix had rather coveted him, was out of her power. To her Esmond could say nothing in regard to the breaking of this match, and, asking his mistress about it, all Lady Castlewood answered was: 'Do not speak to me about it, Harry. I cannot tell you how or why they parted and I fear to inquire. I have told you before that with all her kindness and wit and generosity, and that sort of splendor of nature she has, I can say but little good of poor Beatrix, and look with dread at the marriage she will form. Her mind is fixed on ambition only and making a great figure, and, this achieved, she will tire of it as she does of everything. Heaven help her husband, whoever he shall be! My Lord Ashburnham was a most excellent young man, gentle and yet manly, of very good parts, so they told me, and as my little conversation would enable me to judge; and a kind temper—kind and enduring I'm sure he must have been, from all that he had to endure. But he quitted her at last from some crowning piece of caprice or tyranny of hers, and now he has married a young woman that will make him a thousand times happier than my poor girl ever could.'

The rupture, whatever its cause was (I heard the scandal, but indeed shall not take pains to repeat at length in this diary the trumpery coffeehouse story), caused a good deal of low talk; and Mr. Esmond was present at my lord's appearance at the Birthday with his bride, over whom the revenge that Beatrix took was to look so imperial and lovely that the modest, downcast young lady could not appear beside her, and Lord Ashburnham, who had his reasons for wishing to avoid her, slunk away quite shamefaced, and very early. This time his Grace the Duke of Hamilton, whom Esmond had seen about her before, was constant at Miss Beatrix's side. He was one of the most splendid gentlemen of Europe, accomplished by books, by travel, by long command of the best company, distinguished as a statesman, having been ambassador in King William's time, and a noble speaker in the Scots' Parliament, where he had led the party that was against the Union, and though now five or six and forty years of age, a gentleman so high in stature, accomplished in wit, and favored in person, that he might pretend to the hand of any princess in Europe.

'Should you like the duke for a cousin?' says Mr. Secretary St. John, whispering to Colonel Esmond in French; 'it appears that the widower consoles himself.'

But to return to our little Spectator paper and the conversation which grew out of it. Miss Beatrix at first was quite bit (as the phrase of that day was), and did not 'smoke,' the authorship of the story; indeed Esmond had tried to imitate as well as he could Mr. Steele's manner (as for the other author of the Spectator, his prose style I think is altogether inimitable); and Dick, who was the idiest and best-natured of men, would have let the piece pass into his journal and go to posterity as one of his own lucubrations, but that Esmond did not care to have a lady's name whom he loved sent forth to the world in a light so unfavorable. Beatrix pished and psha'd over the paper; Colonel Esmond watching with no little interest her countenance as she read it.

'How stupid your friend Mr. Steele becomes!' cries Miss Beatrix. 'Epsom and Tunbridge! Will he never have done with Epsom and Tunbridge, and with beaux at church, and Jocastas and Lindamiras? Why does he not call women Nelly and Betty, as their godfathers and godmothers did for them in their baptism?'
'Beatrix, Beatrix!' says her mother, 'speak gravely of grave things.'
'Mamma thinks the Church Catechism came from heaven, I believe,' says Beatrix, with a laugh, 'and was brought down by a bishop from a mountain. Oh, how I used to break my heart over it! Besides, I had a popish godmother, mamma; why did you give me one?'
'I gave you the queen's name,' says her mother, blushing. 'And a very pretty name it is,' said somebody else.
Beatrix went on reading—'Spell my name with a y—why, why, you wretch,' says she, turning round to Colonel Esmond, 'you have been telling my story to Mr. Steele—or stop—you have written the paper yourself to turn me into ridicule. For shame, sir!'
Poor Mr. Esmond felt rather frightened, and told a truth, which was nevertheless an entire falsehood. 'Upon my honor,' says he, 'I have not even read the Spectator of this morning.' Nor had he, for that was not the Spectator, but a sham newspaper put in its place.
She went on reading; her face rather flushed as she read. 'No,' she says, 'I think you couldn't have written it. I think it must have been Mr. Steele when he was drunk—and afraid of his horrid vulgar wife. Whenever I see an enormous compliment to a woman, and some outrageous panegyric about female virtue, I always feel sure that the captain and his better-half have fallen out overnight, and that he has been brought home tipsy, or has been found out in—'
'Beatrix!' cries the Lady Castlewood.
'Well, mamma! Do not cry out before you are hurt. I am not going to say anything wrong. I won't give you more annoyance than you can help, you pretty kind mamma. Yes, and your little 'Trix is a naughty little 'Trix, and she leaves undone those things which she ought to have done, and does those things which she ought not to have done, and there's—well now—I won't go on. Yes, I will, unless you kiss me.' And with this the young lady lays aside her paper, and runs up to her mother and performs a variety of embraces with her ladyship, saying as plain as eyes could speak to Mr. Esmond,—'There, sir; would not you like to play the very same pleasant game?'
'Indeed, madam, I would,' says he.
'Would what?' asked Miss Beatrix.
'What you meant when you looked at me in that provoking way,' answers Esmond.
'What a confessor!' cries Beatrix, with a laugh.

'What is it Henry would like, my dear?' asks her mother, the kind soul, who was always thinking what we would like, and how she could please us.

The girl runs up to her—'Oh, you silly, kind mamma,' she says, kissing her again, 'that's what Harry would like'; and she broke out into a great joyful laugh; and Lady Castlewood blushed as bashful as a maid of sixteen.

'Look at her, Harry,' whispers Beatrix, running up and speaking in her sweet low tones. 'Doesn't the blush become her? Isn't she pretty? She looks younger than I am, and I am sure she is a hundred million thousand times better.'

Esmond's kind mistress left the room, carrying her blushes away with her.

'If we girls at Court could grow such roses as that,' continues Beatrix, with her laugh, 'what wouldn't we do to preserve 'em? We'd clip their stocks and put 'em in salt and water. But those flowers don't bloom at Hampton Court and Windsor, Henry.' She paused for a minute, and the smile, fading away from her April face, gave place to a menacing shower of tears: 'Oh, how good she is, Harry!' Beatrix went on to say. 'Oh, what a saint she is! Her goodness frightens me. I'm not fit to live with her. I should be better, I think, if she were not so perfect. She has had a great sorrow in her life, and a great secret; and repented of it. It could not have been my father's death. She talks freely about that; nor could she have loved him very much—though who knows what we women do love, and why?'

'What and why, indeed,' says Mr. Esmond.

'No one knows,' Beatrix went on, without noticing this interruption except by a look, 'what my mother's life is. She hath been at early prayers this morning; she passes hours in her closet; if you were to follow her thither, you would find her at prayers now. She tends the poor of the place—the horrid dirty poor! She sits through the curate's sermons. Oh, those dreary sermons! And you see, on a beau dire; but good as they are, people like her are not fit to commune with us of the world. There is always, as it were, a third person present, even when I and my mother are alone. She can't be frank with me quite; who is always thinking of the next world, and of her guardian angel, perhaps that's in company. O Harry, I'm jealons of that guardian angel!' here broke out Mistress Beatrix. 'It's horrid, I know; but my mother's life is all for Heaven, and mine—all for earth. We can never be friends quite; and then, she cares more for Frank's little finger than she does for me—I know she does; and she loves you, sir, a great deal too much; and I hate you for it. I would have had her all to myself; but she wouldn't. In my childhood, it was my father she loved—(oh, how could she? I remember him kind and handsome, but so stupid, and not being able to speak after drinking wine). And then it was Frank; and now it is Heaven and the clergyman. How I would have loved her! From a child I used to be in a rage that she loved anybody but me; but she loved you all better—all, I know she did. And now she talks of the blessed consolation of religion. Dear soul! she thinks she is happier for believing, as she must, that we are all of us wicked and miserable sinners; and this world is only a pied-a-terre for the good, where they stay for a night, as we do, coming from Walcote, at that great, dreary, uncomfortable Hounslow Inn, in those horrid beds—oh, do you remember those horrid beds?—and the chariot comes and fetches them to heaven the next morning.'

'Hush, Beatrix,' says Mr. Esmond.

'Hush, indeed. You are a hypocrite, too, Henry, with your grave airs and your glum face. We are all hypocrites. Oh, dear me! We are all alone, alone, alone,' says poor Beatrix, her fair breast heaving with a sigh.

'It was I that writ every line of that paper, my dear,' says Mr. Esmond. 'You are not so worldly as you think yourself, Beatrix, and better than we believe you. The good we have in us we doubt of; and the happiness that's to our hand we throw away. You bend your ambition on a great marriage and establishment—and why? You'll tire of them when you win them; and be no happier with a coronet on your coach——'

'Than riding pillion with Lubin to market,' says Beatrix.

'Thank you, Lubin!'

'I'm a dismal shepherd, to be sure,' answers Esmond, with a blush; 'and require a nymph that can tuck my bedclothes up, and make me water gruel. Well, Tom Lockwood can do that. He took me out of the fire upon his shoulders, and nursed me through my illness as love will scarce ever do. Only good wages, and a hope of my clothes, and the contents of my portmanteau. How long was it that Jacob served an apprenticeship for Rachel?'

'For mamma?' says Beatrix. 'It is mamma your honor wants, and that I should have the happiness of calling you papa?'

Esmond blushed again. 'I spoke of a Rachel that a shepherd courted five thousand years ago; when shepherds were longer lived than now. And my meaning was that, since I saw you first after our separation—a child you were then—'

'And I put on my best stockings to captivate you, I remember, sir—'

'You have had my heart ever since then, such as it was; and such as you were, I cared for no other woman. What little reputation I have won, it was that you might be pleased with it; and indeed, it is not much; and I think a hundred fools in the army have got and deserved quite as much. Was there something in the air of that dismal old Castlewood that made us all gloomy and dissatisfied and lonely under its ruined old roof? We were all so, even when together and united, as it seemed, following our separate schemes, each as we sat round the table.'

'Dear, dreary old place!' cries Beatrix. 'Mamma hath never had the heart to go back thither since we left it, when—never mind how many years ago.' And she flung back her curls, and looked over her fair shoulder at the mirror superbly, as if she said, 'Time, I defy you.'

'Yes,' says Esmond, who had the art, as she owned, of divining many of her thoughts. 'You can afford to look in the glass still; and only be pleased by the truth it tells you. As for me, do you know what my scheme is? I think of asking Frank to give me the Virginian estate King Charles gave our grandfather. [She gave a superb courtesy, as much as to say, 'Our grandfather, indeed! Thank you, Mr. Bastard.'] Yes, I know you are thinking of my bar sinister, and so am I. A man cannot get over it in this country; unless, indeed, he wears it across a king's arms, when 'tis a highly honorable coat; and I am thinking of retiring into the plantations, and building myself a wigwam in the woods, and perhaps, if I want company, suiting myself with a squaw. We will send your lady-ship furs over for the winter; and, when you are old, we'll provide you with tobacco. I am not quite clever enough, or not rogue enough—I know not which—for the Old World. I may make a place for myself in the New, which is not so full; and found a family there. When you are a mother yourself, and a great lady, perhaps I shall send you over from the plantation some day a little barbarian that is half Esmond half Mohock, and you will be kind to him for his father's sake, who was, after all, your kinsman; and whom you loved a little.'

'What folly you are talking, Harry,' says Miss Beatrix looking with her great eyes.
'Tis sober earnest,' says Esmond. And, indeed, the scheme had been dwelling a good deal in his mind, for some time past, and especially since his return home when he found how hopeless, and even degrading to himself, his passion was. 'No,' says he, then; 'I have tried half a dozen times now. I can bear being away from you well enough; but being with you is intolerable' (another low courtesy on Mistress Beatrix's part), 'and I will go. I have enough to buy axes and guns for my men, and beads and blankets for the savages; and I'll go and live among them.'

'Mon ami,' she says quite kindly, and taking Esmond's hand, with an air of great compassion, 'you can't think that in our position anything more than our present friendship is possible. You are our elder brother—as such we view you, pitying your misfortune, not rebuking you with it. Why, you are old enough and grave enough to be our father. I always thought you a hundred years old, Harry, with your solemn face and grave air. I feel as a sister to you, and can no more. Isn't that enough, sir?' And she put her face quite close to his—who knows with what intention?

'It's too much,' says Esmond, turning away. 'I can't bear this life, and shall leave it. I shall stay, I think, to see you married, and then freight a ship, and call it the Beatrix, and bid you all—'

Here the servant, flinging the door open, announced his Grace the Duke of Hamilton, and Esmond started back with something like an imprecation on his lips, as the nobleman entered, looking splendid in his star and green ribbon. He gave Mr. Esmond just that gracious bow which he would have given to a lackey who fetched him a chair or took his hat, and seated himself by Miss Beatrix, as the poor colonel went out of the room with a hangdog look.

Esmond's mistress was in the lower room as he passed downstairs. She often met him as he was coming away from Beatrix; and she beckoned him into the apartment.

'Has she told you, Harry? Lady Castlewood said.

'She has been very frank—very,' says Esmond.

'But—but about what is going to happen?'

'What is going to happen?' says he, his heart beating.

'His Grace the Duke of Hamilton has proposed to her,' says my lady. 'He made his offer yesterday. They will marry as soon as his mourning is over; and you have heard his Grace is appointed ambassador to Paris; and the ambassadress goes with him.'
CHAPTER IV.

BEATRIX’S NEW SUITOR.

The gentleman whom Beatrix had selected was, to be sure, twenty years older than the colonel, with whom she quarreled for being too old; but this one was but a nameless adventurer, and the other the greatest duke in Scotland, with pretensions even to a still higher title. My Lord Duke of Hamilton had, indeed, every merit belonging to a gentleman, and he had had the time to mature his accomplishments fully, being upward of fifty years old when Madam Beatrix selected him for a bride-groom. Duke Hamilton, then Earl of Arran, had been educated at the famous Scottish university of Glasgow, and, coming to London, became a great favorite of Charles II., who made him a lord of his bedchamber, and afterward appointed him ambasssador to the French king, under whom the earl served two campaigns as his Majesty’s aid-de-camp; and he was absent on this service when King Charles died.

King James continued my lord’s promotion—made him Master of the Wardrobe and Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Horse; and his lordship adhered firmly to King James, being of the small company that never quitted that unfortunate monarch till his departure out of England; and then it was, in 1688 namely, that he made the friendship with Colonel Francis Esmond that had always been, more or less, maintained in the two families.

The earl professed a great admiration for King William always, but never could give him his allegiance; and was engaged in more than one of the plots in the late great king’s reign which always ended in the plotters’ discomfiture, and generally in their pardon, by the magnanimity of the king. Lord Arran was twice prisoner in the Tower during this reign, undauntedly saying, when offered his release, upon parole not to engage against King William, that he would not give his word, because ‘he was sure he could not keep it’; but, nevertheless, he was both times discharged without any trial; and the king bore this noble enemy so little malice that when his mother, the Duchess of Hamilton, of her own right, resigned her claim on her husband’s death, the earl was, by patent signed at Loo, 1690, created Duke of Hamilton, Marquis of Clydesdale, and Earl of Arran, with precedence from the original creation. His Grace took the oaths and his seat in the Scottish Parliament in 1700; was famous there for his patriotism and eloquence, especially in the debates about the Union Bill, which Duke Hamilton opposed with all his strength, though he would not go the length of the Scottish gentry, who were for resisting it by force of arms. 'Twas said he withdrew his opposition all of a sudden, and in consequence of letters from the king at St. Germain, who entreated him on his allegiance not to thwart the queen his sister in this measure; and the duke, being always bent upon effecting the king’s return to his kingdom through a reconciliation between his Majesty and Queen Anne, and quite averse to his landing with arms and French troops, held aloof, and kept out of Scotland during the time when the Chevalier de St. George’s descent from Dunkirk was projected, passing his time in England, in his great estate of Staffordshire.

When the Whigs went out of office in 1710, the queen began to show his Grace the very greatest marks of her favor. He was created Duke of Brandon and Baron of Dutton in England; having the Thistle already originally bestowed on him by King James II., his Grace was now promoted to the honor of the Garter—a distinction so great and illustrious that no subject had ever borne them hitherto together. When this objection was made to her Majesty, she was pleased to say, 'Such a subject as the Duke of Hamilton has a pre-eminent claim to every mark of distinction which a crowned head can confer. I will henceforth wear both orders myself.'

At the chapter held at Windsor in 1712, the duke and other knights, including Lord Treasurer the new-created Earl of Oxford and Mortimer, were installed; and a few days afterward his Grace was appointed Ambassador-Extraordinary to France, and his equipages, plate, and liveries commanded, of the most sumptuous kind, not only for his Excellency the ambassador, but for her Excellency the Ambassadress, who was to accompany him. Her arms were already quartered on the coach panels, and her brother was to hasten over on the appointed day to give her away.

His lordship was a widower, having married, in 1698, Elizabeth, daughter of Digby Lord Gerard, by which marriage great estates came into the Hamilton family; and out of these estates came, in part, that tragic quarrel which ended the duke’s career.

From the loss of a tooth to that of a mistress there’s no pang that is not bearable. The apprehension is much more cruel than the certainty; and we make up our minds to the misfortune when 'tis irremediable, part with the tormentor, and mumble our crust on t'other side of the jaws. I think Colonel Esmond was relieved when a ducal coach and six came and whisked his charmer away out of his reach and placed her in a higher sphere. As you have seen the nymph in the opera machine go up to the clouds at the end of the piece where Mars, Bacchus, Apollo, and all the divine company of Olympians are seated, and quaver out her last song as a goddess, so when this portentous elevation was accomplished in the Esmond family I am not sure that every one of us did not treat the divine Beatrix with special honors; at least the saucy little beauty carried her head with a toss of supreme authority, and assumed a touch-me-not air which all her friends very good-humoredly bowed to.

An old army acquaintance of Colonel Esmond's, honest Tom Trett, who had sold his company, married a wife, and turned merchant in the city, was dreadfully gloomy for a long time, though living in a fine house on the river, and carrying on a great trade to all appearance. At length Esmond saw his friend's name in the Gazette as a bankrupt, and a week after this circumstance my bankrupt walks into Mr. Esmond's lodging with a face perfectly radiant with good humor, and as jolly and careless as when they had sailed from Southampton ten years before for Vigo. 'This bankruptcy,' says Tom,
'has been hanging over my head these three years; the thought hath prevented my sleeping, and I have looked at poor Polly's head on t'other pillow and then toward my razor on the table, and thought to put an end to myself and so give my woes the slip. But now we are bankrupts; Tom Trett pays as many shillings in the pound as he can; his wife has a little cottage at Fulham and her fortune secured to herself. I am afraid neither of bailiff nor of creditor, and for the last six nights have slept easy.' So it was that when Fortune shook her wings and left him, honest Tom cuddled himself up in his ragged virtue and fell asleep.

Esmond did not tell his friend how much his story applied to Esmond too; but he laughed at it and used it, and having fairly struck his docket in this love transaction, determined to put a cheerful face on his bankruptcy. Perhaps Beatrix was a little offended at his gayety. 'Is this the way, sir, that you receive the announcement of your misfortune,' says she, 'and do you come smiling before me as if you were glad to be rid of me?'

Esmond would not be put off from his good humor, but told her the story of Tom Trett and his bankruptcy. 'I have been hankering after the grapes on the wall,' says he, 'and lost my temper because they were beyond my reach; was there any wonder? They're gone now, and another has them—a taller man than your humble servant has won them.' And the colonel made his cousin a low bow.

'A taller man, Cousin Esmond!' says she. 'A man of spirit would have scaled the wall, sir, and seized them! A man of courage would have fought for 'em, not gaped for 'em.'

'A duke has but to gape and they drop into his mouth,' says Esmond, with another low bow.

'Yes, sir,' says she, 'a duke is a taller man than you. And why should I not be grateful to one such as his Grace, who gives me his heart and his great name? It is a great gift he honors me with; I know 'tis a bargain between us, and I accept it and will do my utmost to perform my part of it. "Tis no question of sighing and philandering between a nobleman of his Grace's age and a girl who hath little of that softness in her nature. Why should I not own that I am ambitious, Harry Esmond; and if it be no sin in a man to covet honor, why should a woman too not desire it? Shall I be frank with you, Harry, and say that if you had not been down on your knees and so humble you might have fared better with me? A woman of my spirit, cousin, is to be won by gallantry, and not by sighs and rueful faces. All the time you are worshiping and singing hymns to me, I know very well I am no goddess, and grow weary of the incense. So would you have been weary of the goddess too, when she was called Mrs. Esmond and got out of humor because she had not pin money enough and was forced to go about in an old gown. Eh! cousin, a goddess in a mob cap that has to make her husband's gruel ceases to be divine—I am sure of it. I should have been sulky and scolded; and of all the proud wretches in the world Mr. Esmond is the proudest, let me tell him that. You never fall into a passion; but you never forgive, I think. Had you been a great man you might have been good-humored; but being nobody, sir, you are too great a man for me; and I'm afraid of you, cousin—there! and I won't worship you, and you'll never be happy except with a woman who will. Why, after I belonged to you, and after one of my tantrums, you would have put the pillow over my head some night and smothered me, as the black man does the woman in the play that you're so fond of. What's the creature's name? Desdemona. You would, you little black-eyed Othello.'

'I think I should, Beatrix,' says the colonel.
'And I want no such ending. I intend to live to be a hundred, and to go to ten thousand routs and balls, and to play cards every night of my life till the year eighteen hundred. And I like to be the first of my company, sir; and I like flattery and compliments, and you give me none; and I like to be made to laugh, sir, and who's to laugh at your dismal face, I should like to know? and I like a coach and six or a coach and eight; and I like diamonds and a new gown every week, and people to say: "That's the duchess—how well her Grace looks—make way for Mme. l'Ambeassadrice d'Angletterre—call her Excellency's people"—that's what I like. And as for you, you want a woman to bring your slippers and cap, and to sit at your feet and cry, "Oh, caro! oh, bravo!" while you read your Shaksperes and Miltons and stuff. Mamma would have been the wife for you had you been a little older, though you look ten years older than she does—you do, you glum-faced, blue-bearded little old man! You might have sat like Darby and Joan and flattered each other, and billed and cooed like a pair of old pigeons on a perch. I want my wings and to use them, sir.' And she spread out her beautiful arms as if indeed she could fly off like the pretty 'Gawrie' whom the man in the story was enamored of.

'And what will your Peter Wilkins say to your flight?' says Esmond, who never admired this fair creature more than when she rebelled and laughed at him.

'A duchess knows her place,' says she, with a laugh. 'Why, I have a son already made for me and thirty years old (my Lord Arran), and four daughters. How they will scold, and what a rage they will be in, when I come to take the head of the table! But I give them only a month to be angry; at the end of that time they shall love me every one, and so shall Lord Arran, and so shall all his Grace's Scots vassals and followers in the Highlands. I'm bent on it; and when I take a thing in my head 'tis done. His Grace is the greatest gentleman in Europe, and I'll try and make him happy; and when the king comes back you may count on my protection, Cousin Esmond—for come back the king will and shall; and I'll bring him back from Versailles if he comes under my hoop.'

'I hope the world will make you happy, Beatrix,' says Esmond, with a sigh. 'You'll be Beatrix till you are my lady duchess—will you not? I shall then make your Grace my very lowest bow.'

'None of these sighs and this satire, cousin,' she says. 'I take his Grace's great bounty thankfully—yes, thankfully, and will wear his honors becomingly. I do not say he hath touched my heart, but he has my gratitude, obedience, admiration—I have told him that and no more, and with that his noble heart is content. I have told him all—even the story of that poor creature that I was engaged to—and that I could not love; and I gladly gave his word back to him, and jumped for joy to get back my own. I am twenty-five years old.'

'Twenty-six, my dear,' says Esmond.

'Twenty-five, sir—I choose to be twenty-five; and in eight years no man hath ever touched my heart. Yes—you did once for a little, Harry, when you came back after Lille, and engaging with that murderer Mohun, and saving Frank's life. I thought I could like you; and mamma begged me hard on her knees, and I did—for a day. But the old chill came over me, Henry, and the old fear of you and your melancholy; and I was glad when you went away, and engaged with my Lord Ashburnham, that I might hear no more of you, that's the truth. You are too good for me, somehow. I could not make you happy, and should break my heart in trying and not being able to love you. But if you had asked me when we gave you the sword you might have had me, sir, and we both should have been miserable by this time. I talked with that silly lord all night just to vex you and mamma, and I succeeded, didn't I? How frankly we can talk of these things! It seems a thousand years ago; and though we are here sitting in the same room, there is a great wall between us. My dear, kind, faithful, gloomy old cousin! I can like you now, and admire you too, sir, and say that you are brave, and very kind, and very true, and a fine gentleman for all—for all your little mishap at your birth,' says she, wagging her arch head.

'And now, sir,' says she, with a courtesy, 'we must have no more talk except when mamma is by, as his Grace is with us; for he does not half like you, cousin, and is jealous as the black man in your favorite play.'

Though the very kindness of the words stabbed Mr. Esmond with the keenest pang, he did not show his sense of the wound by any look of his (as Beatrix, indeed, afterward owned to him), but said with a perfect command of himself, and an easy smile, 'The interview must not end yet, my dear, until I have had my last word. Stay, here comes your mother!' (indeed she came in here with her sweet anxious face, and Esmond, going up, kissed her hand respectfully). 'My dear lady may hear, too, the last words, which are no secrets, and are only a parting benediction accompanying a present for your marriage from an old gentleman your guardian; for I feel as if I was the guardian of all the family, and an old fellow that is fit to be the grandfather of you all; and in this character let me make my lady duchess her wedding present. They are the diamonds my father's widow left me. I had thought Beatrix might have had them a year ago; but they are good enough for a duchess, though not bright enough for the handsomest woman in the world.' And he took the case out of his pocket in which the jewels were and presented them to his cousin.

She gave a cry of delight, for the stones were indeed very handsome, and of great value; and the next minute the necklace was where Belinda's cross is in Mr. Pope's admirable poem, and glittering on the whitest and most perfectly shaped neck in all England.

The girl's delight at receiving these trinkets was so great that, after rushing to the looking-glass and examining the effect they produced upon that fair neck which they surrounded, Beatrix was running back with her arms extended, and was perhaps for paying her cousin with a price that he would have liked no doubt to receive from those beautiful rosy lips of hers, but at this moment the door opened, and his Grace the bridegroom elect was announced.

He looked very black upon Mr. Esmond, to whom he made a very low bow indeed, and kissed the hand of each lady in his most ceremonious manner. He had come in his chair from the palace hard by, and wore his two stars of the Garter and the Thistle.

'Look, my Lord Duke,' says Mistress Beatrix, advancing to him, and showing the diamonds on her breast.

'Diamonds,' says his Grace. 'Hm! they seem pretty.'

'They are a present on my marriage,' says Beatrix.

'From her Majesty?' asks the duke. 'The queen is very good.'

'From my Cousin Henry—from our Cousin Henry,' cry both the ladies in a breath.

'I have not the honor of knowing the gentleman. I thought that my Lord Castlewood had no brother; and that on your ladyship's side there were no nephews.'

'From our cousin, Colonel Henry Esmond, my lord,' says Beatrix, taking the colonel's hand very bravely, 'who was left guardian to us by our father, and who has a hundred times shown his love and friendship for our family.'

'The Duchess of Hamilton receives no diamonds but from her husband, madam,' says the duke—'may I pray you to restore these to Mr. Esmond?'
'Beatrix Esmond may receive a present from our kinsman and benefactor, my Lord Duke,' says Lady Castlewood with an air of great dignity. 'She is my daughter yet; and if her mother sanctions the gift—no one else hath the right to question it.'

'Kinsman and benefactor!' says the duke. 'I know of no kinsman; and I do not choose that my wife should have for benefactor a——'

'My lord!' says Colonel Esmond. 'I am not here to bandy words,' says his Grace: 'frankly I tell you that your visits to this house are too frequent, and that I choose no presents for the Duchess of Hamilton from gentlemen that bear a name they have no right to.'

'My lord!' breaks out Lady Castlewood, 'Mr. Esmond hath the best right to that name of any man in the world; and 'tis as old and as honorable as your Grace's.'

My Lord Duke smiled, and looked as if Lady Castlewood was mad, that was so talking to him.

'If I called him benefactor,' said my mistress, 'it is because he has been so to us—yes, the noblest, the truest, the bravest, the dearest of benefactors. He would have saved my husband's life from Mohun's sword. He did save my boy's, and defended him from that villain. Are these no benefits?'

'I ask Colonel Esmond's pardon,' says his Grace, if possible more haughty than before. 'I would say not a word that should give him offense, and thank him for his kindness to your ladyship's family. My Lord Mohun and I are connected, you know, by marriage—though neither by blood nor friendship; but I must repeat what I said, that my wife can receive no presents from Colonel Esmond.'

'My daughter may receive presents from the Head of our House; my daughter may thankfully take kindness from her father's, her mother's, her brother's dearest friend; and be grateful for one more benefit besides the thousand we owe him,' cries Lady Esmond. 'What is a string of diamond stones compared to that affection he hath given us—our dearest preserver and benefactor? We owe him not only Frank's life, but our all—yes, our all,' says my mistress, with a heightened color and a trembling voice. 'The title we bear is his, if he would claim it. 'Tis we who have no right to our name: not he that's too great for it. He sacrificed his name at my dying lord's bedside—sacrificed it to my orphan children; gave up rank and honor because he loved us so nobly. His father was Viscount of Castlewood and Marquis of Esmond before him; and he is his father's lawful son and true heir, and we are the recipients of his bounty, and he the chief of a house that's as old as your own. And if he is content to forego his name that my child may bear it, we love him and honor him and bless him under whatever name he bears—and here the fond and affectionate creature would have knelt to Esmond again but that he prevented her; and Beatrix, running up to her with a pale face and a cry of alarm, embraced her and said, 'Mother, what is this?'

'Tis a family secret, my Lord Duke,' says Colonel Esmond; 'poor Beatrix knew nothing of it, nor did my lady till a year ago. And I have as good a right to resign my title as your Grace's mother to abdicate hers to you."

'I should have told everything to the Duke of Hamilton,' said my mistress, 'had his Grace applied to me for my daughter's hand, and not to Beatrix. I should have spoken with you this very day in private, my lord, had not your words brought about this sudden explanation—and now 'tis fit Beatrix should hear it; and know, as I would have all the world know, what we owe to our kinsman and patron.'

And then in her touching way, and having hold of her daughter's hand, and speaking to her rather than my Lord Duke, Lady Castlewood told the story which you know already—lauding up to the skies her kinsman's behavior. On his side Mr. Esmond explained the reasons, that seemed quite sufficiently cogent with him, why the succession in the family, as at present it stood, should not be disturbed; and he should remain as he was, Colonel Esmond.

'And Marquis of Esmond, my lord,' says his Grace, with a low bow. 'Permit me to ask your lordship's pardon for words that were uttered in ignorance, and to beg for the favor of your friendship. To be allied to you, sir, must be an honor under whatever name you are known (so his Grace was pleased to say); 'and in return for the splendid present you make my wife, your kinswoman, I hope you will please to command any service that James Douglas can perform. I shall never be easy until I repay you a part of my obligations at least; and ere very long, and with the mission her Majesty hath given me, says the duke, 'that may perhaps be in my power. I shall esteem it as a favor, my lord, if Colonel Esmond will give away the bride.'

'And if he will take the usual payment in advance, he is welcome,' says Beatrix, stepping up to him; and as Esmond kissed her, she whispered, 'Oh, why didn't I know you before?'

My Lord Duke was as hot as a flame at this salute, but said never a word; Beatrix made him a proud courtesy, and the two ladies quitted the room together.

'When does your Excellency go for Paris?' asks Colonel Esmond.

'As soon after the ceremony as may be,' his Grace answered. 'Tis fixed for the 1st of December; it cannot be sooner. The equipage will not be ready till then. The queen intends the embassy should be very grand—and I have law business to settle. That ill-omened Mohun has come, or is coming, to London again; we are in lawsuit about my late Lord Gerard's property; and he hath sent to me to meet him.'

CHAPTER V.

MOHUN APPEARS FOR THE LAST TIME IN THIS HISTORY.

Besides my Lord Duke of Hamilton and Brandon, who for family reasons had kindly promised his protection and patronage to Colonel Esmond, he had other great friends in power now, both able and willing to assist him, and he might, with such allies, look forward to as fortunate advancement in civil life at home as he had got rapid promotion abroad. His Grace was magnanimous enough to offer to take Mr. Esmond as secretary on his Paris embassy, but no doubt he intended that proposal should be rejected; at any rate Esmond could not bear the thoughts of attending his mistress farther than the church door after her marriage, and so declined that offer which his generous rival made him.

Other gentlemen in power were liberal at least of compliments and promises to Colonel Esmond. Mr. Harley, now become my Lord Oxford and Mortimer, and installed Knight of the Garter on the same day as his Grace of Hamilton had received the same honor, sent to the colonel to say that a seat in Parliament should be at his disposal presently, and Mr. St. John held out many flattering hopes of advancement to the colonel when he should enter the House. Esmond's friends were all successful, and the most successful and triumphant of all was his dear old commander, General Webb, who was now appointed lieutenant general of the land forces, and received with particular honor by the ministry, by the queen, and the people out of doors, who huzzaed the brave chief when they used to see him in his chariot going to the House or to the drawing room, or hobbling on foot to his coach from St. Stephen's upon his glorious old crutch and stick, and cheered him as loud as they had ever done Marlborough.
That great duke was utterly disgraced; and honest old Webb dated all his Grace's misfortunes from Wynendael, and vowed that Fate served the traitor right. Duchess Sarah had also gone to ruin; she had been forced to give up her keys and her places and her pensions. 'Ah, ah,' says Webb, 'she would have locked up three millions of French crowns with her keys had I but been knocked on the head, but I stopped that convoy at Wynendael.' Our enemy Cardonnel was turned out of the House of Commons (along with Mr. Walpole) for malversation of public money. Cadogan lost his place of Lieutenant of the Tower. Marlborough's daughters resigned their posts of ladies of the bedchamber; and so complete was the duke's disgrace that his son-in-law, Lord Bridgewater, was absolutely obliged to give up his lodgings at St. James', and had his half-pension, as master of the horse, taken away. But I think the lowest depth of Marlborough's fall was when he humbly sent to ask General Webb when he might wait upon him; he who had commanded the stout old general, who had injured him and sneered at him, who had kept him dangling in his antechamber, who could not even after his great service condescend to write him a letter in his own hand! The nation was as eager for peace as ever it had been hot for war. The Prince of Savoy came among us, had his audience of the queen, and got his famous sword of honor, and strove with his force to form a Whig party together, to bring over the young prince of Hanover—to do anything which might prolong the war, and consummate the ruin of the old sovereign whom he hated so implacably. But the nation was tired of the struggle; so completely wearied of it that not even our defeat at Denain could rouse us into any anger, though such an action, so lost, two years before would have set all England in a fury. 'Twas easy to see that the great Marlborough was not with the army. Eugene was obliged to fall back in a rage, and forego the dazzling revenge of his life. 'Twas in vain the duke's side asked, 'Would we suffer our arms to be insulted? Would we not send back the only champion who could repair our honor?' The nation had had its bellyful of fighting; nor could taunts or outeries goad up our Britons any more.

For a statesman that was always prating of liberty, and had the grandest philosophic maxims in his mouth, it must be owned that Mr. St. John sometimes rather acted like a Turkish than a Greek philosopher, and especially fell foul of one unfortunate set of men—the men of letters—with a tyranny a little extraordinary in a man who professed to respect their calling.
so much. The literary controversy at this time was very bitter; the government side was the winning one, the popular one, and I think might have been a merciful one. 'Twas natural that the opposition should be peevish and cry out; some men did so from their hearts, admiring the Duke of Marlborough's prodigious talents, and deploring the disgrace of the greatest general the world ever knew; 'twas the stomach that caused other patriots to grumble, and such men cried out because they were poor, and paid to do so. Against these my Lord Bolingbroke never showed the slightest mercy, whipping a dozen into prison or into the pillory without the least commiseration.

From having been a man of arms Mr. Esmond had now come to be a man of letters, but on a safer side than that in which the above-cited poor fellows ventured their liberties and ears. There was no danger on ours, which was the winning side; besides, Mr. Esmond pleased himself by thinking that he writ like a gentleman if he did not always succeed as a wit.

Of the famous wits of that age, who have rendered Queen Anne's reign illustrious, and whose works will be in all Englishmen's hands in ages yet to come, Mr. Esmond saw many, but at public places chiefly; never having a great intimacy with any of them, except with honest Dick Steele and Mr. Addison, who parted company with Esmond, however, when that gentleman became a declared Tory, and lived on close terms with the leading persons of that party. Addison kept himself to a few friends, and very rarely opened himself except in their company. A man more upright and conscientious than he it was not possible to find in public life, and one whose conversation was so various, easy, and delightful. Writing now in my mature years, I own that I think Addison's politics were the right, and were my time to come over again, I would be a Whig in England and not a Tory; but with people that take a side in politics, 'tis men rather than principles that commonly bind them. A kindness or a slight puts a man under one flag or the other, and he marches with it to the end of the campaign. Esmond's master in war was injured by Marlborough, and hated him; and the lieutenant fought the quarrels of his leader. Webb, coming to London, was used as a weapon by Marlborough's enemies (and true steel he was, that honest chief); nor was his aid-de-camp, Mr. Esmond, an unfaithful or unworthy partisan, 'Tis strange here, and on a foreign soil, and in a land that is independent in all but the name (for that the North American colonies shall remain dependents on yonder little island for twenty years more, I never can think), to remember how the nation at home seemed to give itself up to the domination of one or other aristocratic party, and took a Hanoverian king, or a French one, according as either prevailed.  And while the Tories, the October Club gentlemen, the High Church parlons that held by the Church of England, were for having a Papist king, for whom many of their Scotch and English leaders, firm churchmen all, laid down their lives with admirable loyalty and devotion; they were governed by men who had notoriously no religion at all, but used it as they would use any opinion for the purpose of forwarding their own ambition.  The Whigs, on the other hand, who professed attachment to religion and liberty too, were compelled to send to Holland or Hanover for a monarch around whom they could rally.  A strange series of compromises is that English history: compromise of principle, compromise of party, compromise of worship!  The lovers of English freedom and independence submitted their religious consciences to an Act of Parliament; could not consolidate their liberty without sending to Zell or The Hague for a king to live under; and could not find among the proudest people in the world a man speaking their own language, and understanding their laws, to govern them.  The Tory and High Church patriots were ready to die in defense of a Papist family that had sold us to France; the great Whig nobles, the sturdy republican recusants who had cut off Charles Stuart's head for treason, were fain to accept a king whose title came to him through a royal grandmother, whose own royal grandmother's head had fallen under Queen Bess' hatchet.  And our proud English nobles sent to a petty German town for a monarch to come and reign in London; and our prelates kissed the ugly hands of his Dutch mistresses and thought it no dishonor.
In England you can but belong to one party or t'other, and you take the house you live in with all its encumbrances, its retainers, its antique discomforts, and ruins even; you patch up, but you never build up anew.  Will we of the New World submit much longer, even nominally, to this ancient British superstition?
There are signs of the times which make me think that ere long we shall care as little about King George here, and peers temporal and peers spiritual, as we do for King Canute or the Druids.

This chapter began about the wits, my grandson may say, and hath wandered very far from their company.  The pleasantest of the wits I knew were the Drs. Garth and Arbuthnot, and Mr. Gay, the author of 'Trivia,' the most charming kind soul that ever laughed at a joke or cracked a bottle.  Mr. Prior I saw, and he was the earthen pot swimming with the pots of brass down the stream, and always and justly frightened lest he should break in the voyage. I met him both at London and Paris, where he was performing piteous congées to the Duke of Shrewsbury, not having courage to support the dignity which his undeniable genius and talent had won him, and writing coaxing letters to Secretary St. John, and thinking about his plate and his place, and what on earth should become of him should his party go out. The famous Mr. Congreve I saw a dozen of times at Button's, a splendid wreck of a man, magnificently attired, and though gouty and almost blind, bearing a brave face against fortune.

The great Mr. Pope (of whose prodigious genius I have no words to express my admiration) was quite a puny lad at this time, appearing seldom in public places. There were hundreds of men, wits and pretty fellows, frequenting the theaters and coffeehouses of that day—whom 'nunc perscribere longum est.' Indeed, I think the most brilliant of that sort I ever saw was not till fifteen years afterward, when I paid my last visit in England, and met young Harry Fielding, son of the Fielding that served in Spain and afterward in Flanders with us, and who for fun and humor seemed to top them all. As for the famous Dr. Swift, I can say of him, 'Vidi tantum.' He was in London all these years up to the death of the queen, and in a hundred public places where I saw him, but no more; he never missed Court of a Sunday, where once or twice he was pointed out to your grandfather. He would have sought me out eagerly enough had I been a great man with a title to my name, or a star on my coat. At Court the doctor had no eyes but for the very greatest. Lord Treasurer and St. John used to call him Jonathan, and they paid him with this cheap coin for the service they took of him. He writ their lampoons, fought their enemies, flogged and bullied in their service, and it must be owned with a consummate skill and fierceness. 'Tis said he hath lost his intellect now and forgotten his wrongs and his rage against mankind. I have always thought of him and of Marlborough as the two greatest men of that age. I have read his books (who doth not know them?) here in our calm woods, and imagine a giant to myself as I think of him, a lonely fallen Prometheus, groaning as the vulture tears him. Prometheus I saw, but when first I ever had any words with him, the giant stepped out of a sedan chair in the Poultry, whither he had come with a tipsy Irish servant parading before him, who announced him, bawling out his reverence's name, while his master below was yet haggling with the chairman. I disliked this Mr. Swift, and heard many a story about him, and his conduct to men and his words to women. He could flatter the great as much as he could bully the weak, and Mr. Esmond, being younger and hotter in that day than now, was determined, should he ever meet this dragon, not to run away from his teeth and his fire.

Men have all sorts of motives which carry them onward in life, and are driven into acts of desperation, or it may be of distinction, from a hundred different causes. There was one comrade of Esmond's, an honest little Irish lieutenant of Handyside's, who owed so much money to a camp sutler that he began to make love to the man's daughter, intending to pay his debt that way; and at the battle of Malplaquet, flying away from the debt and lady too, he rushed so desperately on the French lines that he got his company, and came a captain out of the action, and had to marry the sutler's daughter after all, who brought him his canceled debt to her father as poor Roger's fortune. To run out of the reach of bill and marriage, he ran on the enemy's pikes; and as these did not kill him he was thrown back upon t'other horn of his dilemma. Our great duke at the same battle was fighting, not the French, but the Tories in England; and risking his life and the army's, not for his country but for his pay and places; and for fear of his wife at home, that only being in life whom he dreaded. I have asked about men in my company (new drafts of poor country boys were perpetually coming over to us during the wars, and brought from the plowshare to the sword), and found that a half of them under the flags were driven thither on account of a woman: one fellow was jilted by his mistress and took the shilling in despair; another jilted the girl, and fled from her and the parish to the tents, where the law could not disturb him. Why go on particularizing? What can the sons of Adam and Eve expect, but to continue in that course of love and trouble their father and mother set out on? Oh, my grandson! I am drawing nigh to the end of that period of my history when I was acquainted with the great world of England and Europe; my years are past the Hebrew poet's limit, and I say unto thee, all my troubles and joys too, for that matter, have come from a woman; as thine will when thy destined course begins. 'Twas a woman that made a soldier of me, that set me intriguing afterward; I believe I would have spun smocks for her had she so bidden me; what strength I had in my head I would have given her; hath not every man in his degree had his Omphale and Delilah? Mine befooled me on the banks of the Thames, and in dear old England; thou mayest find thine own by Rappahannock.

To please that woman, then, I tried to distinguish myself as a soldier, and afterward as a wit and a politician; as to please another I would have put on a black cassock and a pair of bands, and had done so but that a superior fate intervened to defeat that object. And I say, I think the world is like Captain Esmond’s company I spoke of anon; and could you see every man’s career in life, you would find a woman clogging him or clinging round his march and stopping him; or cheering him and goading him; or beckoning him out of her chariot, so that he goes up to her, and leaves the race to be run without him; or bringing him the apple, and saying ‘Eat!’; or fetching him the daggers and whispering ‘Kill!
yonder lies Duncan, and a crown, and an opportunity.’

Your grandfather fought with more effect as a politician than a wit; and having private animosities and grievances of his own and his general’s against the great duke in command of the army, and more information on military matters than most writers, who had never seen beyond the fire of a tobacco pipe at Wills’, he was enabled to do good service for that cause which he embarked in, and for Mr. St. John and his party. But he disdained the abuse in which some of the Tory writers indulged; for instance, Dr. Swift, who actually chose to doubt the Duke of Marlborough’s courage, and was pleased to hint that his Grace’s military capacity was doubtful; nor were Esmond’s performances worse for the effect they were intended to produce (though no doubt they could not injure the Duke of Marlborough nearly so much in the public eyes as the malignant attacks of Swift did, which were carefully directed so as to blacken and degrade him), because they were writ openly and fairly by Mr. Esmond, who mace no disguise of them, who was now out of the army, and who never attacked the prodigious courage and talents, only the selfishness and rapacity, of the chief.

The colonel then, having writ a paper for one of the Tory journals called the Post-Boy (a letter upon Bouchain, that the town talked about for two whole days, when the appearance of an Italian singer supplied a fresh subject for conversation), and having business at the Exchange, where Mistress Beatrix wanted a pair of gloves or a fan very likely, Esmond went to correct his paper, and was sitting at the printer’s when the famous Dr. Swift came in, his Irish fellow with him that used to walk before his chair, and bawled out his master's name with great dignity.

Mr. Esmond was waiting for the printer too, whose wife had gone to the tavern to fetch him, and was meantime engaged in drawing a picture of a soldier on horseback for a dirty little pretty boy of the printer's wife, whom she had left behind her.

'I presume you are the editor of the Post-Boy, sir?' says the doctor in a grating voice that had an Irish twang; and he looked at the colonel from under his two bushy eyebrows with a pair of very clear blue eyes. His complexion was muddy, his figure rather fat, his chin double. He wore a shabby cassock, and a shabby hat over his black wig, and he pulled out a great gold watch, at which he looks very fierce.

'I am but a contributor, Dr. Swift,' says Esmond, with the little boy still on his knee. He was sitting with his back in the window, so that the doctor could not see him.

'Who told you I was Dr. Swift?' says the doctor, eying the other very haughtily.

'Your reverence's valet bawled out your name,' says the colonel. 'I should judge you brought him from Ireland?'

'And pray, sir, what right have you to judge whether my servant came from Ireland or no? I want to speak with your employer, Mr. Leach. I'll thank ye go fetch him.'

'Where's your papa, Tommy?' asks the colonel of the child, a smutty little wretch in a frock.

Instead of answering, the child begins to cry; the doctor's appearance had no doubt frightened the poor little imp.

'Send that squalling little brat about his business, and do what I bid ye, sir,' says the doctor.

'I must finish the picture first for Tommy,' says the colonel, laughing. 'Here, Tommy, will you have your Pandour with whiskers or without?'

'Whisters,' says Tommy, quite intent on the picture.

'Who the devil are ye, sir?' cries the doctor. 'Are ye a printer's man or are ye not?' He pronounced it like naught.

'Your reverence needn't raise the devil to ask who I am,' says Colonel Esmond. 'Did you ever hear of Dr. Faustus, little Tommy? or Friar Bacon, who invented gunpowder and set the Thames on fire?'

Mr Swift turned quite red, almost purple. 'I did not intend any offense, sir,' says he.

'I dare say, sir, you offended without meaning,' says the other dryly.

'Who are ye, sir? Do you know who I am, sir? You are one of the pack of Grub Street scribblers that my friend Mr. Secretary hath laid by the heels. How dare ye, sir, speak to me in this tone?' cries the doctor, in a great fume.

'I beg your honor's humble pardon if I have offended your honor,' says Esmond in a tone of great humility. 'Rather than be sent to the compter, or be put in the pillory, there's nothing I wouldn't do. But Mrs. Leach, the printer's lady, told me to mind Tommy while she went for her husband to the tavern, and I daren't leave the child lest he should fall into the fire; but if your reverence will hold him——'

'I take the little beast!' says the doctor, starting back. 'I am engaged to your betters, fellow. Tell Mr. Leach that when he makes an appointment with Dr. Swift he had best keep it, do you hear? And keep a respectful tongue in your head, sir, when you address a person like me.'

'I'm but a poor broken-down soldier,' says the colonel, and I've seen better days, though I am forced now to turn my hand to writing. We can't help our fate, sir.'

'You're the person that Mr. Leach hath spoken to me of, I presume. Have the goodness to speak civilly when you are spoken to—and tell Leach to call at my lodgings in Bury Street, and bring the papers with him to-night at ten o'clock. And the next time you see me, you'll know me, and be civil, Mr. Kemp.'

Poor Kemp, who had been a lieutenant at the beginning of the war, had fallen into misfortune, was the writer of the Post-Boy, and now took honest Mr. Leach's pay in place of her Majesty's. Esmond had seen this gentleman, and a very ingenious, hard-working, honest fellow he was, toiling to give bread to a great family, and watching up many a long winter night to keep the wolf from his door. And Mr. St. John, who had liberty always on his tongue, had just sent a dozen of the opposition writers into prison, and one actually into the pillory, for what he called libels, but libels not half so violent as those writ on our side. With regard to this very piece of tyranny, Esmond had remonstrated strongly with the secretary, who laughed and said the rascals were served quite right; and told Esmond a joke of Swift's regarding the matter. Nay, more, this Irishman, when St. John was about to pardon a poor wretch condemned to death for rape, absolutely prevented the secretary from exercising this act of good nature, and boasted that he had had the man hanged; and great as the doctor's genius might be, and splendid his ability, Esmond for one would affect no love for him, and never desired to make his acquaintance. The doctor was at Court every Sunday assiduously enough, a place the colonel frequented but rarely, though he had a great inducement to go there in the person of a fair maid of honor of her Majesty's; and the airs and patronage Mr. Swift gave himself, forgetting gentlemen of his country whom he knew perfectly, his loud talk at once insolent and servile, nay, perhaps his very intimacy with Lord Treasurer and the secretary, who indulged all his freaks and called him Jonathan, you may besure, were remarked by many a person of whom the proud priest himself took note during that time of his vanity and triumph.

'Twas but three days after the 15th of November, 1712 (Esmond minds him well of the date), that he went by invitation to dine with his general, the foot of whose table he used to take on these festive occasions, as he had done at many a board, hard and plentiful, during the campaign. This was a great feast, and of the latter sort; the honest old gentleman loved to treat his friends splendidly; his Grace of Ormonde, before he joined his army as generalissimo, my Lord Viscount Bolingbroke, one of her Majesty's secretaries of state, my Lord Orkney, that had served with us abroad, being of the party. His Grace of Hamilton, Master of the Ordnance, and in whose honor the feast had been given, upon his approaching departure as ambassador to Paris, had sent an excuse to General Webb at two o'clock, but an hour before the dinner; nothing but the most immediate business, his Grace said, should have prevented him having the pleasure of drinking a parting glass to the health of General Webb. His absence disappointed Esmond's old chief, who suffered much from his wounds besides; and though the company was grand, it was rather gloomy. St. John came last, and brought a friend with him. 'I'm sure,' says my general, bowing very politely, 'my table hath always a place for Dr. Swift.'

Mr. Esmond went up the doctor with a bow and a smile. 'I gave Dr. Swift's message,' says he, 'to the printer; I hope he brought your pamphlet to your lodgings in time.' Indeed poor Leach had come to his house very soon after the doctor left it, being brought away rather tipsy from the tavern by his thrifty wife; and he talked of Cousin Swift in a maudlin way, though of course Mr. Esmond did not allude to this relationship. The doctor scowled, blushed, and was much confused and said scarce a word during the whole of dinner. A very little stone will sometimes knock down these Goliaths of wit; and this one was often discomfited when met by a man of any spirit; he took his place sulkily, put water in his wine that the others drank plentifully, and scarce said a word.
The talk was about the affairs of the day, or rather about persons than affairs: my Lady Marlborough's fury, her daughters in old clothes and mob caps looking out from their windows and seeing the company pass to the drawing room; the gentleman usher's horror when the Prince of Savoy was introduced to her Majesty in a tie wig, no man out of a full-bottomed periwig ever having kissed the royal hand before; about the Mohawks and the damage they were doing, rushing through the town, killing and murdering. Someone said the ill-omened face of Mohun had been seen at the theater the night before, and Macartney and Meredith with him. Meant to be a feast, the meeting, in spite of drink and talk, was as dismal as a funeral. Every topic started subsided into gloom. His Grace of Ormonde went away because the conversation got upon Denain, where he had been defeated in the last campaign. Esmond's general was affected at the allusion to this action too, for his comrade of Wynendael, the Count of Nassau Woudenbourg, had been slain there. Mr. Swift, when Esmond pledged him, said he drank no wine, and took his hat from the peg and went away, beckoning my Lord Bolingbroke to follow him; but the other bade him take his chariot and save his coach hire—he had to speak with Colonel Esmond; and when the rest of the company withdrew to cards, these two remained behind in the dark.

Bolingbroke always spoke freely when he had drunk freely. His enemies could get any secret out of him in that condition; women were even employed to ply him, and take his words down. I have heard that my Lord Stair, three years after, when the secretary fled to France and became the pretender's minister, got all the information he wanted by putting female spies over St. John in his cups. He spoke freely now: 'Jonathan knows nothing of this for certain, though he suspects it, and, by George, Webb will take an archbishopric, and Jonathan a—no—damme—Jonathan will take an archbishopric from James, I warrant me, gladly enough. Your duke hath the string of the whole matter in his hand,' the secretary went on. 'We have that which will force Marlborough to keep his distance, and he goes out of London in a fortnight. Prior hath his business, he left me this morning; and mark me, Harry, should fate carry off our august, our beloved, our most gouty and plethoric queen, and defender of the faith, la bonne cause triumpher. À la santé de la bonne cause! Everything good comes from France. Wine comes from France; give us another bumper to the bonne cause.' We drank it together.

'Will the bonne cause turn Protestant?' asked Mr. Esmond.
‘No, hang it,’ says the other; ‘he’ll defend our faith as in duty bound, but he’ll stick by his own. The Hind and the Panther shall run in the same car, by Jove. Righteousness and peace shall kiss each other; and we’ll have Father Massillon to walk down the aisle of St. Paul’s, cheek by jowl with Dr. Sacheverel. Give us more wine; here’s a health to the bonne cause, kneeling—damme, let’s drink it kneeling.’ He was quite flushed and wild with wine as he was talking.

‘And suppose,’ says Esmond, who always had this gloomy apprehension, ‘the bonne cause should give us up to the French, as his father and uncle did before him?’

‘Give us up to the French!’ starts up Bolingbroke; ‘is there any English gentleman that fears that? You who have seen Blenheim and Ramillies afraid of the French! Your ancestors and mine, and brave old Webb’s yonder, have met them in a hundred fields, and our children will be ready to do the like. Who’s he that wishes for more men from England? My Cousin Westmoreland! Give us up to the French, pshaw!’

‘His uncle did,’ says Mr. Esmond.

‘And what happened to his grandfather?’ broke out St. John, filling out another bumper. ‘Here’s to the greatest monarch England ever saw; here’s to the Englishman that made a kingdom of her. Our great king came from Huntingdon, not Hanover; our fathers didn’t look for a Dutchman to rule us. Let him come and we’ll keep him, and we’ll show him Whitehall. If he’s a traitor let us have him here to deal with him; and then there are spirits here as great as any that have gone before. There are men here that can look at danger in the face and not be frightened at it. Traitor! treason! what names are these to scare you and me? Are all Oliver’s men dead, or his glorious name forgotten in fifty years? Are there no men equal to him, think you, as good—aye, as good? God save the king! and, if the monarchy fails us, God save the British Republic!’

He filled another great bumper, and tossed it up and drained it wildly, just as the noise of rapid carriage wheels approaching was stopped at our door, and after a hurried knock and a moment’s interval, Mr. Swift came into the hall, ran upstairs to the room we were dining in, and entered it with a perturbed face. St. John, excited with drink, was making some wild quotation out of Macbeth, but Swift stopped him.

‘Drink no more, my lord, for God’s sake!’ says he. ‘I come with the most dreadful news.’

‘Is the queen dead?’ cries out Bolingbroke, seizing on a water glass.
'No, Duke Hamilton is dead; he was murdered an hour ago by Mohun and Macartney; they had a quarrel this morning; they gave him not so much time as to write a letter. He went for a couple of his friends, and he is dead, and Mohun, too, the bloody villain, who was set on him. They fought in Hyde Park just before sunset; the duke killed Mohun, and Macartney came up and stabbed him, and the dog is fled. I have your chariot below; send to every part of the country and apprehend that villain; come to the duke's house and see if any life be left in him.'

'O Beatrix, Beatrix,' thought Esmond, 'and here ends my poor girl's ambition!'

CHAPTER VI.

POOR BEATRIX.

There had been no need to urge upon Esmond the necessity of a separation between him and Beatrix; Fate had done that completely; and I think from the very moment poor Beatrix had accepted the duke's offer, she began to assume the majestic air of a duchess, nay, queen elect, and to carry herself as one sacred and removed from us common people. Her mother and kinsman both fell into her ways, the latter scornfully perhaps, and uttering his usual gibes at her vanity and his own. There was a certain charm about this girl of which neither Colonel Esmond nor his fond mistress could forego the fascination; in spite of her faults and her pride and willfulness, they were forced to love her; and, indeed, might be set down as the two chief flatterers of the brilliant creature's court.

Who in the course of his life hath not been so bewitched, and worshiped some idol or another? Years after this passion hath been dead and buried, along with a thousand other worldly cares and ambitions, he who felt it can recall it out of its grave and admire almost as fondly as he did in his youth that lovely queenly creature. I invoke that beautiful spirit from the shades and love her still; or rather I should say such a past is always present to a man; such a passion once felt forms a part of his whole being and cannot be separated from it; it becomes a portion of the man of to-day, just as any great faith or conviction, the discovery of poetry, the awakening of religion, ever afterward influence him; just as the wound I had at Blenheim, and of which I wear the scar, hath become part of my frame and influenced my whole body, nay, spirit, subsequently, though 'twas got and healed forty years ago. Parting and forgetting! What faithful heart can do these? Our great thoughts, our great affections, the truths of our life, ever leave us. Surely they cannot separate from our consciousness, shall follow it whithersoever that shall go, and are of their nature divine and immortal.

With the horrible news of this catastrophe, which was confirmed by the weeping domestics at the duke’s own door, Es-mond rode homeward as quick as his lazy coach would carry him, devising all the time how he should break the intelligence to the person most concerned in it; and if a satire upon human vanity could be needed, that poor soul afforded it in the altered company and occupations in which Esmond found her. For days before her chariot had been rolling the street from mercer to toy shop, from goldsmith to laceman; her taste was perfect, or at least the fond bridegroom had thought so, and had given entire authority over all tradesmen, and for all the plate, furniture, and equipages with which his Grace the Ambassador wished to adorn his splendid mission. She must have her picture by Kneller, a duchess not being complete without a portrait, and a noble one he made, and actually sketched in on a cushion a coronet which she was about to wear. She vowed she would wear it at King James III.’s coronation, and never a princess in the land would have become ermine better.
Esmond found the antechamber crowded with milliners and toy-shop women, obsequious goldsmiths with jewels, salvers, and tankards, the mercers’ men with hangings and velvets and brocades. My Lady Duchess Elect was giving audience to one famous silversmith from Exeter Change, who brought with him a great chased salver, of which he was pointing out the beauties as Colonel Esmond entered. ‘Come,’ says she, ‘cousin, and admire the taste of this pretty thing.’ I think Mars and Venus were lying in the golden bower, that one gilt Cupid carried off the war-god’s casque, another his sword, another his great buckler, upon which my Lord Duke Hamilton’s arms with ours were to be engraved, and a fourth was kneeling down to the reclining goddess with the ducal coronet in her hands, God help us! The next time Mr. Esmond saw that piece of plate the arms were changed, the ducal coronet had been replaced by a viscount’s; it formed part of the fortune of the thrifty goldsmith’s own daughter when she married my Lord Viscount Squanderfield two years after.

‘Isn’t this a beautiful piece?’ says Beatrix, examining it, and she pointed out the arch graces of the Cupids and the fine carving of the languid prostrate Mars. Esmond sickened as he thought of the warrior dead in his chamber, his servants and children weeping around him, and of this smiling creature attiring herself, as it were, for that nuptial deathbed. 'Tis a pretty piece of vanity,' says he, looking gloomily at the beautiful creature; there were flambeaux in the room lighting up the brilliant mistress of it. She lifted up the great gold salver with her fair arms.

'Vanity!' says she haughtily. 'What is vanity in you, sir, is propriety in me. You ask a Jewish price for it, Mr. Graves, but have it I will, if only to spite Mr. Esmond.'

'O Beatrix, lay it down!' says Mr. Esmond. 'Herodias! you know not what you carry in the charger.'

She dropped it with a clang, the eager goldsmith running to seize his fallen ware. The lady’s face caught the fright from Esmond’s pale countenance, and her eyes shone out like beacons of alarm. 'What is it, Henry!' says she, running to him and seizing both his hands. 'What do you mean by your pale face and gloomy tones?'

'Come away, come away!' says Esmond, leading her; she clung frightened to him, and he supported her upon his heart, bidding the scared goldsmith leave them. The man went into the next apartment, staring with surprise and hugging his precious charger.

'Oh, my Beatrix, my sister!' says Esmond, still holding in his arms the pallid and affrighted creature, 'you have the greatest courage of any woman in the world; prepare to show it now, for you have a dreadful trial to bear.'

She sprang away from the friend who would have protected her. 'Hath he left me?' says she. 'We had words this morning; he was very gloomy, and I angered him; but he dared not, he dared not!' As she spoke a burning blush flushed over her whole face and bosom. Esmond saw it reflected in the glass by which she stood, with clenched hands, pressing her swelling heart.

'He has left you,' says Esmond, wondering that rage rather than sorrow was in her looks.

'And he is alive,' cries Beatrix, 'and you bring me this commission! He has left me, and you haven't dared to avenge me! You, that pretend to be the champion of our house, have let me suffer this insult! Where is Castlewood? I will go to my brother.'

'The duke is not alive, Beatrix,' said Esmond.

She looked at her cousin wildly, and fell back to the wall as though shot in the breast: 'And you come here, and—and—you killed him?'
‘No; thank Heaven!’ her kinsman said. ‘The blood of that noble heart doth not stain my sword! In its last hour it was faithful to thee, Beatrix Esmond. Vain and cruel woman! kneel and thank the awful Heaven which awards life and death, and chastises pride, that the noble Hamilton died true to you; at least that ’twas not your quarrel or your pride or your wicked vanity that drove him to his fate. He died by the bloody sword which already had drank your own father’s blood. Oh, woman, oh, sister! to that sad field where two corpses are lying—for the murderer died too by the hand of the man he slew—can you bring no mourners but your revenge and your vanity? God help and pardon thee, Beatrix, as he brings this awful punishment to your hard and rebellious heart.’

Esmond had scarce done speaking when his mistress came in. The colloquy between him and Beatrix had lasted but a few minutes, during which time Esmond’s servant had carried the disastrous news through the household. The army of Vanity Fair, waiting without, gathered up all their fripperies and fled aghast. Tender Lady Castlewood had been in talk above with Dean Atterbury, the pious creature’s almoner and director; and the dean had entered with her as a physician whose place was at a sick bed. Beatrix’s mother looked at Esmond and ran toward her daughter, with a pale face and open heart and hands, all kindness and pity. But Beatrix passed her by, nor would she have any of the medicaments of the spiritual physician. ‘I am best in my own room and by myself,’ she said. Her eyes were quite dry; nor did Esmond ever see them otherwise, save once, in respect to that grief. She gave him a cold hand as she went out. ‘Thank you, brother,’ she said in a low voice, and with a simplicity more touching than tears; ‘all you have said is true and kind, and I will go away and ask pardon.’ The three others remained behind, and talked over the dreadful story. It affected Dr. Atterbury more even than us, as it seemed. The death of Mohun, her husband’s murderer, was more awful to my mistress than even the duke’s unhappy end. Esmond gave at length what particulars he knew of their quarrel, and the cause of it. The two noblemen had long been at war with respect to the Lord Gerard’s property, whose two daughters my Lord Duke and Mohun had married. They had met by appointment that day at the lawyer’s in Lincoln’s Inn Fields; had words which, though they appeared very trifling to those who heard them, were not so to men exasperated by long and previous enmity. Mohun asked my Lord Duke where he could see his Grace’s friends, and within an hour had sent two of his own to arrange this deadly duel. It was pursued with such fierceness, and sprung from so trifling a cause, that all men agreed at the time that there was a party, of which these three notorious brawlers were but agents, who desired to take Duke Hamilton’s life away. They fought three on a side, as in that tragic meeting twelve years back, which hath been recounted already, and in which Mohun performed his second murder. They rushed in and closed upon each other at once without any feints or crossing of swords, even, and stabbed one at the other desperately, each receiving many wounds; and Mohun having his death-wound, and my Lord Duke lying by him, Macartney came up and stabbed his Grace as he lay on the ground, and gave him the blow of which he died. Colonel Macartney denied this, of which the horror and indignation of the whole kingdom would nevertheless have him guilty, and fled the country, whither he never returned.

What was the real cause of the Duke Hamilton’s death? A paltry quarrel that might easily have been made up, and with a ruffian so low, base, profligate, and degraded with former crimes and repeated murders that a man of such renown and princely rank as my Lord Duke might have disdained to sully his sword with the blood of such a villain. But his spirit was so high that those who wished his death knew that his courage was like his charity, and never turned any man away; and he died by the hands of Mohun, and the other two cutthroats that were set on him. The queen’s ambassador to Paris died, the loyal and devoted servant of the House of Stuart, and a royal prince of Scotland himself, and carrying the confidence, the repentance, of Queen Anne along with his own open devotion, and the good will of millions in the country more, to the queen’s exiled brother and sovereign.

That party to which Lord Mohun belonged had the benefit of his service, and now were well rid of such a ruffian. He and Meredith and Macartney were the Duke of Marlborough's men, and the two colonels had been broke but the year before for drinking perdition to the Tories. His Grace was a Whig now and a Hanoverian, and as eager for war as Prince Eugene himself. I say not that he was privy to Duke Hamilton’s death; I say that his party profited by it, and that three desperate and bloody instruments were found to effect that murder.

As Esmond and the dean walked away from Kensington discoursing of this tragedy, and how fatal it was to the cause which they both had at heart, the street criers were already out with their broadsides, shouting through the town the full, true, and horrible account of the death of Lord Mohun and Duke Hamilton in a duel. A fellow had got to Kensington, and was crying it in the square there at very early morning, when Mr. Esmond happened to pass by. He drove the man from under Beatrix's very window, whereof the casement had been set open. The sun was shining though 'twas November; he had seen the market carts rolling into London, the guard relieved at the palace, the laborers trudging to their work in the gardens between Kensington and the city—the wandering merchants and hawkers filling the air with their cries. The world was going to its business again, although dukes lay dead and ladies mourned for them, and kings, very likely, lost their chances. So night and day pass away and to-morrow comes, and our place knows us not. Esmond thought of the courier, now galloping on the north road to inform him who was Earl of Arran yesterday that he was Duke of Hamilton to-day, and of a thousand great schemes, hopes, ambitions, that were alive in the gallant heart, beating a few hours since, and now in a little dust quiescent.

CHAPTER VII.

I VISIT CASTLEWOOD ONCE MORE.

Thus, for a third time, Beatrix's ambitious hopes were circumvented, and she might well believe that a special malignant fate watched and pursued her, tearing her prize out of her hand just as she seemed to grasp it, and leaving her with only rage and grief for her portion. Whatever her feelings might have been of anger or of sorrow (and I fear me that the former emotion was that which most tore her heart), she would take no confidant, as people of softer natures would have done under such a calamity; her mother and her kinsman knew that she would disdain their pity, and that to offer it would be but to infuriate the cruel wound which fortune had inflicted. We knew that her pride was awfully humbled and punished by this sudden and terrible blow; she wanted no teaching of ours to point out the sad moral of her story. Her fond mother could give but her prayers, and her kinsman his faithful friendship and patience to the unhappy, stricken creature, and it was only by hints and a word or two uttered months afterward that Beatrix showed she understood their silent commiseration, and on her part was secretly thankful for their forbearance. The people about the Court said there was that in her manner which frightened away scoffing and condolence; she was above their triumph and their pity, and acted her part in that dreadful tragedy greatly and courageously, so that those who liked her least were yet forced to admire her. We, who watched her after her disaster, could not but respect the indomitable courage and majestic calm with which she bore it. ‘I would rather see her tears than her pride,’ her mother said, who was accustomed to bear her sorrows in a very different way, and to receive them as the stroke of God with an awful submission and meekness. But Beatrix’s nature was different to that tender parent’s; she seemed to accept her grief, and to defy it; nor would she allow it (I believe not even in private and in her own chamber) to extort from her the confession of even a tear of humiliation or a cry of pain. Friends and children of our race, who come after me, in which way will you bear your trials? I know one that prays God will give you love rather than pride, and that the Eye all-seeing shall find you in the humble place. Not that we should judge proud spirits otherwise than charitably. ’Tis nature hath fashioned some for ambition and dominion, as it hath formed others for obedience and submission. The leopard follows his nature as the lamb does, and acts after leopard law; she can neither help her beauty, nor her courage, nor her cruelty, nor a single spot on her shining coat, nor the conquering spirit which impels her, nor the shot which brings her down.

During that well-founded panic the Whigs had, lest the queen should forsake their Hanoverian prince, bound by oaths and treaties as she was to him, and recall her brother, who was allied to her by yet stronger ties of nature and duty, the Prince of Savoy, and the boldest of that party of the Whigs, were for bringing the young Duke of Cambridge over, in spite of the queen, and the outcry of her Tory servants, arguing that the electoral prince, a peer and prince of the blood-royal of this realm too, and in the line of succession to the crown, had a right to sit in the Parliament whereof he was a member, and to dwell in the country which he one day was to govern. Nothing but the strongest ill will expressed by the queen, and the people about her, and menaces of the royal resentment, should this scheme be persisted in, prevented it from being carried into effect.

The boldest on our side were, in like manner, for having our prince into the country. The undoubted inheritor of the right divine, the feelings of more than half the nation, of almost all the clergy, of the gentry of England and Scotland with him, entirely innocent of the crime for which his father suffered—brave, young, handsome, unfortunate—who in England would dare to molest the prince should he come among us, and fling himself upon British generosity, hospitality, and honor? An invader with an army of Frenchmen behind him Englishmen of spirit would resist to the death, and drive back to the shores whence he came; but a prince, alone, armed with his right only, and relying on the loyalty of his people, was sure, many of his friends argued, of welcome, at least of safety, among us. The hand of his sister the queen, of the people his subjects, never could be raised to do him a wrong. But the queen was timid by nature, and the successive ministers she had had private causes for their irresolution. The bolder and honester men, who had at heart the illustrious young exile's cause, had no scheme of interest of their own to prevent them from seeing the right done, and, provided only he came as an Englishman, were ready to venture their all to welcome and defend him.

St. John and Harley both had kind works in plenty for the prince's adherents, and gave him endless promises of future support; but hints and promises were all they could be got to give; and some of his friends were for measures much bolder, more efficacious, and more open. With a party of these, some of whom are yet alive, and some whose names Mr. Esmond has no right to mention, he found himself engaged the year after that miserable death of Duke Hamilton, which deprived the prince of his most courageous ally in his country. Dean Atterbury was one of the friends whom Esmond may mention, as the brave bishop is now beyond exile and persecution, and to him, and one or two more, the colonel opened himself of a scheme of his own, that, backed by a little resolution on the prince's part, could not fail of bringing about the accomplishment of their dearest wishes.

My young Lord Viscount Castlewood had not come to England to keep his majority, and had now been absent from the country for several years. The year when his sister was to be married and Duke Hamilton died, my lord was kept at Bruxelles by his wife's lying-in. The gentle Clotilda could not bear her husband out of her sight; perhaps she mistrusted the young scapegrace should he ever get loose from her leading-strings; and she kept him by her side to nurse the baby and administer posset to the gossips. Many a laugh poor Beatrix had had about Frank's uxoriousness; his mother would have gone to Clotilda when her time was coming but that the mother-in-law was already in possession, and the negotiations for poor Beatrix's marriage were begun. A few months after the horrid catastrophe in Hyde Park my mistress and her daughter retired to Castlewood, where my lord, it was expected, would soon join them. But, to say truth, their quiet household was little to his taste; he could be got to come to Walcote but once after his first campaign; and then the young rogue spent more than half his time in London, not appearing at Court or in public under his own name and title, but frequenting plays, bagnios, and the very worst company, under the name of Captain Esmond (whereby his innocent kinsman got more than once into trouble); and so under various pretexts, and in pursuit of all sorts of pleasures, until he plunged into the lawful one of marriage, Frank Castlewood had remained away from this country, and was unknown, save among the gentlemen of the army with whom he had served abroad. The fond heart of his mother was pained by this long absence. ’Twas all that Henry Esmond could do to soothe her natural mortification and find excuses for his kinsman’s levity.

In the autumn of the year 1713 Lord Castlewood thought of returning home. His first child had been a daughter; Clotilda was in the way of gratifying his lordship with a second, and the pious youth thought that by bringing his wife to his ancestral home, by prayers to St. Philip of Castlewood, and what not, Heaven might be induced to bless him with a son this time, for whose coming the expectant mamma was very anxious.

The long-debated peace had been proclaimed this year at the end of March, and France was open to us. Just as Frank’s poor mother had made all things ready for Lord Castlewood’s reception and was eagerly expecting her son, it was by Colonel Esmond’s means that the kind lady was disappointed of her longing, and obliged to defer once more the darling hope of her heart.

Esmond took horses to Castlewood. He had not seen its ancient gray towers and well-remembered woods for nearly fourteen years, and since he rode thence with my lord, to whom his mistress with her young children by her side waved an adieu. What ages seemed to have passed since then; what years of action and passion, of care, love, hope, disaster! The children were grown up now, and had stories of their own. As for Esmond, he felt to be a hundred years old; his dear mistress only seemed unchanged; she looked and welcomed him quite as of old. There was the fountain in the court babbling its familiar music, the old hall and its furniture, the carved chair my late lord used, the very flagon he drank from. Esmond’s mistress knew he would like to sleep in the little room he used to occupy; ’twas made ready for him, and wallflowers and sweet herbs set in the adjoining chamber, the chaplain’s room.
In tears of not unmanly emotion, with prayers of submission to the awful Dispenser of death and life, of good and evil fortune, Mr. Esmond passed a part of that first night at Castlewood; lying awake for many hours as the clock kept tolling (in tones so well remembered); looking back, as all men will that revisit their home of childhood, over the great gulf of time, and surveying himself on the distant bank yonder, a sad little melancholy boy with his lord still alive—his dear mistress, a girl yet, her children sporting around her. Years ago, a boy on that very bed, when she had blessed him and called him her knight, he had made a vow to be faithful and never desert her dear service. Had he kept that fond boyish promise? Yes, before Heaven; yes, praise be to God! His life had been hers; his blood, his fortune, his name, his whole heart ever since had been hers and her children's. All night long he was dreaming his boyhood over again and waking fitfully; he half fancied he heard Father Holt calling to him from the next chamber, and that he was coming in and out from the mysterious window.

Esmond rose up before the dawn, passed into the next room, where the air was heavy with the odor of the wallflowers, looked into the brazier where the papers had been burnt, into the old presses where Holt's books and papers had been kept, and tried the spring and whether the window worked still. The spring had not been touched for years, but yielded at length, and the whole fabric of the window sank down. He lifted it and it relapsed into its frame; no one had ever passed thence since Holt used it sixteen years ago.

Esmond remembered his poor lord saying, on the last day of his life, that Holt used to come in and out of the house like a ghost, and knew that the father liked these mysteries, and practiced such secret disguises, entrances, and exits; this was the way the ghost came and went his pupil had always conjectured. Esmond closed the casement up again as the dawn was rising over Castlewood village; he could hear the clinking at the blacksmith's forge yonder among the trees, across the green, and past the river, on which a mist still lay sleeping.

Next Esmond opened that long cupboard over the work of the mantelpiece, big enough to hold a man, and in which Mr. Holt used to keep sundry secret properties of his. The two swords he remembered so well as a boy lay actually there still, and Esmond took them out and wiped them with a strange curiosity of emotion. There were a bundle of papers here too, which no doubt had been left at Holt's last visit to the place in my Lord Viscount's life, that very day when the priest had been arrested and taken to Hexham Castle. Esmond made free with these papers, and found treasonable matter of King William's reign, the names of Charnock and Perkins, Sir John Fenwick and Sir John Friend, Rookwood and Lodwick, Lords Montgomery and Ailesbury, Clarendon and Yarmouth, that had all been engaged in plots against the usurper; a letter from the Duke of Berwick too, and one from the king at St. Germains offering to confer upon his trusty and well-beloved Francis, Viscount Castlewood, the titles of Earl and Marquis of Esmond, bestowed by patent royal, and in the fourth year of his reign, upon Thomas, Viscount Castlewood, and the heirs male of his body, in default of which issue the ranks and dignities were to pass to Francis aforesaid.

This was the paper whereof my lord had spoken, which Holt showed him the very day he was arrested, and for an answer to which he would come back in a week's time. I put these papers hastily into the crypt whence I had taken them, being interrupted by a tapping of a light finger at the ring of the chamber door; 'twas my kind mistress, with her face full of love and welcome. She, too, had passed the night wakefully no doubt, but neither asked the other how the hours had been spent. There are things we divine without speaking, and know though they happen out of our sight. This fond lady hath told me that she knew both days when I was wounded abroad. Who shall say how far sympathy reaches, and how truly love can prophesy? 'I looked into your room,' was all she said; 'the bed was vacant, the little old bed! I knew I should find you here.' And tender and blushing faintly with a benediction in her eyes, the gentle creature kissed him.

They walked out hand in hand through the old court and to the terrace walk, where the grass was glistening with dew, and the birds in the green woods above were singing their delicious choruses under the blushing morning sky. How well all things were remembered! The ancient towers and gables of the hall darkling against the east, the purple shadows on the green slopes, the quaint devices and carvings of the dial, the forest-crowned heights, the fair yellow plain cheerful with crops and corn, the shining river rolling through it toward the pearly hills beyond; all these were before us, along with a thousand beautiful memories of our youth, beautiful and sad, but as real and vivid in our minds as that fair and always remembered scene our eyes beheld once more. We forget nothing. The memory sleeps but wakens again; I often think how it shall be, when, after the last sleep of death, the réveillé shall arouse us forever, and the past in one flash of self-consciousness rush back, like the soul, revivified.

The house would not be up for some hours yet (it was July, and the dawn was only just awake), and here Esmond opened himself to his mistress of the business he had in hand, and what part Frank was to play in it. He knew he could confide anything to her, and that the fond soul would die rather than reveal it; and bidding her keep the secret from all, he laid it entirely before his mistress (always as stanch a little royalist as any in the kingdom), and indeed was quite sure that any plan of his was secure of her applause and sympathy. Never was such a glorious scheme to her partial mind; never such a devoted knight to execute it. An hour or two may have passed while they were having their colloquy. Beatrix came out to them just as their talk was over; her tall beautiful form robed in sable (which she wore without ostentation ever since last year's catastrophe), sweeping over the green terrace and casting its shadows before her across the grass.

She made us one of her grand courtesies, smiling, and called us 'the young people.' She was older, paler, and more majestic than in the year before; her mother seemed the youngest of the two. She never once spoke of her grief, Lady Castlewood told Esmond, or alluded, save by a quiet word or two, to the death of her hopes.

When Beatrix came back to Castlewood she took to visiting all the cottages and all the sick. She set up a school of children, and taught singing to some of them. We had a pair of beautiful old organs in Castlewood Church, on which she played admirably, so that the music there became to be known in the country for many miles round, and no doubt people came to see the fair organist as well as to hear her. Parson Tusher and his wife were established at the vicarage, but his wife had brought him no children wherewith Tom might meet his enemies at the gate. Honest Tom took care not to have many such; his great shovel hat was in his hand for everybody. He was profuse of bows and compliments. He behaved to Esmond as if the colonel had been a commander in chief; he dined at the hall that day, being Sunday, and would not partake of pudding except under extreme pressure. He deplored my lord's perversions, but drank his lordship's health very devoutly; and an hour before, at church, sent the colonel to sleep, with a long, learned, and refreshing sermon.

Esmond's visit home was but for two days; the business he had in hand calling him away and out of the country. Ere he went, he saw Beatrix but once alone, and then she summoned him out of the long tapestry room, where he and his mistress were sitting, quite as in old times, into the adjoining chamber that had been Viscountess Isabel's sleeping apartment, and where Esmond perfectly well remembered seeing the old lady sitting up in the bed in her night-rail that morning when the troop of guard came to fetch her. The most beautiful woman in England lay in that bed now, whereof the great damask hangings were scarce faded since Esmond saw them last.

Here stood Beatrix in her black robes, holding a box in her hand; 'twas that which Esmond had given her before her marriage, stamped with a coronet which the disappointed girl was never to wear; and contained her aunt's legacy of diamonds.

'You had best take these with you, Harry,' says she; 'I have no need of diamonds any more.' There was not the least token of emotion in her quiet low voice. She held out the black shagreen case with her fair arm, that did not shake in the least. Esmond saw she wore a black velvet bracelet on it, with my Lord Duke's picture in enamel; he had given it her but three days before he fell.

Esmond said the stones were his no longer, and strove to turn off that proffered restoration with a laugh. 'Of what good,' says he, 'are they to me? The diamond loop to his hat did not set off Prince Eugene, and will not make my yellow face look any handsomer.'

'You will give them to your wife, cousin,' says she. 'My cousin, your wife has a lovely complexion and shape.'

'Beatrix,' Esmond burst out, the old fire flaming out as it would at times, 'will you wear those trinkets at your marriage? You whispered once you did not know me; you know me better now; how I sought what I have sighed for, for ten years, what foregone!'

'A price for your constancy, my lord!' says she; 'such a preux chevalier wants to be paid. Oh, fie, cousin!'

'Again,' Esmond spoke out, 'if I do something you have at heart; something worthy of me and you; something that shall make me a name with which to endow you; will you take it? There was a chance for me once, you said; is it impossible to recall it? Never shake your head, but hear me; say you will hear me a year hence. If I come back to you and bring you fame, will that please you? If I do what you desire most—what he who is dead desired most—will that soften you?'

'What is it, Henry?' says she, her face lighting up, 'what mean you?'
‘Ask no questions,’ he said, ‘wait, and give me but time; if I bring back that you long for, that I have a thousand times heard you pray for, will you have no reward for him who has done you that service? Put away those trinkets, keep them; it shall not be at my marriage, it shall not be at yours; but if man can do it, I swear a day shall come when there shall be a feast in your house, and you shall be proud to wear them. I say no more now; put aside these words, and lock away yonder box until the day when I shall remind you of both. All I pray of you now is, to wait and to remember.’

‘You are going out of the country?’ says Beatrix, in some agitation.

‘Yes, to-morrow,’ says Esmond.

‘To Lorraine, cousin?’ says Beatrix laying her hand on his arm; ‘twas the hand on which she wore the duke’s bracelet. ‘Stay, Henry!’ continued she, with a tone that had more despondency in it than she was accustomed to show. ‘Hear a last word. I do love you. I do admire you—who would not, that has known such love as yours has been for us all? But I think I have no heart; at least I have never seen the man that could touch it; and, had I found him, I would have followed him in rags had he been a private soldier, or to sea, like one of those buccaneers you used to read to us about when we were children. I would do anything for such a man, bear anything for him; but I never found one. You were ever too much of a slave to win my heart; even my Lord Duke could not command it. I had not been happy had I married him. I knew that three months after our engagement—and was too vain to break it. O Harry! I cried once or twice, not for him, but with tears of rage because I could not be sorry for him. I was frightened to find I was glad of his death; and were I joined to you, I should have the same sense of servitude, the same longing to escape. We should both be unhappy, and you the most, who are as jealous as the duke was himself. I tried to love him; I tried, indeed I did; affected gladness when he came; submitted to hear when he was by me, and tried the wife’s part I thought I was to play for the rest of my days. But half an hour of that complaisance wearied me, and what would a lifetime be? My thoughts were away when he was speaking; and I was thinking, Oh, that this man would drop my hand and rise up from before my feet! I knew his great and noble qualities, greater and nobler than mine a thousand times—as yours are, cousin, I tell you, a million and a million times better. But ’twas not for these I took him. I took him to have a great place in the world, and I lost it. I lost it, but do not deplore him—and I often thought, as I listened to his fond vows and ardent words, Oh, if I yield to this man and meet the other; I shall hate him and leave him! I am not good, Harry; my mother is gentle and good like an angel. I wonder how she should have such a child. She is weak, but she would die rather than do a wrong; I am stronger than she, but I would do it out of defiance. I do not care for what the parsons tell me with their droning sermons. I used to see them at Court as mean and as worthless as the meanest woman there. Oh, I am sick and weary of the world! I wait but for one thing, and when it is done, I will take Frank's religion and your poor mother's and go into a nunnery, and end like her. Shall I wear the diamonds then? They say the nuns wear their best trinkets the day they take the veil. I will put them away as you bid me; farewell, cousin; mamma is pacing the next room, racking her little head to know what we have been saying. She is jealous—all women are. I sometimes think that is the only womanly quality I have. Farewell. Farewell, brother. She gave him her cheek as a brotherly privilege. The cheek was as cold as marble.

Esmond's mistress showed no signs of jealousy when he returned to the room where she was. She had schooled herself so as to look quite inscrutable, when she had a mind. Among her other feminine qualities she had that of being a perfect dissembler.

He rid away from Castlewood to attempt the task he was bound on, and stand or fall by it; in truth his state of mind was such that he was eager for some outward excitement to counteract that gnawing malady which he was inwardly enduring.

CHAPTER VIII.

I TRAVEL TO FRANCE AND BRING HOME A PORTRAIT OF RIGAUD.

Mr. Esmond did not think fit to take leave at Court, or to inform all the world of Pall Mall and the coffeehouses that he was about to quit England; and chose to depart in the most private manner possible. He procured a pass as for a Frenchman, through Dr. Atterbury, who did that business for him, getting the signature even from Lord Bolingbroke's office, without any personal application to the secretary. Lockwood, his faithful servant, he took with him to Castlewood, and left behind there; giving out ere he left London that he himself was sick, and gone to Hampshire for country air, and so departed as silently as might be upon his business.

As Frank Castlewood's aid was indispensable for Mr. Esmond's scheme, his first visit was to Bruxelles (passing by way of Antwerp, where the Duke of Marlborough was in exile), and in the first-named place Harry found his dear young Benedict, the married man, who appeared to be rather out of humor with his matrimonial chain, and clogged with the obstinate embraces which Clotilda kept round his neck. Colonel Esmond was not presented to her; but M. Simon was a gentleman of the Royal Cravat (Esmond bethought him of the regiment of his honest Irishman, whom he had seen that day after Malplaquet, when he first set eyes on the young king); and M. Simon was introduced to the Vicountess Castlewood, née Comptesse Wertheim; to the numerous counts the Lady Clotilda's tall brothers; to her father the chamberlain; and to the lady his wife, Frank's mother-in-law, a tall and majestic person of large proportions, such as became the mother of such a company of grenadiers as her warlike sons formed. The whole race were at free quarters in the little castle nigh to Bruxelles which Frank had taken; rode his horses, drank his wine, and lived easily at the poor lad's charges. Mr. Esmond had always maintained a perfect fluency in the French, which was his mother tongue; and if this family (that spoke French with the twang which the Flemings use) discovered any inaccuracy in Mr. Simon's pronunciation, 'twas to be attributed to the latter's long residence in England, where he had married and remained ever since he was taken prisoner at Blenheim. His story was perfectly pat; there were none there to doubt it save honest Frank, and he was charmed with his kinsman's scheme, when he became acquainted with it; and, in truth, always admired Colonel Esmond with an affectionate fidelity, and thought his cousin the wisest and best of all cousins and men. Frank entered heart and soul into the plan, and liked it the better as it was to take him to Paris, out of reach of his brothers, his father- and his mother-in-law, whose attentions rather fatigued him.

Castlewood, I have said, was born in the same year as the Prince of Wales; had not a little of the prince's air, height, and figure; and especially since he had seen the Chevalier de St. George on the occasion before named, took no small pride in his resemblance to a person so illustrious; which likeness he increased by all means in his power, wearing fair brown periwigs, such as the prince wore, and ribbons, and so forth, of the chevalier's color.
This resemblance was, in truth, the circumstance on which Mr. Esmond's scheme was founded; and having secured Frank's secrecy and enthusiasm, he left him to continue his journey, and see the other personages on whom its success depended. The place whither M. Simon next traveled was Bar, in Lorraine, where that merchant arrived with a consignment of broadcloths, valuable laces from Malines, and letters for his correspondent there.

Would you know how a prince, heroic from misfortunes, and descending from a line of kings, whose race seemed to be doomed like the Atridæ of old—would you know how he was employed when the envoy who came to him through danger and difficulty beheld him for the first time? The young king, in a flannel jacket, was at tennis with the gentlemen of his suite, crying out after the balls, and swearing like the meanest of his subjects. The next time Mr. Esmond saw him 'twas when M. Simon took a packet of laces to Miss Oglethorpe, the prince's antechamber in those days, at which ignoble door men were forced to knock for admission to his Majesty. The admission was given, the envoy found the king and the mistress together; the pair were at cards and his Majesty was in liquor. He cared more for three honors than three kingdoms; and a half dozen glasses of ratafia made him forget all his woes and his losses, his father's crown, and his grandfather's head.

Mr. Esmond did not open himself to the prince then. His Majesty was scarce in a condition to hear him; and he doubted whether a king who drank so much could keep a secret in his fuddled head; or whether a hand that shook so was strong enough to grasp a crown. However, at last, and after taking counsel with the prince's advisers, among whom were many gentlemen honest and faithful, Esmond's plan was laid before the king, and her actual Majesty Queen Oglethorpe, in council. The prince liked the scheme well enough; 'twas easy and daring, and suited to his reckless gayety and lively youthful spirit. In the morning, after he had slept his wine off, he was very gay, lively, and agreeable. His manner had an extreme charm of archness, and a kind simplicity; and, to do her justice, her Oglethorpean Majesty was kind, acute, resolute, and of good counsel; she gave the prince much good advice that he was too weak to follow, and loved him with a fidelity which he returned with an ingratitude quite royal.

Having his own forebodings regarding his scheme should it ever be fulfilled, and his usual skeptic doubts as to the benefit which might accrue to the country by bringing a tipsy young monarch back to it, Colonel Esmond had his audience of leave and quiet. M. Simon took his departure. At any rate the youth at Bar was as good as the older Pretender at Hanover; if the worst came to the worst the Englishman could be dealt with as easy as the German. M. Simon trotted on that long journey from Nancy to Paris, and saw that famous town, stealthily and like a spy, as in truth he was; and where, sure, more magnificence and more misery is heaped together, more rags and lace, more filth and gilding, than in any city in this world. Here he was put in communication with the king's best friend, his half brother, the famous Duke of Berwick. Esmond recognized him as the stranger who had visited Castlewood now near twenty years ago. His Grace opened to him when he found that Mr. Esmond was one of Webb's brave regiment, that had once been his Grace's own. He was the sword and buckler indeed of the Stuart cause; there was no stain on his shield except the bar across it, which Marlborough's sister left him. Had Berwick been his father's heir, James III. had assuredly sat on the English throne. He could dare, endure, strike, speak, be silent. The fire and genius perhaps he had not (that were given to baser men), but except these he had some of the best qualities of a leader. His Grace knew Esmond's father and history; and hinted at the latter in such a way as made the colonel to think he was aware of the particulars of that story. But Esmond did not choose to enter on it, nor did the duke press him. Mr. Esmond said, 'No doubt he should come by his name if ever greater people came by theirs.'

What confirmed Esmond in his notion that the Duke of Berwick knew of his case was, that when the colonel went to pay his duty at St. Germain's, her Majesty once addressed him by the title of marquis. He took the queen the dutiful remembrances of her goddaughter, and the lady whom, in the days of her prosperity, her Majesty had befriended. The queen remembered Rachel Esmond perfectly well, had heard of my Lord Castlewood's conversion, and was much edified by that act of Heaven in his favor. She knew that others of that family had been of the only true church too; 'Your father and your mother, M. le Marquis,' her Majesty said (that was the only time she used the phrase). M. Simon bowed very low, and said he had found other parents than his own, who had taught him differently; but these had only one king; on which her Majesty was pleased to give him a medal blessed by the Pope, which had been found very efficacious in cases similar to his own, and to promise she would offer up prayers for his conversion and that of the family; which no doubt this pious lady did, though up to the present moment, and after twenty-seven years, Colonel Esmond is bound to say that neither the medal nor the prayers have had the slightest known effect upon his religious convictions.

As for the splendors of Versailles, M. Simon, the merchant, only beheld them as a humble and distant spectator, seeing the old king but once, when he went to feed his carp; and asking for no presentation at his Majesty's Court.

By this time my Lord Viscount Castlewood was got to Paris, where, as the London prints presently announced, her ladyship was brought to bed of a son and heir. For a long while afterward she was in a delicate state of health, and ordered by the physicians not to travel; otherwise 'twas well known that Viscount Castlewood proposed returning to England, and taking up his residence at his own seat.

While he remained at Paris, my Lord Castlewood had his picture done by the famous French painter, M. Rigaud, a present for his mother in London; and this piece M. Simon took back with him when he returned to that city, which he reached about May, in the year 1714, very soon after which time my Lady Castlewood and her daughter, and their kinsman, Colonel Esmond, who had been at Castlewood all this time, likewise returned to London; her ladyship occupying her house at Kensington; Mr. Esmond returning to his lodgings at Knightsbridge, nearer the town, and once more making his appearance at all public places, his health greatly improved by his long stay in the country.

The portrait of my lord, in a handsome gilt frame, was hung up in the place of honor in her ladyship's drawing room. His lordship was represented in his scarlet uniform of captain of the guard, with a light brown periwig, a cuirass under his coat, a blue ribbon and a fall of Bruxelles lace. Many of her ladyship's friends admired the piece beyond measure, and flocked to see it; Bishop Atterbury, Mr. Lesly, good old Mr. Collier, and others among the clergy, were delighted with the performance, and many among the first quality examined and praised it; only I must own that Dr. Tusher happening to come up to London, and seeing the picture (it was ordinarily covered by a curtain, but on this day Miss Beatrix happened to be looking at it when the doctor arrived), the Vicar of Castlewood vowed he could not see any resemblance in the piece to his old pupil, except, perhaps, a little about the chin.
and the periwig; but we all of us convinced him that he had not seen Frank for five years or more; that he knew no more about the fine arts than a plowboy, and that he must be mistaken; and we sent him home assured that the piece was an excellent likeness. As for my Lord Bolingbroke, who honored her ladyship with a visit occasionally, when Colonel Esmond showed him the picture he burst out laughing, and asked what deviltry he was engaged on? Esmond owned simply that the portrait was not that of Viscount Castlewood; besought the secretary on his honor to keep the secret; said that the ladies of the house were enthusiastic Jacobites, as was well known; and confessed that the picture was that of the Chevalier St. George.

The truth is, that Mr. Simon, waiting upon Lord Castlewood one day at M. Rigaud's, while his lordship was sitting for his picture, affected to be much struck with a piece representing the Chevalier, whereof the head only was finished, and purchased it of the painter for a hundred crowns. It had been intended, the artist said, for Miss Oglethorpe, the prince's mistress, but that young lady, quitting Paris, had left the work on the artist's hands; and taking this piece home, when my lord's portrait arrived, Colonel Esmond, alias M. Simon, had copied the uniform and other accessories from my lord's picture to fill up Rigaud's incomplete canvas; the colonel all his life having been a practitioner of painting, and especially followed it during his long residence in the cities of Flanders, among the masterpieces of Vandyck and Rubens. My grandson hath the piece, such as it is, in Virginia now.

At the commencement of the month of June, Miss Beatrix Esmond, and my Lady Viscountess, her mother, arrived from Castlewood; the former to resume her services at Court, which had been interrupted by the fatal catastrophe of Duke Hamilton's death. She once more took her place, then, in her Majesty's suite and at the maid's table, being always a favorite with Mrs. Masham, the queen's chief woman, partly perhaps on account of their bitterness against the Duchess of Marlborough, whom Miss Beatrix loved no better than her rival did. The gentlemen about the Court, my Lord Bolingbroke among others, owned that the young lady had come back handsomer than ever, and that the serious and tragic air which her face now involuntarily wore became her better than her former smiles and archness.

All the old domestics at the little house of Kensington Square were changed; the old steward that had served the family any time these five-and-twenty years, since the birth of the children of the house, was dispatched into the kingdom of Ireland to see my lord’s estate there; the housekeeper, who had been my lady’s woman time out of mind, and the attendant of the young children, was sent away grumbling to Walcote, to see to the new painting and preparing of that house, which my lady dowager intended to occupy for the future, giving up Castlewood to her daughter-in-law that might be expected daily from France. Another servant the viscountess had was dismissed too—with a gratuity—on the pretext that her ladyship’s train of domestics must be diminished; so, finally, there was not left in the household a single person who had belonged to it during the time my young Lord Castlewood was yet at home.

For the plan which Colonel Esmond had in view, and the stroke he intended, ’twas necessary that the very smallest number of persons should be put in possession of his secret.
It scarce was known, except to three or four out of his family, and it was kept to a wonder.

On the 10th of June, 1714, there came by Mr. Prior’s messenger from Paris, a letter from my Lord Viscount Castlewood to his mother, saying that he had been foolish in regard of money matters, that he was ashamed to own he had lost at play, and by other extravagances; and that instead of having great entertainments as he had hoped at Castlewood this year, he must live as quiet as he could, and make every effort to be saving. So far every word of poor Frank’s letter was true, nor was there a doubt that he and his tall brothers-in-law had spent a great deal more than they ought, and engaged the revenues of the Castlewood property, which the fond mother had husbanded and improved so carefully during the time of her guardianship.

His ‘Clotilda,’ Castlewood went on to say, ’twas still delicate, and the physicians thought her lying-in had best take place at Paris. He should come without her ladyship, and be at his mother’s house about the 17th or 18th day of June, proposing to take horse from Paris immediately, and bringing but a single servant with him; and he requested that the lawyers of Gray’s Inn might be invited to meet him with their account, and the land steward come from Castlewood with his, so that he might settle with them speedily, raise a sum of money whereof he stood in need, and be back to his viscountess by the time of her lying-in.’ Then his lordship gave some of the news of the town, sent his remembrance to kinsfolk, and so the letter ended. ’Twas put in the common post, and no doubt the French police and the English there had a copy of it, to which they were exceeding welcome.

Two days after another letter was dispatched by the public post of France, in the same open way, and this, after giving news of the fashion at Court there, ended by the following sentences, in which, but for those that had the key, 'twould be difficult for any man to find any secret lurked at all:

[The King will take] medicine on Thursday. His Majesty is better than he hath been of late, though incommoded by indigestion from his too great appetite. Mme. Maintenon continues well. They have performed a play of Mons. Racine at St. Cyr. The Duke of Shrewsbury and Mr. Prior, our envoy, and all our English nobility here, were present at it. [The Viscount Castlewood's passports] were refused to him, 'twas said; his Lordship being suèd by a goldsmith for Vaisselle plate, and a pearl necklace supplied to Mile. Meruel of the French Comedy. 'Tis a pity such news should get abroad [and travel to England] about our young nobility here, Mile. Meruel has been sent to the Fort l'Evêque; they say she has ordered not only plate, but furniture, and a chariot and horses [under that lord's name]; of which extravagance his unfortunate Viscountess knows nothing.

[His Majesty will be] eighty-two years of age on his next birthday. The Court prepares to celebrate it with a great feast. Mr. Prior is in a sad way about their refusing at home to send him his plate. All here admired my Lord Viscount's portrait, and said it was a masterpiece of Rigaud. Have you seen it? It is [at the Lady Castlewood's house in Kensington Square]. I think no English painter could produce such a piece.

Our poor friend the Abbé hath been at the Bastille, but is now transported to the Conciergerie [where his friends may visit him]. They are to ask for a remission of his sentence soon. Let us hope the poor rogue will have repented in prison.

[The Lord Castlewood] has had the affair of the plate made up, and departs for England.

Is not this a dull letter? I have a cursed headache with drinking with Mat and some more overnight, and tippy or sober am Thine ever, —.

All this letter, save some dozen of words which I have put above between brackets, was mere idle talk, though the substance of the letter was as important as any letter well could be. It told those that had the key, that The King will take the Viscount Castlewood's passports and travel to England under that lord's name. His Majesty will be at the Lady Castlewood's house in Kensington Square, where his friends may visit him: they are to ask for the Lord Castlewood. This note may have passed under Mr. Prior's eyes, and those of our new allies the French, and taught them nothing; though it explains sufficiently to persons in London what the event was which was about to happen, as 'twill show those who read my memoirs a hundred years hence what was that errand on which Colonel Esmond of late had been busy. Silently and swiftly to do that about which others were conspiring, and thousands of Jacobites all over the country clumsily caballing; alone to effect that which the leaders here were only talking about; to bring the Prince of Wales into the country openly in the face of all, under Bolingbroke's very eyes, the walls placarded with the proclamation signed with the Secretary's name, and offering £500 reward for his apprehension; this was a stroke, the playing and winning of which might well give any adventurous spirit pleasure: the loss of the stake might involve a heavy penalty, but all our family were eager to risk that for the glorious chance of winning the game.

Nor should it be called a game, save perhaps with the chief player, who was not more or less skeptical than most public men with whom he had acquaintance in that age. (Is there ever a public man in England that altogether believes in his party? Is there one, however doubtful, that will not fight for it?) Young Frank was ready to fight without much thinking; he was a Jacobite as his father before him was; all the Esmonds were Royalists. Give him but the word, he would cry, 'God save King James!' before the palace guard, or at the Maypole in the Strand; and with respect to the women, as is usual with them, 'twas not a question of party but of faith; their belief was a passion; either Esmond's mistress or her daughter would have died for it cheerfully. I have laughed often, talking of King William's reign, and said I thought Lady Castlewood was disappointed the king did not persecute the family more; and those who know the nature of women may fancy for themselves, what needs not here be written down, the rapture with which these neophytes received the mystery when made known to them; the eagerness with which they looked forward to its completion; the reverence which they paid the minister who initiated them into that secret Truth, now known only to a few, but presently to reign over the world. Sure there is no bound to the trustiness of women. Look at Arria worshiping the drunken clodpate of a husband who beats her; look at Cornelia treasuring as a jewel in her maternal heart the oaf her son. I have known a woman preach Jesuit's bark, and afterward Dr. Berkeley's tar-water, as though to swallow them were a divine decree, and to refuse them no better than blasphemy.

On his return from France Colonel Esmond put himself at the head of his little knot of fond conspirators. No death or torture he knew would frighten them out of their constancy. When he detailed his plan for bringing the king back, his elder mistress thought that Restoration was to be attributed under Heaven to the Castlewood family and to its chief, and she worshiped and loved Esmond, if that could be, more than ever she had done. She doubted not for one moment of the success of the scheme, to mistrust which would have seemed impious in her eyes. And as for Beatrix, when she became acquainted with the plan, and joined it as she did with all her heart, she gave Esmond one of her searching bright looks. 'Ah, Harry,' says she, 'why were you not the head of your house? You are the only one fit to raise it; why do you give that silly boy the name and the honor? But 'tis so in the world; those get the prize that don't deserve or care for it. I wish I could give you your silly prize, cousin, but I can't. I have tried, and I can't.' And she went away, shaking her head mournfully, but always, it seemed to Esmond, that her liking and respect for him was greatly increased, since she knew what capability he had both to act and bear; to do and to forego.

CHAPTER IX.

THE ORIGINAL OF THE PORTRAIT COMES TO ENGLAND.

'Twas announced in the family that my Lord Castlewood would arrive, having a confidential French gentleman in his suite, who acted as secretary to his lordship, and who being a papist, and a foreigner of a good family, though now in rather a menial place, would have his meals served in his chamber, and not with the domestics of the house. The vicountess gave up her bedchamber contiguous to her daughter's, and having a large convenient closet attached to it, in which a bed was put up, ostensibly for M. Baptiste, the Frenchman; though, 'tis needless to say, when the doors of the apartments were locked, and the two guests retired within it, the young viscount became the servant of the illustrious prince whom he entertained, and gave up gladly the more convenient and airy chamber and bed to his master. Madam Beatrix also retired to the upper region, her chamber being converted into a sitting room for my lord. The better to carry the deceit, Beatrix affected to grumble before the servants, and to be jealous that she was to be turned out of her chamber to make way for my lord.

No small preparations were made, you may be sure, and no slight tremor of expectation caused the hearts of the gentle ladies of Castlewood to flutter, before the arrival of the personages who were about to honor their house. The chamber was ornamented with flowers; the bed covered with the very finest of linen; the two ladies insisted on making it themselves, and kneeling down at the bedside and kissing the sheets out of respect for the web that was to hold the sacred person of a king. The toilet was of silver and crystal; there was a copy of 'Eikon Basiliké' laid on the writing table; a portrait of the martyred king hung always over the mantel, having a sword of my poor Lord Castlewood underneath it, and a little picture or emblem which the widow loved always to have before her eyes on waking, and in which the hair of her lord and her two children was worked together. Her books of private devotions, as they were all of the English Church, she carried away with her to the upper apartment, which she destined for herself. The ladies showed Mr. Esmond, when they were completed, the fond preparations they had made. 'Twas then Beatrix knelt down and kissed the linen sheets. As for her mother, Lady Castlewood made a courtesy at the door, as she would have have done to an altar on entering a church, and owned that she considered the chamber in a manner sacred.

The company in the servants' hall never for a moment supposed that these preparations were made for any other person than the young viscount, the lord of the house, whom his fond mother had been for so many years without seeing. Both ladies were perfect housewives, having the greatest skill in the making of confections, scented waters, etc., and keeping a notable superintendence over the kitchen. Calves enough were killed to feed an army of prodigal sons, Esmond thought, and laughed when he came to wait on the ladies, on the day when the guests were to arrive, to find two pairs of the finest and roundest arms to be seen in England (my Lady Castlewood was remarkable for this beauty of her person), covered with flour up above the elbows, and preparing paste and turning rolling-pins in the housekeeper's closet. The guest would not arrive till supper time, and my lord would prefer having that meal in his own chamber. You may be sure the brightest plate of the house was laid out there, and can understand why it was that the ladies insisted that they alone would wait upon the young chief of the family.

Taking horse, Colonel Esmond rode rapidly to Rochester, and there awaited the king in that very town where his father had last set his foot on the English shore. A room had been provided at an inn there for my Lord Castlewood and his servant; and Colonel Esmond timed his ride so well that he had scarce been half an hour in the place, and was looking over the balcony into the yard of the inn, when two travelers rode in at the inn gate, and the colonel, running down, the next moment embraced his dear young lord.

My lord's companion, acting the part of a domestic, dismounted, and was for holding the viscount's stirrup; but Colonel Esmond, calling to his own man, who was in the court, bade him take the horses and settle with the lad who had ridden the post along with the two travelers, crying out in a cavalier tone in the French language to my lord's companion, and affect- ing to grumble that my lord's fellow was a Frenchman, and did not know the money or habits of the country. 'My man will see to the horses, Baptiste,' says Colonel Esmond. 'Do you understand English?' 'Very leetle!' 'So, follow my lord and wait upon him at dinner in his own room.' The landlord and his people came up presently bearing the dishes; 'twas well they made a noise and stir in the gallery, or they might have found Colonel Esmond on his knee before Lord Castlewood's servant, welcoming his Majesty to his kingdom, and kissing the hand of the king. We told the landlord that the Frenchman would wait on his master; and Esmond's man was ordered to keep sentry in the gallery without the door. The prince dined with a good appetite, laughing and talking very gayly, and condescendingly bidding his two companions to sit with him at table. He was in better spirits than poor Frank Castlewood, who Esmond thought might be woebegone on account of parting with his divine Clotilda; but the prince wishing to take a short siesta after dinner, and retiring to an inner chamber where there was a bed, the cause of poor Frank's discomfiture came out; and bursting into tears, with many expressions of fondness, friendship, and humiliation, the faithful lad gave his kinsman to understand that he now knew all the truth, and the sacrifices which Colonel Esmond had made for him.

Seeing no good in acquainting poor Frank with that secret, Mr. Esmond had entreated his mistress also not to reveal it to her son. The prince had told the poor lad all as they were riding from Dover. 'I had as lief he had shot me, cousin,' Frank said; 'I knew you were the best and the bravest and the kindest of all men' (so the enthusiastic young fellow went on); 'but I never thought I owed you what I do, and can scarce bear the weight of the obligation.'

'I stand in the place of your father,' says Mr. Esmond kindly, 'and sure a father may dispossess himself in favor of his son. I abdicate the twopenny crown, and invest you with the kingdom of Brentford; don't be a fool and cry; you make a much taller and handsomer viscount than ever I could.' But the fond boy, with oaths and protestations, laughter and incoherent outbreaks of passionate emotion, could not be got, for some little time, to put up with Esmond's raillery; wanted to kneel down to him, and kissed his hand; asked him and implored him to order something, to bid Castlewood give his own life or take somebody else's; anything, so that he might show his gratitude for the generosity Esmond showed him.
'The k— he laughed,' Frank said, pointing to the door where the sleeper was, and speaking in a low tone. 'I don't think he should have laughed as he told me the story. As we rode along from Dover, talking in French, he spoke about you, and your coming to him at Bar; he called you 'le grand serieux,' Don Bellianis of Greece, and I don't know what names, mimicking your manner' (here Castlewood laughed himself)—'and he did it very well. He seems to sneer at everything. He is not like a king; somehow, Harry, I fancy you are like a king. He does not seem to think what a stake we are all playing. He would have stopped at Canterbury to run after a barmaid there had I not implored him to come on. He hath a house at Chaillot, where he used to go and bury himself for weeks away from the queen, and with all sorts of bad company,' says Frank, with a demure look. 'You may smile, but I am not the wild fellow I was; no, no, I have been taught better,' says Castlewood devoutly, making a sign on his breast.

'Thou art my dear brave boy,' says Colonel Esmond, touched at the young fellow's simplicity, 'and there will be a noble gentleman at Castlewood so long as my Frank is there.'

The impetuous young lad was for going down on his knees again, with another explosion of gratitude, but that we heard the voice from the next chamber of the august sleeper, just waking, calling out: 'Eh, LaFleur, un verre d'eau!' His Majesty came out yawning. 'A pest,' says he, 'upon your English ale; 'tis so strong that, ma foi, it hath turned my head.'

The effect of the ale was like a spur upon our horses, and we rode very quickly to London, reaching Kensington at nightfall. Mr. Esmond's servant was left behind at Rochester, to take care of the tired horses, while we had fresh beasts provided along the road. And galloping by the prince's side the colonel explained to the Prince of Wales what his movements had been; who the friends were that knew of the expedition; whom, as Esmond conceived, the prince should trust; entreating him, above all, to maintain the very closest secrecy until the time should come when his Royal Highness should appear. The town swarmed with friends of the prince's cause; there were scores of correspondents with St. Germains: Jacobites known and secret; great in station and humble; about the Court and the queen; in the Parliament, Church, and among the merchants in the city. The prince had friends numberless in the army, in the Privy Council, and the officers of state. The great object, as it seemed, to the small band of persons who had concerted that bold stroke, who had brought the queen's brother into his native country, was that his visit should remain unknown till the proper time came, when his presence should surprise friends and enemies alike; and the latter should be found so unprepared and disunited that they should not find time to attack him. We feared more from his friends than from his enemies. The lies and tittle-tattle sent over to St. Germains by the Jacobite agents about London had done an incalculable mischief to his cause, and woefully misguided him, and it was from these especially that the persons engaged in the present venture were anxious to defend the chief actor in it.*

The party reached London by nightfall, leaving their horses at the posting house over against Westminster, and being ferried over the water, where Lady Esmond's coach was already in waiting. In another hour we were all landed at Kensington, and the mistress of the house had that satisfaction which her heart had yearned after for many years, once more to embrace her son, who, on his side, with all his waywardness, ever retained a most tender affection for his parent.

She did not refrain from this expression of her feeling, though the domestics were by, and my Lord Castlewood's attendant stood in the hall. Esmond had to whisper to him in French to take his hat off. M. Baptiste was constantly neglecting his part with an inconceivable levity; more than once on the ride to London little observations of the stranger, light remarks, and words betokening the greatest ignorance of the country the prince came to govern had hurt the susceptibility of the two gentlemen forming his escort; nor could either help owning in his secret mind that they would have had his behavior otherwise, and that the laughter and the lightness, not to say license, which characterized his talk, scarce befitted such a great prince and such a solemn occasion. Not but that he could act at proper times with spirit and dignity. He had behaved, as we all knew, in a very courageous manner on the field. Esmond had seen a copy of the letter the prince had writ with his own hand when urged by his friends in England to abjure his religion, and admired that manly and magnanimous reply by which he refused to yield to the temptation. M. Baptiste took off his hat, blushing at the hint Colonel Esmond ventured to give him, and said: 'Tenez, elle est

* The managers were the bishop, who cannot be hurt by having his name mentioned, a very active and loyal Nonconformist divine, a lady in the highest favor at Court, with whom Beatrix Esmond had communication, and two noblemen of the greatest rank and a member of the House of Commons, who was implicated in more transactions than one in behalf of the Stuart family.
jolie, la petite mère. Foi de chevalier! elle est charmante; mais l'autre, qui est cette nymphe, cet astre qui brille, cette Diane qui descend sur nous?' And he started back, and pushed forward, as Beatrix was descending the stair. She was in colors for the first time at her own house; she wore the diamonds Esmond gave her; it had been agreed between them that she should wear these brilliants on the day when the king should enter the house, and a queen she looked, radiant in charms, and magnificent and imperial in beauty.

Castlewood himself was startled by the beauty and splendor; he stepped back and gazed at his sister as though he had not been aware before (nor was he, very likely) how perfectly lovely she was, and I thought blushed as he embraced her. The prince could not keep his eyes off her; he quite forgot his menial part, though he had been schooled to it, and a little light portmanteau prepared expressly that he should carry it. He pressed forward before my Lord Viscount. 'Twas lucky the servants' eyes were busy in other directions, or they must have seen that this was no servant, or at least a very insolent and rude one.

Again Colonel Esmond was obliged to cry out, 'Baptiste,' in a loud imperious voice, 'have a care to the valise'; at which hint the willful young man ground his teeth together with something like a curse between them, and then gave a brief look of anything but pleasure to his mentor. Being reminded, however, he shouldered the little portmanteau and carried it up the stair, Esmond preceding him and a servant with lighted tapers. He flung down his burden sulkily in the bedchamber. 'A prince that will wear a crown must wear a mask,' says Mr. Esmond in French.

'Ah, peste! I see how it is,' says M. Baptiste, continuing the talk in French. 'The Great Serious is seriously——' 'Alarmed for M. Baptiste,' broke in the colonel. Esmond neither liked the tone in which the prince spoke of the ladies, nor the eyes with which he regarded them,

The bedchamber and the two rooms adjoining it, the closet and the apartment with was to be called my lord's parlor, were already lighted and awaiting their occupier; and the collation laid for my lord's supper. Lord Castlewood and his mother and sister came up the stair a minute afterward, and, so soon as the domestics had quitted the apartment, Castlewood and Esmond uncovered, and the two ladies went down on their knees before the prince, who graciously gave a hand to each. He looked his part of prince much more naturally than that of servant, which he had just been trying, and raised them both with a great deal of nobility as well as kindness in his air. 'Madam,' he says, 'my mother will thank your ladyship for your hospitality to her son; for you, madam,' turning to Beatrice, 'I cannot bear to see so much beauty in such a posture. You will betray M. Baptiste if you kneel to him; sure 'tis his place rather to kneel to you.'

A light shone out of her eyes—a gleam bright enough to kindle passion in any breast. There were times when this creature was so handsome that she seemed, as it were, like Venus revealing herself a goddess in a flash of brightness. She appeared so now—radiant, and with eyes bright with a wonderful luster. A pang, as of rage and jealousy, shot through Esmond’s heart as he caught the look she gave the prince, and he clenched his hand involuntarily and looked across to Castlewood, whose eyes answered his alarm-signal, and were also on the alert. The prince gave his subjects an audience of a few minutes, and then the two ladies and Colonel Esmond quitted the chamber. Lady Castlewood pressed his hand as they descended the stair, and the three went down to the lower rooms, where they waited a while till the travelers above should be refreshed and ready for their meal.

Esmond looked at Beatrice, blazing with her jewels on her beautiful neck. 'I have kept my word,' says he. 'And I mine,' says Beatrice, looking down on the diamonds.

'Were I the Mogul Emperor,' says the colonel, 'you should have all that were dug out of Golconda.'

'These are a great deal too good for me,' says Beatrice, dropping her head on her beautiful breast—'so are you all, all!' And when she looked up again, as she did in a moment and after a sigh, her eyes as they gazed at her cousin wore that melancholy and inscrutable look which 'twas always impossible to sound.

When the time came for the supper, of which we were advertised by a knocking overhead, Colonel Esmond and the two ladies went to the upper apartment, where the prince already was, and by his side the young viscount, of exactly the same age, shape, and with features not dissimilar, though Frank's were the handsomer of the two. The prince sat down and bade the ladies sit. The gentlemen remained standing; there was, indeed, but one more cover laid at the table. 'Which of you will take it?' says he.

'The head of our house,' says Lady Castlewood, taking her son's hand and looking toward Colonel Esmond with a bow and a great tremor of voice; 'the Marquis of Esmond will have the honor of serving the king.'
'I shall have the honor of waiting on his Royal Highness,' says Colonel Esmond, filling a cup of wine, and, as the fashion of that day was, he presented it to the king on his knee. 'I drink to my hostess and her family,' says the prince, with no very well pleased air; but the cloud passed immediately off his face, and he talked to the ladies in a lively rattling strain, quite undisturbed by poor Mr. Esmond's yellow countenance, that, I dare say, looked very glum. When the time came to take leave, Esmond marched homeward to his lodgings, and met Mr. Addison on the road that night, walking to a cottage he had at Fulham, the moon shining on his handsome, serene face. 'What cheer, brother?' says Addison, laughing. 'I thought it was a footpad advancing in the dark, and behold, 'tis an old friend. We may shake hands, colonel, in the dark; 'tis better than fighting by daylight. Why should we quarrel because I am a Whig and thou art a Tory? Turn thy steps and walk with me to Fulham, where there is a nightingale still singing in the garden, and a cool bottle in a cave I know of; you shall drink to the Pretender, if you like, and I will drink my liquor my own way. I have had enough of good liquor? No, never! There is no such word as enough as a stopper for good wine. Thou wilt not come? Come any day, come soon. You know I remember Simois and the Sigetia tellus, and the praelia mixta mero, mixta mero,' he repeated, with ever so slight a touch of merum in his voice, and walked back a little way on the road with Esmond, bidding the other remember he was always his friend, and indebted to him for his aid in the 'Campaign' poem. And very likely Mr. Under-Secretary would have stepped in and taken t'other bottle at the colonel's lodging had the latter invited him, but Esmond's mood was none of the gayest, and he bade his friend an inhospitable good-night at the door. 'I have done the deed,' thought he, sleepless, and looking out into the night; 'he is here, and I have brought him; he and Beatrix are sleeping under the same roof now. Whom did I mean to serve in bringing him? Was it the prince? was it Henry Esmond? Had I not best have joined the manly creed of Addison yonder, that scouts the old doctrine of right divine, that boldly declares that Parliament and people consecrate the sovereign, not bishops nor genealogies nor oils nor coronations?' The eager gaze of the young prince, watching every movement of Beatrix, haunted Esmond and pursued him. The prince's figure appeared before him in his feverish dreams many times that night. He wished the deed undone for which he had labored so. He was not the first that has regretted his own act, or brought about his own undoing. Undoing? Should he write that word in his late years? No, on his knees before Heaven, rather be thankful for what he deemed his misfortune, and which hath caused the whole subsequent happiness of his life.

Esmond's man, honest John Lockwood, had served his master and the family all his life, and the colonel knew that he could answer for John's fidelity as for his own. John returned with the horses from Rochester betimes the next morning, and the colonel gave him to understand that on going to Kensington, where he was free of the servants' hall, and indeed courting Miss Beatrix's maid, he was to ask no questions and betray no surprise, but to vouch sturdily that the young gentleman he should see in a red coat there was my Lord Viscount Castlewood, and that his attendant in gray was M. Baptiste, the Frenchman. He was to tell his friends in the kitchen such stories as he remembered of my Lord Viscount's youth at Castlewood; what a wild boy he was; how he used to drill Jack and cane him before ever he was a soldier; everything, in fine, he knew respecting my Lord Viscount's early days. Jack's ideas of painting had not been much cultivated during his residence in Flanders with his master; and before my young lord's return he had been easily got to believe that the picture brought over from Paris and now hanging in Lady Castlewood's drawing room was a perfect likeness of her son, the young lord. And the domestics, having all seen the picture many times, and catching but a momentary imperfect glimpse of the two strangers on the night of their arrival, never had a reason to doubt the fidelity of the portrait; and next day when they saw the original of the piece habited exactly as he was represented in the painting, with the same periwig, ribbons, and uniform of the Guard, quite naturally addressed the gentleman as my Lord Castlewood, my Lady Viscountess' son.

The secretary of the night previous was now the viscount; the viscount wore the secretary's gray frock; and John Lockwood was instructed to hint to the world below stairs that my lord being a papist, and very devout in that religion, his attendant might be no other than his chaplain from Bruxelles; hence if he took his meals in my lord's company there was little reason for surprise. Frank was further cautioned to speak English with a foreign accent, which task he performed indifferently well, and this caution was the more necessary because the prince himself scarce spoke our language like a native of the island; and John Lockwood laughed with the folks below stairs at the manner in which my lord, after five years abroad, sometimes forgot his own tongue and spoke it like a Frenchman. 'I warrant,' says he, 'that with the English beef and beer his lordship will soon get back the proper use of his mouth;' and, to do his lordship justice, he took to beer and beef very kindly.

The prince drank so much, and was so loud and imprudent in his talk after his drink, that Esmond often trembled for him. His meals were served as much as possible in his own chamber, though frequently he made his appearance in Lady Castlewood's parlor and drawing room, calling Beatrix 'sister,' and her ladyship 'mother,' or 'madam,' before the servants. And choosing to act entirely up to the part of brother and son, the prince sometimes saluted Mrs. Beatrix and Lady Castlewood with a freedom which his secretary did not like, and which, for his part, set Colonel Esmond tearing with rage.

The guests had not been three days in the house when poor Jack Lockwood came with a rueful countenance to his master, and said: 'My lord—that is, the gentleman—has been tampering with Mrs. Lucy [Jack's sweetheart], and given her guineas and a kiss.' I fear that Colonel Esmond's mind was rather relieved than otherwise when he found that the ancillary beauty was the one whom the prince had selected. His royal tastes were known to lie that way, and continued so in after life. The heir of one of the greatest names, of the greatest kingdoms, and of the greatest misfortunes in Europe was often content to lay the dignity of his birth and grief at the wooden shoes of a French chambermaid, and to repent afterward (for he was very devout) in ashes taken from the dust pan. 'Tis for mortals such as these that nations suffer, that parties struggle, that warriors fight and bleed. A year afterward gallant heads were falling, and Nithsdale in escape, and Derwentwater on the scaffold; while the heedless ingrate, for whom they risked and lost all, was tippling with his seraglio of mistresses in his petite maison of Chaillot.

Blushing to be forced to bear such an errand, Esmond had to go to the prince and warn him that the girl whom his Highness was bribing was John Lockwood's sweetheart, an honest resolute man, who had served in six campaigns, and feared nothing, and who knew that the person calling himself Lord Castlewood was not his young master; and the colonel besought the prince to consider what the effect of a single man's jealousy might be, and to think of other designs he had in hand more important than the seduction of a waiting maid, and the humiliation of a brave man.

Ten times perhaps in the course of as many days Mr. Esmond had to warn the royal young adventurer of some im-prudence or some freedom. He received these remonstrances very testily, save perhaps in this affair of poor Lockwood's, when he deigned to burst out a laughing, and said, 'What! the soubrette has peached to the amoureux, and Crispin is angry, and Crispin has served, and Crispin has been a corporal, has he? Tell him we will reward his valor with a pair of colors, and recompense his fidelity.'

Colonel Esmond ventured to utter some other words of entreaty, but the prince, stamping imperiously, cried out, 'Assez, milord; je m'ennuye à la prêche; I am not come to London to go to the sermon.' And he complained afterward to Castlewood that 'le petit jaune, le noir colonel, le Marquis Misanthrope' (by which facetious names his Royal Highness was pleased to designate Colonel Esmond), 'fatigued him with his grand airs and virtuous homilies.'

The Bishop of Rochester, and other gentlemen engaged in the transaction which had brought the prince over, waited upon his Royal Highness, constantly asking for my Lord Castlewood on their arrival at Kensington, and being openly conducted to his Royal Highness in that character, who received them either in my lady's drawing room below, or above in his own apartment; and all implored him to quit the house as little as possible, and to wait there till the signal should be given for him to appear. The ladies entertained him at cards, over which amusement he spent many hours in each day and night. He passed many hours more in drinking, during which time he would rattle and talk very agreeably, and especially if the colonel was absent, whose presence always seemed to frighten him; and the poor 'Colonel Noir' took that hint as a command accordingly, and seldom intruded his black face upon the convivial hours of this august young prisoner. Except for those few persons of whom the porter had the list, Lord Castlewood was denied to all friends of the house who waited on his lordship. The wound he had received had broken out again from his journey on horseback, so the world and the domestics were informed. And Dr. A.,* his physician (I shall not mention his name, but he was physician to the queen, of the Scots nation, and a man remarkable for his benevolence as well as his wit), gave orders that he should be kept perfectly quiet until the wound should heal. With this gentleman, who was one of the most active and influential of our party, and the others before spoken of, the whole secret lay; and it was kept with so much faithfulness, and the story we told so simple and natural, that there was no likelihood of a discovery except from the imprudence of the prince himself, and an adventurous levity that we had the greatest difficulty to control. As for Lady Castlewood, although she scarce spoke a word, 'twas easy to gather from her demeanor, and one or two hints she dropped, how deep her mortification was at finding the hero whom she had chosen to worship all her life (and whose restoration had formed almost the most sacred part of her prayers) no more than a man, and not a good one. She thought misfortune might have chastened him; but that instructress had rather rendered him callous than humble. His devotion, which was quite real, kept him from no sin he had a mind to. His talk showed good humor, gayety, even wit enough; but there was a levity in his acts and words that he had brought from among those libertine devotees with whom he had been bred, and that shocked the simplicity and purity of the English lady whose guest he was. Esmond spoke his mind to Beatrix pretty freely about the prince, getting her brother to put in a word of warning. Beatrix was entirely of their opinion; she thought he was very light, very light and reckless; she could not even see the good looks Colonel Esmond had spoken of. The prince had bad teeth and a decided squint. How could we say he did not squint? His eyes were fine, but there was certainly a cast in them. She rallied him at table with wonderful wit; she spoke of him invariably as of a mere boy; she was more fond of Esmond than ever, praised him to her brother, praised him to the prince, when his Royal Highness was pleased to sneer at the colonel, and warmly espoused his cause. 'And if your Majesty does not give him the garter his father had, when the Marquis of Esmond comes to your Majesty's court, I will hang myself in my own garters, or will cry my eyes out.' 'Rather than lose those,' says the prince, 'he shall be made Archbishop and Colonel of the Guard'—it was Frank Castlewood who told me of this conversation over their supper.

*There can be very little doubt that the doctor mentioned by my dear father was the famous Dr. Arbuthnot.—R. E. W.

'Yes,' cries she, with one of her laughs—I fancy I hear it now. Thirty years afterward I hear that delightful music. 'Yes, he shall be Archbishop of Esmond and Marquis of Canterbury.'

'And what will your ladyship be?' says the prince; 'you have but to choose your place.'
'I,' says Beatrix, 'will be mother of the maids to the Queen of his Majesty King James III. Vive le Roy!' and she made him a great courtesy, and drank a part of a glass of wine in his honor.

'The prince seized hold of the glass and drank the last drop of it,' Castlewood said, 'and my mother, looking very anxious, rose up and asked leave to retire. But that 'Trix is my mother's daughter, Harry,' Frank continued, 'I don't know what a horrid fear I should have of her. I wish—I wish this business were over. You are older than I am, and wiser, and better, and I owe you everything and would die for you—before George I would; but I wish the end of this were come.'

Neither of us very likely passed a tranquil night; horrible doubts and torments racked Esmond's soul; 'twas a scheme of personal ambition, a daring stroke for a selfish end—he knew it. What cared he, in his heart, who was king? Were not his very sympathies and secret convictions on the other side—on the side of People, Parliament, Freedom? And here was he, engaged for a prince that had scarce heard the word liberty; that priests and women, tyrants of nature, both made a tool of. The misanthrope was in no better humor after hearing that story, and his grim face more black and yellow than ever.

CHAPTER X.

WE ENTERTAIN A VERY DISTINGUISHED GUEST AT KENSINGTON.

Should any clew be found to the dark intrigues at the latter end of Queen Anne's time, or any historian be inclined to follow it, 'twill be discovered, I have little doubt, that not one of the great personages about the queen had a defined scheme of policy, independent of that private and selfish interest which each was bent on pursuing. St. John was for St. John, and Harley for Oxford, and Marlborough for John Churchill, always; and according as they could get help from St. Germain or Hanover, they sent over proffers of allegiance to the princes there, or betrayed one to the other; one cause, or one sovereign, was as good as another to them, so that they could hold the best place under him; and like Lockit and Peachem, the Newgate chiefs in the Rogues' Opera Mr. Gay wrote afterward, had each in his hand documents and proofs of treason which would hang the other, only he did not dare to use the weapon, for fear of that one which his neighbor also carried in his pocket. Think of the great Marlborough, the greatest subject in all the world, a conqueror of princes, that had marched victorious over Germany, Flanders, and France, that had given the law to sovereigns abroad, and been worshiped as a divinity at home, forced to sneak out of England—his credit, honors, places all taken from him; his friends in the army broke and ruined; and flying before Harley, as abject and powerless as a poor debtor before a bailiff with a writ. A paper, of which Harley got possession, and showing beyond doubt that the duke was engaged with the Stuart family, was the weapon with which the treasurer drove Marlborough out of the kingdom. He fled to Antwerp, and began intriguing instantly on the other side, and came back to England, as all know, a Whig and a Hanoverian.

Though the treasurer turned out of the army and office every man, military or civil, known to be the duke's friend, and gave the vacant posts among the Tory party; he, too, was playing the double game between Hanover and St. Germains, awaiting the expected catastrophe of the queen's death to be master of the state and offer it to either family that should bribe him best, or that the nation should declare for. Whenever the king was, Harley's object was to reign over him; and to this end he supplanted the former famous favorite, decried the actions of the war which had made Marlborough's name illustrious, and disdained no more than the great fallen competitor of his the meanest arts, flatteries, intimidations, that would secure his power. If the greatest satirist the world ever hath seen had writ against Harley, and not for him, what a history had he left behind of the last years of Queen Anne's reign! But Swift, that scorned all mankind, and himself not the least of all, had this merit of a faithful partisan, that he loved those chiefs who treated him well, and stuck by Harley bravely in his fall, as he gallantly had supported him in his better fortune.

Incomparably more brilliant, more splendid, eloquent, accomplished than his rival, the great St. John could be as selfish as Oxford was, and could act the double part as skilfully as ambidextrous Churchill. He whose talk was always of liberty no more shrunk from using persecution and the pillory against his opponents than if he had been at Lisbon and Grand Inquisitor. This lofty patriot was on his knees at Hanover and St. Germains too; notoriously of no religion, he toasted church and queen as boldly as the stupid Sacheverel, whom he used and laughed at; and to serve his turn, and to overthrow his enemy, he could intrigue, coax, bully, wheedle, fawn on the Court favorite, and creep up the back stair as silently as Oxford, who supplanted Marlborough, and whom he himself supplanted. The crash of my Lord Oxford happened at this very time whereat my history is now arrived. He was come to the very last days of his power, and the agent whom he employed to overthrow the conqueror of Blenheim was now engaged to upset the conqueror's conqueror, and hand over the staff of government to Bolingbroke, who had been panting to hold it.

In expectation of the stroke that was now preparing, the Irish regiments in the French service were all brought round about Boulogne in Picardy, to pass over, if need were, with the Duke of Berwick; the soldiers of France no longer, but subjects of James III., of England and Ireland King. The fidelity of the great mass of the Scots (though a most active, resolute, and gallant Whig party, admirably and energetically ordered and disciplined, was known to be in Scotland too) was notoriously unshaken in their king. A very great body of Tory clergy, nobility, and gentry, were public partisans of the exiled prince; and the indifferents might be counted on to cry King George or King James, according as either should prevail. The queen, especially in her latter days, inclined toward her own family. The prince was lying actually in London within a stone's cast of his sister's palace; the first minister toppling to his fall, and so tottering that the weakest push of a woman's finger would send him down; and as for Bolingbroke, his successor, we know on whose side his power and his splendid eloquence would be on the day when the queen should appear openly before her council and say: 'This, my lords, is my brother; here is my father's heir and mine after me.'

During the whole of the previous year the queen had had many and repeated fits of sickness, fever, and lethargy, and her death had been constantly looked for by all her attendants. The Elector of Hanover had wished to send his son, the Duke of Cambridge—to pay his court to his cousin the queen, the Elector said—in truth, to be on the spot when death should close her career. Frightened perhaps to have such a memento mori under her royal eyes, her Majesty had angrily forbidden the young prince's coming into England. Either she desired to keep the chances for her brother open yet, or the people about her did not wish to close with the Whig candidate till they could make terms with him. The quarrels of her ministers before her face at the council board, the pricks of conscience very likely, the importunities of her ministers, and constant turmoil and agitation round about her, had weakened and irritated the princess extremely; her strength was giving way under these continual trials of her temper; and from day to day it was expected she must come to a speedy end of them.
Just before Viscount Castlewood and his companion came from France her Majesty was taken ill. The St. Anthony's fire broke out on the royal legs; there was no hurry for the presentation of the young lord at Court, or that person who should appear under his name; and my Lord Viscount's wound breaking out opportunely, he was kept conveniently in his chamber until such time as his physician would allow him to bend his knee before the queen. At the commencement of July that influential lady with whom it has been mentioned that our party had relations came frequently to visit her young friend the maid of honor at Kensington, and my Lord Viscount (the real or supposititious), who was an invalid at Lady Castlewood's house.

On the 27th day of July the lady in question, who held the most intimate post about the queen, came in her chair from the palace hard by, bringing to the little party in Kensington Square intelligence of the very highest importance. The final blow had been struck, and my Lord of Oxford and Mortimer was no longer treasurer. The staff was as yet given to no successor, though my Lord Bolingbroke would undoubtedly be the man. And now the time was come, the Queen's Abigail said; and now my Lord Castlewood ought to be presented to the sovereign.

After that scene which Lord Castlewood witnessed and described to his cousin, who passed such a miserable night of mortification and jealousy as he thought over the transaction, no doubt the three persons who were set by nature as protectors over Beatrix came to the same conclusion, that she must be removed from the presence of a man whose desires toward her were expressed only too clearly; and who was no more scrupulous in seeking to gratify them than his father had been before him. I suppose Esmond's mistress, her son, and the colonel himself had been all secretly debating this matter in their minds, for when Frank broke out, in his blunt way, with: 'I think Beatrix had best be anywhere but here,' Lady Castlewood said: 'I thank you, Frank; I have thought so too'; and Mr. Esmond, though he only remarked that it was not for him to speak, showed plainly, by the delight on his countenance, how very agreeable that proposal was to him.

'One sees that you think with us, Henry,' says the viscountess, with ever so little of sarcasm in her tone: 'Beatrix is best out of this house while we have our guest in it, and as soon as this morning's business is done she ought to quit London.'

'What morning's business?' asked Colonel Esmond, not knowing what had been arranged, though in fact the stroke next in importance to that of bringing the prince and of having him acknowledged by the queen was now being performed at the very moment we three were conversing together.

The Court lady with whom our plan was concerted, and who was a chief agent in it, the Court physician, and the Bishop of Rochester, who were the other two most active participators in our plan, had held many councils in our house at Kensington and elsewhere as to the means best to be adopted for presenting our young adventurer to his sister the queen. The simple and easy plan proposed by Colonel Esmond had been agreed to by all parties, which was that on some rather private day, when there were not many persons about the Court, the prince should appear there as my Lord Castlewood, should be greeted by his sister in waiting, and led by that other lady into the closet of the queen. And according to her Majesty's health or humor, and the circumstances that might arise during the interview, it was to be left to the discretion of those present at it, and to the prince himself, whether he should declare that it was the queen's own brother, or the brother of Beatrix Esmond, who kissed her royal hand. And this plan being determined on, we were all waiting in very much anxiety for the day and signal of execution.

Two mornings after that supper, it being the 27th day of July, the Bishop of Rochester breakfasting with Lady Castlewood and her family, and the meal scarce over, Dr. A.'s coach drove up to our house at Kensington, and the doctor appeared among the party there, enlivening a rather gloomy company; for the mother and daughter had had words in the morning in respect to the transactions of that supper, and other adventures perhaps, and on the day succeeding. Beatrix's haughty spirit brooked remonstrances from no superior, much less from her mother, the gentlest of creatures, whom the girl commanded rather than obeyed. And feeling she was wrong, and that by a thousand coquetries (which she could no more help exercising on every man that came near her than the sun can help shining on great and small) she had provoked the prince's dangerous admiration, and allured him to the expression of it, she was only the more willful and imperious the more she felt her error.
To this party, the prince being served with chocolate in his bedchamber, where he lay late sleeping away the fumes of his wine, the doctor came, and by the urgent and startling nature of his news, dissipated instantly that private and minor unpleasantness under which the family of Castlewood was laboring.

He asked for the guest; the guest was above in his own apartment; he bade M. Baptiste go up to his master instantly, and request that my Lord Viscount Castlewood would straightway put his uniform on, and come away in the doctor's coach now at the door.

He then informed Madam Beatrix what her part of the comedy was to be. 'In half an hour,' says he, 'her Majesty and her favorite lady will take the air in the cedar walk behind the new banqueting house. Her Majesty will be drawn in a garden chair, Madam Beatrix Esmond and her brother, my Lord Viscount Castlewood, will be walking in the private garden (here is Lady Masham's key), and will come unawares upon the royal party. The man that draws the chair will retire, and leave the queen, the favorite, and the maid of honor and her brother together; Mistress Beatrix will present her brother, and then! — and then my Lord Bishop will pray for the result of the interview, and his Scots clerk will say Amen! Quick, put on your hood, Madam Beatrix; why doth not his Majesty come down? Such another chance may not present itself for months again.'

The prince was late and lazy, and indeed had all but lost that chance through his indolence. The queen was actually about to leave the garden just when the party reached it; the doctor, the bishop, the maid of honor, and her brother went off together in the physician's coach, and had been gone half an hour when Colonel Esmond came to Kensington Square.

The news of this errand, on which Beatrix was gone, of course for a moment put all thoughts of private jealousy out of Colonel Esmond's head. In half an hour more the coach returned; the bishop descended from it first, and gave his arm to Beatrix, who now came out. His lordship went back into the carriage again, and the maid of honor entered the house alone. We were all gazing at her from the upper window, trying to read from her countenance the result of the interview from which she had just come.

She came into the drawing room in a great tremor and very pale; she asked for a glass of water as her mother went to meet her, and after drinking that and putting off her hood, she began to speak. 'We may all hope for the best,' says she; 'it has cost the queen a fit. Her Majesty was in her chair in the cedar walk, accompanied only by Lady ——, when we entered by the private wicket from the west side of the garden, and turned toward her, the doctor following us. They waited in a side walk hidden by the shrubs, as we advanced toward the chair. My heart throbbed so I scarce could speak; but my prince whispered, "Courage, Beatrix," and marched on with a steady step. His face was a little flushed, but he was not afraid of the danger. He who fought so bravely at Malplaquet fears nothing." Esmond and Castlewood looked at each other at this compliment, neither liking the sound of it.

"The prince uncovered," Beatrix continued, "and I saw the queen turning round to Lady Masham, as if asking who these two were. Her Majesty looked very pale and ill, and then flushed up; the favorite made us a signal to advance, and I went up, leading my prince by the hand, quite close to the chair: "Your Majesty will give my Lord Viscount your hand to kiss," says her lady, and the queen put out her hand, which the prince kissed, kneeling on his knee—he who should kneel to no mortal man or woman.

"You have been long from England, my lord," says the queen; "why were you not here to give a home to your mother and sister?"

"I am come, madam, to stay now, if the queen desires me," says the prince, with another low bow.

"You have taken a foreign wife, my lord, and a foreign religion; was not that of England good enough for you?"

"In returning to my father’s church," says the prince, "I do not love my mother the less, nor am I the less faithful servant of your Majesty."

"Here," says Beatrix, "the favorite gave me a little signal with her hand to fall back, which I did, though I died to hear what should pass; and whispered something to the queen, which made her Majesty start and utter one or two words in a hurried manner, looking toward the prince, and catching hold with her hand of the arm of her chair. He advanced still nearer toward it; he began to speak very rapidly, I caught the words, "Father, blessing, forgiveness," and then presently the prince fell on his knees, took from his breast a paper he had there, handed it to the queen, who, as soon as she saw it, flung up both her arms with a scream, and took away that hand nearest the prince, and which he endeavored to kiss. He went on speaking with great animation of gesture, now clasping his hands together on his heart, now opening them as though to say: "I am here, your brother, in your power." Lady Masham ran round to the other side of the chair, kneeling too, and speaking with great energy. She clasped the queen's hand on her side, and picked up the paper her Majesty had let fall. The prince rose and made a further speech as though he would go; the favorite on the other hand urging her mistress, and then, running back to the prince, brought him back once more close to the chair. Again he knelt down and took the queen's hand, which she did not withdraw, kissing it a hundred times, my lady all the time, with sobs and supplications, speaking over the chair. This while the queen sat with a stupefied look, crumpling the paper with one hand, as my prince embraced the other; then of a sudden she uttered several piercing shrieks and burst into a great fit of hysterical tears and laughter. "Enough, enough, sir, for this time," I heard Lady Masham say, and the chairman, who had withdrawn round the banqueting room, came back, alarmed by the cries. "Quick," says Lady Masham, "get some help," and I ran toward the doctor, who, with the Bishop of Rochester, came up instantly. Lady Masham whispered the prince he might hope for the very best; and to be ready to-morrow; and he hath gone away to the Bishop of Rochester's house to meet several of his friends there. And so the great stroke is struck,' says Beatrix, going down on her knees, and clasping her hands. 'God save the king! God save the king!''

Beatrix's tale told, and the young lady herself calmed somewhat of her agitation, we asked with regard to the prince, who was absent with Bishop Atterbury, and were informed that 'twas likely he might remain abroad the whole day. Beatrix's three kinsfolk looked at one another at this intelligence; 'twas clear the same thought was passing through the minds of all.

But who should begin to break the news? M. Baptiste, that is Frank Castlewood, turned very red, and looked toward Esmond; the colonel bit his lips, and fairly beat a retreat into the window; it was Lady Castlewood that opened upon Beatrix with the news which we knew would do anything but please her.

'We are glad,' says she taking her daughter's hand, and speaking in a gentle voice, 'that the guest is away.'

Beatrix drew back in an instant, looking round her at us three, and as if divining a danger. 'Why glad?' says she, her breast beginning to heave; 'are you so soon tired of him?'
'We think one of us is devilishly too fond of him,' cries out Frank Castlewood.

'And which is it—you, my lord, or is it mamma, who is jealous because he drinks my health? or is it the head of the family [here she turned with an imperious look toward Colonel Esmond] who has taken of late to preach the king sermons?'

'We do not say you are too free with his Majesty.'

'I thank you, madam,' says Beatrix, with a toss of the head and a courtesy.

But her mother continued with very great calmness and dignity: 'At least we have not said so, though we might, were it possible for a mother to say such words to her own daughter, your father's daughter.'

'Eh? mon père,' breaks out Beatrix, 'was no better than other persons' fathers.' And again she looked toward the colonel.

We all felt a shock as she uttered those two or three French words; her manner was exactly imitated from that of our foreign guest.

'You had not learned to speak French a month ago, Beatrix,' says her mother sadly, 'nor to speak ill of your father.'

Beatrix, no doubt, saw that slip she had made in her flurry, for she blushed crimson. 'I have learned to honor the king,' says she, drawing up, 'and 'twere as well that others suspected neither his Majesty nor me.'

'If you respected your mother a little more,' Frank said, 'Trix, you would do yourself no hurt.'

'I am no child,' says she, turning round on him; 'we have lived very well these five years without the benefit of your advice or example, and I intend to take neither now. Why does not the head of the house speak?' she went on; 'he rules everything here. When his chaplain has done singing the psalms will his lordship deliver the sermon? I am tired of the psalms.' The prince had used almost the very same words in regard to Colonel Esmond that the imprudent girl repeated in her wrath.

'You show yourself a very apt scholar, madam,' says the colonel; and, turning to his mistress, 'Did your guest use these words in your ladyship's hearing, or was it to Beatrix in private that he was pleased to impart his opinion regarding my tiresome sermon?'

'Have you seen him alone?' cries my lord, starting up with an oath; 'by God, have you seen him alone?'
‘Were he here you wouldn’t dare so to insult me; no, you would not dare!’ cries Frank’s sister. ‘Keep your oaths, my lord, for your wife; we are not used here to such language. Till you came there used to be kindness between me and mamma; and I cared for her when you never did, when you were away for years with your horses and your mistress and your popish wife.’

‘By——,’ says my lord, rapping out another oath, ‘Clotilda is an angel; how dare you say a word against Clotilda?’

Colonel Esmond could not refrain from a smile to see how easy Frank’s attack was drawn off by that feint. ‘I fancy Clotilda is not the subject in hand,’ says Mr. Esmond rather scornfully; ‘her ladyship is at Paris, a hundred leagues off, preparing baby linen. It is about my Lord Castlewood’s sister, and not his wife, the question is.’

‘He is not my Lord Castlewood,’ says Beatrix, ‘and he knows he is not; he is Colonel Francis Esmond’s son, and no more, and he wears a false title; and he lives on another man’s land, and he knows it.’ Here was another desperate sally of the poor beleaguered garrison, and an alert in another quarter.

‘Again I beg your pardon,’ says Esmond. ‘If there are no proofs of my claim, I have no claim. If my father acknowledged no heir, yours was his lawful successor, and my Lord Castlewood hath as good a right to his rank and small estate as any man in England. But that again is not the question, as you know very well; let us bring our talk back to it, as you will have me meddle in it. And I will give you frankly my opinion that a house where a prince lies all day, who respects no woman, is no house for a young unmarried lady; that you were better in the country than here; that he is here on a great end, from which no folly should divert him; and that, having nobly done your part of this morning, Beatrix, you should retire off the scene a while and leave it to the other actors of the play.’

As the colonel spoke with a perfect calmness and politeness, such as ’tis to be hoped he hath always shown to women,* his

* My dear father saith quite truly that his manner toward our sex was uniformly courteous. From my infancy upward he treated me with an extreme gentleness as though I was a little lady. I can scarce remember (though I tried him often) ever hearing a rough word from him, nor was he less grave and kind in his manner to the humblest negroes on his estate. He was familiar with no one except my mother, and it was delightful to witness up to the very last days the confidence between them. He was obeyed eagerly by all under him; and my mother and all her household lived in a constant emulation to please him, and quite a terror lest in any way they should offend him. He was the humblest man with all this; the least exacting, the most easily contented; and Mr. Benson, our minister at Castlewood, who attended him at the last, ever said, ‘I know not what Colonel Esmond’s doctrine was, but his life and death were those of a devout Christian.’—R. E. W.
mistress stood by him on one side of the table, and Frank Castlewood on the other, hemming in poor Beatrix that was behind it, and, as it were, surrounding her with our approaches.

Having twice sallied out and been beaten back, she now, as I expected, tried the ultima ratio of women, and had recourse to tears. Her beautiful eyes filled with them; I never could bear in her, nor in any woman, that expression of pain. 'I am alone,' sobbed she; 'you are three against me—my brother, my mother, and you. What have I done that you should speak and look so unkindly at me? Is it my fault that the prince should, as you say, admire me? Did I bring him here? Did I do aught but what you bade me in making him welcome? Did you not tell me that our duty was to die for him? Did you not teach me, mother, night and morning to pray for the king before even ourselves? What would you have of me, cousin, for you are the chief of the conspiracy against me?—I know you are, sir, and that my mother and brother are acting but as you bid them—whither would you have me go?'

'I would but remove from the prince,' says Esmond gravely, 'a dangerous temptation; Heaven forbid I should say you would yield; I would only have him free of it. Your honor needs no guardian, please God, but his imprudence doth. He is so far removed from all women by his rank that his pursuit of them cannot but be unlawful. We would remove the dearest and fairest of our family from the chance of that insult, and that is why we would have you go, dear Beatrix.'

'Harry speaks like a book,' says Frank, with one of his oaths, 'and by ——, every word he saith is true. You can't help being handsome,' Trix; 'no more can the prince help following you. My counsel is that you go out of harm's way; for, by the Lord, were the prince to play any tricks with you, king as he is, or is to be, Harry Esmond and I would have justice of him.'

'Are not two such champions enough to guard me?' says Beatrix, something sorrowfully; 'sure, with you two watching, no evil could happen to me.'

'In faith, I think not, Beatrix,' says Colonel Esmond; 'nor if the prince knew us would he try.'

'But does he know you?' interposed Lady Esmond, very quiet. 'He comes of a country where the pursuit of kings is thought no dishonor to a woman. Let us go, dearest Beatrix. Shall we go to Walcote or to Castlewood? We are best away from the city; and when the prince is acknowledged, and our champions have restored him, and he hath his own house at St. James' or Windsor, we can come back to ours here. Do you not think so, Harry and Frank?

Frank and Harry thought with her, you may be sure.

"We will go, then," says Beatrix, turning a little pale; 'Lady Masham is to give me warning to-night how her Majesty is, and to-morrow——'

"I think we had best go to-day, my dear," says my Lady Castlewood; "we might have the coach and sleep at Hounslow, and reach home to-morrow. 'Tis twelve o'clock; bid the coach, cousin, be ready at one.'

"For shame!" burst out Beatrix, in a passion of tears and mortification. "You disgrace me by your cruel precautions; my own mother is the first to suspect me, and would take me away as my jailer. I will not go with you, mother; I will go as no one's prisoner. If I wanted to deceive, do you think I could find no means of evading you? My family suspects me. As those mistrust me that ought to love me most, let me leave them; I will go, but I will go alone; to Castlewood be it. I have been unhappy there and lonely enough; let me go back, but spare me at least the humiliation of setting a watch over my misery, which is a trial I can't bear. Let me go when you will, but alone, or not at all. You three can stay and triumph over my unhappiness, and I will bear it as I have borne it before. Let my jailer in chief go order the coach that is to take me away. I thank you, Henry Esmond, for your share in the conspiracy. All my life long I'll thank you, and remember you, and you, brother, and you, mother, how shall I show my gratitude to you for your careful defense of my honor?"

She swept out of the room with the air of an empress, flinging glances of defiance at us all, and leaving us conquerors of the field, but scared, and almost ashamed of our victory. It did indeed seem hard and cruel that we three should have conspired the banishment and humiliation of that fair creature. We looked at each other in silence; 'twas not the first stroke by many of our actions in that unlucky time, which, being done, we wished undone. We agreed it was best she should go alone, speaking stealthily to one another, and under our breaths, like persons engaged in an act they felt ashamed in doing.

In a half hour, it might be, after our talk she came back, her countenance wearing the same defiant air which it had borne when she left us. She held a shagreen case in her hand; Esmond knew it as containing his diamonds which he had given to her for her marriage with Duke Hamilton, and which she had worn so splendidly on the inauspicious night of the prince's arrival. 'I have brought back,' says she, 'to the Marquis of Esmond the present he deigned to make me in days when he trusted me better than now. I will never accept a benefit or a kindness from Henry Esmond more, and I give back these family diamonds, which belonged to one king's mistress, to the gentleman that suspected I would be another. Have you been upon your message of coach caller, my Lord Marquis? Will you send your valet to see that I do not run away?' We were right, yet, by her manner, she had put us all in the wrong; we were conquerors, yet the honors of the day seemed to be with the poor oppressed girl.

That luckless box containing the stones had first been ornamented with a baron's coronet, when Beatrix was engaged to the young gentleman from whom she parted, and afterward the gilt crown of a duchess figured on the cover, which also poor Beatrix was destined never to wear. Lady Castlewood opened the case mechanically and scarce thinking what she did, and behold, besides the diamonds, Esmond's present, there lay in the box the enameled miniature of the late duke, which Beatrix had laid aside with her mourning when the king came into the house, and which the poor heedless thing very likely had forgotten.

'Do you leave this too, Beatrix?' says her mother, taking the miniature out, and with a cruelty she did not very often show; but there are some moments when the tenderest women are cruel, and some triumphs which angels can't forego.*

Having delivered this stab, Lady Esmond was frightened at the effect of her blow. It went to poor Beatrix's heart; she flushed up and passed a handkerchief across her eyes, and kissed the miniature and put it into her bosom. 'I had forgot it,' says she; 'my injury made me forget my grief; my mother has recalled both to me. Farewell, mother; I think I never can forgive you; something hath broke between us that no tears nor years can repair. I always said I was alone; you never loved me, never—and were jealous of me from the time I sat on my father's knees. Let me go away, the sooner the better; I can bear to be with you no more.

'Go, child,' says her mother, still very stern; 'go and bend your proud knees and ask forgiveness; go pray in solitude for humility and repentance. 'Tis not your reproaches that make me unhappy, 'tis your hard heart, my poor Beatrix; may God soften it and teach you one day to feel for your mother.'

* This remark shows how unjustly and contumaciously even the best of men will sometimes judge of our sex. Lady Esmond had no intention of triumphing over her daughter, but from a sense of duty alone pointed out her deplorable wrong.—H. E.
If my mistress was cruel, at least she never could be got to own as much. Her haughtiness quite overtopped Beatrix's; and if the girl had a proud spirit I very much fear it came to her by inheritance.

CHAPTER XI.

OUR GUEST QUITS US AS NOT BEING HOSPITABLE ENOUGH.

Beatrix's departure took place within an hour, her maid going with her in the post chaise, and a man armed on the coach box to prevent any danger of the road. Esmond and Frank thought of escorting the carriage, but she indignantly refused their company, and another man was sent to follow the coach, and not to leave it till it had passed over Hounslow Heath on the next day. And these two forming the whole of Lady Castlewood's male domestics, Mr. Esmond's faithful John Lockwood came to wait on his mistress during their absence, though he would have preferred to escort Mrs. Lucy, his sweetheart, on her journey into the country.

We had a gloomy and silent meal; it seemed as if a darkness was over the house since the bright face of Beatrix had been withdrawn from it. In the afternoon came a message from the favorite to relieve us somewhat from this despondency. 'The queen hath been much shaken,' the note said; 'she is better now, and all things will go well. Let my Lord Castlewood be ready against we send for him.'

At night there came a second billet: 'There hath been a great battle in council; Lord Treasurer hath broke his staff, and hath fallen never to rise again; no successor is appointed. Lord B. receives a great Whig company to-night at Golden Square. If he istrimming, others are true; the queen hath no more fits, but is abed now and more quiet. Be ready against morning, when I still hope all will be well.'

The prince came home shortly after the messenger who bore this billet had left the house. His Royal Highness was so much the better for the bishop's liquor that to talk affairs to him now was of little service. He was helped to the royal bed; he called Castlewood familiarly by his own name; he quite forgot the part upon the acting of which his crown, his safety depended. 'Twas lucky that my Lady Castlewood's servants were out of the way, and only those heard him who would not betray him. He inquired after the adorable Beatrix with a royal hiccup in his voice; he was easily got to bed, and in a minute or two plunged in that deep slumber and forgetfulness with which Bacchus rewards the votaries of that god. We wished Beatrix had been there to see him in his cups. We regretted, perhaps, that she was gone.

One of the party at Kensington Square was fool enough to ride to Hounslow that night, coram latronibus, and to the inn which the family used ordinarily in their journeys out of London. Esmond desired my landlord not to acquaint Madam Beatrix with his coming, and had the grim satisfaction of passing by the door of the chamber where she lay with her maid, and of watching her chariot set forth in the early morning. He saw her smile and slip money into the man’s hand who was ordered to ride behind the coach as far as Bagshot. The road being open, and the other servant armed, it appeared she dispensed with the escort of a second domestic; and this fellow, bidding his young mistress adieu with many bows, went and took a pot of ale in the kitchen, and returned in company with his brother servant, John Coachman, and his horses, back to London.

They were not a mile out of Hounslow when the two worthies stopped for more drink, and here they were scared by seeing Colonel Esmond gallop by them. The man said in reply to Colonel Esmond’s stern question that his young mistress had sent her duty; only that, no other message; she had had a very good night, and would reach Castlewood by nightfall. The colonel had no time for further colloquy, and galloped on swiftly to London, having business of great importance there, as my reader very well knoweth. The thought of Beatrix riding away from the danger soothed his mind not a little. His horse was at Kensington Square (honest Dapple knew the way thither well enough) before the tipsy guest of last night was awake and sober.

The account of the previous evening was known all over the town early next day. A violent altercation had taken place before the queen in the council chamber; and all the coffee-houses had their version of the quarrel. The news brought my Lord Bishop early to Kensington Square, where he awaited the waking of his royal master above stairs, and spoke confidently of having him proclaimed as Prince of Wales and heir to the throne before that day was over. The bishop had entertained on the previous afternoon certain of the most influential gentlemen of the true British party. His Royal Highness had charmed all, both Scots and English, papists and Churchmen. ‘Even Quakers,’ says he, ‘were at our meeting; and, if the stranger took a little too much British punch and ale, he will soon grow more accustomed to those liquors; and my Lord Castlewood,' says the bishop, with a laugh, 'must bear the cruel charge of having been for once in his life a little tipsy. He toasted your lovely sister a dozen times, at which we all laughed,' says the bishop, 'admiring so much fraternal affection. Where is that charming nymph, and why doth she not adorn your ladyship's tea table with her bright eyes?'

Her ladyship said dryly that Beatrix was not at home that morning; my Lord Bishop was too busy with great affairs to trouble himself much about the presence or absence of any lady, however beautiful.

We were yet at table when Dr. A. came from the palace with a look of great alarm; the shocks the queen had had the day before had acted on her severely; he had been sent for, and had ordered her to be blooded. The surgeon of Long Acre had come to cup the queen, and her Majesty was now more easy, and breathed more freely. What made us start at the name of Mr. Aymé? 'Il faut être aimable pour être aimé,' says the merry doctor; Esmond pulled his sleeve, and bade him hush. It was to Aymé's house, after his fatal duel, that my dear Lord Castlewood, Frank's father, had been carried to die.

No second visit could be paid to the queen on that day at any rate; and when our guest above gave his signal that he was awake, the doctor, the bishop, and Colonel Esmond waited upon the prince's levee, and brought him their news, cheerful or dubious. The doctor had to go away presently, but promised to keep the prince constantly acquainted with what was taking place at the palace hard by. His counsel was, and the bishop's, that as soon as ever the queen's malady took a favorable turn, the prince should be introduced to her bedside; the council summoned; the guard at Kensington and St. James', of which two regiments were to be entirely relied on, and one known not to be hostile, would declare for the prince, as the queen would before the lords of her council, designating him as the heir to her throne.

With locked doors, and Colonel Esmond acting as secretary, the prince and his Lordship of Rochester passed many hours of this day composing Proclamations and Addresses to the country, to the Scots, to the Clergy, to the People of London and England, announcing the arrival of the exile descendant of three sovereigns, and his acknowledgment by his sister as heir to the throne. Every safeguard for their liberties the Church and people could ask was promised to them. The bishop could answer for the adhesion of very many prelates, who besought of their flocks and brother ecclesiastics to recognize the sacred right of the future sovereign, and to purge the country of the sin of rebellion.

During the composition of these papers more messengers than one came from the palace regarding the state of the august patient there lying. At midday she was somewhat better; at evening the torpor again seized her, and she wandering in her mind. At night Dr. A. was with us again, with a report rather more favorable; no instant danger at any rate was apprehended. In the course of the last two years her Majesty had had many attacks similar, but more severe.

By this time we had finished a half dozen of proclamations (the wording of them so as to offend no parties, and not to give umbrage to Whigs or Dissenters, required very great caution), and the young prince, who had indeed shown, during a long day's labor, both alacrity at seizing the information given him and ingenuity and skill in turning the phrases which were to go out signed by his name, here exhibited a good humor and thoughtfulness that ought to be set down to his credit.

"Were these papers to be mislaid," says he, "or our scheme to come to mishap, my Lord Esmond's writing would bring him to a place where I heartily hope never to see him; and so, by your leave, I will copy the papers myself, though I am not very strong in spelling, and if they are found they will implicate none but the persons they most concern"; and so, having carefully copied the proclamations out, the prince burned those in Colonel Esmond's handwriting. "And now, and now, gentlemen," says he, "let us go to supper and drink a glass with the ladies. My Lord Esmond, you will sup with us to-night; you have given us of late too little of your company."

The prince's meals were commonly served in the chamber which had been Beatrix's bedroom, adjoining that in which he slept. And the dutiful practice of his entertainers was to wait until their royal guest bade them take their places at table before they sat down to partake of the meal. On this night, as you may suppose, only Frank Castlewood and his mother were in waiting when the supper was announced, to receive the prince, who had passed the whole of the day in his own apartment, with the bishop as his Minister of State and Colonel Esmond officiating as Secretary of his Council.

The prince's countenance wore an expression by no means pleasant when, looking toward the little company assembled and waiting for him, he did not see Beatrix’s bright face there as usual to greet him. He asked Lady Esmond for his fair introducer of yesterday; her ladyship only cast her eyes down and said quietly Beatrix could not be of the supper that night; nor did she show the least sign of confusion, whereas Castlewood turned red and Esmond was no less embarrassed. I think women have an instinct of dissimulation; they know by nature how to disguise their emotions far better than the most consummate male courtiers can do. Is not the better part of the life of many of them spent in hiding their feelings, in cajoling their tyrants, in masking over with fond smiles and artful gayety their doubt or their grief or their terror?

Our guest swallowed his supper very sulkily; it was not till the second bottle his Highness began to rally. When Lady Castlewood asked leave to depart, he sent a message to Beatrix, hoping that she would be present at the next day’s dinner, and applied himself to drink and to talk afterward, for which there was subject in plenty.

The next day we heard from our informer at Kensington that the queen was somewhat better, and had been up for an hour, though she was not well enough yet to receive any visitor.

At dinner a single cloth was laid for his Royal Highness, and the two gentlemen alone waited on him. We had had a consultation with Lady Castlewood, in which it had been determined that, should his Highness ask further questions about Beatrix, he should be answered by the gentlemen of the house.

He was evidently disturbed and uneasy, looking toward the door constantly, as if expecting someone. There came, however, nobody, except honest John Lockwood, when he knocked with a dish, which those within took from him. So the meals were always arranged, and I believe the council in the kitchen were of opinion that my young lord had brought over a priest, who had converted us all into papists, and that papists were like Jews, eating together, and not choosing to take their meals in the sight of Christians.

The prince tried to cover his displeasure; he was but a clumsy dissembler at that time, and when out of humor could with difficulty keep a serene countenance, and having made some foolish attempts at trivial talk, he came to his point presently, and in as easy a manner as he could, saying to Lord Castlewood he hoped, he requested, his lordship’s mother and sister would be of the supper that night. As the time hung heavy on him, and he must not go abroad, would not Miss Beatrix hold him company at a game of cards?
At this, looking up at Esmond and taking the signal from him, Lord Castlewood informed his Royal Highness* that his sister Beatrix was not at Kensington, and that her family had thought it best she should quit the town.

'Not at Kensington!' says he. 'Is she ill? she was well yesterday. Wherefore should she quit the town? Is it at your orders, my lord, or Colonel Esmond's, who seems the master of this house?'

'Not of this, sir,' says Frank very nobly, 'only of our house in the country, which he hath given to us. This is my mother's house, and Walcote is my father's, and the Marquis of Esmond knows he hath but to give his word and I return his to him.'

'The Marquis of Esmond!—the Marquis of Esmond,' says the prince, tossing off a glass, 'meddles too much with my affairs, and presumes on the service he hath done me. If you want to carry your suit with Beatrix, my lord, by blocking her up in jail, let me tell you that is not the way to win a woman.'

'I was not aware, sir, that I had spoken of my suit to Madam Beatrix to your Royal Highness.'

'Bah, bah, monsieur! we need not be a conjuror to see that. It makes itself seen at all moments. You are jealous, my lord, and the maid of honor cannot look at another face without yours beginning to scowl. That which you do is unworthy, monsieur; is inhospitable—is, is lâche, yes, lâche' (he spoke rapidly in French, his rage carrying him away with each phrase). 'I come to your house; I risk my life; I pass it in ennui; I repose myself on your fidelity; I have no company but your lordship's sermons or the conversation of that adorabe lady, and you take her from me, and you, you rest! Merci, monsieur! I shall thank you when I have the means; I shall know how to recompense a devotion a little importune, my lord—a little importunate. For a month past your airs of protector have annoyed me beyond measure. You deign to offer me the crown, and bid me to take it on my knees like King John—eh! I know my history, monsieur, and mock myself of frowning barons. I admire your mistress, and you send her to a bastile of the province. I enter your house and you mistrust me. I will leave it, monsieur; from to-night I will leave it. I have other friends whose loyalty will not be so ready to question mine. If I have garters to give away,'tis to noblemen who are not so ready to think evil. Bring me a coach and let me quit this place, or let the fair Beatrix return to it. I will not have your hospitality at the expense of the freedom of that creature.'

* In London we addressed the prince as Royal Highness invariably, though the women persisted in giving him the title of King.

This harangue was uttered with rapid gesticulation such as the French use, and in the language of that nation. The prince striding up and down the room; his face flushed, and his hands trembling with anger. He was very thin and frail from repeated illness and a life of pleasure. Either Castlewood or Esmond could have broke him across their knee, and in half a minute's struggle put an end to him; and here he was insulting us both, and scarce deigning to hide from the two whose honor it most concerned the passion he felt for the young lady of our family. My Lord Castlewood replied to the prince's tirade very nobly and simply.

'Sir,' says he, 'your Royal Highness is pleased to forget that others risk their lives, and for your cause. Very few Englishmen, please God, would dare to lay hands on your sacred person, though none would ever think of respecting ours. Our family's lives are at your service, and everything we have except our honor.'

'Honor! bah, sir, who ever thought of hurting your honor?' says the prince, with a peevish air.

'We implore your Royal Highness never to think of hurting it,' says Lord Castlewood, with a low bow. The night being warm, the windows were open both toward the Gardens and the Square. Colonel Esmond heard through the closed door the voice of the watchman calling the hour, in the Square on the other side. He opened the door communicating with the prince's room; Martin, the servant that had rode with Beatrix to Hounslow, was just going out of the chamber as Esmond entered it, and when the fellow was gone, and the watchman again sang his cry of 'past ten o'clock, and a starlight night,' Esmond spoke to the prince in a low voice, and said, 'Your Royal Highness hears that man?'

'Après, monsieur?' says the prince.

'I have but to beckon him from the window and send him fifty yards, and he returns with a guard of men, and I deliver up to him the body of the person calling himself James the Third, for whose capture Parliament had offered a reward of £500, as your Royal Highness saw on our ride from Rochester, I have but to say the word, and, by the Heaven that made me, I would say it if I thought the prince, for his honor's sake, would not desist from insulting ours. But the first gentleman of England knows his duty too well to forget himself with the humblest, or peril his crown for a deed that were shameful if it were done.'

'Thas your lordship anything to say,' says the prince, turning to Frank Castlewood, and quite pale with anger; 'any threat or any insult, with which you would like to end this agreeable night's entertainment?'

'I follow the head of our house,' says Castlewood, bowing gravely. 'At what time shall it please the prince that we should wait upon him in the morning?'

'You will wait on the Bishop of Rochester early; you will bid him bring his coach hither, and prepare an apartment for me in his own house, or in a place of safety. The king will reward you handsomely, never fear, for all you have done in his behalf. I wish you a good-night, and shall go to bed, unless it pleases the Marquis of Esmond to call his colleague, the watchman, and that I should pass the night with the Kensington guard. Fare you well, be sure I will remember you. My Lord Castlewood, I can go to bed to-night without need of a chamberlain.' And the prince dismissed us with a grim bow, locking one door as he spoke, that into the supping room, and the other through which we passed, after us. It led into the small chamber which Frank Castlewood or M. Baptiste occupied, and by which Martin entered when Colonel Esmond but now saw him in the chamber.

At an early hour next morning the bishop arrived, and was closeted for some time with his master in his own apartment, where the prince laid open to his counselor the wrongs which, according to his version, he had received from the gentlemen of the Esmond family. The worthy prelate came out from the conference with an air of great satisfaction; he was a man full of resources, and of a most assured fidelity, and possessed of genius, and a hundred good qualities; but captious and of a most jealous temper, that could not help exulting at the downfall of any favorite; and he was pleased in spite of himself to hear that the Esmond ministry was at an end.

'I have soothed your guest,' says he, coming out to the two gentlemen and the widow, who had been made acquainted with somewhat of the dispute of the night before. (By the version we gave her, the prince was only made to exhibit anger because we doubted of his intentions in respect to Beatrix; and to leave us, because we questioned his honor.) 'But I think, all things considered, 'tis as well he should leave this house; and then my Lady Castlewood,' says the bishop, 'my pretty Beatrix may come back to it.'
‘She is quite as well at home at Castlewood,’ Esmond’s mistress said, ‘till everything is over.’

‘You shall have your title, Esmond, that I promise you,’ said the good bishop, assuming the airs of a prime minister. ‘The prince hath expressed himself most nobly in regard of the little difference of last night, and I promise you he hath listened to my sermon, as well as to that of other folks,’ says the doctor archly: ‘he hath every great and generous quality, with perhaps a weakness for the sex which belongs to his family, and hath been known in scores of popular sovereigns from King David downward.’

‘My lord, my lord!’ breaks out Lady Esmond, ‘the levity with which you speak of such conduct toward our sex shocks me, and what you call weakness I call deplorable sin.’

‘Sin it is, my dear creature,’ says the bishop, with a shrug, taking snuff; ‘but consider what a sinner King Solomon was, and in spite of a thousand of wives too.’

‘Enough of this, my lord,’ says Lady Castlewood, with a fine blush, and walked out of the room very stately.

The prince entered it presently with a smile on his face, and if he felt any offense against us on the previous night, at present exhibited none. He offered a hand to each gentleman with great courtesy. ‘If all your bishops preach so well as Dr. Atterbury,’ says he, ‘I don’t know, gentlemen, what may happen to me. I spoke very hastily, my lords, last night, and ask pardon of both of you. But I must not stay any longer,’ says he, ‘giving umbrage to good friends, or keeping pretty girls away from their homes. My Lord Bishop hath found a safe place for me, hard by at a curate’s house, whom the bishop can trust, and whose wife is so ugly as to be beyond all danger; we will decamp into those new quarters, and I leave you, thanking you for a hundred kindnesses here. Where is my hostess, that I may bid her farewell; to welcome her in a house of my own, soon, I trust, where my friends shall have no cause to quarrel with me.’

Lady Castlewood arrived presently, blushing with great grace, and tears filling her eyes as the prince graciously saluted her. She looked so charming and young that the doctor, in his bantering way, could not help speaking of her beauty to the prince; whose compliment made her blush and look more charming still.
CHAPTER XII.
A GREAT SCHEME, AND WHO BALKED IT.

As characters written with a secret ink come out with the application of fire, and disappear again and leave the paper white, so soon as it is cool; a hundred names of men high in repute and favoring the prince's cause, that were writ in our private lists, would have been visible enough on the great roll of the conspiracy, had it ever been laid open under the sun. What crowds would have pressed forward and subscribed their names and protested their loyalty, when the danger was over! What a number of Whigs, now high in place and creatures of the all-powerful minister, scorned Mr. Walpole then! If ever a match was gained by the manliness and decision of a few at a moment of danger; if ever one was lost by the treachery and imbecility of those that had the cards in their hands, and might have played them, it was in that momentous game which was enacted in the next three days, and of which the noblest crown in the world was the stake.

From the conduct of my Lord Bolingbroke, those who were interested in the scheme we had in hand saw pretty well that he was not to be trusted. Should the prince prevail, it was his lordship's gracious intention to declare for him; should the Hanoverian party bring in their sovereign, who more ready to go on his knee, and cry, 'God save King George'? And he betrayed the one prince and the other; but exactly at the wrong time. When he should have struck for King James, he faltered and coquetted with the Whigs; and having committed himself by the most monstrous professions of devotion, which the Elector rightly scorned, he proved the justness of their contempt for him by flying and taking renegade service with St. Germains, just when he should have kept aloof, and that Court despised him, as the manly and resolute men who established the Elector in England had before done. He signed his own name to every accusation of insincerity his enemies made against him; and the king and the pretender alike could show proofs of St. John's treachery under his own hand and seal.

Our friends kept a pretty close watch upon his motions, as on those of the brave and hearty Whig party, that made little concealment of theirs. They would have in the Elector, and used every means in their power to effect their end. My Lord Marlborough was now with them. His expulsion from power by the Tories had thrown that great captain at once on the Whig side. We heard he was coming from Antwerp; and, in fact, on the day of the queen’s death, he once more landed on English shore. A great part of the army was always with their illustrious leader; even the Tories in it were indignant at the injustice of the persecution which the Whig officers were made to undergo. The chiefs of these were in London, and at the head of them one of the most intrepid men in the world, the Scots Duke of Argyle, whose conduct on the second day after that to which I have now brought down my history, ended, as such honesty and bravery deserved to end, by establishing the present Royal race on the English throne.

Meanwhile there was no slight difference of opinion among the counselors surrounding the prince, as to the plan his Highness should pursue. His female minister at Court, fancying she saw some amelioration in the queen, was for waiting a few days, or hours it might be, until he could be brought to her bedside, and acknowledged as her heir. Mr. Esmond was for having him march thither, escorted by a couple of troops of Horse Guards, and openly presenting himself to the council. During the whole of the night of the 29th–30th July, the colonel was engaged with gentlemen of the military profession, whom ’tis needless here to name; suffice it to say that several of them had exceeding high rank in the army, and one of them in especial was a general, who, when he heard the Duke of Marlborough was coming on the other side, waved his crutch over his head with a huzza, at the idea that he should march out and engage him. Of the three secretaries of state, we knew that one was devoted to us. The Governor of the Tower was ours; the two companies on duty at Kensington barrack were safe; and we had intelligence, very speedy and accurate, of all that took place at the Palace within.

At noon, on the 30th of July, a message came to the prince’s friends that the committee of council was sitting at Kensington Palace, their Graces of Ormonde and Shrewsbury, the Archbishop of Canterbury and three secretaries of state being there assembled. In an hour afterward, hurried news was brought that the two great Whig dukes, Argyle and Somerset, had broke into the council chamber without a summons, and taken their seat at table. After holding a debate there the whole party proceeded to the chamber of the queen, who was lying in great weakness, but still sensible, and the lords recommended his Grace of Shrewsbury as the fittest person to take the vacant place of Lord Treasurer; her Majesty gave him the staff, as all know. 'And now,' writ my messenger from Court, 'now or never is the time.'

Now or never was the time indeed. In spite of the Whig dukes, our side had still the majority in the council, and Esmond, to whom the message had been brought (the personage at Court not being aware that the prince had quitted his lodging in Kensington Square), and Esmond’s gallant young aide-de-camp, Frank Castlewood, putting on sword and uniform, took a brief leave of their dear lady, who embraced and blessed them both, and went to her chamber to pray for the issue of the great event which was then pending.

Castlewood sped to the barrack to give warning to the captain of the guard there; and then went to the King’s Arms tavern at Kensington, where our friends were assembled, having come by parties of twos and threes, riding or in coaches, and were got together in the upper chamber, fifty-three of them; their servants, who had been instructed to bring arms likewise, being below in the garden of the tavern, where they were served with drink. Out of the garden is a little door that leads into the road of the Palace, and through this it was arranged that masters and servants were to march; when the signal was given, and that personage appeared, for whom all were waiting. There was in our company the famous officer next in command to the captain general of the forces, his Grace the Duke of Ormonde, who was within at the council. There was with him two more lieutenant generals, nine major generals and brigadiers, seven colonels, eleven peers of Parliament, and twenty-one members of the House of Commons. The guard was with us within and without the Palace; the queen was with us; the council (save the two Whig dukes, that must have succumbed); the day was our own, and with a beating heart Esmond walked rapidly to the Mall of Kensington, where he had parted with the prince on the night before. For three nights the colonel had not been to bed; the last had been passed summoning the prince’s friends together, of whom the great majority had no sort of inkling of the transaction pending until they were told that he was actually on the spot, and were summoned to strike the blow. The night before and after the altercation with the prince, my gentleman, having suspicions of his Royal Highness, and fearing lest he should be minded to give us the slip and fly off after his fugitive beauty, had spent, if the truth must be told, at the Greyhound tavern, over against my Lady Esmond’s house in Kensington Square, with an eye on the door, lest the prince should escape from it. The night before that he had passed in his boots at the Crown at Hounslow, where he must watch forsooth all night, in order to get one moment's glimpse of Beatrix in the morning. And fate had decreed that he was to have a fourth night's ride and wakefulness before his business was ended.

He ran to the curate's house in Kensington Mall, and asked for Mr. Bates, the name the prince went by. The curate's wife said Mr. Bates had gone abroad very early in the morning in his boots, saying he was going to the Bishop of Rochester's house at Chelsey. But the bishop had been at Kensington himself two hours ago to seek for Mr. Bates, and had returned in his coach to his own house, when he heard that the gentleman was gone thither to seek him.

This absence was most unpropitious, for an hour's delay might cost a kingdom; Esmond had nothing for it but to hasten to the King's Arms, and tell the gentlemen there assembled that Mr. George (as we called the prince there) was not at home, but that Esmond would go fetch him; and taking a general's coach that happened to be there, Esmond drove across the country to Chelsey, to the bishop's house there.

The porter said two gentlemen were with his lordship, and Esmond ran past this sentry up to the locked door of the bishop's study, at which he rattled and was admitted presently. Of the bishop's guests one was a brother prelate, and the other the Abbé G——.

'Where is Mr. George?' says Mr. Esmond; 'now is the time.' The bishop looked scared. 'I went to his lodging,' he said, 'and they told me he was come hither. I returned as quick as coach would carry me; and he hath not been here.'

The colonel burst out with an oath; that was all he could say to their reverences; ran down the stairs again, and bidding the coachman, an old friend and campaigner, drive as if he was charging the French with his master at Wynendael—they were back at Kensington in half an hour.

Again Esmond went to the curate's house. Mr. George had not returned. The colonel had to go with his blank errand to the gentlemen at the King's Arms, that were grown very impatient by this time.

Out of the window of the tavern, and looking over the garden wall, you can see the green before Kensington Palace, the Palace gate) round which the ministers' coaches were standing), and the barrack building. As we were looking out from this window in gloomy discourse, we heard presently trumpets blowing, and some of us ran to the window of the front room, looking into the High Street of Kensington, and saw a regiment of horse coming.

'Its Ormonde's Guards,' says one.

'No, by God, it's Argyle's old regiment!' says my general, clapping down his crutch.

It was, indeed, Argyle's regiment that was brought from Westminster, and that took the place of the regiment at Kensington on which we could rely,

'O Harry!' says one of the generals there present, 'you were born under an unlucky star; I begin to think that there's no Mr. George, nor Mr. Dragon either. 'Tis not the peerage I care for, for our name is so ancient and famous that merely to be called Lord Lydiard would do me no good; but 'tis the chance you promised me of fighting Marlborough.'

As we were talking, Castlewood entered the room with a disturbed air.

'What news, Frank?' says the colonel. 'Is Mr. George coming at last?'

'Damn him, look here!' says Castlewood, holding out a paper, 'I found it in a book—the what-you-call-it, "Eikum Basilikum"—that villain Martin put it there—he said his young mistress bade him. It was directed to me, but it was meant for him, I know, and I broke the seal and read it.'

The whole assembly of officers seemed to swim away before Esmond's eyes as he read the paper; all that was written on it was: 'Beatrix Esmond is sent away to prison to Castlewood, where she will pray for happier days.'

'Can you guess where he is?' says Castlewood.

'Yes,' says Colonel Esmond. He knew full well, Frank knew full well; our instinct told whither that traitor had fled.

He had courage to turn to the company and say, 'Gentlemen, I fear very much that Mr. George will not be here to-day; something hath happened—and—and—I very much fear some accident may befall him, which must keep him out of the way. Having had your noon's draught, you had best pay the reckoning and go home; there can be no game where there is no one to play it.'

Some of the gentlemen went away without a word, others called to pay their duty to her Majesty and ask for her health. The little army disappeared into the darkness out of which it had been called; there had been no writings, no paper to implicate any man. Some few officers and members of Parliament had been invited overnight to breakfast at the King's Arms at Kensington; and they had called for their bill and gone home.
CHAPTER XIII.

AUGUST 1ST, 1714.

'Does my mistress know of this?' Esmond asked of Frank as they walked along.

'My mother found the letter in the book, on the toilet table. She had writ it ere she had left home,' Frank said. 'Mother met her on the stairs, with her hand upon the door, trying to enter, and never left her after that till she went away. He did not think of looking for it there, nor had Martin the chance of telling him. I believe the poor devil meant no harm, though I half killed him; he thought it was to Beatrix's brother he was bringing the letter.'

Frank never said a word of reproach to me for having brought the villain among us. As we knocked at the door I said: 'When will the horses be ready?' Frank pointed with his cane; they were turning the street at that moment.

We went up and bade adieu to our mistress; she was in a dreadful state of agitation by this time, and that bishop was with her whose company she was so fond of.

'Did you tell him, my lord,' says Esmond, 'that Beatrix was at Castlewood?' The bishop blushed and stammered: 'Well,' says he, 'I——'

'You served the villain right,' broke out Mr. Esmond, 'and he has lost a crown by what you told him.'

My mistress turned quite white. 'Henry, Henry,' says she, 'do not kill him.'

'It may not be too late,' says Esmond; 'he may not have gone to Castlewood; pray God, it is not too late.' The bishop was breaking out with some banale phrases about loyalty and the sacredness of the sovereign's person; but Esmond sternly bade him hold his tongue, burn all papers, and take care of Lady Castlewood; and in five minutes he and Frank were in the saddle, John Lockwood behind them, riding toward Castlewood at a rapid pace.

We were just got to Alton, when who should meet us but old Lockwood, the porter from Castlewood, John's father, walking by the side of the Hexham flying coach, who slept the night at Alton. Lockwood said his young mistress had arrived at home on Wednesday night, and this morning, Friday, had dispatched him with a packet for my lady at Kensington, saying the letter was of great importance.

We took the freedom to break it, while Lockwood stared with wonder, and cried out his 'Lord bless me's,' and 'Who'd 'a' thought it's,' at the sight of his young lord, whom he had not seen these seven years.

The packet from Beatrix contained no news of importance at all. It was written in a jocular strain, affecting to make light of her captivity. She asked whether she might have leave to visit Mrs. Tusher, or to walk beyond the court and the garden wall. She gave news of the peacocks and a fawn she had there. She bade her mother send her certain gowns and smocks by old Lockwood; she sent her duty to a certain person, if certain other persons permitted her to take such a freedom; how that, as she was not able to play cards with him, she hoped he would read good books, such as Dr. Atterbury's sermons and 'Eikon Basiliké'; she was going to read good books; she thought her pretty mamma would like to know she was not crying her eyes out.

'Who is in the house besides you, Lockwood?' says the colonel.

'There be the laundry maid, and the kitchen maid, Mme. Beatrix's maid, the man from London, and that be all; and he sleepeth in my lodge away from the maids,' says old Lockwood.

Esmond scribbled a line with a pencil on the note, giving it to the old man, and bidding him to go on to his lady. We knew why Beatrix had been so dutiful on a sudden, and why she spoke of 'Eikon Basiliké.' She writ this letter to put the prince on the scent, and the porter out of the way.

'We have a fine moonlight night for riding on,' says Esmond; 'Frank, we may reach Castlewood in time yet.' All the way along they made inquiries at the post houses, when a tall young gentleman in a gray suit, with a light brown periwig, just the color of my lord's, had been seen to pass. He had set off at six that morning, and we at three in the afternoon. He rode almost as quickly as we had done; he was seven hours ahead of us still when we reached the last stage.

We rode over Castlewood Downs before the breaking of dawn. We passed the very spot where the car was upset fourteen years since, and Mohun lay. The village was not up yet nor the forge lighted, as we rode through it, passing by the elms, where the rooks were still roosting, and by the church, and over the bridge. We got off our horses at the bridge and walked up to the gate.

'If she is safe,' says Frank, trembling, and his honest eyes filling with tears, 'a silver statue to Our Lady!' He was going to rattle at the great iron knocker on the oak gate; but Esmond stopped his kinsman's hand. He had his own fears, his own hopes, his own desairs and griefs, too; but he spoke not a word of these to his companion, nor showed any signs of emotion.

He went and tapped at the little window at the porter's lodge, gently, but repeatedly, until the man came to the bars. 'Who's there?' says he, looking out. It was the servant from Kensington.

'My Lord Castlewood and Colonel Esmond,' we said, from below. 'Open the gate and let us in without any noise.'

'My Lord Castlewood?' says the other; 'my lord's here, and in bed.'

'Open, d—n you,' says Castlewood, with a curse.

'I shall open to no one,' says the man, shutting the glass window as Frank drew a pistol. He would have fired at the porter, but Esmond again held his hand.

'There are more ways than one,' says he, 'of entering such a great house as this.' Frank grumbled that the west gate was half a mile round. 'But I know of a way that's not a hundred yards off,' says Mr. Esmond; and leading his kinsman close along the wall, and by the shrubs which had now grown thick on what had been an old moat about the house, they came to the buttress, at the side of which the little window was, which was Father Holt's private door. Esmond climbed up to this easily, broke a pane that had been mended, and touched the spring inside, and the two gentlemen passed in that way, treading as lightly as they could; and so going through the passage into the court, over which the dawn was now reddening, and where the fountain plashed in the silence.

They sped instantly to the porter's lodge, where the fellow had not fastened his door that led into the court; and pistol in hand came upon the terrified wretch, and bade him be silent. Then they asked him (Esmond's head reeled, and he almost fell as he spoke) when Lord Castlewood had arrived? He said on the previous evening, about eight of the clock. 'And what then?' His lordship supped with his sister. 'Did the man wait?' Yes, he and my lady's maid both waited; the other servants made the supper; and there was no wine, and they could give his lordship but milk, at which he grumbled; and—and Mme. Beatrix kept Miss Lucy always in the room with her. And there being a bed across the court in the chaplain's room, she had arranged my lord was to sleep there. Mme. Beatrix had come downstairs laughing with the maids, and had locked herself in, and my lord had stood for a while talking to her through the door, and she laughing at him. And then he paced the court a while, and she came again to the upper window; and my lord implored her to come down and walk in the room, but she would not, and laughed at him again, and shut the window; and so my lord, uttering what seemed curses, but in a foreign language, went to the chaplain's room to bed.

'Was this all?'—'All,' the man swore upon his honor; 'all as he hoped to be saved. Stop, there was one more thing. My Lord, on arriving, and once or twice during supper, did kiss his sister, as was natural, and she kissed him.' At this Esmond ground his teeth with rage, and well-nigh throttled the amazed miscreant who was speaking, whereas Castlewood, seizing hold of his cousin's hand, burst into a great fit of laughter.

'If it amuses thee,' says Esmond in French, 'that your sister should be exchanging of kisses with a stranger, I fear poor Beatrix will give thee plenty of sport.' Esmond darkly thought how Hamilton, Ashburnham, had before been masters of those roses that the young prince's lips were now feeding on. He sickened at that notion. Her cheek was desecrated, her beauty tarnished; shame and honor stood between it and him. The love was dead within him; had she a crown to bring him with her love, he felt that both would degrade him.

But this wrath against Beatrix did not lessen the angry feelings of the colonel against the man who had been the occasion if not the cause of the evil. Frank sat down on a stone bench in the courtyard and fairly fell asleep, while Esmond paced up and down the court, debating what should ensue. What mattered how much or how little had passed between the prince and the poor faithless girl? They were arrived in time perhaps to rescue her person, but not her mind; had she not instigated the young prince to come to her; suborned servants, dismissed others, so that she might communicate with him? The treacherous heart within her had surrendered, though the place was safe; and it was to win this that he had given a life's struggle and devotion; this, that she was ready to give away for the bribe of a coronet or a wink of the prince's eye.

When he had thought his thoughts out he shook up poor Frank from his sleep, who rose yawning, and said he had been dreaming of Clotilda. 'You must back me,' says Esmond, 'in what I am going to do. I have been thinking that yonder scoundrel may have been instructed to tell that story, and that the whole of it may be a lie; if it be, we shall find it out from the gentleman who is asleep yonder. See if the door leading to my lady's rooms [so we called the rooms at the northwest angle of the house]—'see if the door is barred as he saith.' We tried; it was indeed as the lackey had said, closed within.

'It may have been opened and shut afterward,' says poor Esmond. 'The foundress of our family let our ancestor in in that way.'

'What will you do, Harry, if—if what that fellow saith should turn out untrue?' The young man looked, scared and frightened, into his kinsman's face. I dare say it wore no very pleasant expression.

'Let us first go see whether the two stories agree,' says Esmond; and went in at the passage and opened the door into what had been his own chamber now for well-nigh five-and-twenty years. A candle was still burning, and the prince asleep, dressed, on the bed—Esmond did not care for making a noise. The prince started up in his bed, seeing two men in his chamber. 'Qu'est la?' says he, and took a pistol from under his pillow.

'It is the Marquis of Esmond,' says the colonel, 'come to welcome his Majesty to his house of Castlewood, and to report of what hath happened in London. Pursuant to the king's orders I passed the night before last, after leaving his Majesty, in waiting upon the friends of the king. It is a pity that his Majesty's desire to see the country and to visit our poor house should have caused the king to quit London without notice yesterday, when the opportunity happened which in all human probability may not occur again; and had the king not chosen to ride to Castlewood, the Prince of Wales might have slept at St. James.'

'Sdeath! gentlemen,' says the prince, starting off his bed, whereon he was lying in his clothes, 'the doctor was with me yesterday morning, and, after watching by my sister all night, told me I might not hope to see the queen.'

'It would have been otherwise,' says Esmond, with another bow; 'as, by this time, the queen may be dead in spite of the doctor. The council was met, a new Treasurer was appointed, the troops were devoted to the king's cause; and fifty loyal gentlemen of the greatest names of this kingdom were assembled to accompany the Prince of Wales, who might have been the acknowledged heir of the throne, or the possessor of it by this time, had your Majesty not chosen to take the air. We were ready; there was only one person that failed us, your Majesty's gracious—'

'Morbleu, monsieur, you give me too much Majesty,' said the prince, who had now risen up and seemed to be looking to one of us to help him to his coat. But neither stirred.

' We shall take care,' says Esmond, 'not much oftener to offend in that particular.'

'What mean you, my lord?' says the prince, and muttered something about a guet-à-pens, which Esmond caught up.

'The snare, sir,' said he, 'was not of our laying; it is not we that invited you. We came to avenge, and not to compass, the dishonor of our family.'

'Dishonor! Morbleu, there has been no dishonor,' says the prince, turning scarlet, 'only a little harmless playing.'

'That was meant to end seriously.'

'I swear,' the prince broke out impetuously, 'upon the honor of a gentleman, my lords——'

'That we arrived in time. No wrong hath been done, Frank,' says Colonel Esmond, turning round to young Castlewood, who stood at the door as the talk was going on. 'See! here is a paper whereon his Majesty hath deigned to commence some verses in honor, or dishonor, of Beatrix. Here is madame, "Flamme," "Cruelle," "Rebelle," and "Amour," and "Jour," in the Royal writing and spelling. Had the Gracious lover been happy, he had not passed his time in sighing. In fact, and actually as he was speaking, Esmond cast his eyes down toward the table, and saw a paper on which my young prince had been scrawling a madrigal, that was to finish his charmer on the morrow.

'Sir,' says the prince, burning with rage [he had assumed his royal coat unassisted by this time], 'did I come here to receive insults?'

'To confer them, may it please your Majesty,' says the colonel, with a very low bow, 'and the gentlemen of our family are come to thank you.'

'Malédiction!' says the young man, tears starting into his eyes with helpless rage and mortification. 'What will you with me, gentlemen?'

'If your Majesty will please to enter the next apartment,' says Esmond, preserving his grave tone, 'I have some papers there which I would gladly submit to you, and by your permission I will lead the way; and taking the taper up, and backing before the prince with very great ceremony, Mr. Esmond passed into the little chaplain's room, through which we had just entered into the house. 'Please to set a chair for his Majesty, Frank,' says the colonel to his companion, who wondered almost as much at this scene, and was as much puzzled by it, as the other actor in it. Then going to the crypt over the mantelpiece, the colonel opened it, and drew thence the papers which so long had lain there.

'Here, may it please your Majesty,' says he, 'is the patent of marquis sent over by your Royal Father at St. Germains to Viscount Castlewood, my father; here is the witnessed certificate of my father's marriage to my mother, and of my birth and christening. I was christened of that religion of which your sainted sire gave all through life so shining example. These are my titles, dear Frank, and this what I do with them; here go baptism and marriage, and here the marquisate and the august sign manual, with which your predecessor was pleased to honor our race.' And as Esmond spoke, he set the papers burning in the brazier. 'You will please, sir, to remember,' he continued, 'that our family hath ruined itself by fidelity to yours; that my grandfather spent his estate, and gave his blood and his son to die for your service; that my dear lord's grandfather (for lord you are now, Frank, by right and title too) died for the same cause; that my poor kinswoman, my father's second wife, after giving away her honor to your wicked perjured race, sent all her wealth to the king; and got in return that precious title that lies in ashes, and this inestimable yard of blue ribbon. I lay this at your feet and stamp upon it; I draw this sword, and break it and deny you; and, had you completed the wrong you designed us, by Heaven I would have driven it through your heart, and no more pardoned you than your father pardoned Monmouth. Frank will do the same; won't you, cousin?'

Frank, who had been looking on with a stupid air at the papers, as they flamed in the old brazier, took out his sword and broke it, holding his head down. 'I go with my cousin,' says he, giving Esmond a grasp of the hand. 'Marquis or not, by ——, I stand by him any day. I beg your Majesty's pardon for swearing; that is—that is—I'm for the Elector of Hanover. It's all your Majesty's own fault. The queen's dead most likely by this time. And you might have been king if you hadn't come dangling after 'Trix.'

'Thus to lose a crown,' says the young prince, starting up, and speaking French in his eager way; 'to lose the loveliest woman in the world; to lose the loyalty of such hearts as yours, is not this, my lords, enough of humiliation? Marquis, if I go on my knees, will you pardon me? No, I can't do that, but I can offer you reparation—that of honor, that of gentlemen. Favor me by crossing the sword with mine; yours is broke—see, yonder in the armoire are two—and the prince took them out as eager as a boy, and held them toward Es-mond—‘Ah! you will? Merci, monsieur, merci!’
Extremely touched by this immense mark of condescension and repentance for wrong done, Colonel Esmond bowed down so low as almost to kiss the gracious young hand that conferred on him such an honor, and took his guard in silence. The swords were no sooner met, than Castlewood knocked up Esmond’s with the blade of his own, which he had broke off short at the shell; and the colonel, falling back a step, dropped his point with another very low bow, and declared himself perfectly satisfied.
‘Eh bien, vicomte!’ says the young Prince, who was a boy, and a French boy, ‘il ne nous reste qu’une chose à faire;’ he placed his sword upon the table, and the fingers of his two hands upon his breast. ‘We have one more thing to do,’ says he; ‘you do not divine it?’ He stretched out his arms.
‘Embrassons-nous!’
The talk was scarce over when Beatrix entered the room.
What came she to seek there? She started and turned pale at the sight of her brother and kinsman, drawn swords, broken sword-blades, and papers yet smoldering in the brazier.
‘Charming Beatrix,’ says the prince, with a blush which became him very well, ‘these lords have come a-horseback from London, where my sister lies in a despairied state, and where her successor makes himself desired. Pardon me for my escapade of last evening. I had been so long a prisoner that I seized the occasion of a promenade on horseback, and my horse naturally bore me toward you. I found you a queen in your little court, where you deigned to entertain me. Present my homages to your maids of honor. I sighed as you slept, under the window of your chamber, and then retired to seek rest in my own.
It was there that these gentlemen agreeably roused me. Yes, milords, for that is a happy day that makes a prince acquainted, at whatever cost to his vanity, with such a noble heart as that of the Marquis of Esmond. Mademoiselle, may we take your coach to town? I saw it in the hangar, and this poor marquis must be dropping with sleep.’
‘Will it please the king to breakfast before he goes?’ was all Beatrix could say. The roses had shuddered out of her cheeks; her eyes were glaring; she looked quite old. She came up to Esmond and hissed out a word or two. ‘If I did not love you before, cousin,’ says she, ‘think how I love you now.’
If words could stab, no doubt she would have killed Esmond;
she looked at him as if she could.
But her keen words gave no wound to Mr. Esmond; his heart was too hard. As he looked at her, he wondered that he could ever have loved her. His love of ten years was over; it fell down dead on the spot, at the Kensington Tavern, where Frank brought him the note out of ‘Eikon Basiliké.’ The prince blushed and bowed low, as she gazed at him, and quitted the chamber. I have never seen her since that day.

Horses were fetched and put to the chariot presently. My lord rode outside, and as for Esmond he was so tired that he was no sooner in the carriage than he fell asleep, and never woke till night, as the coach came into Alton.

As we drove to the Bell Inn comes a mitered coach with our old friend Lockwood beside the coachman. My Lady Castlewood and the bishop were inside; she gave a little scream when she saw us. The two coaches entered the inn almost together; the landlord and people coming out with lights to welcome the visitors.

We in our coach sprang out of it, as soon as ever we saw the dear lady, and above all, the doctor in his cassock. What was the news? Was there yet time? Was the queen alive? These questions were put hurriedly, as Boniface stood waiting before his noble guests to bow them up the stair.

‘Is she safe?’ was what Lady Castlewood whispered in a flutter to Esmond.

‘All’s well, thank God,’ says he, as the fond lady took his hand and kissed it, and called him her preserver and her dear. She wasn’t thinking of queens and crowns.

The bishop’s news was reassuring; at least all was not lost; the queen yet breathed, or was alive when they left London six hours since. (‘It was Lady Castlewood who insisted on coming,’ the doctor said.) Argyle had marched up regiments from Portsmouth, and sent abroad for more; the Whigs were on the alert, a pest on them (I am not sure but the bishop swore as he spoke), and so too were our people. And all might be saved, if only the prince could be at London in time. We called for horses, instantly, to return to London. We never went up poor crestfallen Boniface’s stairs, but into our coaches again. The prince and his prime minister in one, Esmond in the other, with only his dear mistress as a companion.

Castlewood galloped forward on horseback to gather the prince’s friends and warn them of his coming. We traveled through the night, Esmond discoursing to his mistress of the events of the last twenty-four hours; of Castlewood’s ride and his; of the prince’s generous behavior and their reconciliation. The night seemed short enough; and the starlit hours passed away serenely in that fond company.

So we came along the road, the bishop's coach heading ours; and with some delays in procuring horses, we got to Hammersmith about four o'clock on Sunday morning, the 1st of August, and half an hour after, it being then bright day, we rode by my Lady Warwick's house, and so down the street of Kensington.

Early as the hour was, there was a bustle in the street and many people moving to and fro. Round the gate leading to the Palace, where the guard is, there was especially a great crowd. And the coach ahead of us stopped, and the bishop's man got down to know what the concourse meant?

There presently came from out of the gate—Horse Guards with their trumpets, and a company of heralds with their tabards. The trumpets blew, and the heralds-at-arms came forward and proclaimed George, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith. And the people shouted 'God save the King!'

Among the crowd shouting and waving their hats, I caught sight of one sad face, which I had known all my life, and seen under many disguises. It was no other than poor Mr. Holt's, who had slipped over to England to witness the triumph of the good cause; and now beheld its enemies victorious, amid the acclamations of the English people. The poor fellow had forgot to huzza or to take his hat off, until his neighbors in the crowd remarked his want of loyalty, and cursed him for a Jesuit in disguise, when he ruefully uncovered and began to cheer. Sure he was the most unlucky of men; he never played a game but he lost it; or engaged in a conspiracy but 'twas certain to end in defeat. I saw him in Flanders after this, whence he went to Rome to the headquarters of his Order; and actually reappeared among us in America, very old and busy and hopeful. I am not sure that he did not assume the hatchet and moccasins there; and, attired in a blanket and war paint, skulk about, a missionary among the Indians. He lies buried in our neighboring province of Maryland now, with a cross over him, and a mound of earth above him; under which that unquiet spirit is forever at peace.

With the sound of King George's trumpets, all the vain hopes of the weak and foolish young pretender were blown away; and with that music, too, I may say, the drama of my own life was ended. That happiness, which hath subsequently crowned it, cannot be written in words; 'tis of its nature sacred and secret, and not to be spoken of, though the heart be ever so full of thankfulness, save to Heaven and the One Ear alone—to one fond being, the truest and tenderest and purest wife ever man was blessed with. As I think of the immense happiness which was in store for me, and of the depth and intensity of that love which for so many years hath blessed me, I own to a transport of wonder and gratitude for such a boon—nay, am thankful to have been endowed with a heart capable of feeling and knowing the immense beauty and value of the gift which God hath bestowed upon me. Sure, love vincit omnia; is immeasurably above all ambition, more precious than wealth, more noble than name. He knows not life who knows not that; he hath not felt the highest faculty of the soul who hath not enjoyed it. In the name of my wife I write the completion of hope and the summit of happiness. To have such a love is the one blessing in comparison of which all earthly joy is of no value; and to think of her is to praise God.

It was at Bruxelles, whither we retreated after the failure of our plot—our Whig friends advising us to keep out of the way—that the great joy of my life was bestowed upon me, and that my dear mistress became my wife. We had been so accustomed to an extreme intimacy and confidence, and had lived so long and tenderly together, that we might have gone on to the end without thinking of a closer tie; but circumstances brought about that event which so prodigiously multiplied my happiness and hers (for which I humbly thank Heaven), although a calamity befell us, which, I blush to think, hath occurred more than once in our house. I know not what infatuation of ambition urged the beautiful and wayward woman, whose name hath occupied so many of these pages, and who was served by me with ten years of such constant fidelity and passion; but ever after that day at Castlewood, when we rescued her, she persisted in holding all her family as her enemies, and left us, and escaped to France, to what a fate I disdain to tell. Nor was her son's house a home for my dear mistress; my poor Frank was weak, as perhaps all our race hath been, and led by women. Those around him were imperious, and in a terror of his mother's influence over him, lest he should recant, and deny the creed which he had adopted by their persuasion. The difference of their religion separated the son and the mother; my dearest mistress felt that she was severed from her children and alone in the world—alone but for one constant servant on whose fidelity, praised be Heaven, she could count. 'Twas after a scene of ignoble quarrel on the part of Frank’s wife and mother (for the poor lad had been made to marry the whole of that German family with whom he had connected himself), that I found my mistress one day in tears, and then besought her to confide herself to the care and devotion of one who, by God’s help, would never forsake her. And then the tender matron, as beautiful in her autumn, and as pure as virgins in their spring, with blushes of love and ‘eyes of meek surrender,’ yielded to my respectful importunity, and consented to share my home. Let the last words I write thank her, and bless her who hath blessed it.

By the kindness of Mr. Addison all danger of prosecution and every obstacle against our return to England was removed; and my son Frank’s gallantry in Scotland made his peace with the king’s government. But we two cared no longer to live in England; and Frank formally and joyfully yielded over to us the possession of that estate which we now occupy, far away from Europe and its troubles, on the beautiful banks of the Potomac, where we have built a new Castlewood, and think with grateful hearts of our old home. In our transatlantic country we have a season, the calmest and most delightful of the year, which we call the Indian summer. I often say the autumn of our life resembles that happy and serene weather, and am thankful for its rest and its sweet sunshine. Heaven hath blessed us with a child, which each parent loves for her resemblance to the other. Our diamonds are turned into plows and axes for our plantations; and into negroes, the happiest and merriest, I think, in all this country; and the only jewel by which my wife sets any store, and from which she hath never parted, is that gold button she took from my arm on the day when she visited me in prison, and which she wore ever after, as she told me, on the tenderest heart in the world.
CHAPTER I.

INTRODUCING TO THE READER THE CHIEF PERSONAGES OF THIS NARRATIVE.

At that famous period of history when the seventeenth century (after a deal of quarreling, king-killing, reforming, republicanizing, restoring, re-restoring, play-writing, sermon-writing, Oliver-Cromwellizing, Stuartizing, and Organizing, to be sure) had sunk into its grave, giving place to the lusty eighteenth; when Mr. Isaac Newton was a tutor of Trinity, and Mr. Joseph Addison Commissioner of Appeals; when the presiding genius that watched over the destinies of the French nation had played out all the best cards in his hand, and his adversaries began to pour in their trumps; when there were two kings in Spain employed perpetually in running away from one another; when there was a queen in England, with such rogues for ministers as have never been seen, no, not in our own day; and a general, of whom it may be severely argued whether he was the meanest miser or the greatest hero in the world; when Mrs. Masham had not yet put Madam Marlborough's nose out of joint; when people had their ears cut off for writing very meek political pamphlets; and very large full-bottomed wigs were just beginning to be worn with powder; and the face of Louis the Great, as his was handed in to him behind the bed-curtains, was, when issuing thence, observed to look longer, older and more dismal daily.

About the year 1705 that is, in the glorious reign of Queen Anne, there existed certain characters, and befell a series of

*The story of 'Catherine,' which appeared in Fraser's Magazine in 1839-40, was written by Mr. Thackeray, under the name of Ikey Solomons, Jun., to counteract the injurious influence of some popular fictions of that day, which made heroes of highwaymen and burglars, and created a false sympathy for the vicious and criminal. With this purpose the author chose for the subject of his story a woman named Catherine Hayes, who was burned at Tyburn, in 1726, for the deliberate murder of her husband, under very revolting circumstances. Mr. Thackeray's aim obviously was to describe the career of this wretched woman and her associates with such fidelity to truth as to exhibit the danger and folly of investing such persons with heroic and romantic qualities.
adventures, which, since they are strictly in accordance with the present fashionable style and taste; since they have been already partly described in the ‘Newgate Calendar’; since they are (as shall be seen anon) agreeably low, delightfully disgusting, and at the same time eminently pleasing and pathetic, may properly be set down here.

And though it may be said, with some considerable show of reason, that agreeably low and delightfully disgusting characters have already been treated, both copiously and ably, by some eminent writers of the present (and, indeed, of future) ages; though to tread in the footsteps of the immortal Fagin requires a genius of inordinate stride, and to go a robbing after the late though deathless Turpin, the renowned Jack Sheppard, or the embryo Duval may be impossible, and not an infringement, but a wasteful indication of ill will toward the eighth commandment; though it may, on the one hand, be asserted that only vain coxcombs would dare to write on subjects already described by men really and deservedly eminent; on the other hand, that these subjects have been described so fully that nothing more can be said about them; on the third hand (allowing, for the sake of argument, three hands to one figure of speech), that the public has heard so much of them as to be quite tired of rogues, thieves, cutthroats, and Newgate altogether—though all these objections may be urged, and each is excellent, yet we intend to take a few more pages from the ‘Old Bailey Calendar,’ to bless the public with one more draught from the Stone Jug,* yet awhile to listen, hurdle-mounted, and riding down the Oxford Road, to the bland conversation of Jack Ketch, and to hang with him round the neck of his patient, at the end of our and his history. We give the reader fair notice that we shall tickle him with a few such scenes of villainy, throat-cutting, and bodily suffering in general, as are not to be found, no not in ——; never mind comparisons, for such are odious.

In the year 1705, then, whether it was that the Queen of England did feel seriously alarmed at the notice that a French prince should occupy the Spanish throne; or whether she was tenderly attached to the Emperor of Germany; or whether she was obliged to fight out the quarrel of William of Orange, who made us pay and fight for his Dutch provinces; or whether poor old Louis Quatorze did really frighten her; or whether Sarah Jennings and her husband wanted to make a fight, knowing how much they should gain by it—whatever the reason was, it was evident that the war was to continue, and there was almost as much soldiering and recruiting, parading, pike and gun-exercising, flag-flying, drum-beating, powder-blazing, and military enthusiasm as we can all remember in the year 1801, what time the Corsican upstart menaced our shores. A recruiting party and captain of Cutts' regiment (which had been so mangled at Blenheim the year before) were now in Warwickshire; and having their depot at Warwick, the captain and his attendant, the corporal, were used to travel through the country, seeking for heroes to fill up the gaps in Cutts' corps—and for adventures to pass away the weary time of a country life.

* This, as your ladyship is aware, is the polite name for her Majesty’s prison of Newgate.

Our Captain Plume and Sergeant Kite (it was at this time, by the way, that those famous recruiting officers were playing their pranks in Shrewsbury) were occupied very much in the same manner with Farquhar's heroes. They roamed from Warwick to Stratford, and from Stratford to Birmingham, persuading the swains of Warwickshire to leave the plow for the pike, and dispatching, from time to time, small detachments of recruits to extend Marlborough's lines, and to act as food for the hungry cannon at Ramillies and Malplaquet.

Of those two gentlemen who are about to act a very important part in our history, one only was probably a native of Britain—we say probably, because the individual in question was himself quite uncertain, and, it must be added, entirely indifferent about his birthplace; but speaking the English language, and having been during the course of his life pretty generally engaged in the British service, he had a tolerably fair claim to the majestic title of Briton. His name was Peter Brock, otherwise Corporal Brock, of Lord Cutts' regiment of dragoons; he was of age about fifty-seven (even that point has never been ascertained); in height, about five feet six inches; in weight, nearly thirteen stone; with a chest that the celebrated Leitch himself might envy; an arm that was like an opera dancer's leg; a stomach so elastic that it would accommodate itself to any given or stolen quantity of food; a great aptitude for strong liquors; a considerable skill in singing chansons de table of not the most delicate kind; he was a lover of jokes, of which he made many, and passably bad; when pleased, simply coarse, boisterous, and jovial; when angry, a perfect demon; bullying, cursing, storming, fighting, as issometimes the wont with gentlemen of his cloth and education.

Mr. Brock was strictly, what the Marquis of Rodil styled himself in a proclamation to his soldiers after running away, a hijo de la guerra—a child of war. Not seven cities, but one or two regiments, might contend for the honor of giving him birth; for his mother, whose name he took, had acted as camp follower to a Royalist regiment; had then obeyed the Parliamentarians; died in Scotland when Monk was commanding in that country; and the first appearance of Mr. Brock in a public capacity displayed him as a fifer in the general's own regiment of Coldstreamers, when they marched from Scotland to London, and from a republic at once into a monarchy. Since that period Brock had been always with the army; he had had, too, some promotion, for he spake of having a command at the battle of the Boyne; though probably (as he never mentioned the fact) upon the losing side. The very year before this narrative commences he had been one of Mordaunts' forlorn hope at Schellenberg, for which service he was promised a pair of colors; he lost them, however, and was almost shot (but fate did not ordain that his career should close in that way) for drunkenness and insubordination immediately after the battle; but having in some measure reinstated himself by a display of much gallantry at Blenheim, it was found advisable to send him to England for the purpose of recruiting, and remove him altogether from the regiment, where his gallantry only rendered the example of his riot more dangerous.

Mr. Brock's commander was a slim young gentleman of twenty-six, about whom there was likewise a history, if one would take the trouble to inquire. He was a Bavarian by birth (his mother being an English lady), and enjoyed along with a dozen other brothers the title of count; eleven of these, of course, were penniless; one or two were priests, one a monk, six or seven in various military services, and the elder at home at Schloss Galgenstein breeding horses, hunting wild boars, swindling tenants, living in a great house with small means, obliged to be sordid at home all the year to be splendid for a month at the capital, as is the way with many other noblemen. Our young count, Count Gustavus Adolphus Maximilian von Galgenstein, had been in the service of the French as page to a nobleman; then of his Majesty's garde du corps; then a lieutenant and captain in the Bavarian service; and when, after the battle of Blenheim, two regiments of Germans came over to the winning side, Gustavus Adolphus Maximilian found himself among them; and at the epoch when this story commences had enjoyed English pay for a year or more. It is unnecessary to say how he exchanged into his present regiment; how it appeared that, before her marriage, handsome John Churchill had known the young gentleman's mother, when they were both penniless hangers-on at Charles the Second's court;—it is, we say, quite useless to repeat all the scandal of which we are perfectly masters, and to trace step by step the events of his history. Here, however, was Gustavus Adolphus, in a small inn, in a small village of Warwickshire, on an autumn evening in the year 1705; and at the very moment when this history begins he and Mr. Brock, his corporal and friend, were seated at a round table before the kitchen fire, while a small groom of the establishment was leading up and down on the village green, before the inn door, two black, glossy, long-tailed, barrel-bellied, thick-flanked, arch-necked, Roman-nosed Flanders horses, which were the property of the two gentlemen now taking their ease at the Bugle Inn. The two gentlemen were seated at their ease at the inn table, drinking mountain wine; and if the reader fancies from the sketch which we have given of their lives, or from his own blindness and belief in the perfectibility of human nature, that the sun of that autumn evening shone upon any two men in country or city, at desk or harvest, at court or at Newgate, drunk or sober, who were greater rascals than Count Gustavus Galgenstein and Corporal Peter Brock, he is egregiously mistaken, and his knowledge of human nature is not worth a fig. If they had not been two prominent scoundrels what earthly business should we have in detailing their histories? What would the public care for them? Who would meddle with dull virtue, humdrum sentiment, or stupid innocence when vice, agreeable vice, is the only thing which the readers of romances care to hear?
Catherine: A Story.

The little horse-boy, who was leading the two black Flanders horses up and down the green, might have put them in the stable for any good that the horses got by the gentle exercise which they were now taking in the cool evening air, as their owners had not ridden very far or very hard, and there was not a hair turned of their sleek shining coats; but the lad had been especially ordered so to walk the horses about until he received further commands from the gentlemen reposing in the Bugle kitchen; and the idlers of the village seemed so pleased with the beasts, and their smart saddles and shining bridles, that it would have been a pity to deprive them of the pleasure of contemplating such an innocent spectacle. Over the count's horse was thrown a fine red cloth, richly embroidered in yellow worsted, a very large count's coronet and a cipher at the four corners of the covering; and under this might be seen a pair of gorgeous silver stirrups, and above it a couple of silver-mounted pistols reposing in bearskin holsters; the bit was silver too, and the horse’s head was decorated with many smart ribbons. Of the corporal’s steed, suffice it to say, that the ornaments were in brass, as bright, though not perhaps so valuable, as those which decorated the captain’s animal. The boys, who had been at play on the green, first paused and entered into conversation with the horse-boy; then the village matrons followed; and afterward, sauntering by ones and twos, came the village maidens, who love soldiers as flies love treacle; presently the males began to arrive, and lo! the parson of the parish, taking his evening walk with Mrs. Dobbs, and the four children his offspring, at length joined himself to his flock.

To this audience the little hostler explained that the animals belonged to two gentlemen now reposing at the Bugle: one young with gold hair, the other old with grizzled locks; both in red coats; both in jack-boots; putting the house into a bustle, and calling for the best. He then discoursed to some of his own companions regarding the merits of the horses; and the parson, a learned man, explained to the villagers that one of the travelers must be a count, or at least had a count’s horsecloth; pronounced that the stirrups were of real silver, and checked the impetuosity of his son, William Nassau Dobbs, who was for mounting the animals, and who expressed a longing to fire off one of the pistols in the holsters.

As this family discussion was taking place, the gentlemen whose appearance had created so much attention came to the door of the inn, and the elder and stouter was seen to smile at his companion; after which he strolled leisurely over the green, and seemed to examine with much benevolent satisfaction the assemblage of villagers who were staring at him and the quadrupeds.

Mr. Brock, when he saw the parson’s band and cassock, took off his beaver reverently, and saluted the divine. ‘I hope your reverence won’t balk the little fellow,’ said he; ‘I think I heard him calling out for a ride, and whether he should like my horse or his lordship’s horse I am sure it is all one. Don’t be afraid, sir! the horses are not tired; we have only come seventy mile to-day, and Prince Eugene once rode a matter of fifty-two leagues (a hundred and fifty miles), sir, upon that horse between sunrise and sunset.’

‘Gracious powers! on which horse?’ said Dr. Dobbs very solemnly.

‘On this, sir—on mine, Corporal Brock of Cutts’ black gelding, William of Nassau. The prince, sir, gave it me after Blenheim fight, for I had my own legs carried away by a cannon ball just as I cut down two of Sauerkrauter’s regiment, who had made the prince prisoner.

‘Your own legs, sir!’ said the doctor. ‘Gracious goodness! this is more and more astonishing.’

‘No, no, not my own legs, my horse’s I mean, sir; and the prince gave me William of Nassau that very day.’

To this no direct reply was made; but the doctor looked at Mrs. Dobbs, and Mrs. Dobbs and the rest of the children at her eldest son, who grinned and said, ‘Isn’t it wonderful?’ The corporal to this answered nothing, but resuming his account, pointed to the other horse and said, ‘That horse, sir—good as mine is—that horse, with the silver stirrups, is his Excellency’s horse, Captain Count Maximilian Gustavus Adolphus von Galgenstein, captain of horse and of the Holy Roman Empire’ (he lifted here his hat with much gravity, and all the crowd, even to the parson, did likewise). ‘We call him George of Denmark, sir, in compliment to her Majesty’s husband: he is Blenheim too, sir; Marshal Tallard rode him on that day, and you know how he was taken prisoner by the count.’

‘George of Denmark, Marshal Tallard, William of Nassau! This is strange indeed, most wonderful! Why, sir, little are you aware that there are before you, at this moment, two other living beings who bear these venerated names! My boys, stand forward! Look here, sir: these children have been respectively named after our late sovereign and the husband of our present queen.’

‘And very good names too, sir; aye, and very noble little fellows too; and I propose that, with your reverence and your ladyship’s leave, William Nassau here shall ride on George of Denmark, and George of Denmark shall ride on William of Nassau.’

When this speech of the corporal’s was made the whole crowd set up a loyal hurrah; and, with much gravity, the two little boys were lifted up into the saddles; and the corporal leading one, intrusted the other to the horse-boy, and so together marched stately up and down the green.

The popularity which Mr. Brock gained by this maneuver was very great; but with regard to the names of the horses and children, which coincided so extraordinarily, it is but fair to state that the christening of the quadrupeds had only taken place about two minutes before the dragoon’s appearance on the green. For if the fact must be confessed, he, while seated near the inn window, had kept a pretty wistful eye upon all going on without; and the horses marching thus to and fro for the wonderment of the village were only placards or advertisements for the riders.

There was, besides the boy now occupied with the horses, and the landlord and landlady of the Bugle Inn, another person connected with that establishment—a very smart, handsome, vain, giggling servant girl, about the age of sixteen, who went by the familiar name of Cat, and attended upon the gentlemen in the parlor, while the landlady was employed in cooking their supper in the kitchen. This young person had been educated in the village poorhouse, and having been pronounced by Dr. Dobbs and the schoolmaster the id lest, dirt iest, and most passionate little minx with whom either had ever had to do, she was, after receiving a very small portion of literary instruction (indeed it must be stated that the young lady did not know her letters), bound apprentice at the age of nine years to Mrs. Score, her relative, and landlady of the Bugle Inn.

If Miss Cat, or Catherine Hall, was a slattern and a minx, Mrs. Score was a far superior shrew; and for the seven years of her apprenticeship the girl was completely at her 'mistress' mercy. Yet though wondrously stingy, jealous, and violent, while her maid was idle and extravagant, and her husband seemed to abet the girl, Mrs. Score put up with the wench's airs, idleness, and caprices without ever wishing to dismiss her from the Bugle. The fact is that Miss Catherine was a great beauty; and for about two years, since her fame had begun to spread, the custom of the inn had also increased vastly. When there was a debate whether the farmers, on their way from market, would take t'other pot, Catherine, by appearing with it, would straightway cause the liquor to be swallowed and paid for; and when the traveler who proposed riding that night and sleeping at Coventry or Birmingham, was asked by Miss Catherine whether he would like a fire in his bedroom, he generally was induced to occupy it, although he might before have vowed to Mrs. Score that he would not for a thousand guineas be absent from home that night. The girl had, too, half a dozen lovers in the village; and these were bound in honor to spend their pence at the alehouse she inhabited. Oh! woman, lovely woman! what strong resolves canst thou twist round thy little finger! what gunpowder passions canst thou kindle with a single sparkle of thine eye! what lies and fribble nonsense canst thou make us listen to, as they were gospel truth or splendid wit! above all, what bad liquor canst thou make us swallow when thou puttest a kiss within the cup—and we are content to call the poison wine!

The mountain wine at the Bugle was, in fact, execrable; but Mrs. Cat, who served it to the two soldiers, made it so agreeable to them, that they found it a passable, even a pleasant task, to swallow the contents of a second bottle. The miracle had been wrought instantaneously on her appearance; for whereas at that very moment the count was employed in cursing the wine, the landlady, the wine grower, and the English nation generally, when the young woman entered and (choosing so to interpret the oaths) said, 'Coming, your honor; I think your honor called'—Gustavus Adolphus whistled, stared at her very hard, and seeming quite dumbstricken by her appearance, contented himself by swallowing a whole glass of mountain by way of reply.

Mr. Brock was, however, by no means so confounded as his captain; he was thirty years older than the latter, and in the course of fifty years of military life had learned to look on the most dangerous enemey, or the most beautiful woman, with the like daring, devil-may-care determination to conquer.

'My dear Mary,' then said that gentleman, 'his honor is a lord; as good as a lord, that is; for all he allows such humble fellows as I am to drink with him.'

Catherine dropped a low courtesy, and said, 'Well, I don't know if you are joking a poor country girl, as all you soldier gentlemen do; but his honor looks like a lord; though I never see one, to be sure.'

'Then,' said the captain, gathering courage, 'how do you know I look like one, pretty Mary?'

'Pretty Catherine; I mean Catherine, if you please, sir.'

Here Mr. Brock burst into a roar of laughter, and shouting with many oaths that she was right at first, invited her to give him what he called a buss.

Pretty Catherine turned away from him at this request, and muttered something about 'Keep your distance, low fellow! buss indeed! poor country girl,' etc., etc., placing herself, as if for protection, on the side of the captain. That gentleman looked also very angry; but whether at the sight of innocence so outraged, or the insolence of the corporal for daring to help himself first, we cannot say. 'Hark ye, Mr. Brock,' he cried very fiercely, 'I will suffer no such liberties in my presence; remember, it is only my condescension which permits you to share my bottle in this way; take care I don't give you instead a taste of my cane.' So saying, he, in a protecting manner, placed one hand round Mrs. Catherine's waist, holding the other clenched very near to the corporal's nose.

Mrs. Catherine, for her share of this action of the count's, dropped another courtesy, and said, 'Thank you, my lord.' But Galgenstein's threat did not appear to make any impression on Mr. Brock, as indeed there was no reason that it should; for the corporal, at a combat of fisticuffs, could have pounded his commander into a jelly in ten minutes; so he contented himself by saying, 'Well, noble captain, there's no harm done; it is an honor for poor old Peter Brock to be at table with you, and I am sorry, sure enough.'

'In truth, Peter, I believe thou art; thou hast good reason, eh, Peter? But never fear, man; had I struck thee I never would have hurt thee.'

'I know you would not,' replied Brock, laying his hand on his heart with much gravity; and so peace was made, and healths were drank. Miss Catherine condescended to put her lips to the captain's glass, who swore that the wine was thus converted into nectar; and although the girl had not previously heard of that liquor, she received the compliment as a compliment, and smiled and simpered in return.

The poor thing had never before seen anybody so handsome or so finely dressed as the count; and, in the simplicity of her coquetry, allowed her satisfaction to be quite visible. Nothing could be more clumsy than the gentleman's mode of complimenting her; but for this, perhaps, his speeches were more effective than others more delicate would have been; and though she said to each, 'Oh, now, my lord,' and 'La, captain, how can you flatter one so?' and 'Your honor's laughing at me,' and made such polite speeches as are used on these occasions, it was manifest from the flutter and blush, and the grin of satisfaction which lighted up the buxom features of the little country beauty, that the count's first operations had been highly successful. When, following up his attack, he produced from his neck a small locket (which had been given him by a Dutch lady at the Brill), and begged Miss Catherine to wear it for his sake, and chucked her under the chin and called her his little rosebud, it was pretty clear how things would go; anybody who could see the expression of Mr. Brock's countenance at this event might judge of the progress of the irresistible High Dutch conqueror.

Being of a very vain, communicative turn, our fair barmaid gave her two companions not only a pretty long account of herself, but of many other persons in the village, whom she could perceive from the window opposite to which she stood. 'Yes, your honor,' said she—'my lord, I mean; sixteen last March, though there's a many girl in the village that at my age is quite chits. There's Polly Randall now, that red-haired girl along with Thomas Curtis; she's seventeen if she's a day, though he is the very first sweetheart she has had. Well, as I am saying: I was bred up here in the village—father and mother died very young, and I was left a poor orphan—well, bless us! if Thomas haven't kissed her!—to the care of Mrs. Score, my aunt, who has been a mother to me—a stepmother, you know—and I've been to Stratford fair, and to Warwick many a time; and there's two people who have offered to marry me, and ever so many who want to, and I won't have none—only a gentleman, as I've always said; not a poor clodpole, like Tom there with the red waistcoat (he was one that asked me), nor a drunken fellow like Sam Blacksmith yonder, him whose wife has got the black eye, but a real gentleman, like—'

'Like whom, my dear?' said the captain, encouraged.

'La, sir, how can you? Why, like our squire, Sir John, who rides in such a mortal fine gold coach; or, at least, like the parson, Dr. Dobbs—that's he in the black gown, walking with Madam Dobbs in red.'

'And are those his children?'

'Yes; two girls and two boys; and only think, he calls one William Nassau, and one George Denmark—isn't it odd?' And from the parson Mrs. Catherine went on to speak of several humble personages of the village community, who, as they are not necessary to our story, need not be described at full length. It was when, from the window, Corporal Brock saw the altercation between the worthy divine and his son respecting the latter's ride, that he judged it a fitting time to step out on the green, and to bestow on the two horses those famous historical names which we have just heard applied to them.

Mr. Brock's diplomacy was, as we have stated, quite successful; for, when the parson's boys had ridden and retired along with their mamma and papa, other young gentlemen of humbler rank in the village were placed upon George of Denmark and William of Nassau, the corporal joking and laughing with all the grown-up people. The women, in spite of Mr. Brock's age, his red nose, and a certain squint of his eye, vowed the corporal was a jewel of a man; and among the men his popularity was equally great.

'How much dost thee get, Thomas Clodpole,' said Mr. Brock to a countryman (he was the man whom Mrs. Catherine had described as her suitor), who had laughed loudest at some of his jokes—'how much dost thee get for a week's work' now?'

Mr. Clodpole, whose name was really Bullock, stated that his wages amounted to 'three shillings and a puddn.'

'Three shillings and a puddn!—monstrous!—and for this you toil like a galley slave, as I have seen them in Turkey and America—aye, gentlemen, and in the country of Prester John! You shiver out of bed on icy winter mornings to break the ice for Ball and Dapple to drink.'

'Yes, indeed,' said the person addressed, who seemed astounded at the extent of the corporal's information.

'Or you clean pigsty, and take dung down to meadow; or you act watchdog and tend sheep; or you sweep a scythe over a great field of grass; and when the sun has scorched the eyes out of your head, and sweated the flesh out of your bones, and well nigh fried the soul out of your body, you go home, to what? Three shillings a week and a puddn! Do you get pudding every day?'

'No; only Sundays.'

'Do you get money enough?'

'No, sure.'

'Do you get beer enough?'

'Oh, no, never!' said Mr. Bullock quite resolutely.

'Worthy Clodpole, give us thy hand; it shall have beer enough this day, or my name's not Corporal Brock. Here's the money, boy! There are twenty pieces in this purse; and how do you think I got 'em? and how do you think I shall get others when these are gone? By serving her sacred Majesty, to be sure. Long life to her, and down with the French King!'

Bullock, a few of the men, and two or three of the boys piped out a hurrah in compliment to this speech of the corporal's; but it was remarked that the greater part of the crowd drew back—the women whispering ominously to them and looking at the corporal.

'I see, ladies, what it is,' said he. 'You are frightened, and think I am a crimp come to steal your sweethearts away. What! call Peter Brock a double-dealer? I tell you what, boys, Jack Churchill himself has shaked this hand, and drunk a pot with me: do you think he'd shake hands with a rogue? Here's Tummas Clodpole has never had beer enough, and here am I will stand treat to him and any other gentleman; am I good enough company for him? I have money, look you, and like to spend it; what should I be doing dirty actions for—hay, Tummas?'

A satisfactory reply to this query was not, of course, expected by the corporal nor uttered by Mr. Bullock; and the end of the dispute was that he and three or four of the rustic bystanders were quite convinced of the good intentions of their new friend, and accompanied him back to the Bugle, to regale upon the promised beer. Among the corporal's guests was one young fellow whose dress would show that he was somewhat better to do in the world than Clodpole and the rest of the sunburnt ragged troop who were marching toward the alehouse. This man was the only one of his hearers who, perhaps, was skeptical as to the truth of his stories; but as soon as Bullock accepted the invitation to drink, John Hayes, the carpenter (for such was his name and profession), said, 'Well, Thomas, if thou goest, I will go too.'

'I know thee wilt,' said Thomas; 'thou'lt goo anywhere Catty Hall is, provided thou canst goo for nothing.'

'Nay, I have a penny to spend as good as the corporal here.'

'A penny to keep, you mean. For all your love for the lass at the Bugle, did thee ever spend a shilling in the house? Thee wouldn't go now but that I am going too, and the captain here stands treat.'

'Come, come, gentlemen, no quarreling,' said Mr. Brock. 'If this pretty fellow will join us, amen say I; there's lots of liquor, and plenty of money to pay the score. Comrade Tummas, give us thy arm. Mr. Hayes, you're a hearty cock, I make no doubt, and all such are welcome. Come along, my gentlemen farmers; Mr. Brock shall have the honor to pay for you all.' And with this Corporal Brock, accompanied by Messrs. Hayes, Bullock, Blacksmith, Baker's-boy, Butcher, and one or two others, adjourned to the inn, the horses being, at the same time, conducted to the stable.

Although we have, in this quiet way, and without any flourishing of trumpets, or beginning of chapters, introduced Mr. Hayes to the public; and although, at first sight, a sneaking carpenter's boy may seem hardly worthy of the notice of an intelligent reader who looks for a good cutthroat or highwayman for a hero, or a pickpocket at the very least, this gentleman's words and actions should be carefully studied by the public, as he is destined to appear before them under very polite and curious circumstances during the course of this history. The speech of the rustic Juvenal, Mr. Clodpole, had seemed to infer that Hayes was at once careful of his money and a warm admirer of Mrs. Catherine of the Bugle; and both the charges were perfectly true. Hayes' father was reported to be a man of some substance; and young John, who was performing his apprenticeship in the village, did not fail to talk very big of his pretensions to fortune—of his entering, at the close of his indentures, into partnership with his father—and of the comfortable farm and house over which Mrs. John Hayes, whoever she might be, would one day preside. Thus, next to the barber and butcher, and above even his own master, Mr. Hayes took rank in the village; and it must not be concealed that his representation of wealth had made some impression upon Mrs. Hall, toward whom the young gentleman had cast the eyes of affection. If he had been tolerably well looking, and not pale, rickety, and feeble as he was; if even he had been ugly, but withal a man of spirit, it is probable the girl’s kindness for him would have been much more decided. But he was a poor weak creature, not to compare with honest Thomas Bullock by at least nine inches; and so notoriously timid, selfish, and stingy that there was a kind of shame in receiving his addresses openly; and what encouragement Mrs. Catherine gave him could only be in secret.

But no mortal is wise at all times; and the fact was that Hayes, who cared for himself intensely, had set his heart upon winning Catherine, and loved her with a desperate, greedy eagerness and desire of possession which makes passions for women often so fierce and unreasonable among very cold and selfish men. His parents (whose frugality he had inherited) had tried in vain to wean him from this passion, and had made many fruitless attempts to engage him with women who possessed money and desired husbands; but Hayes was, for a wonder, quite proof against their attractions; and, though quite ready to acknowledge the absurdity of his love for a penniless ale-house servant girl, nevertheless persisted in it doggedly. ‘I know I’m a fool,’ said he; ‘and what’s more, the girl does not care for me; but marry her I must, or I think I shall just die; and marry her I will.’ For very much to the credit of Miss Catherine’s modesty, she had declared that marriage was with her a sine quâ non, and had dismissed, with the loudest scorn and indignation, all propositions of a less proper nature.

Poor Thomas Bullock was another of her admirers, and had offered to marry her; but three shillings a week and a puddn was not to the girl’s taste, and Thomas had been scornfully rejected. Hayes had also made her a direct proposal. Catherine did not say no; she was too prudent; but she was young and could wait; she did not care for Mr. Hayes yet enough to marry him (it did not seem, indeed, in the young woman’s nature to care for anybody), and she gave her adorer flatteringly to understand that, if nobody better appeared in the course of a few years, she might be induced to become Mrs. Hayes. It was a dismal prospect for the poor fellow to live upon the hope of being one day Mrs. Catherine’s pie-aller.

In the meantime she considered herself free as the wind, and permitted herself all the innocent gayeties which that ‘chartered libertine’ a coquette can take. She flirted with all the bachelors, widowers, and married men in a manner which did extraordinary credit to her years; and let not the reader fancy such pastimes unnatural at her early age. The ladies—Heaven bless them!—are, as a general rule, coquettes from babyhood upward. Little she’s of three years old play little airs and graces upon small heroes of five; simpering misses of nine make attacks upon young gentlemen of twelve; and at sixteen a well-grown girl, under encouraging circumstances—say, she is pretty, in a family of ugly elder sisters, or an only child and heiress, or an humble wench at a country inn, like our fair Catherine—is at the very pink and prime of her coquetry; they will jilt you at that age with an ease and arch infantile simplicity that never can be surpassed in maturer years.

Miss Catherine, then, was a franche coquette, and Mr. John Hayes was miserable. His life was passed in a storm of mean passions and bitter jealousies, and desperate attacks upon the indifference rock of Mrs. Catherine’s heart, which not all his tempest of love could beat down. Oh, cruel, cruel pangs of love unrequited! Mean rogues feel them as well as great heroes. Lives there a man in Europe who has not felt them many times? Who has not knelt and fawned and supplicated and wept and cursed and raved all in vain, and passed long wakeful nights with ghosts of dead hopes for company—shadows of buried remembrances that glide out of their graves of nights and whisper, ‘We are dead now, but we were once, and we made you happy, and we come now to mock you; despair, oh, lover, despair and die’? Oh, cruel pangs! Dismal nights! Now a sly demon creeps under your nightcap, and drops into your ear those soft, hope-breathing, sweet words, uttered on the well-remembered evening; there in the drawer of your dressing table (along with the razors and Macassar oil) lies the dead flower that Lady Amelia Wilhelmina wore in her bosom on the night of a certain ball—the corpse of a glorious hope that seemed once as if it would live forever, so strong was it, so full of joy and sunshine; there in your writing desk, among a crowd of unpaid bills, is the dirty scrap of paper, thimble-sealed, which came in company with a pair of muffetees of her knitting (she was a butcher's daughter, and did all she could, poor thing!), begging 'you would ware them at collidge, and think of her who'—married a public house three weeks afterward, and cares for you no more now than she does for the potboy. But why multiply instances, or seek to depict the agony of poor, mean-spirited John Hayes? No mistake can be greater than that of fancying such great emotions of love are only felt by virtuous or exalted men; depend upon it, Love, like Death, plays havoc among the pauperum tabernas, and sports with rich and poor, wicked and virtuous, alike. I have often fancied, for instance, on seeing the haggard, pale, young old-clothesman who wakes the echoes of our street with his nasal cry of 'Clo'!—I have often, I said, fancied that, besides the load of exuvial coats and breeches under which he staggers, there is another weight on him—an atrior cura at his tail—and while his unshorn lips and nose together are performing that mocking, boisterous, Jack-indifferent cry of 'Clo', clo'! who knows what woeful utterances are crying from the heart within? There he is chaffering with the footman at No. 7 about an old dressing gown; you think his whole soul is bent only on the contest about the garment. Pshaw! there is, perhaps, some faithless girl in Holywell Street who fills up his heart; and that desultory Jew-boy is a peripatetic hell! Take another instance—take the man in the beef shop in St. Martin's Court. There he is, to all appearances quite calm; before the same round of beef—from morning till sundown—for hundreds of years, very likely. Perhaps when the shutters are closed, and all the world tired and silent, there is he, silent but untired—cutting, cutting, cutting. You enter, you get your meat to your liking, you depart; and, quite unmoved, on, on he goes, reaping ceaselessly the great harvest of beef. You would fancy that if Passion ever failed to conquer, it had in vain assailed the calm bosom of that man. I doubt it, and would give much to know his history. Who knows what furious Ætna flames are raging underneath the surface of that calm flesh mountain—who can tell me that that calmness itself is not despair?

The reader, if he does not now understand why it was that Mr. Hayes agreed to drink the corporal's proffered beer, had better just read the foregoing remarks over again, and if he does not understand then, why, small praise to his brains. Hayes could not bear that Mr. Bullock should have a chance of seeing, and perhaps making love to, Mrs. Catherine in his absence; and though the young woman never diminished her coquetries, but, on the contrary, rather increased them in his presence, it was still a kind of dismal satisfaction to be miserable in her company.

On this occasion the disconsolate lover could be wretched to his heart’s content; for Catherine had not a word or a look for him, but bestowed all her smiles upon the handsome stranger who owned the black horse. As for poor Tummas Bullock, his passion was never violent; and he was content in the present instance to sigh and drink beer. He sighed and drank, sighed and drank, and drank again, until he had swallowed so much of the corporal’s liquor as to be induced to accept a guinea from his purse also; and found himself, on returning to reason and sobriety, a soldier of Queen Anne’s.

But oh! fancy the agonies of Mr. Hayes when, seated with the corporal’s friends at one end of the kitchen, he saw the captain at the place of honor, and the smiles which the fair maid bestowed upon him; when, as she lightly whisked past him with the captain’s supper, she, pointing to the locket that once reposed on the breast of the Dutch lady at the Brill, looked archly on Hayes and said, ‘See, John, what his lordship has given me’; and when John’s face became green and purple with rage and jealousy, Mrs. Catherine laughed ten times louder, and cried, ‘Coming, my lord,’ in a voice of shrill triumph that bored through the soul of Mr. John Hayes and left him gasping for breath.

On Catherine’s other lover, Mr. Thomas, this coquetry had no effect; he, and two comrades of his, had by this time quite fallen under the spell of the corporal; and hope, glory, strong beer, Prince Eugene, pairs of colors, more strong beer, her blessed Majesty, plenty more strong beer, and such subjects, martial and bacchic, whirled through their dizzy brains at a railroad pace.

And now, if there had been a couple of experienced reporters present at the Bugle Inn, they might have taken down a conversation on love and war—the two themes discussed by the two parties occupying the kitchen—which, as the parts were sung together, duet-wise, formed together some very curious harmonies. Thus, while the captain was whispering the softest nothings the corporal was shouting the fiercest combats of the war; and, like the gentleman at Penelope’s table, on it exiguus præxis præliæ tota bero. For example:

Captain.—‘What do you say to a silver trimming, pretty Catherine? Don’t you think a scarlet riding cloak, handsomely laced, would become you wonderfully well?—and a gray hat with a blue feather—and a pretty nag to ride on—and all the soldiers to present arms as you pass, and say, There goes the captain's lady? What do you think of a side box at Lincoln's Inn playhouse, or of standing up to a minuet with my Lord Marquis at—?'

_Corporal._—' The ball, sir, ran right up to his elbow, and was found the next day by Surgeon Splinter of ours—where do think, sir? Upon my honor as a gentleman, it came out of the nape of his—'

_Captain._—'Necklace—and a sweet pair of diamond earrings, mayhap—and a little shower of patches, which ornament a lady's face wondrously—and a leettle rouge—though, egad! such peach-cheeks as yours don't want it; fie! Mrs. Catherine, I should think the birds must come and peck at them as if they were fruit—'

_Corporal._—'Over the wall; and three-and-twenty of our fellows jumped after me. By the Pope of Rome, friend Tummus, that was a day! Had you seen how the mounseers looked when four-and-twenty rampaging he-devils, sword and pistol, cut and thrust, pell-mell came tumbling into the redoubt! Why, sir, we left in three minutes as many artillerymen's heads as there were cannon balls. It was, "Ah, sacré!" "D— you, take that!" "Oh, mon Dieu!" run him through. "Ventrebleu!" and it was ventrebleu with him, I warrant you: for _bleu_, in the French language, means 'through'; and _ventre_—why, you see, ventre means—'

_Captain._—'Waists, which are worn now excessive long; and for the hoops, if you could but see them—stap my vitals, my dear, but there was a lady at Warwick's assembly (she came in one of my lord's coaches) who had a hoop as big as a tent: you might have dined under it comfortably—ha! ha! 'pon my faith, now—'

_Corporal._—'And there we found the Duke of Marlborough seated along with Marshal Tallard, who was endeavoring to drown his sorrow over a cup of Johannisberger wine; and a good drink too, my lads, only not to compare to Warwick beer. "Who was the man who has done this?" said our noble general. I stepped up. "How many heads was it," says he, "that you cut off?" "Nineteen," says I, "besides wounding several." When he heard it (Mr. Hayes, you don't drink) I'm blust if he didn't burst into tears! "Noble, noble fellow," says he. "Marshal, you must excuse me if I am pleased to hear of the destruction of your countrymen. Noble, noble fellow!—here's a hundred guineas for you." Which sum he placed in my hand. "Nay," says the marshal, "the man has done his duty;" and, pulling out a magnificent gold, diamond-hilted snuffbox, he gave me—'

Mr. Bullock—'What, a goold snuffbox? Wauns, but thee vast in luck, corporal!'

Corporal.—'No, not the snuffbox, but—a pinch of snuff—ha! ha! run me through the body if he didn't! Could you but have seen the smile on Jack Churchill's grave face at this piece of generosity! So beckoning Colonel Cadogan up to him, he pinched his ear and whispered—'

Captain.—"May I have the honor to dance a minuet with your ladyship?" The whole room was in titters at Jack's blunder; for, as you know very well, poor Lady Susan has a wooden leg. Ha! ha! fancy a minuet and a wooden leg, hey, my dear?'

Mrs. Catherine.—'Giggle—giggle—giggle; he! he! he! Oh, captain, you rogue, you—'

Second table.—'Haw! haw! haw! Well, you be a foony mon, sergeant, zure enoff.'

This little specimen of the conversation must be sufficient. It will show pretty clearly that each of the two military commanders was conducting his operations with perfect success. Three of the detachment of five attacked by the corporal surrendered to him; Mr. Bullock, namely, who gave in at a very early stage of the evening, and ignominiously laid down his arms under the table, after standing not more than a dozen volleys of beer; Mr. Blacksmith's-boy, and a laborer whose name we have not been able to learn. Mr. Butcher himself was on the point of yielding when he was rescued by the furious charge of a detachment that marched to his relief; his wife, namely, who, with two squalling children, rushed into the Bugle, boxed Butcher's ears, and kept up such a tremendous fire of oaths and screams upon the corporal that he was obliged to retreat. Fixing then her claws into Mr. Butcher's hair, she proceeded to drag him out of the premises; and thus Mr. Brock was overcome. His attack upon John Hayes was a still greater failure; for that young man seemed to be invincible by drink, if not by love; and at the end of the drinking bout was a great deal more cool than the corporal himself; to whom he wished a very polite good-evening as calmly he took his hat to depart. He turned to look at Catherine, to be sure, and then he was not quite so calm; but Catherine did not give any reply to his good-night. She was seated at the captain's table playing at cribbage with him; and though Count Gustavus Maximilian lost every game, he won more than he lost, sly fellow—and Mrs. Catherine was no match for him.

It is to be presumed that Hayes gave some information to Mrs. Score, the landlady; for, on leaving the kitchen, he was seen to linger for a moment in the bar; and very soon after Mrs. Catherine was called away from her attendance on the count, who, when he asked for a sack and toast, was furnished with those articles by the landlady herself; and, during the half hour in which he was employed in consuming his drink, M. de Galgenstein looked very much disturbed and out of humor, and cast his eyes to the door perpetually; but no Catherine came. At last, very sulkily, he desired to be shown to bed, and walked as well as he could (for, to say truth, the noble count was by this time somewhat unsteady on his legs) to his chamber. It was Mrs. Score who showed him to it, and closed the curtains, and pointed triumphantly to the whiteness of the sheets.

‘It’s a very comfortable room,’ said she, ‘though not the best in the house; which belongs of right to your lordship’s worship; but our best room has two beds, and Mr. Corporal is in that, locked and double locked, with his three tipsy recruits. But your honor will find this here bed comfortable and well aired; I’ve slept in it myself this eighteen years.’

‘What, my good woman, you are going to sit up, eh? It’s cruel hard on you, madam.’

‘Sit up, my lord? Bless you, no! I shall have half of our Cat’s bed, as I always do when there’s company.’ And with this Mrs. Score courtesied and retired.

Very early the next morning the active landlady and her bustling attendant had prepared the ale and bacon for the corporal and his three converts, and had set a nice white cloth for the captain’s breakfast. The young blacksmith did not eat with much satisfaction; but Mr. Bullock and his friend betrayed no sign of discontent, except such as may be consequent upon an evening’s carouse. They walked very contentedly to be registered before Dr. Dobbs, who was also justice of the peace, and went in search of their slender bundles, and took leave of their few acquaintances without much regret; for the gentlemen had been bred in the workhouse, and had not therefore a large circle of friends.

It wanted only an hour of noon, and the noble count had not descended. The men were waiting for him, and spent much of the queen’s money (earned by the sale of their bodies overnight) while thus expecting him. Perhaps Mrs. Catherine expected him too, for she had offered many times to run up—with my lord's boots—with the hot water—to show Mr. Brock the way, who sometimes condescended to officiate as barber. But on all these occasions Mrs. Score had prevented her; not scolding, but with much gentleness and smiling. At last, more gentle and smiling than ever, she came downstairs and said, 'Catherine, darling, his honor the Count is mighty hungry this morning, and vows he could pick the wing of a fowl. Run down, child, to Farmer Brigg's and get one; pluck it before you bring it, you know, and we will make his lordship a pretty breakfast.'

Catherine took up her basket, and away she went by the backyard, through the stables. There she heard the little horse boy whistling and hissing after the manner of horse-boys; and there she learned that Mrs. Score had been inventing an ingenious story to have her out of the way. The hostler said he was just going to lead the two horses round to the door. The corporal had been, and they were about to start on the instant for Stratford.

The fact was that Count Gustavus Adolphus, far from wishing to pick the wing of a fowl, had risen with a horror and loathing for everything in the shape of food, and for any liquor stronger than small-beer. Of this he had drunk a cup, and said he should ride immediately to Stratford; and when, on ordering his horses, he had asked politely of the landlady 'why the d—- she always came up, and why she did not send the girl,' Mrs. Score informed the count that her Catherine was gone out for a walk along with the young man to whom she was to be married, and would not be visible that day. On hearing this the captain ordered his horses that moment, and abused the wine, the bed, the house, the landlady, and everything connected with the Bugle Inn.

Out the horses came: the little boys of the village gathered round; the recruits, with bunches of ribbons in their beavers, appeared presently; Corporal Brock came swaggering out, and, slapping the pleased blacksmith on the back, bade him mount his horse, while the boys hurrah'd. Then the captain came out, gloomy and majestic; to him Mr. Brock made a military salute, which clumsily, and with much grinning, the recruits imitated. 'I shall walk on with these brave fellows, your honor, and meet you at Stratford,' said the corporal. 'Good,' said the captain as he mounted. The landlady courted; the children hurrah'd more; the little horse-boy, who held the bridle with one hand and the stirrup with the other, and expected a crown piece from such a noble gentleman, got only a kick and a curse as Count von Galgenstein shouted, 'D—— you all, get out of the way!' and galloped off; and John Hayes, who had been sneaking about the inn all the morning, felt a weight off his heart when he saw the captain ride off alone.

Oh, foolish Mrs. Score! Oh, dolt of a John Hayes! If the landlady had allowed the captain and the maid to have their way, and meet but for a minute before recruits, sergeant, and all, it is probable that no harm would have been done, and that this history would never have been written.

When Count von Galgenstein had ridden half a mile on the Stratford road, looking as black and dismal as Napoleon galloping from the romantic village of Waterloo, he espied, a few score yards onward, at the turn of the road, a certain object which caused him to check his horse suddenly, brought a tingling red into his cheeks, and made his heart to go thump—thump! against his side. A young lass was sauntering slowly along the footpath, with a basket swinging from one hand, and a bunch of hedge-flowers in the other. She stopped once or twice to add a fresh one to her nosegay, and might have seen him, the captain thought; but no, she never looked directly toward him, and still walked on. Sweet innocent! she was singing as if none were near; her voice went soaring up to the clear sky, and the captain put his horse on the grass that the sound of the hoofs might not disturb the music.

When the kine had given a pailful [sang she]
And the sheep came bleating home,
Poll, who knew it would be healthful,
Went a walking out with Tom.
Hand in hand, sir, on the land, sir,
As they walked to and fro,
Tom made jolly love to Polly,
But was answered no, no, no.*

The captain had put his horse on the grass that the sound of his hoofs might not disturb the music; and now he pushed its head on to the bank, where straightway George of Denmark began chewing of such a salad as grew there. And now the captain slid off stealthily; and smiling comically, and hitching up his great jack-boots, and moving forward with a jerking tiptoe step, he, just as she was trilling the last o-o-o of the last no in the above poem of Tom D'Urfey, came up to her, and touching her lightly on the waist, said:

'My dear, your very humble servant.'

Mrs. Catherine (you know you have found her out long ago!) gave a scream and a start, and would have turned pale if she could. As it was she only shook all over, and said:

'Oh, sir, how you did frighten me!'

'Frighten you, my rosebud! why, run me through, I'd die rather than frighten you. Gad, child, tell me now, am I so very frightful?'

'Oh, no, your honor, I didn't mean that; only I wasn't thinking to meet you here, or that you would ride so early at all; for, if you please, sir, I was going to fetch a chicken for your lordship's breakfast, as my mistress said you would like one; and I thought, instead of going to Farmer Brigg's, down Birmingham way, as she told me, I'd go to Farmer Bird's where the chickens is better, sir—my lord, I mean.'

'Said I'd like a chicken for breakfast, the old cat? Why, I told her I would not eat a morsel to save me—I was so dru—, I mean I ate such a good supper last night—and I bade her to send me a pot of small-beer, and to tell you to bring it; and the wretch said you were gone out with your sweetheart——'

'What! John Hayes, the creature? Oh, what a naughty story-telling woman!'

'You had walked out with your sweetheart, and I was not to see you any more; and I was mad with rage, and ready to kill myself; I was, my dear.'

'Oh, sir! pray, pray don't.'

'For your sake, my sweet angel?'

'Yes, for my sake, if such a poor girl as me can persuade noble gentlemen.'

'Well, then, for your sake, I won't; no, I'll live; but why live? Hell and fury, if I do live I'm miserable without you; I am—you know I am, you adorable, beautiful, cruel, wicked Catherine!'

Catherine's reply to this was 'La, bless me! I do believe your horse is running away.' And so he was; for having finished his meal in the hedge, he first looked toward his master and paused, as it were, irresolutely; then, by a sudden impulse, flinging up his tail and his hind legs, he scampered down the road.

Mrs. Hall ran lightly after the horse, and the captain after Mrs. Hall; and the horse ran quicker and quicker every moment, and might have led them a long chase—when lo! debouching from a twist in the road, came the detachment of cavalry and infantry under Mr. Brock. The moment he was out of sight of the village that gentleman had desired the blacksmith to dismount, and had himself jumped into the saddle, maintaining the subordination of his army by drawing a pistol and swearing that he would blow out the brains of any person who attempted to run. When the captain's horse came near the detachment he paused and suffered himself to be caught by Tummas Bullock, who held him until the owner and Mrs. Catherine came up.

Mr. Bullock looked comically grave when he saw the pair; but the corporal graciously saluted Mrs. Catherine, and said it was a fine day for walking.

'La, sir, and so it is,' said she, panting in a very pretty and distressing way, 'but not for running. I do protest—ha!—and vow that I really can scarcely stand. I'm so tired of running after that naughty, naughty horse!'

'How do, Cattern?' said Thomas. 'Zee, I be going a soldiering because thee wouldn't have me.' And here Mr. Bullock grinned. Mrs. Catherine made no sort of reply, but protested once more she should die of running. If the truth were told, she was somewhat vexed at the arrival of the corporal's detachment, and had had very serious thoughts of finding herself quite tired just as he came in sight.

A sudden thought brought a smile of bright satisfaction in the captain's eyes. He mounted the horse, which Tummas still held. 'Tired, Mrs. Catherine,' said he, 'and for my sake? By Heavens, you shan't walk a step farther! No, you shall ride back with a guard of honor! Back to the village, gentlemen—right-about face! Show those fellows, corporal, how to right-about face. Now, my dear, mount behind me on Snowball; he's easy as a sedan. Put your dear little foot on the toe of my boot. There now—up!—jump; hurrah!'

'That's not the way, captain,' shouted out Thomas, still holding on to the rein as the horse began to move. 'Thee won't go with him, will thee, Catty?'

But Mrs. Catherine, though she turned away her head, never let go her hold round the captain's waist; and he, swearing a dreadful oath at Thomas, struck him across the face and hands with his riding whip. The poor fellow, who at the first cut still held on to the rein, dropped it at the second, and as the pair galloped off, sat down on the roadside and fairly began to weep.

'March, you dog!' shouted out the corporal a minute after. And so he did; and when next he saw Mrs. Catherine she was the captain's lady sure enough, and wore a gray hat with a blue feather, and red riding coat trimmed with silver lace. But Thomas was then on a bare-backed horse, which Corporal Brock was flanking round a ring, and he was so occupied looking between his horse's ears that he had no time to cry then, and at length got the better of his attachment.

This being a good opportunity for closing Chapter I, we ought, perhaps, to make some apologies to the public for introducing them to characters that are so utterly worthless, as we confess all our heroes, with the exception of Mr. Bullock, to be. In this we have consulted nature and history rather than the prevailing taste and the general manner of authors. The amusing novel of 'Ernest Maltravers,' for instance, opens with a seduction; but then it is performed by people of the strictest virtue on both sides; and there is so much religion and philosophy in the heart of the seducer, so much tender innocence in the soul of the seduced, that—bless the little dears!—their very peccadilloes make one interested in them; and their naughtiness becomes quite sacred, so deliciously is it described. Now if we are to be interested by rascally actions, let us have them with plain faces, and let them be performed, not by virtuous philosophers, but by rascals. Another clever class of novelists adopt the contrary system, and create interest by making their rascals perform virtuous actions. Against these popular plans we here solemnly appeal. We say, let your rogues in novels act like rogues, and your honest men like honest men; don't let us have any juggling and thimble-rigging with virtue and vice, so that at the end of three volumes the bewildered reader shall not know which is which; don't let us find ourselves kindling at the generous qualities of thieves, and sympathizing with the rascalities of noble hearts. For our own part, we know what the public likes, and have chosen rogues for our characters, and have taken a story from the 'Newgate Calendar,' which we hope to follow out to edification. Among the rogues, at least, we will have nothing that shall be mistaken for virtues. And if the British public (after calling for three or four editions) shall give up, not only our rascals, but the rascals of all other authors, we shall be content; we shall apply to government for a pension, and think that our duty is done.

CHAPTER II.

IN WHICH ARE DEPICTED THE PLEASURES OF A SENTIMENTAL ATTACHMENT.

It will not be necessary, for the purpose of this history, to follow out very closely all the adventures which occurred to Mrs. Catherine from the period when she quitted the Bugle and became the captain's lady; for although it would be just as easy to show as not that the young woman, by following the man of her heart, had only yielded to an innocent impulse, and by remaining with him for a certain period had proved the depth and strength of her affection for him—although we might make very tender and eloquent apologies for the error of both parties, the reader might possibly be disgusted at such descriptions and such arguments; which, besides, are already done to his hand in the novel of 'Ernest Maltravers' before mentioned.

From the gentleman's manner toward Mrs. Catherine, and from his brilliant and immediate success, the reader will doubtless have concluded, in the first place, that Gustavus Adolphus had not a very violent affection for Mrs. Cat; in the second place, that he was a professional lady-killer, and therefore likely at some period to resume his profession; thirdly, and to conclude, that a connection so begun must, in the nature of things, be likely to end speedily.

And so, to do the count justice, it would, if he had been allowed to follow his own inclination entirely; for (as many young gentlemen will, and yet no praise to them) in about a week he began to be indifferent, in a month to be weary, in two months to be angry, in three to proceed to blows and curses; and, in short, to repent most bitterly the hour when he had ever been induced to present Mrs. Catherine the toe of his boot for the purpose of lifting her on to his horse.

'Egad!' said he to the corporal one day, when confiding his griefs to Mr. Brock, 'I wish my toe had been cut off before ever it served as a ladder to this little vixen.'

'Or perhaps your honor would wish to kick her downstairs with it?' delicately suggested Mr. Brock.

'Kick her! why, the wench would hold so fast by the banisters that I could not kick her down, Mr. Brock. 'To tell you a bit of a secret, I have tried as much—not to kick her—no, no, not kick her, certainly; that's ungentlemanly—but to induce her to go back to that cursed pothouse where we fell in with her. I have given her many hints—'

'Oh, yes, I saw your honor give her one yesterday—with a mug of beer. By the laws, as the ale run all down her face, and she clutched a knife to run at you, I don't think I ever saw such a she-devil! That woman will do for your honor some day if you provoke her.'

'Do for me?' No, hang it, Mr. Brock, never. She loves every hair of my head, sir; she worships me, corporal. Egad, yes! she worships me; and would much sooner apply a knife to her own weazand than scratch my little finger!'

'I think she does,' said Mr. Brock.

'I'm sure of it,' said the captain. 'Women, look you, are like dogs: they like to be ill-treated; they like it, sir; I know they do; I never had anything to do with a woman in my life but I ill-treated her, and she liked me the better.'

'Mrs. Hall ought to be very fond of you, then, sure enough!' said Mr. Corporal.

'Very fond; ha, ha! corporal, you wag you—and so she is very fond. Yesterday, after the knife and beer scene—no wonder I threw the liquor in her face; it was so dev'lish flat that no gentleman could drink it; and I told her never to draw it till dinner time—'

'Oh, it was enough to put an angel in a fury!' said Brock.

'Well, yesterday, after the knife business, when you had got the carver out of her hand, off she flings to her bedroom, will not eat a bit of dinner forsooth, and remains locked up for a couple of hours. At two o'clock afternoon (I was over a tankard) out comes the little she-devil, her face pale, her eyes bleared, and the tip of her nose as red as fire with sniffling and weeping. Making for my hand, "Max," says she, "will you forgive me?" "What!" says I. "Forgive a murderess?" says I. "No, curse me, never!" "Your cruelty will kill me," sobbed she. "Cruelty be hanged!" says I; "didn't you draw that beer an hour before dinner?" She could say nothing to this, you know, and I swore that every time she did so I would fling it into her face again. Whereupon back she flounced to her chamber, where she wept and stormed until night time.'

'When you forgave her?'

'I did forgive her, that's positive. You see, I had supped at the Rose along with Tom Trippet and half a dozen pretty fellows; and I had eased a great fat-headed Warwickshire land-junker—what d'ye call him?—squire, of forty pieces; and I'm dev'lish good-humored when I've won, and so Cat and I made it up; but I've taught her never to bring me stale beer again—ha, ha!'

This conversation will explain a great deal better than any description of ours, however eloquent, the state of things as between Count Maximilian and Mrs. Catherine, and the feelings which they entertained for each other. The woman loved him, that was the fact. And, as we have shown in the previous chapter how John Hayes, a mean-spirited fellow as ever breathed, in respect of all other passions a pygmy, was in the passion of love a giant, and followed Mrs. Catherine with a furious longing which might seem at the first to be foreign to his nature, in the like manner, and playing at cross-purposes, Mrs. Hall had become smitten of the captain; and, as he said truly, only liked him the better for the brutality which she received at his hands. For it is my opinion, madam, that love is a bodily infirmity, from which humankind can no more escape than from smallpox; and which attacks every one of us, from the first duke in the peerage down to Jack Ketch inclusive; which has no respect for rank, virtue, or roguery in man, but sets each in his turn in a fever; which breaks out the deuce knows how or why, and, raging its appointed time, fills each individual of the one sex with a blind fury and longing for some one of the other (who may be pure, gentle, blue-eyed, beautiful, and good; or vile, shrewish, squinting, hunchbacked, and hideous, according to circumstances and luck); which dies away, perhaps in the natural course, if left to have its way, but which contradiction causes to rage more furiously than ever. Is not history, from the Trojan war upward and downward, full of instances of such strange inexplicable passions? Was not Helen, by the most moderate calculation, ninety years of age when she went off with his Royal Highness Prince Paris of Troy? Was not Mme. La Vallière ill made, bleary-eyed, tallow-complexioned, scraggy, and with hair like tow? Was not Wilkes the ugliest, charmingest, most successful man in the world? Such instances might be carried out so as to fill a volume; but cui bono? Love is fate, and not will; its origin not to be explained, its progress irresistible; and the best proof of this may be had at Bow Street any day, where, if you ask any officer of the establishment how they take most thieves, he will tell you at the houses of the women. They must see the dear creatures though they hang for it; they will love though they have their necks in the halter. And with regard to the other position, that ill usage on the part of the man does not destroy the affection of the woman, have we not numberless police reports showing how, when a bystander would beat a husband for beating his wife, man and wife fall together on the interloper and punish him for his meddling?

These points, then, being settled to the satisfaction of all parties, the reader will not be disposed to question the assertion that Mrs. Hall had a real affection for the gallant count, and grew, as Mr. Brock was pleased to say, like a beefsteak, more tender as she was thumbed. Poor thing, poor thing! his flashy airs and smart looks had overcome her in a single hour; and no more is wanted to plunge into love over head and ears; no more is wanted to make a first love with—and a woman's first love lasts forever (a man's twenty-fourth or twenty-fifth is perhaps the best): you can't kill it, do what you will; it takes root and lives, and even grows, never mind what the soil may be in which it is planted, or the bitter weather it must bear—often as one has seen a wallflower grow—out of a stone.

In the first weeks of their union the count had at least been liberal to her; she had a horse and fine clothes, and received abroad some of those flattering attentions which she held at such high price. He had, however, some ill luck at play, or had been forced to pay some bills, or had some other satisfactory reason for being poor, and his establishment was very speedily diminished. He argued that, as Mrs. Catherine had been accustomed to wait on others all her life, she might now wait upon herself and him; and when the incident of the beer arose she had been for some time employed as the count’s housekeeper, with unlimited superintendence over his comfort, his cellar, his linen, and such matters as bachelors are delighted to make over to active female hands. To do the poor wretch justice, she actually kept the man’s menage in the best order; nor was there any point of extravagance with which she could be charged, except a little extravagance of dress displayed on the very few occasions when he condescended to walk abroad with her, and extravagance of language and passion in the frequent quarrels they had together. Perhaps in such a connection as subsisted between this precious couple these faults are inevitable on the part of the woman. She must be silly and vain, and will pretty surely therefore be fond of dress; and she must, disguise it as she will, be perpetually miserable and brooding over her fall, which will cause her to be violent and quarrelsome.

Such, at least, was Mrs. Hall; and very early did the poor vain, misguided wretch begin to reap what she had sown.

For a man, remorse under these circumstances is perhaps uncommon. No stigma affixes on him for betraying a woman; no bitter pangs of mortified vanity; no insulting looks of superiority from his neighbor, and no sentence of contemptuous banishment is read against him; these all fall on the tempted, and not on the tempter, who is permitted to go free. The chief thing that a man learns after having successfully practiced on a woman is to despise the poor wretch whom he has won. The game, in fact, and the glory, such as it is, is all his, and the punishment alone falls upon her. Consider this, ladies, when charming young gentlemen come to woo you with soft speeches. You have nothing to win except wretchedness and scorn and desertion. Consider this, and be thankful to your Solomons for telling it.

It came to pass, then, that the count had come to have a perfect contempt and indifference for Mrs. Hall—how should he not for a young person who had given herself up to him so easily?—and would have been quite glad of any opportunity of parting with her. But there was a certain lingering shame about the man, which prevented him from saying at once and abruptly, 'Go!' and the poor thing did not choose to take such hints as fell out in the course of their conversation and quarrels. And so they kept on together, he treating her with simple insult, and she hanging on desperately, by whatever feeble twig she could find, to the rock beyond which all was naught, or death, to her.

Well, after the night with Tom Trippet and the pretty fellows at the Rose, to which we have heard the count allude in the conversation just recorded, Fortune smiled on him a good deal; for the Warwickshire squire, who had lost forty pieces on that occasion, insisted on having his revenge the night after, when, strange to say, a hundred and fifty more found their way into the pouch of his Excellency the Count. Such a sum as this quite set the young nobleman afloat again, and brought back a pleasing equanimity to his mind, which had been a good deal disturbed in the former difficult circumstances; and in this, for a little and to a certain extent, poor Cat had the happiness to share. He did not alter the style of his establishment, which consisted, as before, of herself and a small person who acted as scourer, kitchen wench, and scullion, Mrs. Catherine always putting her hand to the principal pieces of the dinner; but he treated his mistress with tolerable good humor, or, to speak more correctly, with such bearable brutality as might be expected from a man like him to a woman in her condition. Besides, a certain event was about to take place which not unusually occurs in circumstances of this nature, and Mrs. Catherine was expecting soon to lie in.

The captain, distrusting naturally the strength of his own paternal feelings, had kindly endeavored to provide a parent for the coming infant; and to this end had opened a negotiation with our friend Mr. Thomas Bullock, declaring that Mrs. Cat should have a fortune of twenty guineas, and reminding Tummas of his ancient flame for her; but Mr. Tummas, when this proposition was made to him, declined it, with many oaths, and vowed that he was perfectly satisfied with his present bachelor condition. In this dilemma Mr. Brock stepped forward, who declared himself very ready to accept Mrs. Catherine and her fortune; and might possibly have become the possessor of both had not Mrs. Cat, the moment she heard of the proposed arrangement, with fire in her eyes, and rage—oh, how bitter!—in her heart, prevented the success of the measure by proceeding incontinently to the first justice of the peace, and there swearing before his worship who was the father of the coming child.
Catherine: A Story.

This proceeding, which she had expected would cause not a little indignation on the part of her lord and master, was received by him, strangely enough, with considerable good humor; he swore that the wenchant had served him a good trick, and was rather amused at the anger, the outbreak of fierce rage and contumely, and the wretched, wretched tears of heart-sick desperation which followed her announcement of this step to him. For Mr. Brock, she repelled his offer with scorn and loathing, and treated the notion of a union with Mr. Bullock with yet fiercer contempt. Marry him indeed! a workhouse pauper carrying a brown-bess! She would have died sooner, she said, or robbed on the highway. And so, to do her justice, she would; for the little minx was one of the vainest creatures in existence, and vanity (as I presume everybody knows) becomes the principle in certain women's hearts—their moral spectacles, their conscience, their meat and drink, their only rule of right and wrong.

As for Mr. Tummas, he, as we have seen, was quite as unfriendly to the proposition as she could be; and the corporal, with a good deal of comical gravity, vowed that, as he could not be satisfied in his dearest wishes, he would take to drinking for a consolation; which he straightway did.

'Come, Tummas,' said he to Mr. Bullock, 'since we can't have the girl of our hearts, why, hang it, Tummas, let's drink her health!' To which Bullock had no objection. And so strongly did the disappointment weigh upon honest Corporal Brock that even when, after unheard-of quantities of beer, he could scarcely utter a word, he was seen absolutely to weep, and, in accents almost unintelligible, to curse his confounded ill luck at being deprived, not of a wife, but of a child; he wanted one so, he said, to comfort him in his old age.

The time of Mrs. Catherine's couche drew near, arrived, and was gone through safely. She presented to the world a chopping boy, who might use, if he liked, the Galgenstein arms with a bar-sinister, and in her new cares and duties had not so many opportunities as usual of quarreling with the count; who, perhaps, respected her situation, or at least was so properly aware of the necessity of quiet to her that he absented himself from home morning, noon, and night.

The captain had, it must be confessed, turned these con-continued absences to a considerable worldly profit, for he played incessantly; and, since his first victory over the Warwickshire squire, Fortune had been so favorable to him that he had at various intervals amassed a sum of nearly a thousand pounds, which he used to bring home as he won; and which he deposited in a strong iron chest, cunningly screwed down by himself under his own bed. This Mrs. Catherine regularly made, and the treasure underneath it could be no secret to her. However, the noble count kept the key, and bound her by many solemn oaths (that he discharged at her himself) not to reveal to any other person the existence of the chest and its contents.

But it is not in a woman's nature to keep such secrets; and the captain, who left her for days and days, did not reflect that she would seek for confidants elsewhere. For want of a female companion she was compelled to bestow her sympathies upon Mr. Brock, who, as the count's corporal, was much in his lodgings, and who did manage to survive the disappointment which he had experienced by Mrs. Catherine's refusal of him.

About two months after the infant's birth the captain, who was annoyed by its squalling, put it abroad to nurse, and dismissed its attendant. Mrs. Catherine now resumed her household duties, and was, as before, at once mistress and servant of the establishment. As such she had the keys of the beer, and was pretty sure of the attention of the corporal, who became, as we have said, in the count's absence, his lady's chief friend and companion. After the manner of ladies, she very speedily confided to him all her domestic secrets: the causes of her former discontent; the count's ill treatment of her; the wicked names he called her; the prices that all her gowns had cost her; how he beat her; how much money he won and lost at play; how she had once pawned a coat for him; how he had four new ones, laced, and paid for; what was the best way of cleaning and keeping gold lace, of making cherry brandy, pickling salmon, etc., etc. Her confidences upon all these subjects used to follow each other in rapid succession; and Mr. Brock became, ere long, quite as well acquainted with the captain's history for the last year as the count himself—for he was careless, and forgot things; women never do. They chronicle all the lover's small actions, his words, his headaches, the dresses he has worn, the things he has liked for dinner on certain days—all which circumstances commonly are expunged from the male brain immediately after they have occurred, but remain fixed with the female.

To Brock, then, and to Brock only (for she knew no other soul), Mrs. Cat breathed, in strictest confidence, the history of the count’s winnings, and his way of disposing of them; how he kept his money screwed down in an iron chest in their room; and a very lucky fellow did Brock consider his officer for having such a large sum. He and Cat looked at the chest; it was small, but mighty strong; sure enough, and would defy pick-locks and thieves. Well, if any man deserved money the captain did (‘though he might buy me a few yards of that lace I love so,’ interrupted Cat)—if any man deserved money he did, for he spent it like a prince, and his hand was always in his pocket.

It must now be stated that M. de Galgenstein had, during Cat’s seclusion, cast his eyes upon a young lady of good fortune, who frequented the Assembly at Birmingham, and who was not a little smitten by his title and person. The ‘four new coats, laced, and paid for,’ as Cat said, had been purchased, most probably, by his Excellency for the purpose of dazzling the heiress; and he and the coats had succeeded so far as to win from the young woman an actual profession of love, and a promise of marriage provided pa would consent. This was obtained—for pa was a tradesman; and I suppose every one of my readers has remarked how great an effect a title has on the lower classes. Yes, thank Heaven! there is about a freeborn Briton a cringing baseness, and lickspittle awe of rank, which does not exist under any tyranny in Europe, and is only to be found here and in America.

All these negotiations had been going on quite unknown to Cat; and, as the captain had determined, before two months were out, to fling that young woman on the pave, he was kind to her in the meanwhile: people always are when they are swindling you, or meditating an injury against you.

The poor girl had much too high an opinion of her own charms to suspect that the count could be unfaithful to them, and had no notion of the plot that was formed against her. But Mr. Brock had: for he had seen many times a gilt coach with a pair of fat white horses ambling in the neighborhood of the town, and the captain on his black steed caracoling majestically by its side; and he had remarked a fat, pudgy, pale-haired woman treading heavily down the stairs of the Assembly, leaning on the captain’s arm; all these Mr. Brock had seen, not without reflection. Indeed, the count one day, in great good humor, had slapped him on his shoulder and told him that he was about speedily to purchase a regiment; when, by his great gods, Mr. Brock should have a pair of colors.
Perhaps this promise occasioned silence to Mrs. Catherine hitherto; perhaps he never would have peached at all; and perhaps, therefore, this history would never have been written, but for a small circumstance which occurred at this period.

"What can you want with that drunken old corporal always about your quarters?" said Mr. Trippet to the count one day as they sat over their wine, in the midst of a merry company, at the captain's rooms.

"What!" said he. "Old Brock? The old thief has been more useful to me than many a better man. He is brave in a row as a lion, as cunning in intrigue as a fox; he can nose a dun at an inconceivable distance, and scent out a pretty woman be she behind ever so many stone walls. If a gentleman wants a good rascal now, I can recommend him. I am going to reform, you know, and must turn him out of my service."

"And pretty Mrs. Cat?"

"Oh, curse pretty Mrs. Cat! she may go too."

"Why, you have parishes, and what not, here in England. Egad! if a gentleman were called upon to keep all his children there would be no living; no, stab my vitals! Crœsus couldn't stand it."

"No indeed," said Mr. Trippet, "you are right; and when a gentleman marries he is bound in honor to give up such low connections as are useful when he is a bachelor."

"Of course; and give them up I will when the sweet Mrs. Dripping is mine. As for the girl, you can have her, Tom Trippet, if you take a fancy to her; and as for the corporal, he may be handed over to my successor in Cutts'—for I will have a regiment to myself, that's pox; and to take with me such a swindling, pimping, thieving, brandy-faced rascal as this Brock will never do. Egad! he's a disgrace to the service. As it is, I've often a mind to have the superannuated vagabond drummed out of the corps."

Although this résumé of Mr. Brock's character and accomplishments was very just, it came, perhaps, with an ill grace from Count Gustavus Adolphus Maximilian, who had profited by all his qualities, and who certainly would never have given this opinion of them had he known that the door of his dining parlor was open, and that the gallant corporal, who was in the passage, could hear every syllable that fell from the lips of his commanding officer. We shall not say, after the fashion of the story-books, that Mr. Brock listened with a flashing eye and a distended nostril; that his chest heaved tumultuously, and that his hand fell down mechanically to his side, where it played with the brass handle of his sword. Mr. Kean would have gone through most of these bodily exercises had he been acting the part of a villain enraged and disappointed like Corporal Brock; but that gentleman walked away without any gestures of any kind, and as gently as possible. 'He'll turn me out of the regiment, will he?' says he, quite piano; and then added (con molta espressione), 'I'll do for him.'
And it is to be remarked how generally, in cases of this nature, gentlemen stick to their word.

CHAPTER III.

IN WHICH A NARCOTIC IS ADMINISTERED, AND A GREAT DEAL OF GENTEEL SOCIETY DEPICTED.

When the corporal, who had retreated to the street door immediately on hearing the above conversation, returned to the captain's lodgings and paid his respects to Mrs. Catherine, he found that lady in high good humor. The count had been with her, she said, along with a friend of his, Mr. Trippet; had promised her twelve yards of the lace she coveted so much; had vowed that the child should have as much more for a cloak; and had not left her until he had sat with her for an hour or more over a bowl of punch, which he made on purpose for her. Mr. Trippet stayed too. 'A mighty pleasant man,' said she; 'only not very wise, and seemingly a good deal in liquor.'

'A good deal indeed!' said the corporal. 'He was so tipsy just now that he could hardly stand. He and his honor were talking to Nan Fantail in the market place, and she pulled Trippet's wig off for wanting to kiss her.'

'The nasty fellow!' said Mrs. Cat, 'to demean himself with such low people as Nan Fantail, indeed! Why, upon my conscience, now, corporal, it was but an hour ago that Mr. Trippet swore he never saw such a pair of eyes as mine, and would like to cut the captain's throat for the love of me. Nan Fantail indeed!'

'Nan's an honest girl, Mme. Catherine, and was a great favorite of the captain's before someone else came in his way. No one can say a word against her—not a word.'

'And pray, corporal, who ever did?' said Mrs. Cat, rather offended. 'A nasty, angry slut! I wonder what the men can see in her?'

'She has got a smart way with her, sure enough; it's what amuses the men, and——'
‘And what? You don’t mean to say that my Max is fond of her now?’ said Mrs. Catherine, looking very fierce.

‘Oh, no; not at all; not of her—that is—’

‘Not of her!’ screamed she. ‘Of whom, then?’

‘Oh, pshaw! nonsense! Of you, my dear, to be sure; who else should he care for? And, besides, what business is it of mine?’ And herewith the corporal began whistling, as if he would have no more of the conversation. But Mrs. Cat was not to be satisfied—not she, and carried on her cross-questions.

‘Why, look you,’ said the corporal, after parrying many of these—‘why, look you, I’m an old fool, Catherine, and I must blab. That man has been the best friend I ever had, and so I was quiet; but I can’t keep it in any longer—no, hang me if I can! It’s my belief he’s acting like a rascal by you; he deceives you, Catherine; he’s a scoundrel, Mrs. Hall, that’s the truth on’t.’

Catherine prayed him to tell all he knew, and he resumed.

‘He wants you off his hands; he’s sick of you, and so brought here that fool Tom Trippet, who has taken a fancy to you. He has not the courage to turn you out of doors like a man; though indoors he can treat you like a beast. But I’ll tell you what he’ll do. In a month he will go to Coventry, or pretend to go there, on recruiting business. No such thing, Mrs. Hall; he’s going on marriage business; and he’ll leave you without a farthing, to starve or to rot, for him. It’s all arranged, I tell you; in a month you are to be starved into becoming Tom Trippet’s mistress; and his honor is to marry rich Miss Dripping, the twenty-thousand-pounder from London, and to purchase a regiment—and to get old Brock drummed out of Cutts’ too,’ said the corporal under his breath. But he might have spoken out if he chose, for the poor young woman had sunk on the ground in a real honest fit.

‘I thought I should give it her,’ said Mr. Brock as he procured a glass of water; and, lifting her on to a sofa, sprinkled the same over her. ‘Hang it, how pretty she is!’

When Mrs. Catherine came to herself again Brock’s tone with her was kind, and almost feeling. Nor did the poor wench herself indulge in any subsequent shiverings and hysterics, such as usually follow the fainting fits of persons of higher degree. She pressed him for further explanations, which he gave, and to which she listened with a great deal of calmness; nor did many tears, sobs, sighs, or exclamations of sorrow or anger escape from her: only when the corporal was taking his leave, and said to her point-blank, ‘Well, Mrs. Catherine, and what do you intend to do?' she did not reply a word, but gave a look which made him exclaim, on leaving the room:

'By Heavens! the woman means murder! I would not be the Holofernes to lie by the side of such a Judith as that—not I!' And he went his way, immersed in deep thought. When the captain returned at night she did not speak to him; and when he swore at her for being sulky she only said she had a headache, and was dreadfully ill: with which excuse Gustavus Adolphus seemed satisfied, and left her to herself.

He saw her the next morning for a moment; he was going a shooting.

Catherine had no friend, as is usual in tragedies and romances—no mysterious sorceress of her acquaintance to whom she could apply for poison—so she went simply to the apothecaries, pretending at each that she had a dreadful toothache, and procuring from them as much laudanum as she thought would suit her purpose.

When she went home again she seemed almost gay. Mr. Brock complimented her upon the alteration in her appearance; and she was enabled to receive the captain at his return from shooting in such a manner as made him remark that she had got rid of her sulks of the morning, and might sup with them, if she chose to keep her good humor. The supper was got ready, and the gentleman had the punch bowl when the cloth was cleared—Mrs. Catherine, with her delicate hands, preparing the liquor.

It is useless to describe the conversation that took place, or to reckon the number of bowls that were emptied; or to tell how Mr. Trippet, who was one of the guests, and declined to play at cards when some of the others began, chose to remain by Mrs. Catherine's side, and make violent love to her. All this might be told, and the account, however faithful, would not be very pleasing. No indeed. And here, though we are only in the third chapter of this history, we feel almost sick of the characters that appear in it, and the adventures which they are called upon to go through. But how can we help ourselves? The public will hear of nothing but rogues; and the only way in which poor authors, who must live, can act honestly by the public and themselves, is to paint such thieves as they are: not dandy, poetical, rose-water thieves, but real downright scoundrels, leading scoundrelly lives, drunken, profligate, dissolute, low, as scoundrels will be. They don't quote Plato, like Eugene Aram; or live like gentlemen, and sing the pleasantest ballads in the world, like jolly Dick Turpin; or prate eternally about τὸ ναλὸν, like that precious canting Maltravers whom we all of us have read about and pitied; or die whitewashed saints like poor 'Biss Dadsy' in 'Oliver Twist.' No, my dear madam, you and your daughters have no right to admire and sympathize with any such persons, fictitious or real; you ought to be made cordially to detest, scorn, loath, abhor, and abominate all people of this kidney. Men of genius like those whose works we have above alluded to, have no business to make these characters interesting or agreeable; to be feeding your morbid fancies, or indulging their own, with such monstrous food. For our parts, young ladies, we beg you to bottle up your tears, and not waste a single drop of them on any one of the heroes or heroines in this history; they are all rascals, every soul of them, and behave 'as sich.' Keep your sympathy for those who deserve it; don't carry it, for preference, to the Old Bailey, and grow maudlin over the company assembled there.

Just, then, have the kindness to fancy that the conversation which took place over the bowls of punch which Mrs. Catherine prepared was such as might be expected to take place where the host was a dissolute, dare-devil, libertine, captain of dragoons, the guests for the most part of the same class, and the hostess a young woman originally from a country alehouse, and for the present mistress to the entertainer of the society. They talked and they drank, and they grew tipsy; and very little worth hearing occurred during the course of the whole evening. Mr. Brock officiated, half as the servant, half as the companion of the society. Mr. Thomas Trippet made violent love to Mrs. Catherine, while her lord and master was playing at dice with the other gentlemen; and on this night, strange to say, the captain's fortune seemed to desert him. The Warwickshire squire, from whom he had won so much, had an amazing run of good luck. The captain called perpetually for more drink and higher stakes, and lost almost every throw. Three hundred, four hundred, six hundred—all his winnings of the previous months were swallowed up in the course of a few hours. The corporal looked on; and, to do him justice, seemed very grave as, sum by sum, the squire scored down the count's losses on the paper before him.

Most of the company had taken their hats and staggered off. The squire and Mr. Trippet were the only two that remained, the latter still lingering by Mrs. Catherine's sofa and table; and as she, as we have stated, had been employed all the evening in mixing the liquor for the gamesters, he was at the headquarters of love and drink, and had swallowed so much of each as hardly to be able to speak.
The dice went rattling on; the candles were burning dim, with great long wicks. Mr. Trippet could hardly see the captain, and thought, as far as his muzzy reason would let him, that the captain could not see him; so he rose from his chair as well as he could, and fell down on Mrs. Catherine's sofa. His eyes were fixed, his face was pale, his jaw hung down; and he flung out his arms and said, in a maudlin voice, 'Oh, you byoo-oo-oo-tiffle Catherine, I must have a kick-kick-iss.'

'Beast!' said Mrs. Catherine, and pushed him away. The drunken wretch fell off the sofa, and on to the floor, where he stayed; and, after snorting out some unintelligible sounds, went to sleep.

The dice went rattling on; the candles were burning dim, with great long wicks.

'Seven's the main,' cried the count. 'Four. Three to two against the caster.'

'Ponies,' said the Warwickshire squire.
Rattle, rattle, rattle, rattle, clatter, nine. Clap, clap, clap, clap, eleven. Clutter, clutter, clutter, clutter: 'Seven it is,' says the Warwickshire squire. 'That makes eight hundred, count.'

'One throw for two hundred,' said the count. 'But stop; Cat, give us some more punch.'

Mrs. Cat came forward; she looked a little pale, and her hand trembled somewhat. 'Here is the punch, Max,' said she. It was steaming hot, in a large glass. 'Don't drink it all,' said she; 'leave me some.'

'How dark it is!' said the count, eyeing it.

'It's the brandy,' says Cat.

'Well, here goes! Squire, curse you! here's your health, and bad luck to you!' and he gulped off more than half the liquor at a draught. But presently he put down the glass and cried, 'What infernal poison is this, Cat?'

'Poison!' said she. 'It's no poison. Give me the glass.' And she pledged Max, and drank a little of it. 'Tis good punch, Max, and of my brewing; I don't think you will ever get any better.' And she went back to the sofa again, and sat down, and looked at the players.

Mr. Brock looked at her white face and fixed eyes with a grim kind of curiosity. The count sputtered, and cursed the horrid taste of the punch still; but he presently took the box, and made his threatened throw.

As before, the squire beat him; and having booked his winnings, rose from the table as well as he might, and besought Corporal Brock to lead him downstairs; which Mr. Brock did.
Liquor had evidently stupefied the count; he sat with his head between his hands, muttering wildly about ill luck, seven's the main, bad punch, and so on. The street door banged to; and the steps of Brock and the squire were heard until they could be heard no more.

'Max,' said she; but he did not answer. 'Max,' said she again, laying her hand on his shoulder.

'Curse you,' said that gentleman, 'keep off, and don't be laying your paws upon me. Go to bed, you jade, or to —, for what I care; and give me first some more punch—a gallon more punch, do you hear?'

The gentleman, by the curses at the commencement of this little speech, and the request contained at the end of it, showed that his losses vexed him, and that he was anxious to forget them temporarily.

'O Max!' whimpered Mrs. Cat, 'you—don't—want—any more punch?'

'Don't! Shan't I be drunk in my own house, you cursed whimpering jade you? Get out!' And with this the captain proceeded to administer a blow upon Mrs. Catherine's cheek.

Contrary to her custom, she did not avenge it, or seek to do so, as on the many former occasions when disputes of this nature had arisen between the count and her; but now Mrs. Catherine fell on her knees, and clasping her hands, and looking pitifully in the count's face, cried, 'Oh, count, forgive me, forgive me!'

'Forgive you! What for? Because I slapped your face? Ha, ha! I'll forgive you again, if you don't mind.'

'Oh, no, no, no!' said she, wringing her hands. 'It isn't that. Max, dear Max, will you forgive me? It isn't the blow—I don't mind that; it's——'

'It's what, you—maudlin fool?'

'It's the punch!'

The count, who was more than half-seas-over, here assumed an air of much tipsy gravity. 'The punch! No, I never will forgive you that last glass of punch. Of all the foul, beastly drinks I ever tasted, that was the worst. No, I never will forgive you that punch.'

'Oh, it isn't that, it isn't that!' said she.

'I tell you it is that, — you! That punch, I say that punch was no better than paw—aw—oison.' And here the count's head sank back, and he fell to snore.

'It was poison!' said she.

'What?' screamed he, waking up at once, and spurning her away from him. 'What, you infernal murderess, have you killed me?'

'O Max! don't kill me, Max! It was laudanum—indeed it was. You were going to be married, and I was furious, and I went and got——'

'Hold your tongue, you fiend,' roared out the count; and with more presence of mind than politeness he flung the remainder of the liquor (and, indeed, the glass with it) at the head of Mrs. Catherine. But the poisoned chalice missed its mark, and fell right on the nose of Mr. Tom Trippet, who was left asleep and unobserved under the table.

Bleeding, staggering, swearing, indeed a ghastly sight, up sprang Mr. Trippet, and drew his rapier. 'Come on,' says he; 'never say die! What's the row? I'm ready for a dozen of you.' And he made many blind and furious passes about the room.

'Curse you, we'll die together!' shouted the count as he too pulled out his toledo, and sprang at Mrs. Catherine.

'Help! murder! thieves!' shrieked she. 'Save me, Mr. Trippet, save me!' and she placed that gentleman between herself and the count, and then made for the door of the bedroom, and gained it, and bolted it.

'Out of the way, Trippet,' roared the count, 'out of the way, you drunken beast! I'll murder her, I will—I'll have the devil's life.' And here he gave a swinging cut at Mr. Trippet's sword: it sent the weapon whirling clean out of his hand, and through a window into the street.

'Take my life, then,' said Mr. Trippet. 'I'm drunk, but I'm a man, and, damme! will never say die.'

'I don't want your life, you stupid fool. Hark you, Trippet, wake and be sober, if you can. That woman has heard of my marriage with Miss Dripping.'

'Twenty thousand pound,' ejaculated Trippet.

'She has been jealous, I tell you, and poisoned us. She has put laudanum into the punch.'

'What, in my punch?' said Trippet, growing quite sober, and losing his courage. 'O Lord! O Lord!'

'Don't stand howling there, but run for a doctor; 'tis our only chance.' And away ran Mr. Trippet as if the deuce were at his heels.

The count had forgotten his murderous intentions regarding his mistress, or had deferred them at least, under the consciousness of his own pressing danger. And it must be said in the praise of a man who had fought for and against Marlborough and Tallard that his courage in this trying and novel predicament never for a moment deserted him, but that he showed the greatest daring, as well as ingenuity, in meeting and averting the danger. He flew to the sideboard, where were the relics of a supper, and seizing the mustard and salt pots, and a bottle of oil, he emptied them all into a jug, into which he further poured a vast quantity of hot water. This pleasing mixture he then, without a moment's hesitation, placed to his lips, and swallowed as much of it as nature would allow him. But when he had imbibed about a quart the anticipated effect was produced, and he was enabled, by the power of this ingenious extemporaneous emetic, to get rid of much of the poison which Mrs. Catherine had administered to him.

He was employed in these efforts when the doctor entered, along with Mr. Brock and Mr. Trippet; who was not a little pleased to hear that the poisoned punch had not in all probability been given to him. He was recommended to take some of the count's mixture as a precautionary measure; but this he refused, and retired home, leaving the count under charge of the physician and his faithful corporal.

It is not necessary to say what further remedies were employed by them to restore the captain to health; but after some time the doctor, pronouncing that the danger was, he hoped, averted, recommended that his patient should be put to bed, and that somebody should sit by him; which Brock promised to do.

'That she-devil will murder me, if you don't,' gasped the poor count. 'You must turn her out of the bedroom; or break open the door if she refuses to let you in.'

And this step was found to be necessary; for, after shouting many times, and in vain, Mr. Brock found a small iron bar (indeed he had the instrument for many days in his pocket), and forced the lock. The room was empty, the window was open; the pretty barmaid of the Bugle had fled.

'The chest,' said the count—'is the chest safe?'

The corporal flew to the bed, under which it was screwed, and looked, and said, 'It is safe, thank Heaven!' The window was closed. The captain, who was too weak to stand without help, was undressed and put to bed. The corporal sat down by his side; slumber stole over the eyes of the patient; and his wakeful nurse marked with satisfaction the progress of the beneficent restorer of health.

When the captain awoke, as he did some time afterward, he found, very much to his surprise, that a gag had been placed in his mouth, and that the corporal was in the act of wheeling his bed to another part of the room. He attempted to move, and gave utterance to such unintelligible sounds as could issue through a silk handkerchief.

'If your honor stirs or cries out in the least I will cut your honor's throat,' said the corporal.

And then, having recourse to his iron bar (the reader will now see why he was provided with such an implement, for he had been meditating this coup for some days), he proceeded first to attempt to burst the lock of the little iron chest in which the count kept his treasure, and failing in this, to unscrew it from the ground; which operation he performed satisfactorily.

'You see, count,' said he calmly, 'when rogues fall out there's the deuce to pay. You'll have me drummed out of the regiment, will you? I'm going to leave it of my own accord, look you, and to live like a gentleman for the rest of my days. Schlafen sie wohl, noble captain; bon repos. The squire will be with you pretty early in the morning to ask for the money you owe him.'

With these sarcastic observations Mr. Brock departed, not by the window, as Mrs. Catherine had done, but by the door quietly, and so into the street. And when, the next morning, the doctor came to visit his patient, he brought with him a story how, at the dead of night, Mr. Brock had roused the hostler at the stables where the captain's horses were kept; had told him that Mrs. Catherine had poisoned the count, and had run off with a thousand pounds; and how he and all lovers of justice ought to scour the country in pursuit of the criminal. For this end Mr. Brock mounted the count's best horse—that very animal on which he had carried away Mrs. Catherine—and thus, on a single night, Count Maximilian had lost his mistress, his money, his horse, his corporal, and was very near losing his life.

CHAPTER IV.

IN WHICH MRS. CATHERINE BECOMES AN HONEST WOMAN AGAIN.

In this woeful plight, moneyless, wifeless, horseless, corporalless, with a gag in his mouth and a rope round his body, are we compelled to leave the gallant Galgenstein, until his friends and the progress of this history shall deliver him from his durance. Mr. Brock's adventures on the captain's horse must likewise be pretermitted; for it is our business to follow Mrs. Catherine through the window by which she made her escape, and among the various chances that befell her.

She had one cause to congratulate herself—that she had not her baby at her back; for the infant was safely housed under the care of a nurse, to whom the captain was answerable. Beyond this her prospects were but dismal; no home to fly to, but a few shillings in her pocket, and a whole heap of injuries and dark revengeful thoughts in her bosom; it was a sad task to her to look either backward or forward. Whither was she to fly? How to live? What good chance was to befriend her?
There was an angel watching over the steps of Mrs. Cat—not a good one, I think, but one of those from that unnamable place who have their many subjects here on earth, and often are pleased to extricate them from worse perplexities.

Mrs. Cat, now, had not committed murder, but as bad as murder; and as she felt not the smallest repentance in her heart—as she had, in the course of her life and connection with the captain, performed and gloried in a number of wicked coquetties, idlenesses, vanities, lies, fits of anger, slanders, foul abuses, and what not—she was fairly bound over to this dark angel whom we have alluded to; and he dealt with her, and aided her, as one of his own children.

I do not mean to say that, in this strait, he appeared to her in the likeness of a gentleman in black, and made her sign her name in blood to a document conveying over to him her soul in exchange for certain conditions to be performed by him.
Such diabolical bargains have always appeared to be unworthy of the astute personage who is supposed to be one of the parties to them; and who would scarcely be fool enough to pay dearly for that which he can have in a few years for nothing. It is not, then, to be supposed that a demon of darkness appeared to Mrs. Cat, and led her into a flaming chariot, harnessed by dragons, and careering through air at the rate of a thousand leagues a minute. No such thing: the vehicle that was sent to aid her was one of a much more vulgar description.

The 'Liverpool carryvan,' then, which in the year 1706 used to perform the journey between London and that place in ten days, left Birmingham about an hour after Mrs.
Catherine had quitted that town; and as she sat weeping on a hillside, and plunged in bitter meditation, the lumbering, jingling vehicle overtook her. The coachman was marching by the side of his horses, and encouraging them to maintain their pace of two miles an hour; the passengers had some of them left the vehicle, in order to walk up the hill; and the carriage had arrived at the top of it, and, meditating a brisk trot down the declivity, waited there until the lagging passengers should arrive, when Jehu, casting a good-natured glance upon Mrs. Catherine, asked the pretty maid whence she was come, and whether she would like a ride in his carriage. To the latter of which questions Mrs. Catherine replied truly yes; to the former her answer was that she had come from Stratford, whereas, as we very well know, she had lately quitted Birmingham.
‘Hast thee seen a woman pass this way, on a black horse, with a large bag of goold over the saddle?’ said Jehu, preparing to mount upon the roof of his coach.
‘No indeed,’ said Mrs. Cat.
‘Nor a trooper on another horse after her—no? Well, there be a mortal row down Birmingham way about sich a one. She have killed, they say, nine gentlemen at supper, and have strangled a German prince in bed. She have robbed him of twenty thousand guineas, and have rode away on a black horse.’
‘That can’t be I,’ said Mrs. Cat naively, ‘for I have but three shillings and a groat.’
‘No, it can’t be thee, truly, for where’s your bag of goold?
and, besides, thee hast got too pretty a face to do such wicked things as to kill nine gentlemen and strangle a German prince.’ ‘Law, coachman,’ said Mrs. Cat, blushing archly—‘law, coachman, do you think so?’ The girl would have been pleased with a compliment even on her way to be hanged; and the parley ended by Mrs. Catherine stepping into the carriage, where there was room for eight people at least, and where two or three individuals had already taken their places.

For these Mrs. Catherine had in the first place to make a story, which she did; and a very glib one for a person of her years and education. Being asked whither she was bound, and how she came to be alone of a morning sitting by a roadside, she invented a neat history suitable to the occasion, which elicited much interest from her fellow-passengers; one in particular, a young man, who had caught a glimpse of her face under her hood, was very tender in his attentions to her.

But whether it was that she had been too much fatigued by the occurrences of the past day and sleepless night, or whether the little laudanum which she had drunk a few hours previously now began to act upon her, certain it is that Mrs. Cat now suddenly grew sick, feverish, and extraordinarily sleepy; and in this state she continued for many hours, to the pity of all her fellow-travelers. At length the ‘carryvan’ reached the inn where horses and passengers were accustomed to rest for a few hours, and to dine; and Mrs. Catherine was somewhat awakened by the stir of the passengers, and the friendly voice of the inn servant welcoming them to dinner. The gentleman who had been smitten by her beauty now urged her very politely to descend; which, taking the protection of his arm, she accordingly did.

He made some very gallant speeches to her as she stepped out; and she must have been very much occupied by them, or rapt up in her own thoughts, or stupefied by sleep, fever, and opium, for she did not take any heed of the place into which she was going, which had she done, she would probably have preferred remaining in the coach, dinnerless and ill. Indeed the inn into which she was about to make her entrance was no other than the Bugle, from which she set forth at the commencement of this history; and which then, as now, was kept by her relative, the thrifty Mrs. Score. That good landlady, seeing a lady, in a smart hood and cloak, leaning, as if faint, upon the arm of a gentleman of good appearance, concluded them to be man and wife, and folks of quality too; and with much discrimination, as well as sympathy, led them through the public kitchen to her own private parlor, or bar, where she handed the lady an armchair, and asked what she would like to drink. By this time, and indeed at the very moment she heard her aunt’s voice, Mrs. Catherine was aware of her situation; and when her companion retired, and the landlady with much officiousness insisted on removing her hood, she was quite prepared for the screech of surprise which Mrs. Score gave on dropping it, exclaiming, ‘Why, law bless us, it’s our Catherine!’

‘I’m very ill and tired, aunt,’ said Cat; ‘and would give the world for a few hours’ sleep.’

‘A few hours and welcome, my love, and a sack posset too. You do look sadly tired and poorly, sure enough. Ah, Cat, Cat! you great ladies are sad rakes, I do believe. I wager, now, that with all your balls, and carriages and fine clothes, you are neither so happy nor so well as when you lived with your poor old aunt, who used to love you so.’ And with these gentle words, and an embrace or two, which Mrs. Catherine wondered at, and permitted, she was conducted to that very bed which the count had occupied a year previously, and undressed, and laid in it, and affectionately tucked up by her aunt, who marveled at the fineness of her clothes, as she removed them piece by piece; and when she saw that in Mrs.
Catherine's pocket there was only the sum of three-and-four-pence, said archly, 'there was no need of money, for the captain took care of that.'

Mrs. Cat did not undeceive her; and deceived Mrs. Score certainly was—for she imagined the well-dressed gentleman who led Cat from the carriage was no other than the count; and as she had heard from time to time exaggerated reports of the splendor of the establishment which he kept up, she was induced to look upon her niece with the very highest respect, and to treat her as if she were a fine lady. 'And so she is a fine lady,' Mrs. Score had said months ago when some of these flattering stories reached her, and she had overcome her first fury at Catherine's elopement. 'The girl was very cruel to leave me; but we must recollect that she is as good as married to a nobleman, and must all forget and forgive, you know.'

This speech had been made to Dr. Dobbs, who was in the habit of taking a pipe and a tankard at the Bugle, and it had been roundly reprobated by the worthy divine, who told Mrs. Score that the crime of Catherine was only the more heinous if it had been committed from interested motives; and protested that, were she a princess, he would never speak to her again. Mrs. Score thought and pronounced the doctor's opinion to be very bigoted; indeed, she was one of those persons who have a marvelous respect for prosperity, and a corresponding scorn for ill fortune. When, therefore, she returned to the public room, she went graciously to the gentleman who had led Mrs. Catherine from the carriage, and with a knowing courtesy welcomed him to the Bugle; told him that his lady would not come to dinner, but bade her say, with her best love to his lordship, that the ride had fatigued her, and that she would lie in bed for an hour or two.

This speech was received with much wonder by his lordship, who was, indeed, no other than a Liverpool tailor going to London to learn fashions; but he only smiled, and did not undeceive the landlady, who herself went off smilingly to bustle about dinner.

The two or three hours allotted to that meal by the liberal coach-masters of those days passed away, and Mr. Coachman, declaring that his horses were now rested enough, and that they had twelve miles to ride, put the steeds to, and summoned the passengers. Mrs. Score, who had seen with much satisfaction that her niece was really ill, and her fever more violent, and hoped to have her for many days an inmate in her house, now came forward, and casting upon the Liverpool tailor a look of profound but respectfulful melancholy, said, 'My lord (for I recollect your lordship quite well), the lady upstairs is so ill that it would be a sin to move her: had I not better tell coachman to take down your lordship's trunks, and the lady's, and make you a bed in the next room?'

Very much to her surprise, this proposition was received with a roar of laughter. 'Madam,' said the person addressed, 'I'm not a lord, but a tailor and draper; and as for that young woman, before to-day I never set eyes on her.'

'What!' screamed out Mrs. Score. 'Are not you the count? Do you mean to say that you aint Cat's ——? Do you mean to say that you didn't order her bed, and that you won't pay this here little bill?' And with this she produced a document by which the count's lady was made her debtor in a sum of half a guinea.

These passionate words excited more and more laughter. 'Pay it, my lord,' said the coachman; 'and then come along, for time presses.' 'Our respects to her ladyship,' said one passenger. 'Tell her my lord can't wait,' said another; and with much merriment one and all quitted the hotel, entered the coach, and rattled off.

Dumb—pale with terror and rage—bill in hand, Mrs. Score had followed the company, but when the coach disappeared her senses returned. Back she flew into the inn, overturning the hostler, not deigning to answer Dr. Dobbs (who, from behind soft tobacco fumes, mildly asked the reason of her disturbance), and, bounding upstairs like a fury, she rushed into the room where Catherine lay.

'Well, madam!' said she in her highest key, 'do you mean that you have come into this here house to swindle me? Do you dare for to come with your airs here, and call yourself a nobleman's lady, and sleep in the best bed, when you're no better nor a common tramper? I'll thank you, ma'am, to get out, ma'am. I'll have no sick paupers in this house, ma'am. You know your way to the workhouse, ma'am, and there I'll trouble you for to go.' And here Mrs. Score proceeded quickly to pull off the bedclothes; and poor Cat arose, shivering with fright and fever.

She had no spirit to answer, as she would have done the day before, when an oath from any human being would have brought half a dozen from her in return, or a knife or a plate or a leg of mutton, if such had been to her hand. She had no spirit left for such repartees; but in reply to the above words of Mrs. Score, and a great many more of the same kind—which are not necessary for our history, but which that lady uttered with inconceivable shrillness and volubility—the poor wench could say little—only sob and shiver, and gather up the clothes again, crying, 'Oh, aunt, don't speak unkind to me! I'm very unhappy, and very ill!'

'Ill, you strumpet! ill be hanged! Ill is as ill does; and if you are ill it's only what you merit. Get out! dress yourself —tramp! Get to the workhouse, and don't come to cheat me any more! Dress yourself, do you hear? Satin petticoat forsooth, and lace to her smock!'

Poor, wretched, chattering, burning, shivering, Catherine huddled on her clothes as well as she might: she seemed hardly to know or see what she was doing, and did not reply a single word to the many that the landlady let fall. Cat tottered down the narrow stairs, and through the kitchen, and to the doors, which she caught hold of, and paused a while, and looked into Mrs. Score's face, as for one more chance. 'Get out, you nasty trull!' said that lady sternly, with arms akimbo, and poor Catherine, with a most piteous scream and outgush of tears, let go of the doorpost and staggered away into the road.

'Why, no—yes—no—it is poor Catherine Hall, as I live!' said somebody starting up, shoving aside Mrs. Score very rudely, and running into the road, wig off and pipe in hand. It was honest Dr. Dobbs, and the result of his interview with Mrs.
Cat was that he gave up forever smoking his pipe at the Bugle;
and that she lay sick of a fever for some weeks in his house.

Over this part of Mrs. Cat's history we shall be as brief as possible; for, to tell the truth, nothing immoral occurred during her whole stay at the good doctor's house; and we are not going to insult the reader by offering him silly pictures of piety, cheerfulness, good sense, and simplicity, which are milk-and-water virtues after all, and have no relish with them like a good strong vice, highly peppered. Well, to be short:
Dr. Dobbs, though a profound theologian, was a very simple gentleman; and before Mrs. Cat had been a month in the house he had learned to look upon her as one of the most injured and repentant characters in the world; and had, with Mrs. Dobbs, resolved many plans for the future welfare of the young Magdalen. 'She was but sixteen, my love, recollect,' said the doctor; 'she was carried off, not by her own wish either. The count swore he would marry her; and, though she did not leave him until that monster tried to poison her, yet think what a fine Christian spirit the poor girl has shown!
She forgives him as heartily—more heartily, I am sure—than I do Mrs. Score for turning her adrift in that wicked way.' The reader will perceive some difference in the doctor's statement and ours, which we assure him is the true one; but the fact is the honest rector had had his tale from Mrs. Cat, and it was not in his nature to doubt, if she had told him a history ten times more wonderful.

The reverend gentleman and his wife then laid their heads together; and recollecting something of John Hayes' former attachment to Mrs. Cat, thought that it might be advantageously renewed, should Hayes be still constant. Having very adroitly sounded Catherine (so adroitly, indeed, as to ask her 'whether she would like to marry John Hayes?') that young woman had replied, 'No. She had loved John Hayes—he had been her early, only love; but she was fallen now, and not good enough for him.' And this made the Dobbs family admire her more and more, and cast about for means to bring the marriage to pass.

Hayes was away from the village when Mrs. Cat had arrived there; but he did not fail to hear of her illness, and how her aunt had deserted her, and the good doctor taken her in. The worthy doctor himself met Mr. Hayes on the green; and telling him that some repairs were wanting in his kitchen, begged him to step in and examine them. Hayes first said no, plump, and then no gently; and then pished, and then psah'd; and then, trembling very much, went in; and there sat Mrs. Catherine trembling very much too.

What passed between them? If your ladyship is anxious to know think of that morning when Sir John himself popped the question. Could there be anything more stupid than the conversation which took place? Such stuff is not worth repeating; no, not when uttered by people in the very gentlest of company; as for the amorous dialogue of a carpenter and an ebarmaid, it is worse still. Suffice it to say that Mr. Hayes, who had had a year to recover from his passion, and had, to all appearances, quelled it, was over head and ears again the very moment he saw Mrs. Cat, and had all his work to do again.

Whether the doctor knew what was going on I can't say; but this matter is certain, that every evening Hayes was now in the rectory kitchen, or else walking abroad with Mrs. Catherine; and whether she ran away with him, or he with her, I shall not make it my business to inquire; but certainly at the end of three months (which must be crowded up into this one little sentence) another elopement took place in the village.
'I should have prevented it, certainly,' said Dr. Dobbs—whereat his wife smiled; 'but the young people kept the matter a secret from me.' And so he would, had he known it; but though Mrs. Dobbs had made several attempts to acquaint him with the precise hour and method of the intended elopement, he peremptorily ordered her to hold her tongue. The fact is that the matter had been discussed by the rector's lady many times. 'Young Hayes,' would she say, 'has a pretty little fortune and trade of his own; he is an only son, and may marry as he likes; and though not specially handsome, generous, or amiable, has an undeniable love for Cat (who, you know, must not be particular), and the sooner she marries him, I think, the better. They can't be married at our church, you know, and——' 'Well,' said the doctor, 'if they are married elsewhere I can't help it, and know nothing about it, look you.' And upon this hint the elopement took place; which, indeed, was peaceably performed early one Sunday morning about a month after; Mrs. Hall getting behind Mr. Hayes on a pillion, and all the children of the parsonage giggling behind the window blinds to see the pair go off.

During this month Mr. Hayes had caused the banns to be published at the town of Worcester, judging rightly that in a great town they would cause no such remark as in a solitary village, and thither he conducted his lady. Oh, ill-starred John Hayes! whither do the dark fates lead you? Oh, foolish Dr. Dobbs, to forget that young people ought to honor their parents, and to yield to silly Mrs. Dobbs' ardent propensity for making matches!

The London Gazette of the 1st April, 1706, contains a proclamation by the queen for putting into execution an Act of Parliament for the encouragement and increase of seamen, and for the better and speedier manning of her Majesty's fleet, which authorizes all justices, to issue warrants to constables, petty constables, head boroughs, and tithing men to enter and, if need be, to break open the doors of any houses where they shall believe deserting seamen to be; and for the further increase and encouragement of the navy, to take able-bodied landsmen when seamen fail. This act, which occupies four columns of the Gazette, and another of similar length and meaning for pressing men into the army, need not be quoted at length here; but caused a mighty stir throughout the kingdom at the time when it was in force.

As one has seen or heard after the march of a great army a number of rogues and loose characters bring up the rear, in like manner, at the tail of a great measure of state, follow many roguish personal interests, which are protected by the main body. The great measure of reform, for instance, carried along with it much private jobbing and swindling—as could be shown were we not inclined to deal mildly with the Whigs; and this Enlistment Act, which in order to maintain the British glories in Flanders dealt most cruelly with the British people in England (it is not the first time that a man has been pinched at home to make a fine appearance abroad), created a great company of rascals and informers throughout the land, who lived upon it, or upon extortion from those who were subject to it, or not being subject to it, were frightened into the belief that they were.

When Mr. Hayes and his lady had gone through the marriage ceremony at Worcester, the former, concluding that at such a place lodging and food might be procured at a cheaper rate, looked about carefully for the meanest public house in the town where he might deposit his bride.

In the kitchen of this inn a party of men were drinking; and, as Mrs. Hayes declined, with a proper sense of her superiority, to eat in company with such low fellows, the landlady showed her and her husband to an inner apartment, where they might be served in private.

The kitchen party seemed, indeed, not such as a lady would choose to join. There was one huge lanky fellow that looked like a soldier, and had a halberd; another was habited in a sailor's costume, with a fascinating patch over one eye; and a third, who seemed the leader of the gang, was a stout man in a sailor's frock and a horseman's jack-boots, whom one might fancy, if he were anything, to be a horse marine.

Of one of these worthies Mrs. Hayes thought she knew the figure and voice; and she found her conjectures were true when, all of a sudden, three people, without with your leave or by your leave, burst into the room into which she and her spouse had retired. At their head was no other than her old friend Mr. Peter Brock; he had his sword drawn, and his finger to his lips, enjoining silence, as it were, to Mrs. Catherine. He with the patch on his eye seized incontinent on Mr. Hayes; the tall man with the halberd kept the door; two or three heroes supported the one-eyed man, who, with a loud voice, exclaimed, 'Down with your arms—no resistance! You are my prisoner, in the queen's name!'

And here, at this lock, we shall leave the whole company until the next chapter; which may possibly explain what they were.
CHAPTER V.

CONTAINS MR. BROCK’S AUTOBIOGRAPHY, AND OTHER MATTER.

‘You don’t sure believe these men?’ said Mrs. Hayes as soon as the first alarm caused by the irruption of Mr. Brock and his companions had subsided. ‘These are no magistrate’s men; it is but a trick to rob you of your money, John.’

‘I will never give up a farthing of it!’ screamed Hayes.

‘Yonder fellow,’ continued Mrs. Catherine, ‘I know, for all his drawn sword and fierce looks; his name is——’

‘Wood, madam, at your service!’ said Mr. Brock. ‘I am follower to Mr. Justice Gobble of this town; ain’t I, Tim?’ said Mr. Brock to the tall halberd-man who was keeping the door.

‘Yes indeed,’ said Tim archly; ‘we’re all followers of his honor Justice Gobble.’

‘Certainly!’ said the one-eyed man.

‘Of course!’ cried the man in the nightcap.

‘I suppose, madam, you’re satisfied now?’ continued Mr. Brock a. Wood. ‘You can’t deny the testimony of gentlemen like these; and our commission is to apprehend all able-bodied male persons who can give no good account of themselves, and enroll them in the service of her Majesty. Look at this Mr. Hayes’ (who stood trembling in his shoes). ‘Can there be a bolder, properer, straighter gentleman? We’ll have him for a grenadier before the day’s over!’

‘Take heart, John—don’t be frightened. Psha! I tell you I know the man,’ cried out Mrs. Hayes; ‘he is only here to extort money.’

‘Oh, for that matter, I do think I recollect the lady. Let me see—where was it? At Birmingham, I think—aye, at Birmingham—about the time when they tried to murder Count Gal——’

‘Oh, sir!’ here cried Madam Hayes, dropping her voice at once from a tone of scorn to one of gentlest entreaty, ‘what is it you want with my husband? I know not, indeed, if ever I saw you before. For what do you seize him? How much will you take to release him, and let us go? Name the sum; he is rich, and——’

‘Rich, Catherine!’ cried Hayes. ‘Rich! O Heavens! Sir, I have nothing but my hands to support me; I am a poor carpenter, sir, working under my father!’

‘He can give twenty guineas to be free; I know he can!’ said Mrs. Cat.

‘I have but a guinea to carry me home,’ sighed out Hayes,
'But you have twenty at home, John,' said his wife. 'Give these brave gentlemen a writing to your mother, and she will pay; and you will let us be free then, gentlemen—won't you?'

'When the money's paid, yes,' said the leader, Mr. Brock.

'Oh, in course,' echoed the tall man with the halberd. 'What's a trifling detintion, my dear?' continued he, addressing Hayes. 'We'll amuse you in your absence, and drink to the health of your pretty wife here.'

This promise, to do the halberdier justice, he fulfilled. He called upon the landlady to produce the desired liquor; and when Mr. Hayes flung himself at that lady's feet, demanding succor from her, and asking whether there was no law in the land—

'There's no law at the Three Rooks except this!' said Mr. Brock in reply, holding up a horse pistol. To which the hostess, grinning, assented, and silently went her way.

After some further solicitations, John Hayes drew out the necessary letter to his father, stating that he was pressed and would not be set free under a sum of twenty guineas; and that it would be of no use to detain the bearer of the letter, inasmuch as the gentlemen who had possession of him vowed that they would murder him should any harm befall their comrade. As a further proof of the authenticity of the letter a token was added: a ring that Hayes wore, and that his mother had given him.

The missives were, after some consultation, intrusted to the care of the tall halberdier, who seemed to rank as second in command of the forces that marched under Corporal Brock. This gentleman was called indifferently Ensign, Mr., or even Captain Macshane; his intimates occasionally in sport called him Nosey, from the prominence of that feature in his countenance; or Spindleshins, for the very reason which brought on the first Edward a similar nickname. Mr. Macshane, then, quitted Worcester, mounted on Hayes' horse, leaving all parties at the Three Rooks not a little anxious for his return.

This was not to be expected until the next morning; and a weary nuit de noces did Mr. Hayes pass. Dinner was served, and, according to promise, Mr. Brock and his two friends enjoyed the meal along with the bride and bridegroom. Punch followed, and this was taken in company; then came supper. Mr. Brock alone partook of this, the other two gentlemen preferring the society of their pipes and the landlady in the kitchen.

'Vet is a sorry entertainment, I confess,' said the ex-corporal, 'and a dismal way for a gentleman to spend his bridal night;
but somebody must stay with you, my dears; for who knows but you might take a fancy to scream out of window? and then there would be murder, and the deuce and all to pay. One of us must stay, and my friends love a pipe, so you must put up with my company until we can relieve guard.'

The reader will not, of course, expect that three people who were to pass the night, however unwillingly, together in an inn room, should sit there dumb and moody, and without any personal communication; on the contrary, Mr. Brock, as an old soldier, entertained his prisoners with the utmost courtesy, and did all that lay in his power, by the help of liquor and conversation, to render their durance tolerable. On the bridegroom his attentions were a good deal thrown away; Mr. Hayes consented to drink copiously, but could not be made to talk much; and, in fact, the fright of the seizure, the fate hanging over him should his parents refuse a ransom, and the tremendous outlay of money which would take place should they accede to it, weighed altogether on his mind so much as utterly to unman it.

As for Mrs. Cat, I don't think she was at all sorry in her heart to see the old corporal; for he had been a friend of old times—dear times to her; she had had from him, too, and felt for him not a little kindness; and there was really a very tender, innocent friendship subsisting between this pair of rascals, who relished much a night's conversation together.

The corporal, after treating his prisoners to punch in great quantities, proposed the amusement of cards, over which Mr. Hayes had not been occupied more than an hour when he found himself so excessively sleepy as to be persuaded to fling himself down on the bed, dressed as he was, and there to snore away until morning.

Mrs. Catherine had no inclination for sleep; and the corporal, equally wakeful, plied incessantly the bottle, and held with her a great deal of conversation. The sleep, which was equivalent to the absence, of John Hayes took all restraint from their talk. She explained to Brock the circumstances of her marriage, which we have already described; they wondered at the chance which had brought them together at the Three Rooks; nor did Brook at all hesitate to tell her at once that his calling was quite illegal, and that his intention was simply to extort money. The worthy corporal had not the slightest shame regarding his own profession, and cut many jokes with Mrs. Cat about her late one, her attempt to murder the count, and her future prospects as a wife.
And here, having brought him upon the scene again, we may as well shortly narrate some of the principal circumstances which befell him after his sudden departure from Birmingham; and which he narrated with much candor to Mrs. Catherine.

He rode the captain's horse to Oxford (having exchanged his military dress for a civil costume on the road), and at Oxford he disposed of George of Denmark, a great bargain, to one of the heads of colleges. As soon as Mr. Brock, who took on himself the style and title of Captain Wood, had sufficiently examined the curiosities of the university, he proceeded at once to the capital, the only place for a gentleman of his fortune and figure.

Here he read, with a great deal of philosophical indifference, in the Daily Post, the Courant, the Observator, the Gazette, and the chief journals of those days, which he made a point of examining at Button's and Will's, an accurate description of his person, his clothes, and the horse he rode, and a promise of fifty guineas' reward to any person who would give an account of him (so that he might be captured) to Captain Count Galgenstein at Birmingham, to Mr. Murfey at the Golden Ball in the Savoy, or Mr. Bates at the 'Blew Anchor in Pickadilly.' But Captain Wood, in an enormous full-bottomed periwig that cost him sixty pounds,* with high red heels to his shoes, a silver sword and a gold snuffbox, and a large wound (obtained, he said, at the siege of Barcelona), which disfigured much of his countenance, and caused him to cover one eye, was in small danger, he thought, of being mistaken for Corporal Brock, the deserter of Cutts'; and strutted along the Mall with as grave an air as the very best nobleman who appeared there. He was generally, indeed, voted to be very good company; and as his expenses were unlimited ('A few convent candlesticks, my dear,' he used to whisper, 'melt into a vast number of doubloons'), he commanded as good society as he chose to ask for; and it was speedily known as a fact throughout town that Captain Wood, who had served under His Majesty Charles III. of Spain, had carried off the diamond petticoat of Our Lady of Compostella, and lived upon the proceeds of the fraud. People were good Protestants in those days, and many a one longed to have been his partner in the pious plunder.

All surmises concerning his wealth Captain Wood, with much discretion, encouraged. He contradicted no report, but was quite ready to confirm all; and when two different rumors were positively put to him, he used only to laugh, and say,

* In the ingenious contemporary history of Moll Flanders, a periwig is mentioned as costing that sum.
'My dear sir, I don't make the stories; but I'm not called upon to deny them; and I give you fair warning that I shall assent to every one of them; so you may believe them or not, as you please.' And so he had the reputation of being a gentleman, not only wealthy, but discreet. In truth, it was almost a pity that worthy Brock had not been a gentleman born; in which case, doubtless, he would have lived and died as became his station; for he spent his money like a gentleman, he loved women like a gentleman, he would fight like a gentleman, he gambled and got drunk like a gentleman. What did he want else? Only a matter of six descents, a little money, and an estate to render him the equal of St. John or Harley. 'Ah, those were merry days!' would Mr. Brock say—for he loved, in a good old age, to recount the story of his London fashionable campaign—and when I think how near I was to become a great man, and to die perhaps a general, I can't but marvel at the wicked obstinacy of my ill luck.

'I will tell you what I did, my dear; I had lodgings in Piccadilly, as if I were a lord; I had two large periwigs, and three suits of laced clothes; I kept a little black dressed out like a Turk; I walked daily in the Mall; I dined at the politest ordinary in Covent Garden; I frequented the best of coffee-houses, and knew all the pretty fellows of the town; I cracked a bottle with Mr. Addison, and lent many a piece to Dick Steele (a sad debauched rogue, my dear); and, above all, I'll tell you what I did—the noblest stroke that sure ever a gentleman performed in my situation.

'One day, going into Will's, I saw a crowd of gentlemen gathered together, and heard one of them say, "Captain Wood! I don't know the man; but there was a Captain Wood in Southwell's regiment." Egad, it was my Lord Peterborough himself who was talking about me! So, putting off my hat, I made a most gracious congé to my lord, and said I knew him, and rode behind him at Barcelona on our entry into that town. "No doubt you did, Captain Wood," says my lord, taking my hand; "and no doubt you know me: for many more know Tom Fool than Tom Fool knows." And with this, at which all of us laughed, my lord called for a bottle, and he and I sat down and drank it together.

'Well, he was in disgrace, as you know, but he grew mighty fond of me, and—would you believe it?—nothing would satisfy him but presenting me at court! Yes, to her sacred Majesty the Queen, and my Lady Marlborough, who was in high feather. Aye, truly, the sentinels on duty used to salute me as if I were Corporal John himself! I was on the high-road to fortune. Charley Mordaunt used to call me Jack and drink canary at my chambers; I used to make one at my Lord Treasurer's levee; I had even got Mr. Army-Secretary Walpole to take a hundred guineas in a compliment, and he had promised me a majority, when bad luck turned and all my fine hopes were overthrown in a twinkling.

'You see, my dear, that after we had left that gaty, Galgenstein—ha, ha—with a gag in his mouth and twopence halfpenny in his pocket, the honest count was in the sorriest plight in the world, owing money here and there to tradesmen, a cool thousand to the Warwickshire squire, and all this on £80 a year! Well, for a little time the tradesmen held their hands, while the jolly count moved heaven and earth to catch hold of his dear corporal and his dear money bags over again, and placarded every town from London to Liverpool with descriptions of my pretty person. The bird was flown, however—the money clean gone—and when there was no hope of regaining it, what did the creditors do but clap my gay gentleman into Shrewsbury jail, where I wish he had rotted, for my part.

'But no such luck for honest Peter Brock, or Captain Wood, as he was in those days. One blessed Monday I went to wait on Mr. Secretary, and he squeezed my hand and whispered to me that I was to be major of a regiment in Virginia—the very thing; for you see, my dear, I didn't care about joining my Lord Duke in Flanders, being pretty well known to the army there. The secretary squeezed my hand (it had a £50 bill in it) and wished me joy, and called me major, and bowed me out of his closet into the anteroom; and, as gay as may be, I went off to the Tilt-yard Coffeehouse in Whitehall, which is much frequented by gentlemen of our profession, where I bragged not a little of my good luck.

'Among the company were several of my acquaintance, and among them a gentleman I did not much care to see, look you! I saw a uniform that I knew—red and yellow facings—Cutts', my dear; and the wearer of this was no other than his Excellency Gustavus Adolphus Maximilian, whom we all know of!

'He stared me full in the face, right into my eye (t'other one was patched, you know); and after standing stock-still with his mouth open, gave a step back and then a step forward, and then screeched out, "Its Brock!"

"I beg your pardon, sir," says I; "did you speak to me?"

"I'll swear it's Brock," cries Gal as soon as he hears my voice, and laid hold of my cuff (a pretty bit of mechlin as ever you saw, by the way).

"Sirrah!" says I, drawing it back and giving my lord a little touch of the fist (just at the last button of the waistcoat, my dear—a rare place if you wish to prevent a man from speaking too much; it sent him reeling to the other end of the room). "Ruffian!" says I. "Dog!" says I. "Insolent puppy and coxcomb! what do you mean by laying your hand on me?"

"Faith, major, you giv him his billyful," roared out a long Irish unattached ensign that I had treated with many a glass of Nantz at the tavern. And so, indeed, I had; for the wretch could not speak for some minutes, and all the officers stood laughing at him as he writhed and wriggled hideously.

"Gentlemen, this is a monstrous scandal," says one officer. "Men of rank and honor at fists like a parcel of carters!"

"Men of honor!" says the count, who had fetched up his breath by this time. (I made for the door, but Macshane held me and said, "Major, you are not going to shirk him, sure?"

Whereupon I gripped his hand and vowed I would have the dog’s life.)

"Men of honor!" says the count. "I tell you the man is a deserter, a thief, and a swindler! He was my corporal and ran away with a thou—"

"Dog, you lie!" I roared out, and made another cut at him with my cane, but the gentlemen rushed between us.

"Oh, bluthanowns!" says honest Macshane, "the lying scounthrel this fellow is! Gentlemen, I swear be me honor that Captain Wood was wounded at Barcelona, and that I saw him there, and that he and I ran away together at the battle of Almanza, and bad luck to us."

"You see, my dear, that these Irish have the strongest imaginations in the world, and that I had actually persuaded poor Mac that he and I were friends in Spain. Everybody knew Mac, who was a character in his way, and believed him.

"Strike a gentleman!" says I. "I'll have your blood, I will."

"This instant," says the count, who was boiling with fury; "and where you like."

"Montague House," says I. "Good," says he. And off we went. In good time too, for the constables came in at the thought of such a disturbance, and wanted to take us in charge.

"But the gentlemen present, being military men, would not hear of this. Out came Mac's rapier, and that of half a dozen others; and the constables were then told to do their duty if they liked, or to take a crown piece and leave us to ourselves. Off they went; and presently, in a couple of coaches, the count and his friends, I and mine, drove off to the fields behind Montague House. Oh, that vile coffeehouse! why did I enter it? We came to the ground. Honest Macshane was my second, and much disappointed because the second on the other side would not make a fight of it, and exchange a few passes with him; but he was an old major, a cool old hand, as brave as steel, and no fool. Well, the swords are measured, Galgenstein strips off his doublet, and I my handsome cut-velvet in like fashion. Galgenstein flings off his hat, and I handed mine over—the lace on it cost me twenty pounds. I longed to be at him, for—curse him!—I hate him, and know that he has no chance with me at sword's play.

"You'll not fight in that periwig, sure?" says Macshane. "Of course not," says I, and took it off.

'May all barbers be roasted in flames; may all periwigs, bobwigs, scratchwigs, and Ramillies cocks frizzle in purgatory from this day forth to the end of time! Mine was the ruin of me; what might I not have been now but for that wig? I gave it over to Ensign Macshane, and with it went what I had quite forgotten, the large patch which I wore over one eye, which popped out fierce, staring, and lively as was ever any eye in the world.

"Come on!" says I, and made a lunge at my count; but he sprang back (the dog was as active as a hare, and knew, from old times, that I was his master with the small sword), and his second, wondering, struck up my blade.

"I will not fight that man," says he, looking mighty pale. "I swear upon my honor that his name is Peter Brock; he was for two years my corporal, and deserted, running away with a thousand pounds of my money. Look at the fellow! what is the matter with his eye? why did he wear a patch over it? But stop!" says he. "I have more proof. Hand me my pocketbook." And from it, sure enough, he produced the infernal proclamation announcing my desertion! "See if the fellow has a scar across his left ear" (and I can't say, my dear, but what I have; it was done by a cursed Dutchman at the Boyne). "Tell me if he has not got C. R. in blue upon his right arm," (and there itissure enough). "Yonder swaggering Irishman may be his accomplice for what I know; but I will have no dealings with Mr. Brock, save with a constable for a second."

"This is an odd story, Captain Wood," said the old major who acted for the count.
"A scoundrelly falsehood regarding me and my friend!" shouted out Mr. Macshane; "and the count shall answer for it."

"Stop, stop," says the major. "Captain Wood is too gallant a gentleman, I am sure, not to satisfy the count; and will show us that he has no such mark on his arm as only private soldiers put there."

"Captain Wood," says I, "will do no such thing, major. I'll fight that scoundrel Galgenstein, or you, or any of you, like a man of honor; but I won't submit to be searched like a thief!"

"No, in course," said Macshane.

"I must take my man off the ground," says the major.

"Well, take him, sir," says I, in a rage, "and just let me have the pleasure of telling him that he's a coward and a liar; and that my lodgings are in Piccadilly, where, if ever he finds courage to meet me, he may hear of me!"

"Faugh! I shpit on ye all," cries my gallant ally Macshane. And sure enough he kept his word, or all but—suiting the action to it at any rate.

"And so we gathered up our clothes, and went back in our separate coaches, and no blood spilt.

"And is it throu, now," said Mr. Macshane when we were alone—"is it throu, now, all these divvles have been saying?"

"Ensign," says I, "you're a man of the world?"

"Deed and I am, and insign these twenty-two years."

"Perhaps you'd like a few pieces?" says I.

"Faith and I should; for to tell you the sacred thrut, I've not tasted mate these four days."

"Well then, ensign, it is true," says I; "and as for meat, you shall have some at the first cookshop." I bade the coach stop until he bought a plateful, which he ate in the carriage, for my time was precious. I just told him the whole story; at which he laughed, and swore that it was the best piece of generalship he ever heard on. When his belly was full I took out a couple of guineas and gave them to him. Mr. Macshane began to cry at this, and kissed me, and swore he never would desert me; as, indeed, my dear, I don't think he will; for we have been the best of friends ever since, and he's the only man I ever could trust, I think.

"I don't know what put it into my head, but I had a scent of some mischief in the wind; so stopped the coach a little before I got home, and, turning into a tavern, begged Macshane to go before me to my lodging, and see if the coast was clear: which he did; and came back to me as pale as death, saying that the house was full of constables. The cursed quarrel at the Tilt-yard had, I suppose, set the beaks upon me; and a pretty sweep they made of it. Ah, my dear! five hundred pounds in money, five suits of laced clothes, three periwigs, besides laced shirts, swords, canes, and snuffboxes; and all to go back to that scoundrel count.

'It was all over with me, I saw—no more being a gentleman for me; and if I remained to be caught only a choice between Tyburn and a file of grenadiers. My love, under such circumstances a gentleman can’t be particular, and must be prompt: the livery stable was hard by where I used to hire my coach to go to court—ha! ha!—and was known as a man of substance. Thither I went immediately. “Mr. Warmmash,” says I, “my gallant friend here and I have a mind for a ride and a supper at Twickenham, so you must lend us a pair of your best horses.” Which he did in a twinkling, and off we rode.

'We did not go into the Park, but turned off and cantered smartly up toward Kilburn; and when we got into the country, galloped as if the devil were at our heels. Bless you, my love, it was all done in a minute; and the ensign and I found ourselves regular knights of the road before we knew where we were almost. Only think of our finding you and your new husband at the Three Rooks! There’s not a greater fence than the landlady in all the country. It was she that put us on seizing your husband, and introduced us to the other two gentlemen, whose names I don’t know any more than the dead.'

'And what became of the horses?' said Mrs. Catherine to Mr. Brock when his tale was finished.

'Rips, madam,' said he; ‘mere rips. We sold them at Stourbridge fair, and got but thirteen guineas for the two.'

'And—and—the count, Max; where is he, Brock?' sighed she.

'Whew!' whistled Mr. Brock. ‘What, hankering after him still? My dear, he is off to Flanders with his regiment; and, I make no doubt, there have been twenty Countesses of Galgenstein since your time.'

'I don’t believe any such thing, sir,' said Mrs. Catherine, starting up very angrily.

'If you did, I suppose you’d laudanum him; wouldn’t you?'

'Leave the room, fellow,' said the lady. But she recollected herself speedily again; and clasping her hands, and looking very wretched at Brock, at the ceiling, at the floor, at her husband (from whom she violently turned away her head), she began to cry piteously, to which tears the corporal set up a gentle accompaniment of whistling, as they trickled one after another down her nose.
I don't think they were tears of repentance; but of regret for the time when she had her first love, and her fine clothes, and her white hat and blue feather. Of the two, the corporal's whistle was much more innocent than the girl's sobbing: he was a rogue; but a good-natured old fellow when his humor was not crossed. Surely our novel writers make a great mistake in divesting their rascals of all gentle human qualities; they have such—and the only sad point to think of is, in all private concerns of life, abstract feelings, and dealings with friends, and so on, how dreadfully like a rascal is to an honest man. The man who murdered the Italian boy set him first to play with his children whom he loved, and who doubtless deplored his loss.

CHAPTER VI.

THE ADVENTURES OF THE AMBASSADOR, MR. MACSHANE.

If we had not been obliged to follow history in all respects, it is probable that we should have left out the last adventure of Mrs. Catherine and her husband at the inn at Worcester altogether; for, in truth, very little came of it, and it is not very romantic or striking. But we are bound to stick closely, above all, by the truth—the truth, though it be not particularly pleasant to read of or to tell. As anybody may read in the 'Newgate Calendar,' Mr. and Mrs. Hayes were taken at an inn at Worcester; were confined there; were swindled by persons who pretended to impress the bridegroom for military service. What is one to do after that? Had we been writing novels instead of authentic histories, we might have carried them anywhere else we chose; and we had a great mind to make Hayes philosophizing with Bolingbroke, like a certain Devereux; and Mrs. Catherine maitresse en titre to Mr. Alexander Pope, Dr. Sacheverel, Sir John Reade, the oculist, Dean Swift, or Marshal Tallard, as the very commonest romancer would under such circumstances. But alas and alas! truth must be spoken, whatever else is in the wind; and the excellent 'Newgate Calendar,' which contains the biographies and thanatographies of Hayes and his wife, does not say a word of their connections with any of the leading literary or military heroes of the time of her Majesty Queen Anne. The 'Calendar' says, in so many words, that Hayes was obliged to send to his father in Warwickshire for money to get him out of the scrape, and that the old gentleman came down to his aid. By this truth must we stick; and not for the sake of the most brilliant episode—no, not for a bribe of twenty extra guineas per sheet, would we depart from it.
Mr. Brock's account of his adventure in London has given the reader some short notice of his friend Mr. Macshane. Neither the wits nor the principles of that worthy ensign were particularly firm; for drink, poverty, and a crack on the skull at the battle of Steenkirk had served to injure the former, and the ensign was not in his best days possessed of any share of the latter. He had really, at one period, held such a rank in the army, but pawned his half pay for drink and play, and for many years past had lived, one of the hundred thousand miracles of our city, upon nothing that anybody knew of, or of which he himself could give any account. Who has not a catalogue of these men in his list? who can tell whence comes the occasional clean shirt, who supplies the continual means of drunkenness, who wards off the daily impending starvation? Their life is a wonder from day to day; their breakfast a wonder, their dinner a miracle, their bed an interposition of Providence. If you and I, my dear sir, want a shilling tomorrow, who will give it us? Will our butchers give us mutton chops? will our laundresses clothe us in clean linen? Not a bone or a rag. Standing as we do (may it be ever so) somewhat removed from want, is there one of us who does not shudder at the thought of descending into the lists to combat with it, and expect anything but to be utterly crushed in the encounter?

Not a bit of it, my dear sir. It takes much more than you think for to starve a man. Starvation is very little when you are used to it. Some people I know even who live on it quite comfortably, and make their daily bread by it. It had been our friend Macshane's sole profession for many years; and he did not fail to draw from it such a livelihood as was sufficient, and perhaps too good for him. He managed to dine upon it a certain, or rather an uncertain, number of days in the week, to sleep somewhere, and to get drunk at least three hundred times a year. He was known to one or two noblemen who occasionally helped him with a few pieces, and whom he helped in turn—never mind how. He had other acquaintances whom he pestered undauntedly, and from whom he occasionally extracted a dinner or a crown, or mayhap, by mistake, a gold-headed cane, which found its way to the pawnbroker's. When flush of cash he would appear at the coffeehouse; when low in funds the dence knows into what mystic caves and dens he slunk for food and lodging. He was perfectly ready with his sword, and when sober, or better still, a very little tipsy,

The author, it must be remembered, has his lodgings and food provided for him by the government of his country was a complete master of it; in the art of boasting and lying he had hardly any equals; in shoes he stood six feet five inches; and here is his complete signalement. It was a fact that he had been in Spain as a volunteer, where he had shown some gallantry, had had a brain fever, and was sent home to starve as before.

Mr. Macshane had, however, like Mr. Conrad, the corsair, one virtue in the midst of a thousand crimes—he was faithful to his employer for the time being; and a story is told of him, which may or may not be to his credit, viz.: that being hired on one occasion by a certain lord to inflict a punishment upon a roturier who had crossed his lordship in his amours, he, Macshane, did actually refuse from the person to be belabored, and who entreated his forbearance, a larger sum of money than the nobleman gave him for the beating, which he performed punctually, as bound in honor and friendship. This tale would the ensign himself relate with much self-satisfaction; and when, after the sudden flight from London, he and Brock took to their roving occupation, he cheerfully submitted to the latter as his commanding officer, called him always major, and, bating blunders and drunkenness, was perfectly true to his leader. He had a notion—and, indeed, I don't know that it was a wrong one—that his profession was now, as before, strictly military, and according to the rules of honor. Robbing he called plundering the enemy; and hanging was, in his idea, a dastardly and cruel advantage that the latter took, and that called for the sternest reprisals.

The other gentlemen concerned were strangers to Mr. Brock, who felt little inclined to trust either of them upon such a message, or with such a large sum to bring back. They had, strange to say, a similar mistrust on their side; but Mr. Brock lugged out five guineas, which he placed in the landlady's hand as security for his comrade's return; and Ensign Macshane, being mounted on poor Hayes' own horse, set off to visit the parents of that unhappy young man. It was a gallant sight to behold our thieves' ambassador, in a faded sky-blue suit with orange facings, in a pair of huge jack-boots unconscious of blacking, with a mighty basket-hilted sword by his side, and a little shabby beaver cocked over a large tow periwig, ride out from the inn of the Three Rooks on his mission to Hayes' paternal village.

It was eighteen miles distant from Worcester; but Mr. Macshane performed the distance in safety, and in sobriety, moreover (for such had been his instructions), and had no difdifficulty in discovering the house of old Hayes, toward which, indeed, John's horse trotted incontinently. Mrs. Hayes, who was knitting at the house door, was not a little surprised at the appearance of the well-known gray gelding, and of the stranger mounted upon it.

Flinging himself off the steed with much agility, Mr. Macshane, as soon as his feet reached the ground, brought them rapidly together, in order to make a profound and elegant bow to Mrs. Hayes; and slapping his greasy beaver against his heart, and poking his periwig almost into the nose of the old lady, demanded whether he had the 'shooprame honor of adthressing Misthriss Hees?'

Having been answered in the affirmative, he then proceeded to ask whether there was a blackguard boy in the house who would take 'the horse to the steeble'; whether 'he could have a dthrink of small-beer or butherr milk, being, faith, uncommon dthry'; and whether, finally, 'he could be feevored with a few minutes' private conversation with her and Mr. Hees, on a matther of consitherable impartance?' All these preliminaries were to be complied with before Mr. Macshane would enter at all into the subject of his visit. The horse and man were cared for; Mr. Hayes was called in; and not a little anxious did Mrs. Hayes grow, in the meanwhile, with regard to the fate of her darling son. 'Where is he? How is he? Is he dead?' said the old lady. 'Oh, yes, I'm sure he's dead!'

'Indeed, madam, and you're misteeken intirely: the young man is perfectly well in health.'

'Oh, praised be Heaven!'

'But mighty cast down in sperrits. To misfortunes, madam, look you, the best of us are subject; and a trifling one has fell upon your son.'

And herewith Mr. Macshane produced a letter in the handwriting of young Hayes, of which we have had the good luck to procure a copy. It ran thus:

\textit{Honored Father and Mother:} The bearer of this is a kind gentleman, who has left me in a great deal of trouble. Yesterday, at this towne, I fell in with some gentlemen of the queene's servas; after drinking with whom, I accepted her Majesty's mony to enliste. Repenting thereof, I did endeavor to escape; and, in so doing, had the misfortune to strike my superior officer, whereby I made myself liable to Death, according to the rules of warr. If, however, I pay twenty ginnys, all will be wel. You must give the same to the barer, els I shall be shott without fail on Tewsday morning.

\textit{And so no more from your loving son.}

\textit{John Hayes.}

\textit{From my prison at Bristol this unhappy Monday.}

When Mrs. Hayes read this pathetic missive its success with her was complete, and she was for going immediately to the cupboard, and producing the money necessary for her daring son's release. But the carpenter Hayes was much more suspicions. 'I don't know you, sir,' said he to the ambassador.

'Do you doubt my honor, sir?' said the ensign very fiercely.

'Why, sir,' replied Mr. Hayes, 'I know little about it one way or other, but shall take it for granted, if you will explain a little more of this business.'

'I seldom condescend to explean,' said Mr. Macshane, 'for it's not the custom in my rank; but I'll explean anything in reason.'

'Pray, will you tell me in what regiment my son is enlisted?'

'In course. In Colonel Wood's fut, my dear; and a gallant corps it is as any in the army.'

'And you left him?'

'On me soul, only three hours ago, having rid like a horse-jockey ever since; as in the sacred cause of humanity, curse me, every man should.'

As Hayes' house was seventy miles from Bristol, the old gentleman thought this was marvelous quick riding, and so cut the conversation short. 'You have said quite enough, sir,' said he, 'to show me there is some roguery in the matter, and that the whole story is false from beginning to end.'

At this abrupt charge the ensign looked somewhat puzzled, and then spoke with much gravity. 'Roguery,' said he, 'Mis-thur Hees, is a strong term; and which in consideration of my friendship for your family I shall pass over. You doubt your son's honor, as there wrote by him in black and white?'

'You have forced him to write,' said Mr. Hayes.

'The sly old divvle's right,' muttered Mr. Macshane aside. 'Well, sir, to make a clean breast of it, he has been forced to write it. The story about the enlistment is a pretty fib, if you will, from beginning to end. And what then, my dear? Do you think your son's any better off for that?'

'Oh, where is he?' screamed Mrs. Hayes, plumping down on her knees. 'We will give him the money, won't we, John?'

'I know you will, madam, when I tell you where he is. He is in the huds of some gentlemen of my acquaintance, who are at war with the present government, and no more care about cutting a man's throat than they do a chicken's. He is a prisoner, madam, of our sword and spear. If you choose to ransom him, well and good; if not, peace be with him! for never more shall you see him.'

'And how do I know you won't come back to-morrow for more money?' asked Mr. Hayes.

'Sir, you have my honor; and I'd as lieve break my neck as my word,' said Mr. Macshane gravely. 'Twenty guineas is the bargain. Take ten minutes to talk of it—take it then or leave it; it's all the same to me, my dear.' And it must be said of our friend the ensign that he meant every word he said, and that he considered the embassy on which he had come as perfectly honorable and regular.

'And pray, what prevents us,' said Mr. Hayes, starting up in a rage, 'from taking hold of you as a surety for him?'

'You wouldn't fire on a flag of truce, would ye, you dishonorable ould civilian?' replied Mr. Macshane. 'Besides,' says he, 'there's more reasons to prevent you: the first is this,' pointing to his sword; 'here are two more'—and these were pistols; 'and the last and best of all is that you might hang me and draw me and quarter me, and yet never see so much as the tip of your son's nose again. Look you, sir, we run mighty risks in our profession—it's not all play, I can tell you. We're obliged to be punctual too, or it's all up with the trade. If I promise that your son will die as sure as fate tomorrow morning, unless I return home safe, our people must keep my promise; or else what chance is there for me? You would be down upon me in a moment with a posse of constables, and have me swinging before Warwick jail. Pooh, my dear! you never would sacrifice a darling boy like John Hayes, let alone his lady, for the sake of my long carcase. One or two of our gentlemen have been taken that way already because parents and guardians would not believe them.'

'And what became of the poor children?' said Mrs. Hayes, who began to perceive the gist of the argument, and to grow dreadfully frightened.

'Don't let's talk of them, ma'am: humanity shudders at the thought!' And herewith Mr. Macshane drew his finger across his throat in such a dreadful way as to make the two parents tremble. 'It's the way of war, madam, look you. The service I have the honor to belong to is not paid by the queen; and so we're obliged to make our prisoners pay, according to established military practice.'

No lawyer could have argued his case better than Mr. Macshane so far; and he completely succeeded in convincing Mr. and Mrs. Hayes of the necessity of ransoming their son. Promising that the young man should be restored to them next morning, along with his beautiful lady, he courteously took leave of the old couple, and made the best of his way back to Worcester again. The elder Hayes wondered who the lady could be of whom the ambassador had spoken, for their son's elopement was altogether unknown to them; but anger or doubt about this subject was overwhelmed by their fears for their darling John’s safety. Away rode the gallant Macshane with the money necessary to effect this; and it must be mentioned, as highly to his credit, that he never once thought of appropriating the sum to himself, or of deserting his comrades in any way.

His ride from Worcester had been a long one. He had left that city at noon, but before his return thither the sun had gone down; and the landscape, which had been dressed like a prodigal, in purple and gold, now appeared like a Quaker, in dusky gray; and the trees by the roadside grew black as undertakers or physicians, and, bending their solemn heads to each other, whispered ominously among themselves; and the mists hung on the common; and the cottage lights went out one by one; and the earth and heaven grew black, but for some twinkling useless stars, which twinkled the ebon countenance of the latter; and the air grew colder; and about two o’clock the moon appeared, a dismal, pale-faced rake, walking solitary through the deserted sky; and about four, mayhap, the dawn (wretched ’prentice boy!) opened in the east the shutters of the day—in other words, more than a dozen hours had passed. Corporal Brock had been relieved by Mr. Red-cap, the latter by Mr. Sicklop, the one-eyed gentleman; Mrs.
John Hayes, in spite of her sorrows and bashfulness, had followed the example of her husband, and fallen asleep by his side—slept for many hours—and awakened still under the guardianship of Mr. Brock’s troop; and all parties began anxiously to expect the return of the ambassador, Mr. Macshane.

That officer, who had performed the first part of his journey with such distinguished prudence and success, found the night, on his journey homeward, was growing mighty cold and dark;
and as he was thirsty and hungry, had money in his purse, and saw no cause to hurry, he determined to take refuge at an ale-house for the night, and to make for Worcester by dawn the next morning. He accordingly alighted at the first inn on his road, consigned his horse to the stable, and entering the kitchen called for the best liquor in the house.

A small company was assembled at the inn, among whom Mr. Macshane took his place with a great deal of dignity; and having a considerable sum of money in his pocket, felt a mighty contempt for his society, and soon let them know the contempt he felt for them. After a third flagon of ale he discovered that the liquor was sour, and emptied, with much spluttering and grimaces, the remainder of the beer into the fire. This process so offended the parson of the parish (who in those good old times did not disdain to take the post of honor in the chimney nook), that he left his corner, looking wrathfully at the offender, who without any more ado instantly occupied it.
It was a fine thing to hear the jingling of the twenty pieces in his pocket, the oaths which he distributed between the landlord, the guests, and the liquor—to remark the sprawl of his mighty jack-boots, before the sweep of which the timid guests edged further and further away; and the languishing leers which he cast on the landlady, as with widespread arms he attempted to seize upon her.

When the hostler had done his duties in the stable he entered the inn and whispered the landlord that 'the stranger was riding John Hayes' horse,' of which fact the host soon convinced himself, and did not fail to have some suspicions of his guest. Had he not thought that times were unquiet, horses might be sold, and one man's money was as good as another's, he probably would have arrested the ensign immediately, and so lost all the profit of the score which the latter was causing every moment to be enlarged.

In a couple of hours, with that happy facility which one may have often remarked in men of the gallant ensign's nation, he had managed to disgust every one of the landlord's other guests, and scare them from the kitchen. Frightened by his addresses, the landlady too had taken flight; and the host was the only person left in the apartment, who there stayed for interest's sake merely, and listened moodily to his tipsy guest's conversation. In an hour more the whole house was awakened by a violent noise of howling, curses, and pots clattering to and fro. Forth issued Mrs. Landlady in her night gear, out came John Ostler with his pitchfork, downstairs tumbled Mrs. Cook and one or two guests, and found the landlord and ensign on the kitchen floor—the wig of the latter lying, much singed and emitting strange odors, in the fireplace, his face hideously distorted, and a great quantity of his natural hair in the partial occupation of the landlord, who had drawn it and the head down toward him in order that he might have the benefit of pummeling the latter more at his ease. In revenge, the landlord was undermost, and the ensign's arms were working up and down his face and body like the flaps of a paddle wheel:
the man of war had clearly the best of it.

The combatants were separated as soon as possible; but as soon as the excitement of the fight was over Ensign Macshane was found to have no further powers of speech, sense, or locomotion, and was carried by his late antagonist to bed. His sword and pistols, which had been placed at his side at the commencement of the evening, were carefully put by, and his pocket visited. Twenty guineas in gold, a large knife—used, probably, for the cutting of bread and cheese—some crumbs of those delicacies and a paper of tobacco found in the breeches pockets, and in the bosom of the sky-blue coat the leg of a cold fowl and half of a raw onion, constituted his whole property.

These articles were not very suspicious; but the beating which the landlord had received tended greatly to confirm his own and his wife's doubts about their guest; and it was determined to send off in the early morning to Mr. Hayes, informing him how a person had lain at their inn who had ridden thither mounted upon young Hayes' horse. Off set John Ostler at earliest dawn; but on his way he woke up Mr. Justice's clerk, and communicated his suspicions to him; and Mr. Clerk consulted with the village baker, who was up always early; and the clerk, the baker, with his cleaver, and two gentlemen who were going to work, all adjourned to the inn.

Accordingly when Ensign Macshane was in a truckle bed, plunged in that deep slumber which only innocence and drunkenness enjoy in this world, and charming the ears of morn by the regular and melodious music of his nose, a vile plot was laid against him; and when about seven of the clock he woke, he found, on sitting up in his bed, three gentlemen on each side of it, armed, and looking ominous. One held a constable's staff, and, albeit unprovided with a warrant, would take upon himself the responsibility of seizing Mr. Macshane, and of carrying him before his worship at the hall.

'Taranouns, man!' said the ensign, springing up in bed, and abruptly breaking off a loud, sonorous yawn, with which he had opened the business of the day, 'you won't deteen a gentleman who's on life and death? I give ye my word, an affair of honor.'

'How came you by that there horse?' said the baker.

'How came you by these here fifteen guineas?' said the landlord, in whose hands, by some process, five of the gold pieces had disappeared.

'What is this here idolatrous string of beads?' said the clerk.

Mr. Macshane, the fact is, was a Catholic, but did not care to own it; for in those days his religion was not popular. 'Baids? Holy Mother of saints! give me back them baids,' said Mr. Macshane, clasping his hands. 'They were blest, I tell you, by his Holiness the Po— psha! I mane they belong to a darling little daughter I had that's in heaven now; and as for the money and the horse, I should like to know how a gentleman is to travel in this country without them?

'Why, you see, he may travel in the country to git 'em,' here shrewdly remarked the constable; 'and it's our belief that neither horse nor money is honestly come by. If his worship is satisfied, why so, in course, shall we be; but there is highwaymen abroad, look you; and, to our notion, you have very much the cut of one.'

Further remonstrances or threats on the part of Mr. Mac-shane were useless. Although he vowed that he was first cousin to the Duke of Leinster, an officer in her Majesty's serv-tice, and the dearest friend Lord Marlborough had, his impudcent captors would not believe a word of his statement (which, further, was garnished with a tremendous number of oaths); and he was, about eight o'clock, carried up to the house of Squire Ballance, the neighboring justice of the peace.

When the worthy magistrate asked the crime of which the prisoner had been guilty, the captors looked somewhat puzzled for the moment, since, in truth, it could not be shown that the ensign had committed any crime at all; and if he had confined himself to simple silence, and thrown upon them the onus of proving his misdemeanors, Justice Ballance must have let him loose, and soundly rated his clerk and the landlord for detaining an honest gentleman on so frivolous a charge.

But this caution was not in the ensign's disposition; and though his accusers produced no satisfactory charge against him, his own words were quite enough to show how suspicious his character was. When asked his name, he gave it in as Captain Geraldine, on his way to Ireland, by Bristol, on a visit to his cousin the Duke of Leinster. He swore solemnly that his friends the Duke of Marlborough and Lord Peterborough, under both of whom he had served, should hear of the manner in which he had been treated; and when the justice—a sly old gentleman, and one that read the Gazettes—asked him at what battles he had been present, the gallant ensign pitched on a couple in Spain and in Flanders, which had been fought within a week of each other, and vowed that he had been desperately wounded at both; so that, at the end of his examination, which had been taken down by the clerk, he had been made to acknowledge as follows: Captain Geraldine, six feet four inches in height; thin, with a very long red nose and red hair, gray eyes, and speaks with a strong Irish accent; is the first cousin of the Duke of Leinster, and in constant communication with him; does not know whether his Grace has any children; does not know whereabouts he lives in London; cannot say what sort of a looking man his Grace is; is acquainted with the Duke of Marlborough, and served in the dragoons at the battle of Ramillies; at which time he was with my Lord Peterborough before Barcelona. Borrowed the horse which he rides from a friend in London, three weeks since. Peter Hobbs, hostler, swears that it was in his master’s stable four days ago, and is the property of John Hayes, carpenter. Cannot account for the fifteen guineas found on him by the landlord; says they were twenty; says he won them at cards, a fortnight since, at Edinburgh; says he is riding about the country for his amusement; afterward says he is on a matter of life and death, and going to Bristol; declared last night, in the hearing of several witnesses, that he was going to York; says he is a man of independent property, and has large estates in Ireland, and a hundred thousand pounds in the Bank of England. Has no shirt or stockings, and the coat he wears is marked ‘S. S.’ In his boots is written ‘Thomas Rodgers,’ and in his hat is the name of the ‘Rev. Dr. Snoffer.’

Dr. Snoffer lived at Worcester, and had lately advertised in the Hue and Cry a number of articles taken from his house. Mr. Maeshane said, in reply to this, that his hat had been changed at the inn, and he was ready to take his oath that he came thither in a gold-laced one. But this fact was disproved by the oaths of many persons who had seen him at the inn. And he was about to be imprisoned for the thefts which he had not committed (the fact about the hat being that he had purchased it from a gentleman at the Three Rooks for two pints of beer)—he was about to be remanded, when, behold, Mrs. Hayes the elder made her appearance; and to her it was that the ensign was indebted for his freedom.

Old Hayes had gone to work before the hostler arrived; but when his wife heard the lad’s message, she instantly caused her pillion to be placed behind the saddle, and mounting the gray horse, urged the stable boy to gallop as hard as ever he could to the justice’s house.

She entered panting and alarmed. ‘Oh, what is your honor going to do to this honest gentleman?’ said she. ‘In the name of Heaven, let him go! His time is precious—he has important business—business of life and death.’

‘I tould the judge so,’ said the ensign, ‘but he refused to take my word—the sacred wurrd of honor of Captain Geraldine.’
Macshane was good at a single lie, though easily flustered on an examination; and this was a very creditable stratagem to acquaint Mrs. Hayes with the name that he bore.

'What! you know Captain Geraldine?' said Mr. Ballance, who was perfectly well acquainted with the carpenter's wife.

'In coorse she does. Hasn't she known me these tin years? Are we not related? Didn't she give me the very horse which I rode, and, to make beleve, tould you I'd bought in London?

'Let her tell her own story. Are you related to Captain Geraldine, Mrs. Hayes?'

'Yes—oh, yes!'

'A very elegant connection! And you gave him the horse, did you, of your own free will?'

'Oh, yes! of my own will—I would give him anything. Do, do, your honor, let him go! His child is dying,' said the old lady, bursting into tears. 'It may be dead before he gets to—before he gets there. Oh, your honor, your honor, pray, pray, don't detain him!'

The justice did not seem to understand this excessive sympathy on the part of Mrs. Hayes; nor did the father himself appear to be nearly so affected by his child's probable fate as the honest woman who interested herself for him. On the contrary, when she made this passionate speech, Captain Geraldine only grinned and said, 'Niver mind, my dear. If his honor will keep an honest gentleman for doing nothing, why, let him—the law must settle between us; and as for the child, poor thing, the Lord deliver it!'

At this Mrs. Hayes fell to entreating more loudly than ever; and as there was really no charge against him, Mr. Ballance was constrained to let him go.

The landlord and his friends were making off, rather confused, when Ensign Macshane called upon the former in a thundering voice to stop, and refund the five guineas which he had stolen from him. Again the host swore there were but fifteen in his pocket. But when, on the Bible, the ensign solemnly vowed that he had twenty, and called upon Mrs. Hayes to say whether yesterday, half an hour before he entered the inn, she had not seen him with twenty guineas, and that lady expressed herself ready to swear that she had, Mr. Landlord looked more crestfallen than ever, and said that he had not counted the money when he took it; and though he did in his soul believe that there were only fifteen guineas, rather than be suspected of a shabby action, he would pay the five guineas out of his own pocket; which he did, and with the ensign's, or rather Mrs. Hayes', own coin.

As soon as they were out of the justice's house, Mr. Macshane, in the fullness of his gratitude, could not help bestowing an embrace upon Mrs. Hayes. And when she implored him to let her ride behind him to her darling son, he yielded with a very good grace, and off the pair set on John Hayes' gray.

'Who has Nosey brought with him now?' said Mr. Sicklop, Brock's one-eyed confederate, who, about three hours after the above adventure, was lolling in the yard of the Three Rooks. It was our ensign, with the mother of his captive. They had not met with any accident in their ride.

'I shall now have the shooprame bliss,' said Mr. Macshane, with much feeling, as he lifted Mrs. Hayes from the saddle—'the shooprame bliss of intwining two harrts that are mead for one another. Ours, my dear, is a dismal profession; but ah! don't moments like this make aminds for years of pain? This way, my dear. Turn to your right, then to your left—mind the stip—and the third door round the corner.'

All these precautions were attended to; and after giving his concerted knock, Mr. Macshane was admitted into an apartment, which he entered holding his gold pieces in the one hand, and a lady by the other.

We shall not describe the meeting which took place between mother and son. The old lady wept copiously; the young man was really glad to see his relative, for he deemed that his troubles were over. Mrs. Cat bit her lips, and stood aside, looking somewhat foolish; Mr. Brock counted the money; and Mr. Macshane took a large dose of strong waters as a pleasing solace for his labors, dangers, and fatigue.

When the maternal feelings were somewhat calmed the old lady had leisure to look about her, and really felt a kind of friendship and good will for the company of thieves in which she found herself. It seemed to her that they had conferred an actual favor on her in robbing her of twenty guineas, threatening her son's life, and finally letting him go.

'Who is that droll old gentleman?' said she; and being told that it was Captain Wood, she dropped him a courtesy, and said, with much respect, 'Captain, your very humble servant'; which compliment Mr. Brock acknowledged by a gracious smile and bow. 'And who is this pretty young lady?' continued Mrs. Hayes.

'Why—hum—ho—mother, you must give her your blessing.
She is Mrs. John Hayes.' And herewith Mr. Hayes brought forward his interesting lady to introduce her to his mamma.

The news did not at all please the old lady, who received Mrs. Catherine's embrace with a very sour face indeed. However, the mischief was done; and she was too glad to get back her son to be, on such an occasion, very angry with him. So, after a proper rebuke, she told Mrs. John Hayes that though she never approved of her son's attachment, and thought he married below his condition, yet as the evil was done, it was their duty to make the best of it; and she, for her part, would receive her into her house, and make her as comfortable there as she could.

'I wonder whether she has any more money in that house?' whispered Mr. Sicklop to Mr. Redcap, who, with the landlady, had come to the door of the room, and had been amusing themselves by the contemplation of this sentimental scene.

'What a fool that wild Hirishman was not to bleed her for more,' said the landlady; 'but he's a poor ignorant Papist. I'm sure my man' (this gentleman had been hanged) 'wouldn't have come away with such a beggarly sum.'

'Suppose we have some more out of 'em?' said Mr. Redcap. 'What prevents us? We have got the old mare, and the colt too, ha! ha! and the pair of 'em ought to be worth at least a hundred to us.'

This conversation was carried on sotto voce; and I don't know whether Mr. Brock had any notion of the plot which was arranged by the three worthies. The landlady began it. 'Which punch, madam, will you take?' says she. 'You must have something for the good of the house, now you are in it.'

'In course,' said the ensign.

'Certainly,' said the other three. But the old lady said she was anxious to leave the place; and putting down a crown piece, requested the hostess to treat the gentlemen in her absence. 'Good-by, captain,' said the old lady.

'Ajew!' cried the ensign, 'and long life to you, my dear. You got me out of a scrape at the justice's yonder; and, split me! but Insign Macshane will remember it as long as he lives.'

And now Hayes and the two ladies made for the door; but the landlady placed herself against it, and Mr. Sicklop said, 'No, no, my pretty madams, you ain't a-going off so cheap as that neither; you are not going out for a beggarly twenty guineas, look you—we must have more.'

Mr. Hayes, starting back, and cursing his fate, fairly burst into tears; the two women screamed; and Mr. Brock looked as if the proposition both amused and had been expected by him; but not so Ensign Macshane.

'Major!' said he, clawing fiercely hold of Brock's arms.

'Ensign,' said Mr. Brock, smiling.

'Arr we or arr we not men of honor?'

'Oh, in coourse,' said Brock, laughing, and using Macshane's favorite expression.

'If we arr men of honor we are bound to stick to our word; and hark ye, you dirty one-eyed scoundrel, if you don't immediately make way for these leedies, and this lily-livered young jontleman who's crying so, the meejor here and I will lug out and force you.' And so saying, he drew his great sword and made a pass at Mr. Sicklop, which that gentleman avoided, and which caused him and his companion to retreat from the door. The landlady still kept her position at it, and with a storm of oaths against the ensign, and against two Englishmen who ran away from a wild Hrishman, swore she would not budge a foot, and would stand there until her dying day.

'Faith, then, needs must,' said the ensign, and made a lunge at the hostess which passed so near the wretch's throat that she screamed, sank on her knees, and at last opened the door.

Down the stairs, then, with great state, Mr. Maeshane led the elder lady, the married couple following; and having seen them to the street, took an affectionate farewell of the party, whom he vowed that he would come and see. 'You can walk the eighteen miles aisy between this and nightfall,' said he.

'Walk!' exclaimed Mr. Hayes. 'Why, haven't we got Ball, and shall ride and tie all the way?'

'Madam!' cried Macshane in a stern voice, 'honor before everything. Did you not, in the presence of his worship, vow and declare that you gave me that horse, and now d'ye talk of taking it back again? Let me tell you, madam, that such paltry thricks ill become a person of your years and respectability, and ought never to be played with Insign Timothy Macshane.'

He waved his hat and strutted down the street; and Mrs. Catherine Hayes, along with her bridegroom and mother-in-law, made the best of their way homeward on foot.

CHAPTER VII.

WHICH EMBRACES A PERIOD OF SEVEN YEARS.

The recovery of so considerable a portion of his property from the clutches of Brock was, as may be imagined, no trifling source of joy to that excellent young man Count Gustavus Adolphus de Galgenstein; and he was often known to say, with much archness, and a proper feeling of gratitude to the fate which had ordained things so, that the robbery was, in reality, one of the best things that could have happened to him; for, in event of Mr. Brock's not stealing the money, his Excellency the Count would have had to pay the whole to the Warwickshire squire, who had won it from him at play. He was enabled, in the present instance, to plead his notorious poverty as an excuse; and the Warwickshire conqueror got off with nothing, except a very badly written autograph of the count's simply acknowledging the debt.

This point his Excellency conceded with the greatest candor; but (as, doubtless, the reader may have remarked in the course of his experience) to owe is not quite the same thing as to pay; and from the day of his winning the money until the day of his death the Warwickshire squire did never, by any chance, touch a single bob, tizzy, tester, moidore, maravedi, doubloon, tomaun, or rupee of the sum which M. de Galgenstein had lost to him.

That young nobleman was, as Mr. Brock hinted in the little autobiographical sketch which we gave in a former chapter, incarcerated for a certain period, and for certain other debts, in the donjons of Shrewsbury; but he released himself from them by that noble and consolatory method of whitewashing which the law has provided for gentlemen in his oppressed condition; and he had not been a week in London when he fell in with, and overcame, or put to flight, Captain Wood, alias Brock, and immediately seized upon the remainder of his property. After receiving this the count, with commendable discretion, disappeared from England altogether for a while; nor are we at all authorized to state that any of his debts to his tradesmen were discharged, any more than his debts of honor, as they are pleasantly called.

Having thus settled with his creditors, the gallant count had interest enough with some of the great folk to procure for himself a post abroad, and was absent in Holland for some time. It was here that he became acquainted with the lovely Mme. Silverkoop, the widow of a deceased gentleman of Leyden; and although the lady was not at the age at which tender passions are usually inspired—being sixty—and though she could not, like Mlle. Ninon de l'Enclos, then at Paris, boast of charms which defied the progress of time—for Mrs. Silverkoop was as red as a boiled lobster, and as unwieldy as a porpoise; and although her mental attractions did by no means make up for her personal deficiencies—for she was jealous, violent, vulgar, drunken, and stingy to a miracle; yet her charms had an immediate effect on M. de Galgenstein; and hence, perhaps, the reader (the rogue! how well he knows the world!) will be led to conclude that the honest widow was rich.

Such, indeed, she was; and Count Gustavus, despising the difference between his twenty quarterings and her £20,000, laid the most desperate siege to her, and finished by causing her to capitulate; as I do believe, after a reasonable degree of pressing, any woman will do to any man; such, at least, has been my experience in the matter.

The count then married; and it was curious to see how he—who, as we have seen in the case of Mrs. Cat, had been as great a tiger and domestic bully as any extant—now, by degrees, fell into a quiet submission toward his enormous countess; who ordered him up and down as a lady orders her footman, who permitted him speedily not to have a will of his own, and who did not allow him a shilling of her money, without receiving for the same an accurate account.

How was it that he, the abject slave of Mme. Silverkoop, had been victorious over Mrs. Cat? The first blow is, I believe, the decisive one in these cases, and the countess had stricken it a week after their marriage—establishing a supremacy which the count never afterward attempted to question.

We have alluded to his Excellency's marriage, as in duty bound, because it will be necessary to account for his appearance hereafter in a more splendid fashion than that under which he has hitherto been known to us; and just comforting the reader by the knowledge that the union, though prosperous in a worldly point of view, was, in reality, extremely unhappy, we must say no more from this time forth of the fat and legitimate Mme. de Galgenstein. Our darling is Mrs. Catherine, who had formerly acted in her stead; and only in so much as the fat countess did influence in any way the destinies of our heroine, or those wise and virtuous persons who have appeared and are to follow her to her end, shall we in any degree allow her name to figure here. It is an awful thing to get a glimpse, as one sometimes does, when the time is past, of some little, little wheel which works the whole mighty machinery of Fate, and see how our destinies turn on a minute's delay or advance, or on the turning of a street, or on somebody else's turning of a street, or on somebody else's doing of something else in Downing Street or in Timbuctoo, now or a thousand years ago. Thus, for instance, if Miss Poots, in the year 1695, had never been the lovely inmate of a Spielhaus of Amsterdam, Mr. Van Silverkoop would never have seen her; if the day had not been extraordinarily hot, the worthy merchant would never have gone thither; if he had not been fond of Rhenish wine and sugar, he never would have called for any such delicacies; if he had not called for them, Miss OttiliatPoots would never have brought them, and partaken of them; if he had not been rich, she would certainly have rejected all the advances made to her by Silverkoop; if he had not been so fond of Rhenish and sugar, he never would have died; and Mrs. Silverkoop would have been neither rich nor a widow, nor a wife to Count von Galgenstein. Nay, nor would this history have ever been written; for if Count Galgenstein had not married the rich widow, Mrs. Catherine would never have——

Oh, my dear madam! you thought we were going to tell you. Pooh! nonsense,—no such thing! not for two or three and seventy pages or so—when perhaps, you may know what Mrs. Catherine never would have done.

The reader will remember, in the second chapter of these memoirs. the announcement that Mrs. Catherine had given to the world a child, who might bear, if he chose, the arms of Galgenstein, with the further adornment of a bar sinister. This child had been put out to nurse some time before its mother’s elopement from the count; and as that nobleman was in funds at the time (having had that success at play which we daily chronicled), he paid a sum of no less than twenty guineas, which was to be the yearly reward of the nurse into whose charge the boy was put. The woman grew fond of the brat; and when, after the first year, she had no further news of remittances from father or mother, she determined, for a while at least, to maintain the infant at her own expense; for, when rebuked by her neighbors on this score, she stoutly swore that no parents could ever desert their children, and that some day or other she should not fail to be rewarded for her trouble with this one.

Under this strange mental hallucination poor Goody Billings, who had five children and a husband of her own, continued to give food and shelter to little Tom for a period of no less than seven years; and though it must be acknowledged that the young gentleman did not in the slightest degree merit the kindnesses shown to him, Goody Billings, who was of a very soft and pitiful disposition, continued to bestow them upon him; because, she said, he was lonely and unprotected, and deserved them more than other children who had fathers and mothers to look after them. If, then, any difference was made between Tom's treatment and that of her own brood, it was considerably in favor of the former; to whom the largest proportions of treacle were allotted for his bread, and the handsomest supplies of hasty pudding. Besides, to do Mrs. Billings justice, there was a party against him; and that consisted not only of her husband and her five children, but of every single person in the neighborhood who had an opportunity of seeing and becoming acquainted with Master Tom.

A celebrated philosopher—I think Miss Edgeworth—has broached the consolatory doctrine that in intellect and disposition all human beings are entirely equal, and that circumstance and education are the causes of the distinctions and divisions which afterward unhappily take place among them. Not to argue this question, which places Jack Howard and Jack Thurtell on an exact level—which would have us to believe that Lord Melbourne is by natural gifts and excellences a man as honest, brave, and far-sighted as the Duke of Wellington—which would make out that Lord Lyndhurst is, in point of principle, eloquence, and political honesty, no better than Mr. O'Connell—not, I say, arguing this doctrine, let us simply state that Master Thomas Billings (for, having no other, he took the name of the worthy people who adopted him), was in his long-coats fearfully passionate, screaming and roaring perpetually, and showing all the ill that he could show. At the age of two, when his strength enabled him to toddle abroad, his favorite resort was the coal-hole or the dungheap; his roarings had not diminished in the least, and he had added to his former virtues two new ones—a love of fighting and stealing, both which amiable qualities he had many opportunities of exercising every day. He fought his little adoptive brothers and sisters; he kicked and cuffed his father and mother; he fought the cat, stamped upon the kittens, was worsted in a severe battle with the hen in the back yard, but, in revenge, nearly beat a little sucking pig to death, whom he caught alone, and rambling near his favorite haunt, the dunghill. As for stealing, he stole the eggs, which he perforated and emptied; the butter, which he ate with or without bread, as he could find it; the sugar, which he cunningly secreted in the leaves of a Baker's Chronicle, that nobody in the establishment could read: and thus from the pages of history he used to suck in all he knew—thieving and lying namely; in which, for his years, he made wonderful progress. If any followers of Miss Edgeworth and the philosophers are inclined to disbelieve this statement, or to set it down as overcharged and distorted, let them be assured that just this very picture was, of all pictures in the world, taken from nature. I, Ikey Solomons, once had a dear little brother who could steal before he could walk (and this not from encouragement—for, if you know the world, you must know that in families of our profession the point of honor is sacred at home—but from pure nature)—who could steal, I say, before he could walk, and lie before he could speak; and who, at four and a half years of age, having attacked my sister Rebecca on some question of lollipops, and smitten her on the elbow with a fire shovel, apologized to us by saying simply, '—her, I wish it had been her head!' Dear, dear Aminadab! I think of you, and laugh these philosophers to scorn. Nature made you for that career which you fulfilled; you were from your birth to your dying a scoundrel; you couldn't have been anything else, however your lot was cast; and blessed it was that you were born among the prigs—for had you been of any other profession, alas! alas! what ills might you have done. As I have heard the author of 'Richelieu,' 'Siamese Twins,' etc., say, 'Poëta nascitur non fit,' which means that though he had tried ever so much to be a poet, it was all moonshine: in the like manner, I say, 'Roaguus nascitur non fit.' We have it from nature, and so a fig for Miss Edgeworth.

In this manner, then, while his father, blessed with a wealthy wife, was leading, in a fine house, the life of a galley slave; while his mother, married to Mr. Hayes, and made an honest woman of, as the saying is, was passing her time respectfully in Warwickshire, Mr. Thomas Billings was inhabiting the same county, not cared for by either of them, but ordained by Fate to join them one day, and have a mighty influence upon the fortunes of both. For, as it has often happened to the traveler in the York or the Exeter coach to fall snugly asleep in his corner, and on awaking suddenly to find himself sixty or seventy miles from the place where Somnus first visited him: as, we say, although you sit still, Time, poor wretch, keeps perpetually running on, and so must run day and night, with never a pause or a halt of five minutes to get a drink, until his dying day; let the reader imagine that since he left Mrs. Hayes and all the other worthy personages of this history, in the last chapter, seven years have sped away; during which, all our heroes and heroines have been accomplishing their destinies.

Seven years of country carpentering, or other trading, on the part of the husband, of ceaseless scolding, violence, and discontent on the part of a wife, are not pleasant to describe; so we shall omit altogether any account of the early married life of Mr. and Mrs. John Hayes. The Newgate Calendar (to which excellent compilation we and the other popular novelists of the day can never be sufficiently grateful) states that Hayes left his house three or four times during this period, and, urged by the restless humors of his wife, tried several professions; returning, however, as he grew weary of each, to his wife and his paternal home. After a certain time his parents died, and by their demise he succeeded to a small property and the carpentering business, which he for some time followed.

What, then, in the meanwhile, had become of Captain Wood, or Brock, and Ensign Macshane? the only persons now to be accounted for in our catalogue. For about six months after their capture and release of Mr. Hayes those noble gentlemen had followed, with much prudence and success, that trade which the celebrated and polite Duval, the ingenious Sheppard, the dauntless Turpin, and indeed many other heroes of our most popular novels, had pursued, or were pursuing, in their time. And so considerable were said to be Captain Wood’s gains that reports were abroad of his having somewhere a buried treasure, to which he might have added more had not Fate suddenly cut short his career as a prig. He and the ensign were—shame to say—transported for stealing three pewter pots off a railing at Exeter; and not being known in the town, which they had only reached that morning, they were detained by no further charges, but simply condemned on this one. For this misdemeanor her Majesty’s government vindictively sent them for seven years beyond the sea; and, as the fashion then was, sold the use of their bodies to Virginian planters during that space of time. It is thus, alas! that the strong are always used to deal with the weak, and many an honest fellow has been led to rue his unfortunate difference with the law.

Thus, then, we have settled all scores. The count is in Holland with his wife; Mrs. Cat in Warwickshire along with her excellent husband; Master Thomas Billings with his adoptive parents in the same county; and the two military gentlemen watching the progress and cultivation of the tobacco and cotton plant in the New World. All these things having passed between the acts, dingaring-a-dingaring-a-dingle-dingle-ding, the drop draws up and the next act begins. By the way, the play ends with a drop, but that is neither here nor there.

[Here, as in a theater, the orchestra is supposed to play something melodious. The people get up, shake themselves, yawn, and settle down in their seats again. ‘Porter, ale, ginger-beer, cider,’ comes round, squeezing through the legs of the gentlemen in the pit. ‘Nobody takes anything as usual; and lo! the curtain rises again. ’ ‘Sh, ’shsh, ’shshshhh! Hats off!’ says everybody.]
Mrs. Hayes had now been for six years the adored wife of Mr. Hayes, and no offspring had arisen to bless their loves and perpetuate their name. She had obtained a complete mastery over her lord and master; and having had, as far as was in that gentleman's power, every single wish gratified that she could demand, in the way of dress, treats to Coventry and Birmingham, drink, and what not—for, though a hard man, John Hayes had learned to spend his money pretty freely on himself and her—having had all her wishes gratified, it was natural that she should begin to find out some more; and the next whim she hit upon was to be restored to her child. It may be as well to state that she had never informed her husband of the existence of that phenomenon, although he was aware of his wife's former connection with the count—Mrs. Hayes, in their matrimonial quarrels, invariably taunting him with accounts of her former splendor and happiness, and with his own meanness of taste in condescending to take up with his Excellency's leavings.

She determined, then (but as yet had not confided her determination to her husband), she would have her boy; although in her seven years' residence within twenty miles of him she had never once thought of seeing him; and the kind reader knows that when his excellent lady determines on a thing—a shawl, or an opera box, or a new carriage, or twenty-four singing lessons from Tamburini, or a night at the Eagle Tavern, City Road, or a ride in a bus to Richmond, and tea and brandy and water at Rose Cottage Hotel—the reader, high or low, knows that when Mrs. Reader desires a thing have it she will; you may just as well talk of avoiding her as of avoiding gout, bills, or gray hairs—and that you know is impossible. I, for my part, have had all three—aye, and a wife too.

I say that when a woman is resolved on a thing happen it will; if husbands refuse, Fate will interfere (flectere si nequeo, etc., but quotations are odious). And some hidden power was working in the case of Mrs. Hayes, and, for its own awful purposes, lending her its aid.

Who has not felt how he works—the dreadful, conquering Spirit of Ill? Who cannot see, in the circle of his own society, the fated and foredoomed to woe and evil? Some call the doctrine of destiny a dark creed; but, for me, I would fain try and think it a consolatory one. It is better, with all one's sins upon one's head, to deem one's self in the hands of Fate than to think—with our fierce passions and weak repentances; with our resolves so loud, so vain, so ludicrously, despicably weak and frail; with our dim, waverer, wretched conceits about virtue, and our irresistible propensity to wrong—that we are the workers of our future sorrow or happiness. If we depend on our strength, what is it against mighty circumstance? If we look to ourselves, what hope have we? Look back at the whole of your life, and see how Fate has mastered you and it. Think of your disappointments and your successes. Has your striving influenced one or the other? A fit of indigestion puts itself between you and honors and reputation; an apple plops on your nose, and makes you a world’s wonder and glory; a fit of poverty makes a rascal of you, who were, and are still, an honest man; clubs trumps, or six lucky mains at dice, make an honest man for life of you, who ever were, will be, and are a rascal. Who sends the illness? who causes the apple to fall? who deprives you of your worldly goods? or who shuffles the cards and brings trumps, honor, virtue, and prosperity back again? You call it chance; aye, and so it is chance that when the floor gives way, and the rope stretches tight, the poor wretch before St. Sepulchre’s clock dies. Only with us, clear-sighted mortals as we are, we can’t see the rope by which we hang, and know not when or how the drop may fall.

But revenons à nos moutons; let us return to that sweet lamb Master Thomas, and the milk-white ewe Mrs. Cat. Seven years had passed away, and she began to think that she should very much like to see her child once more. It was written that she should; and you shall hear how, soon after, without any great exertions of hers, back he came to her.

In the month of July, in the year 1715, there came down a road about ten miles from the city of Worcester two gentlemen, not mounted, Templar-like, upon one horse, but having a horse between them—a sorry bay with a sorry saddle, and a large pack behind it—one of which each by turn took a ride. Of the two, one was a man of excessive stature, with red hair, a very prominent nose, and a faded military dress; while the other, an old weather-beaten, sober-looking personage, wore the costume of a civilian—both man and dress appearing to have reached the autumnal or seedy state. However, the pair seemed, in spite of their apparent poverty, to be passably merry. The old gentleman rode the horse, and had, in the course of their journey, ridden him two miles at least in every three. The tall one walked with immense strides by his side; and seemed, indeed, as if he could have quickly outrun the four-footed animal, had he chosen to exert his speed, or had not affection for his comrade retained him at his stirrup.
A short time previously the horse had cast a shoe; and this the tall man on foot had gathered up, and was holding in his hand, it having been voted that the first blacksmith to whose shop they should come should be called upon to fit it again upon the bay horse.

'The infernal blackguard and ruffian!' said the tall man, who was looking about him very much pleased, and sucking a flower. 'I think them green cornfields is prettier looking at than the d—— tobacky out yondther, and bad luck to it!'

'I recollect the place right well, and some queer pranks we played here seven years ago,' responded the gentleman addressed as major. 'You remember that man and his wife whom we took in pawn at the Three Rooks?'

'And the landlady only hung last Michaelmas?' said the tall man parenthetically.

'Hang the landlady! We've got all we ever would out of her, you know. But about the man and woman. You went after the chap's mother, and, like a jackass, as you are, let him loose. Well, the woman was that Catherine that you've often heard me talk about. I like the wench, —— her, for I almost brought her up; and she was for a year or two along with that scoundrel Galgenstein, who has been the cause of my ruin.'

'The infernal blackguard and ruffian!' said the tall man, who, with his companion, has no doubt been recognized by the reader.

'Well, this Catherine had a child by Galgenstein; and somewhere here hard by the woman lived to whom we carried the brat to nurse. She was the wife of a blacksmith, one Biddles: it won't be out of the way to get our horse shod at his house if he is alive still, and we may learn something about the little beast. I should be glad to see them mother well enough.'

'Do I remember her?' said the ensign. 'Do I remember whisky? Sure I do, and the sniveling sneak her husband, and the stout old lady her mother-in-law, and the dirty one-eyed ruffian who sold me the parson's hat that had so nearly brought me into trouble. Oh, but it was a rare rise we got out of them chaps, and the old landlady that's hanged too!' And here both Ensign Macshane and Major Brock, or Wood, grinned, and showed much satisfaction.

It will be necessary to explain the reason of it. We gave the British public to understand that the landlady of the Three Rooks, at Worcester, was a notorious fence, or banker of thieves: that is, a purchaser of their merchandise. In her hands Mr. Brock and his companion had left property to the amount of sixty or seventy pounds, which was secreted in a eunning recess in a chamber of the Three Rooks, known only to the landlady and the gentlemen who banked with her; and in this place, Mr. Sicklop, the one-eyed man who had joined in the Hayes adventure, his comrade, and one or two of the topping prigs of the county, were free. Mr. Sicklop had been shot dead in a night attack near Bath; the landlady had been suddenly hanged, as an accomplice in another case of robbery; and when, on their return from Virginia, our two heroes, whose hopes of livelihood depended upon it, had bent their steps toward Worcester, they were not a little frightened to hear of the cruel fate of the hostess and many of the amiable frequenters of the Three Rooks. All the goodly company were separated; the house was no longer an inn. Was the money gone too? At least it was worth while to look—which Messrs. Brock and Macshane determined to do.

The house being now a private one, Mr. Brock, with a genius that was above his station, visited its owner, with a huge portfolio under his arm, and, in the character of a painter, requested permission to take a particular sketch from a particular window. The Ensign followed with the artist’s materials (consisting simply of a screw-driver and a crowbar); and it is hardly necessary to say that, when admission was granted to them, they opened the well-known door, and to their inexpressible satisfaction discovered, not their own peculiar savings exactly, for these had been appropriated instantly on hearing of their transportation, but stores of money and goods to the amount of near £3000, to which Mr. Macshane said they had as just and honorable a right as anybody else. And so they had as just a right as anybody—except the original owners; but who was to discover them?

With this bootý they set out on their journey—anywhere, for they knew not whither; and it so chanced that when their horses’ shoe came off, they were within a few furlongs of the cottage of Mr. Billings, the blacksmith. As they came near, they were saluted by tremendous roars issuing from the smithy. A small boy was held across the bellows, two or three children of smaller and larger growth were holding him down, and many others of the village were gazing in at the window, while a man, half-naked, was lashing the little boy with a whip, and occasioning the cries heard by the travelers. As the horse drew up the operator looked at the newcomers for a moment, and then proceeded incontinently with his work; belaboring the child more fiercely than ever.

When he had done, he turned round to the newcomers and asked how he could serve them; whereupon Mr. Wood (for such was the name he adopted, and by such we shall call him to the end) wittily remarked that however he might wish to serve them, he seemed mightily inclined to serve that young gentleman first.

'It's no joking matter,' said the blacksmith. 'If I don't serve him so now, he'll be worse off in his old age. He'll come to the gallows, as sure as his name is Bill—never mind what his name is.' And so saying, he gave the urchin another cut; which elicited, of course, another scream.

'Oh! his name is Bill?' said Captain Wood.

'His name's not Bill,' said the blacksmith sulkily. 'He's no name; and no heart neither. My wife took the brat in, seven years ago, from a beggarly French chap, to nurse, and she kept him, for she was a good soul' (here his eyes began to wink), 'and she's—she's gone now' (here he began fairly to blubber). 'And d—— him, out of love for her, I kept him too, and the scoundrel is a liar and a thief. This blessed day, merely to vex me and my boys here, he spoke ill of her, he did, and I'll—cut—his—life—out—I—will!' and with each word honest Mulciber applied a whack on the body of little Tom Billings; who, by shrill shrieks, and oaths in treble, acknowledged the receipt of the blows.

'Come, come,' said Mr. Wood, 'set the boy down, and the bellows a-going; my horse wants shoeing, and the poor lad has had strapping enough.'

The blacksmith obeyed, and cast poor Master Thomas loose. As he staggered away and looked back at his tormentor, his countenance assumed an expression which made Mr. Wood say, grasping hold of Macshane's arm, 'It's the boy, it's the boy! when his mother gave Galgenstein the laudanum, she had the self-same look with her!'

'Had she really now?' said Mr. Macshane. 'And pree, meejor, who was his mother?'

'Mrs. Cat, you fool!' answered Wood.

'Then, upon my secret word of honor, she's a mighty fine kitten anyhow, my dear. Aha!'

'They don't drown such kittens,' said Mr. Wood archly; and Macshane, taking the allusion, clapped his finger to his nose in token of perfect approbation of his commander's sentiment.

While the blacksmith was shoeing the horse, Mr. Wood asked him many questions concerning the lad whom he had just been chastising, and succeeded, beyond a doubt, in establishing his identity with the child whom Catherine Hall had brought into the world seven years since. Billings told him of all the virtues of his wife and the manifold crimes of the lad; how he stole, and fought, and lied, and swore; and though the youngest under his roof, exercised the most baneful influence over all the rest of his family. He was determined at last, he said, to put him to the parish, for he did not dare to keep him.

'He's a fine whelp, and would fetch ten pieces in Virginy,' sighed the ensign.

'Crimp of Bristol would give five for him,' said Mr. Wood, ruminating.

'Why not take him?' said the ensign.

'Faith, why not?' said Mr. Wood. 'His keep, meanwhile, will not be sixpence a day.' Then turning round to the blacksmith, 'Mr. Billings,' said he, 'you will be surprised, perhaps, to hear that I know everything regarding that poor lad's history. His mother was an unfortunate lady of high family, now no more; his father a German nobleman, Count de Galgenstein by name——'

'The very man!' said Billings; 'a young, fair-haired man, who came here with the child and a dragoon sergeant.'

'Count de Galgenstein by name, who, on the point of death, recommended the infant to me.'

'And did he pay you seven years' boarding?' said Mr. Billings, who was quite alive at the very idea.

'Alas, sir, not a jot! he died, sir, £600 in my debt; didn't he, ensign?'

'Six hundred, upon my sacred honor! I remember when he got into the house along with the poli——'

'Psha! what matters it?' here broke out Mr. Wood, looking fiercely at the ensign. 'Six hundred pounds he owes me; how was he to pay you? But he told me to take charge of this boy, if I found him; and found him I have, and will take charge of him, if you will hand him over.'

'Send our Tom!' cried Billings. And when that youth appeared, scowling, and yet trembling, and prepared, as it seemed, for another castigation, his father, to his surprise, asked him if he was willing to go along with those gentlemen, or whether he would be a good lad and stay with him.

Mr. Tom replied immediately, 'I won't be a good lad, and I'd rather go to—— than stay with you!'

'Will you leave your brothers and sisters?' said Billings, looking very dismal.

'Hang my brothers and sisters—I hate 'em; and, besides, I haven't got any!'
'But you had a good mother, hadn't you, Tom?'
Tom paused for a moment.
'Mother's gone,' said he, 'and you flog me, and I'll go with these men.'
'Well, then, go thy ways,' said Billings, starting up in a passion; 'go thy ways for a graceless reprobate; and if this gentleman will take you, he may do so.'

After some further parley the conversation ended, and the next morning Mr. Wood's party consisted of three, a little boy being mounted upon the bay horse, in addition to the ensign or himself; and the whole company went journeying toward Bristol.

We have said that Mrs. Hayes had, on a sudden, taken a fit of maternal affection, and was bent upon being restored to her child; and that benign destiny which watched over the life of this lucky lady instantly set about gratifying her wish, and, without cost to herself or coach hire or saddle horse, sent the young gentleman very quickly to her arms. The village in which the Hayeses dwelt was but a very few miles out of the road from Bristol, whither, on the benevolent mission above hinted at, our party of worthies were bound; and coming, toward the afternoon, in sight of the house of that very Justice Ballance who had been so nearly the ruin of Ensign Macshane, that officer narrated, for the hundredth time, and with much glee, the circumstances which had then befallen him, and the manner in which Mrs. Hayes, the elder, had come forward to his rescue.

'Suppose we go and see the old girl?' suggested Mr. Wood. 'No harm can come to us now.' And his comrade always assenting, they wound their way toward the village, and reached it as the evening came on. In the public house where they rested Wood made inquiries concerning the Hayes family; was informed of the death of the old couple, of the establishment of John Hayes and his wife in their place, and of the kind of life that these latter led together. When all these points had been imparted to him, he ruminated much; an expression of sublime triumph and exultation at length lighted up his features. 'I think, Tim,' said he at last, 'that we can make more than five pieces of that boy.'

'Oh, in coorse!' said Timothy Macshane, Esq.; who always agreed with his 'Meejor.'

'In coorse, you fool! and how? I'll tell you how. This Hayes is well to do in the world, and——'

'And we'll nab him again—ha, ha!' roared out Macshane.
'By my sacred honor, meejor, there never was a gineral like you at a strathyjam!'

'Peace, you bellowing donkey, and don't wake the child. The man is well to do, his wife rules him, and they have no children. Now, either she will be very glad to have the boy back again, and pay for the finding of him, or else she has said nothing about him, and will pay us for being silent too; or, at any rate, Hayes himself will be ashamed at finding his wife the mother of a child a year older than his marriage, and will pay for the keeping of the brat away. There's profit, my dear, in any one of the cases, or my name's not Peter Brock.'

When the ensign understood this wondrous argument he would fain have fallen on his knees and worshiped his friend and guide. They began operations, almost immediately, by an attack on Mrs. Hayes. On hearing, as she did in private interview with the ex-corporal the next morning, that her son was found, she was agitated by both of the passions which Wood attributed to her. She longed to have the boy back, and would give any reasonable sum to see him; but she dreaded exposure, and would pay equally to avoid that. How could she gain the one point and escape the other?

Mrs. Hayes hit upon an expedient which, I am given to understand, is not uncommon nowadays. She suddenly discovered that she had a dear brother, who had been obliged to fly the country in consequence of having joined the Pretender, and had died in France, leaving behind him an only son. This boy her brother had, with his last breath, recommended to her protection, and had confided him to the charge of a brother officer who was now in the country, and would speedily make his appearance; and, to put the story beyond a doubt, Mr. Wood wrote the letter from her brother stating all these particulars, and Ensign Macshane received full instructions how to perform the part of the 'brother officer.' What consideration Mr. Wood received for his services we cannot say; only it is well known that Mr. Hayes caused to be committed to jail a young apprentice in his service, charged with having broken a cupboard in which Mr. Hayes had forty guineas in gold and silver, and to which none but he and his wife had access.

Having made these arrangements, the corporal and his little party decamped to a short distance, and Mrs. Catherine was left to prepare her husband for a speedy addition to his family in the shape of this darling nephew. John Hayes received the news with anything but pleasure. He had never heard of any brother of Catherine's; she had been bred at the workhouse, and nobody ever hinted that she had relatives; but it is easy for a lady of moderate genius to invent circumstances; and with lies, tears, threats, coaxings, oaths, and other blandishments, she compelled him to submit.

Two days afterward, as Mr. Hayes was working in the shop with his lady seated beside him, the trampling of a horse was heard in his courtyard, and a gentleman, of huge stature, descended from it, and strode into the shop. His figure was wrapped in a large cloak; but Mr. Hayes could not help fancying that he had somewhere seen his face before.

'This, I preshoom,' said the gentleman, 'is Misther Hayes, that I have come so many miles to see, and this is his amiable lady? I was the most intimate friend, madam, of your laminted brother, who died in King Lewis' service, and whose last touching letthers I dispatched to you two days ago. I have with me a further precious token of my dear friend Captain Hall—it is here.'

And so saying, the military gentleman, with one arm removed his cloak, and stretching forward the other into Hayes' face almost, stretched likewise forward a little boy, grinning and sprawling in the air, and prevented only from falling to the ground by the hold which the ensign kept of the waistband of his little coat and breeches.

'Isn't he a pretty boy?' said Mrs. Hayes, sidling up to her husband tenderly, and pressing one of Mr. Hayes' hands.

About the lad's beauty it is needless to say what the carpenter thought; but that night, and for many, many nights after, the lad stayed at Mr Hayes'.

CHAPTER VIII.

ENUMERATES THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF MASTER THOMAS BILLINGS—INTRODUCES BROCK AS DR. WOOD—AND ANNOUNCES THE EXECUTION OF ENSIGN MACSHANE.

We are obliged, in recording this history, to follow accurately that great authority, the 'Calendarium Newgaticum Roagorumque Registerium,' of which every lover of literature in the present day knows the value; and as that remarkable work totally discards all theunities in its narratives, and reckons the life of its heroes only by their actions, and not by periods of time, we must follow in the wake of this mighty ark—a humble cockboat. When it pauses, we pause; when it runs ten knots an hour, we run with the same celerity; and as, in order to carry the reader from the penultimate chapter of this work unto the last chapter, we were compelled to make him leap over a gap of seven blank years, ten years more must likewise be granted to us before we are at liberty to resume our history.

During that period Master Thomas Billings had been under the especial care of his mother; and, as may be imagined, he rather increased than diminished the accomplishments for which he had been remarkable while under the roof of his foster-father. And with this advantage, that while at the blacksmith's and only three or four years of age, his virtues were necessarily appreciated only in his family circle, and among those few acquaintances of his own time of life whom a youth of three can be expected to meet in the alleys or over the gutters of a small country hamlet—in his mother’s residence, his circle extended with his own growth, and he began to give proofs of those powers of which in infancy there had been only encouraging indications. Thus it was nowise remarkable that a child of four years should not know his letters, and should have had a great disinclination to learn them; but when a young man of fifteen showed the same creditable ignorance, the same undeviating dislike, it was easy to see that he possessed much resolution and perseverance. When it was remarked, too, that in case of any difference he not only beat the usher, but by no means disdained to torment and bully the very smallest boys of the school, it was easy to see that his mind was comprehensive and careful, as well as courageous and grasping. As it was said of the Duke of Wellington, in the Peninsula, that he had a thought for everybody—from Lord Hill to the smallest drummer in the army—in like manner Tom Billings bestowed his attention on high and low, but in the shape of blows; he would fight the strongest and kick the smallest, and was always at work with one or the other. At thirteen, when he was removed from the establishment whither he had been sent, he was the cock of the school out of doors, and the very last boy in. He used to let the little boys and newcomers pass him by, and laugh; but he always belabored them unmercifully afterward; and then it was, he said, his turn to laugh. With such a pugnacious turn, Tom Billings ought to have been made a soldier and might have died a marshal; but, by an unlucky ordinance of fate, he was made a tailor, and died a.—never mind what for the present; suffice it to say that he was suddenly cut off at a very early period of his existence by a disease which has exercised considerable ravages among the British youth.

By consulting the authority above mentioned, we find that Hayes did not confine himself to the profession of a carpenter, or remain long established in the country; but was induced, by the eager spirit of Mrs. Catherine most probably, to try his fortune in the metropolis; where he lived, flourished, and died. Oxford Road, Saint Giles', and Tottenham Court were, at various periods of his residence in town, inhabited by him. At one place he carried on the business of green grocer and small-coalman; in another he was carpenter, undertaker, and lender of money to the poor; finally, he was a lodging house keeper in the Oxford or Tyburn Road, but continued to exercise the last named charitable profession.

Lending as he did upon pledges, and carrying on a pretty large trade, it was not for him, of course, to inquire into the pedigree of all the pieces of plate, the bales of cloth, swords, watches, wigs, shoe-buckles, etc., that were confided by his friends to his keeping; but it is clear that his friends had the requisite confidence in him, and that he enjoyed the esteem of a class of characters who still live in history, and are admired unto this very day. The mind loves to think that, perhaps, in Mr. Hayes' back parlor the gallant Turpin might have hob-and-nobbed with Mrs. Catherine; that here, perhaps, the noble Sheppard might have cracked his joke, or quaffed his pint of rum. Who knows but that Macheath and Paul Clifford may have crossed legs under Hayes' dinner table? But why pause to speculate on things that might have been? why desert reality for fond imagination, or call up from their hounored graves the sacred dead? I know not; and yet, in sooth, I can never pass Cumberland Gate without a sigh as I think of the gallant cavaliers who traversed that road in old time. Pious priests accompanied their triumphs; their chariots were surrounded by hosts of glittering javelin-men. As the slave at the car of the Roman conqueror shouted, 'Remember thou art mortal!' before the eyes of the British warrior rode the undertaker and his coffin, telling him that he too must die! Mark well the spot! A hundred years ago Albion Street (where comic Power dwelt, Milesia's darling son)—Albion Street was a desert. The square of Connaught was without its penultimate, and, strictly speaking, naught. The Edgware Road was then a road, 'tis true, with tinkling wagons passing now and then, and fragrant walls of snowy hawthorn blossoms. The plowman whistled over Nutford Place; down the green solitudes of Sovereign Street the merry milkmaid led the lowing kine. Here, then, in the midst of green fields and sweet air—before ever omnibuses were, and when Pineapple Turnpike and Terrace were alike unknown—here stood Tyburn; and on the road toward it, perhaps to enjoy the prospect, stood, in the year 1725, the habitation of Mr. John Hayes.

One fine morning in the year 1725 Mrs. Hayes, who had been abroad in her best hat and riding hood, Mr. Hayes, who for a wonder had accompanied her, and Mrs. Springatt, a lodger, who for a remuneration had the honor of sharing Mrs. Hayes’ friendship and table, all returned smiling and rosy, about half-past ten o’clock, from a walk which they had taken to Bayswater. Many thousands of people were likewise seen flocking down the Oxford Road; and you would rather have thought, from the smartness of their appearance and the pleasure depicted on their countenances, that they were just issuing from a sermon than quitting the ceremony which they had been to attend.

The fact is that they had just been to see a gentleman hanged, a cheap pleasure, which the Hayes family never denied themselves; and they returned home with a good appetite to breakfast, braced by the walk, and tickled into hunger, as it were, by the spectacle. I can recollect when I was a gyp at Cambridge that the ‘men’ used to have breakfast parties for the very same purpose; and the exhibition of the morning acted infallibly upon the stomach, and caused the young students to eat with much voracity.

Well, Mrs. Catherine, a handsome, well-dressed, plump rosy woman, of three or four and thirty (and when, my dear, is a woman handsomer than at that age?) came in quite merrily from her walk, and entered the back parlor, which looked into a pleasant yard or garden, whereon the sun was shining very gayly; and where, at a table covered with a nice white cloth, laid out with some silver mugs, too, and knives, all with different crests and patterns, sat an old gentleman reading in an old book.

‘Here we are at last, doctor,’ said Mrs. Hayes, ‘and here’s his speech.’ She produced the little halfpenny tract, which to this day is sold at the gallows foot upon the death of every offender. ‘I’ve seen many men turned off, to be sure; but I never did see one who bore it more like a man than he did.’

‘My dear,’ said the gentleman addressed as doctor, ‘he was as cool and as brave as steel, and no more minded hanging than tooth-drawing.’

‘It was the drink that ruined him,’ said Mrs. Cat.

‘Drink and bad company. I warned him, my dear, I warned him years ago; and directly he got into Wild’s gang I knew that he had not a year to run. Ah, why, my love, will men continue such dangerous courses,' continued the doctor, with a sigh, 'and jeopardy their lives for a miserable watch or a snuffbox, of which Mr. Wild takes three-fourths of the produce? But here comes the breakfast; and, egad, I am as hungry as a lad of twenty.'

Indeed, at this moment Mrs. Hayes' servant appeared with a smoking dish of bacon and greens; and Mr. Hayes himself ascended from the cellar (of which he kept the key) bearing with him a tolerably large jug of small-beer. To this repast the doctor, Mrs. Springatt (the other lodger), and Mr. and Mrs. Hayes proceeded with alacrity. A fifth cover was laid, but not used; the company remarking that 'Tom had very likely found some acquaintances at Tyburn, with whom he might choose to pass the morning.'

Tom was Master Thomas Billings, now of the age of sixteen; slim, smart, five feet ten inches in height, handsome, sallow in complexion, black-eyed and black-haired. Mr. Billings was apprentice to a tailor, of tolerable practice, who was to take him into partnership at the end of his term. It was supposed, and with reason, that Tom would not fail to make a fortune in this business, of which the present head was one Beinkleider, a German. Beinkleider was skillful in his trade (after the manner of his nation, which in breeches and metaphysics—in inexpressibles and incomprehensibles—may instruct all Europe), but too fond of his pleasure. Some promissory notes of his had found their way into Hayes' hands, and had given him the means not only of providing Master Billings with a cheap apprenticeship, and a cheap partnership afterward; but would empower him, in one or two years after the young partner had joined the firm, to eject the old one altogether. So that there was every prospect that when Mr. Billings was twenty-one years of age poor Beinkleider would have to act, not as his master, but his journeyman.

Tom was a very precocious youth; was supplied by a doting mother with plenty of pocket money, and spent it with a number of lively companions of both sexes at plays, bull baitings, fairs, jolly parties on the river, and such like innocent amusements. He could throw a main, too, as well as his elders, had pinked his man in a row at Madam King's in the Piazza, and was much respected at the Roundhouse.

Mr. Hayes was not very fond of this promising young gentleman; indeed, he had the baseness to bear malice, because, in a quarrel which occurred about two years previously, he, Hayes, being desirous to chastise Mr. Billings, had found himself not only quite incompetent, but actually at the mercy of the boy, who struck him over the head with a joint stool, felled him to the ground, and swore he would have his life. The doctor, who was then also a lodger at Mr. Hayes' interposed, and restored the combatants, not to friendship, but to peace. Hayes never afterward attempted to lift his hand to the young man, but contented himself with hating him profoundly. In this sentiment Mr. Billings participated cordially, and, quite unlike Mr. Hayes, who never dared to show his dislike, used on every occasion when they met, by actions, looks, words, sneers, and curses, to let his stepfather know the opinion which he had of him. Why did not Hayes discard the boy altogether? Because if he did so he was really afraid of his life, and because he trembled before Mrs. Hayes, his lady, as the leaf trembles before the tempest in October. His breath was not his own, but hers; his money, too, had been chiefly of her getting—for though he was as stingy and mean as mortal man can be, and so likely to save much, he had not the genius for getting which Mrs. Hayes possessed. She kept his books (for she had learned to read and write by this time), she made his bargains, and she directed the operations of the poor-spirited little capitalist. When bills became due and creditors pressed for time, then she brought Hayes' own professional merits into play. The man was as deaf and cold as a rock; never did poor tradesman gain a penny from him; never were the bailiffs delayed one single minute from their prey. The Beinkleider business, for instance, showed pretty well the genius of the two. Hayes was for closing with him at once; but his wife saw the vast profits which might be drawn out of him, and arranged the apprenticeship and the partnership before alluded to. The woman heartily scorned and spit upon her husband, who fawned upon her like a spaniel. She loved good cheer; she did not want for a certain kind of generosity. The only feeling that Hayes had for anyone except himself was for his wife, whom he held in a cowardly awe and attachment; he liked drink, too, which made him chirping and merry, and accepted willingly any treats that his acquaintances might offer him; but he would suffer agonies when his wife brought or ordered from the cellar a bottle of wine.

And now for the doctor. He was almost seventy years of age. He had been much abroad; he was of a sober, cheerful aspect; he dressed handsomely and quietly in a broad hat and cassock, but saw no company except the few friends whom he met at the coffeehouse. He had an income of about £100, which he promised to leave to young Billings. He was amused with the lad, and fond of his mother, and had boarded with them for some years past. The doctor, in fact, was our old friend Corporal Brock; the Rev. Dr. Wood now, as he had been Major Wood fifteen years back.

Anyone who has read the former part of this history must have seen that we have spoken throughout with invariable respect of Mr. Brock; and that in every circumstance in which he has appeared he has acted not only with prudence, but often with genius. The early obstacle to Mr. Brock's success was want of conduct simply. Drink, women, play—how many a brave fellow have they ruined!—had pulled Brock down as often as his merit had carried him up. When a man's passion for play has brought him to be a scoundrel it at once ceases to be hurtful to him in a worldly point of view; he cheats and wins. It is only for the idle and luxurious that women retain their fascinations to a very late period; and Brock's passions had been whipped out of him in Virginia, where much ill health, ill treatment, hard labor, and hard food speedily put an end to them. He forgot there even how to drink; rum or wine made this poor declining gentleman so ill that he could indulge in them no longer, and so his three vices were cured. Had he been ambitious there is little doubt but that Mr. Brock, on his return from transportation, might have risen in the world; but he was old and a philosopher; he did not care about rising. Living was cheaper in those days, and interest for money higher; when he had amassed about £600 he purchased an annuity of £72, and gave out—why should he not?—that he had the capital as well as the interest. After leaving the Hayes family in the country he found them again in London; he took up his abode with them, and was attached to the mother and the son. Do you suppose that rascals have not affections like other people—hearts, madam—aye, hearts—and family ties which they cherish? As the doctor lived on with this charming family he began to regret that he had sunk all his money in annuities, and could not, as he repeatedly vowed he would, leave his savings to his adopted children.

He felt an indescribable pleasure (‘suave mari magno,’ etc.) in watching the storms and tempests of the Hayes menage. He used to encourage Mrs. Catherine into anger when haply that lady's fits of calm would last too long; he used to warm up the disputes between wife and husband, mother and son, and enjoy them beyond expression: they served him for daily amusement; and he used to laugh until the tears ran down his venerable cheeks at the accounts which young Tom continually brought him about his pranks abroad, among watchmen and constables, at taverns or elsewhere.

When, therefore, as the party were discussing their bacon and cabbage, before which the reverend doctor with much gravity said grace, Master Tom entered, Dr. Wood, who had before been rather gloomy, immediately brightened up, and made a place for Billings between himself and Mrs. Catherine.

‘How do, old cock?’ said that young gentleman familiarly. ‘How goes it, mother?’ And so saying, he seized eagerly upon the jug of beer which Mr. Hayes had drawn, and from which the latter was about to help himself, and poured down his throat exactly one quart.

‘Ah!’ said Mr. Billings, drawing breath after the draught, which he had learned accurately to gauge from the habit of drinking out of pewter measures which held precisely that quantity—‘ah!’ said Mr. Billings, drawing breath, and wiping his mouth with his sleeves, ‘this is very thin stuff, old Squaretoes; but my coppers have been red hot since last night, and they wanted a sluicing.’

‘Should you like some ale, dear?’ said Mrs. Hayes, that fond and judicious parent.

‘A quart of brandy, Tom?’ said Dr. Wood. ‘Your papa will run down to the cellar for it in a minute.’

‘I’ll see him hanged first!’ cried Mr. Hayes, quite frightened.

‘Oh, fie, now, you unnatural father!’ said the doctor.

The very name of father used to put Mr. Hayes in a fury.

‘I’m not his father, thank Heaven!’ said he.

‘No, nor nobody else’s,’ said Tom.

Mr. Hayes only muttered ‘Baseborn brat!’

‘His father was a gentleman—that’s more than you ever were!’ screamed Mrs. Hayes. ‘His father was a man of spirit; no cowardly sneak of a carpenter, Mr. Hayes! Tom has noble blood in his veins, for all he has a tailor’s appearance; and if his mother had had her right she would be now in a coach and six.’

‘I wish I could find my father,’ said Tom; ‘for I think Polly Briggs and I would look mighty well in a coach and six.’ Tom fancied that if his father was a count at the time of his birth he must be a prince now; and, indeed, went among his companions by the latter august title.

‘Aye, Tom, that you would,’ cried his mother, looking at him fondly.
'With a sword by my side and a hat and feather, there's never a lord at St. James' would cut a finer figure.'

After a little more of this talk, in which Mrs. Hayes let the company know her high opinion of her son—who, as usual, took care to show his extreme contempt for his stepfather—the latter retired to his occupations; the lodger, Mrs. Springatt, who had never said a word all this time, retired to her apartment on the second floor; and pulling out their pipes and tobacco, the old gentleman and the young one solaced themselves with half an hour's more talk and smoking; while the thrifty Mrs. Hayes, opposite to them, was busy with her books.

'What's in the confessions?' said Mr. Billings to Dr. Wood.

'There were six of 'em besides Mac: two for sheep, four house-breakers; but nothing of consequence, I fancy.'

'There's the paper,' said Wood archly. 'Read for yourself, Tom.'

Mr. Tom looked at the same time very fierce and very foolish; for though he could drink, swear, and fight as well as any lad of his inches in England, reading was not among his accomplishments. 'I tell you what, doctor,' said he, '— you! have no bantering with me,—for I'm not the man that will bear it, — me!' and he threw a tremendous swaggering look across the table.

'I want you to learn to read, Tommy dear. Look at your mother there over her books; she keeps them as neat as a scrivener now, and at twenty she could make never a stroke.'

'Your godfather speaks for your good, child; and for me, thou knowest that I have promised thee a gold-headed cane and periwig on the first day that thou canst read me a column of the Flying Post.'

'Hang the periwig!' said Mr. Tom testily. 'Let my godfather read the paper himself if he has a liking for it.'

Whereupon the old gentleman put on his spectacles, and glanced over the sheet of whitey-brown paper, which, ornamented with a picture of a gallows at the top, contained the biographies of the seven unlucky individuals who had that morning suffered the penalty of the law. With the six heroes who came first in the list we have nothing to do; but have before us a copy of the paper containing the life of No. 7, and which the doctor read with an audible voice.

'CAPTAIN MACSHANE.

'The seventh victim to his own crimes was the famous highwayman Captain Macshane, so well known as the Irish Fire-eater.
'The captain came to the ground in a fine white lawn shirt and nightcap; and, being a Papist in his religion, was attended by Father O'Flaherty, Popish priest, and chaplain to the Bavarian Envoy.

'Captain Macshane was born of respectable parents in the town of Clonakilty in Ireland, being descended from most of the kings in that country. He had the honor of serving their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and her Majesty Queen Anne, in Flanders and Spain, and obtained much credit from my Lords Marlborough and Peterborough for his valor.

'But being placed on half pay at the end of the war, Ensign Macshane took to evil courses; and, frequenting the bagnios and dice-houses, was speedily brought to ruin.

'Being at this pass, he fell in with the notorious Captain Wood, and they two together committed many atrocious robberies in the inland counties; but these being too hot to hold them, they went into the West, where they were unknown. Here, however, the day of retribution arrived; for, having stolen three pewter pots from a public house, they, under false names, were tried at Exeter, and transported for seven years beyond the sea. Thus it is seen that Justice never sleeps; but, sooner or later, is sure to overtake the criminal.

'On their return from Virginia a quarrel about booty arose between these two, and Macshane killed Wood in a combat that took place between them near to the town of Bristol; but a wagon coming up, Macshane was obliged to fly without the ill-gotten wealth; so true is it that wickedness never prospers.

'Two days afterward Macshane met the coach of Miss Macraw, a Scotch lady and heiress, going, for lumbago and gout, to the Bath. He at first would have robbed this lady; but such were his arts that he induced her to marry him; and they lived together for seven years in the town of Eddenboro in Scotland—he passing under the name of Colonel Geraldine. The lady dying, and Macshane having expended all her wealth, he was obliged to resume his former evil courses in order to save himself from starvation; whereupon he robbed a Scotch lord, by name the Lord of Whistlebinkie, of a mull of snuff; for which crime he was condemned to the Tolbooth prison at Eddenboro in Scotland, and whipped many times in publick.

'These deserved punishments did not at all alter Captain Macshane's disposition; and on the 17th of February last he stopped the Bavarian Envoy's coach on Blackheath, coming from Dover, and robbed his Excellency and his chaplain, taking from the former his money, watches, star, a fur cloak, his sword (a very valuable one); and from the latter a Romish missal, out of which he was then reading, and a case-bottle.'

'The Bavarian Envoy!' said Tom parenthetically. 'My master, Beinkleider, was his lordship's regimental tailor in Germany, and is now making a court suit for him. It will be a matter of a hundred pounds to him, I warrant.'

Dr. Wood resumed his reading. 'Hum—hum! A Romish missal, out of which he was reading, and a case-bottle.

'By means of the famous Mr. Wild this notorious criminal was brought to justice, and the case-bottle and missal have been restored to Father O'Flaherty.

'During his confinement in Newgate Mr. Maeshane could not be brought to express any contrition for his crimes, except that of having killed his commanding officer. For this Wood he pretended an excessive sorrow, and vowed that usquebaugh had been the cause of his death—indeed, in prison he partook of no other liquor, and drunk a bottle of it on the day before his death.

'He was visited by several of the clergy and gentry in his cell, among others by the Popish priest whom he had robbed, Father O'Flaherty, before mentioned, who attended him likewise in his last moments (if that idolatrous worship may be called attention); and likewise by the Father's patron, the Bavarian Ambassador, his Excellency Count Maximilian de Galgenstein.'

As old Wood came to these words he paused to give them utterance.

'What! Max?' screamed Mrs. Hayes, letting her ink bottle fall over her ledgers.

'Why, be hanged if it ben't my father!' said Mr. Billings.

'Your father, sure enough, unless there be others of his name, and unless the scoundrel is hanged,' said the doctor—sinking his voice, however, at the end of the sentence.

Mr. Billings broke his pipe in an agony of joy. 'I think we'll have the coach now, mother,' says he; 'and I'm blessed if Polly Briggs shall not look as fine as a duchess.'

'Polly Briggs is a low slut, Tom, and not fit for the likes of you, his Excellency's son. Oh, fie! You must be a gentleman now, sirrah; and I doubt whether I shan't take you away from that odious tailor's shop altogether.'

To this proposition Mr. Billings objected altogether; for, besides Mrs. Briggs before alluded to, the young gentleman was much attached to his master's daughter, Mrs. Margaret Gretel or Gretchen Beinkleider.
'No,' says he. 'There will be time to think of that hereafter, ma'am. If my pa makes a man of me, why, of course, the shop may go to the deuce for what I care; but we had better wait, look you, for something certain before we give up such a pretty bird in the hand as this.'

'He speaks like Solomon,' said the doctor.

'I always said he would be a credit to his old mother, didn't I, Brock?' cried Mrs. Cat, embracing her son very affectionately. 'A credit to her; aye, I warrant, a real blessing! And dost thou want any money, Tom? for a lord's son must not go about without a few pieces in his pocket. And I tell thee, Tommy, thou must go and see his lordship; and thou shalt have a piece of brocade for a waistcoat, thou shalt; aye, and the silver-hilted sword I told thee of; but oh, Tommy, Tommy! have a care, and don't be a drawing of it in naughty company at the gaming houses, or at the—'

'A drawing of fiddlesticks, mother! If I go to see my father I must have a reason for it; and instead of going with a sword in my hand I shall take something else in it.'

'The lad is a lad of nous,' cried Dr. Wood, 'although his mother does spoil him so cruelly. Look you, Madam Cat: did you not hear what he said about Beinkleider and the clothes? Tommy will just wait on the count with his lordship's breeches. A man may learn a deal of news in the trying on of a pair of breeches.'

And so it was agreed that in this manner the son should at first make his appearance before his father. Mrs. Cat gave him the piece of brocade, which, in the course of the day, was fashioned into a smart waistcoat (for Beinkleider's shop was close by, in Cavendish Square). Mrs. Gretel, with many blushes, tied a fine blue ribbon round his neck; and in a pair of silk stockings, with gold buckles to his shoes, Master Billings looked a very proper young gentleman.

'And, Tommy,' said his mother, blushing and hesitating, 'should Max—should his lordship ask after your—want to know if your mother is alive, you can say she is, and well, and often talks of old times. And, Tommy' (after another pause), 'you needn't say anything about Mr. Hayes; only say I'm quite well.'

Mrs. Hayes looked at him as he marched down the street, a long, long way. Tom was proud and gay in his new costume, and was not unlike his father. As she looked, lo! Oxford Street disappeared, and she saw a green common, and a village, and a little inn. There was a soldier leading a pair of horses about on the green common; and in the inn sat a cavalier, so young, so merry, so beautiful! Oh, what slim white hands he had; and winning words, and tender, gentle blue eyes! Was it not an honor to a country lass that such a noble gentleman should look at her for a moment? Had he not some charm about him that she must needs obey when he whispered in her ear, ‘Come, follow me!’ As she walked toward the lane that morning how well she remembered each spot as she passed it, and the look it wore for the last time! How the smoke was rising from the pastures, how the fish were jumping and plashing in the mill stream! There was the church, with all its windows lighted up with gold, and yonder were the reapers sweeping down the brown corn. She tried to sing as she went up the hill—what was it? She could not remember; but oh, how well she remembered the sound of the horse’s hoofs as they came quicker, quicker—nearer, nearer! How noble he looked on his great horse! Was he thinking of her, or were they all silly words which he spoke last night, merely to pass away the time and deceive poor girls with? Would he remember them, would he?

‘Cat, my dear,’ here cried Mr. Brock, alias Captain, alias Dr. Wood, ‘here’s the meat a-getting cold, and I am longing for my breakfast.’

As they went in he looked her hard in the face. ‘What, still at it, you silly girl? I’ve been watching you these five minutes, Cat; and be hanged but I think a word from Galgenstein, and you would follow him as a fly does a treacle pot!’

They went in to breakfast; but though there was a hot shoulder of mutton and onion sauce—Mrs. Catherine’s favorite dish—she never touched a morsel of it.

In the meanwhile Mr. Thomas Billings, in his new clothes which his mamma had given him, in his new ribbon which the fair Miss Beinkleider had tied round his neck, and having his Excellency’s breeches wrapped in a silk handkerchief in his right hand, turned down in the direction of Whitehall, where the Bavarian Envoy lodged. But, before he waited on him, Mr. Billings, being excessively pleased with his personal appearance, made an early visit to Mrs. Briggs, who lived in the neighborhood of Swallow Street; and who, after expressing herself with much enthusiasm regarding her Tommy’s good looks, immediately asked him what he would stand to drink. Rasberry gin being suggested, a pint of that liquor was sent for; and so great was the confidence and intimacy subsisting between these two young people that the reader will be glad to hear that Mrs. Polly accepted every shilling of the money which Tom Billings had received from his mamma the day before; nay, could with difficulty be prevented from seizing upon the cut-velvet breeches which he was carrying to the nobleman for whom they were made. Having paid his adieux to Mrs. Polly, Mr. Billings departed to visit his father.

CHAPTER IX.

INTERVIEW BETWEEN COUNT GALGENSTEIN AND MASTER THOMAS BILLINGS, WHEN HE INFORMS THE COUNT OF HIS PARENTAGE.

I don't know in all this miserable world a more miserable spectacle than that of a young fellow of five or six and forty. The British army, that nursery of valor, turns out many of the young fellows I mean, who, having flaunted in dragoon uniforms from seventeen to six-and-thirty; having bought, sold, or swapped during that period some two hundred horses; having played say fifteen thousand games at billiards; having drunk some six thousand bottles of wine; having consumed a reasonable number of Nugee coats, split many dozen pairs of high-heeled Hoby boots, and read the newspapers and the army list duly, retire from the service when they have attained their eighth luster, and saunter through the world, trailing from London to Cheltenham, and from Boulogne to Paris, and from Paris to Baden, their idleness, their ill health, and their ennui.

'In the morning of youth,' and when seen along with whole troops of their companions, these flowers look gaudy and brilliant enough; but there is no object more dismal than one of them alone, and in its autumnal or seedy state. My friend Captain Popjoy is one of them who has arrived at this condition, and whom everybody knows by his title of Father Pop. A kinder, simpler, more empty-headed fellow does not exist. He is forty-seven years old, and appears a young, good-looking man of sixty. At the time of the Army of Occupation he really was as good-looking a man as any in the dragoons. He now uses all sorts of stratagems to cover the bald place on his head by combing certain thin gray side locks over it. He has, in revenge, a pair of enormous mustaches, which he dyes of the richest blue black. His nose is a good deal larger and redder than it used to be; his eyelids have grown flat and heavy, and a little pair of red, watery eyeballs float in the midst of them; it seems as if the light which was once in those sickly green pupils had extravasated into the white part of the eye. If Pop's legs are not so firm and muscular as they used to be in those days when he took such leaps into White's buckskins, in revenge his waist is much larger. He wears a very good coat, however, and a waistband, which he lets out after dinner. Before ladies he blushes, and is as silent as a schoolboy. He calls them 'modest women.' His society is chiefly among young lads belonging to his former profession. He knows the best wine to be had at each tavern or café, and the waiters treat him with much respectful familiarity. He knows the names of every one of them; and shouts out, 'Send Markwell here!' or, 'Tell Cuttriss to give us a bottle of the yellow seal!' or, 'Dizzy voo, Monsure Borrel, noo donny shampang frappy,' etc. He always makes the salad or the punch, and dines out three hundred days in the year; the other days you see him in a two-franc eating house at Paris, or prowling about Rupert Street or St. Martin's Court, where you get a capital cut of meat for eightpence. He has decent lodgings and scrupulously clean linen; his animal functions are still tolerably well preserved, his spiritual have evaporated long since; he sleeps well, has no conscience, believes himself to be a respectable fellow, and is tolerably happy on the days when he is asked out to dinner.

Poor Pop is not very high in the scale of created beings; but if you fancy there is none lower you are in egregious error. There was once a man who had a mysterious exhibition of an animal quite unknown to naturalists, called 'the wusser.' Those curious individuals who desired to see the wusser were introduced into an apartment, where appeared before them nothing more than a little lean, shriveled, hideous, bleary-eyed, mangy pig. Every one cried out 'Swindle!' and 'Shame!' 'Patience, gentlemen; be heasy,' said the showman: 'look at that there hanimal; it's a perfect phenomaly of hugliness: I engage you never see such a pig.' Nobody ever had seen. 'Now, gentlemen,' said he, 'I'll keep my promise, has per bill; and bad as that there pig is, look at this here' (he showed another). 'Look at this here, and you'll see at once that it's a wusser.' In like manner the Popjoy breed is bad enough, but it serves only to show off the Galgenstein race, which is wusser.

Galgenstein had led a very gay life, as the saying is, for the last fifteen years, such a gay one that he had lost all capacity of enjoyment by this time, and only possessed inclinations without powers of gratifying them. He had grown to be exquisitely curious and fastidious about meat and drink, for instance, and all that he wanted was an appetite. He carried about with him a French cook, who could not make him eat; a doctor, who could not make him well; a mistress, of whom he was heartily sick after two days; a priest, who had been a favorite of the exemplary Dubois, and by turns used to tickle him by the imposition of a penance or by the repetition of a tale from the recueil of Nocé or La Fare. All his appetites were wasted and worn; only some monstrosity would galvanize them into momentary action. He was in that effete state to which many noblemen of his time had arrived, who were ready to believe in ghost-raising or in gold-making, or to retire into monasteries and wear hair shirts, or to dabble in conspiracies, or to die in love with little cookmaids of fifteen, or to pine for the smiles or at the frowns of a prince of the blood, or to go mad at the refusal of a chamberlain's key. The last gratification he remembered to have enjoyed was that of riding bareheaded in a soaking rain for three hours by the side of his grand duke's mistress' coach, taking the pas of Count Krähwinkel, who challenged him, and was run through the body for this very dispute. Galgenstein gained a rheumatic gout by it, which put him to tortures for many months; and was further gratified with the post of English Envoy. He had a fortune, he asked no salary, could look the envoy very well. Father O'Flaherty did all the duties, and furthermore, acted as a spy over the ambassador—a sinecure post; for the man had no feelings, wishes, or opinions—absolutely none.

'Upon my life, father,' said this worthy man, 'I care for nothing. You have been talking for an hour about the regent's death, and the Duchess of Phalaris, and sly old Fleury, and what not; and I care just as much as if you told me that one of my Bauers at Galgenstein had killed a pig; or as if my lackey, La Rose yonder, had made love to my mistress.'

'He does!' said the reverend gentleman.

'Ah, M. l'Abbé!' said La Rose, who was arranging his master's enormous court periwig, 'you are, hélas! wrong. M. le Comte will not be angry at my saying that I wish the accusation were true.'

The count did not take the slightest notice of La Rose's wit, but continued his own complaints.

'I tell you, abbé, I care for nothing. I lost a thousand guineas t'other night at basset; I wish to my heart I could have been vexed about it. Egad! I remember the day when to lose a hundred made me half mad for a month. Well, next day I had my revenge at dice, and threw thirteen mains. There was some delay—a call for fresh bones, I think; and would you believe it?—I fell asleep with the box in my hand!'

'A desperate case, indeed,' said the abbé.

'If it had not been for Krähwinkel I should have been a dead man, that's positive. That pinking had saved me.'

'I make no doubt of it,' said the abbé. 'Had your Excellency not run him through he, without a doubt, would have done the same for you.'

'Psha! you mistake my words, M. l'Abbé' (yawning). 'I mean—what cursed chocolate!—that I was dying for want of excitement. Not that I care for dying; no, d—-me, if I do!'

'When you do, your Excellency means,' said the Abbé, a fat, gray-haired Irishman from the Irlandois College at Paris. His Excellency did not laugh, nor understand jokes of any kind; he was of an undeviating stupidity, and only replied:

'Sir, I mean what I say. I don't care for living: no, nor for dying either; but I can speak as well as another, and I'll thank you not to be correcting my phrases as if I were one of your cursed schoolboys, and not a gentleman of fortune and blood.'

Herewith the count, who had uttered four sentences about himself (he never spoke of anything else), sunk back on his pillows again, quite exhausted by his eloquence. The abbé, who had a seat and a table by the bedside, resumed the labors which had brought him into the room in the morning, and busied himself with papers, which occasionally he handed over to his superior for approval.

Presently M. La Rose appeared.

'Here is a person with clothes from Mr. Beinkleider's. Will your Excellency see him, or shall I bid him leave the clothes?'

The count was very much fatigued by this time; he had signed three papers, and read the first half dozen lines of a pair of them.

'Bid the fellow come in, La Rose; and hark ye, give me my wig: one must show one's self to be a gentleman before these scoundrels.' And he therefore mounted a large chestnut-colored, orange-scented pyramid of horse hair, which was to awe the newcomer.

He was a lad of about seventeen, in a smart waistcoat and a blue ribbon: our friend Tom Billings, indeed. He carried under his arm the count's destined breeches. He did not seem in the least awed, however, by his Excellency's appearance, but looked at him with a great degree of curiosity and boldness. In the same manner he surveyed the chaplain, and then nodded to him with a kind look of recognition.

'Where have I seen the lad?' said the father. 'Oh, I have it! My good friend, you were at the hanging yesterday, I think?'

Mr. Billings gave a very significant nod with his head. 'I never miss,' said he.

'What a young Turk! And pray, sir, do you go for pleasure or for business?'

'Business! what do you mean by business?'

'Oh, I did not know whether you might be brought up to the trade, or your relations be undergoing the operation.'

'My relations,' said Mr. Billings proudly, and staring the count full in the face, 'was not made for no such thing. I'm a tailor now, but I'm a gentleman's son—as good a man, aye, as his lordship there: for you aint his lordship—you're the Popish priest, you are; and we were very near giving you a touch of a few Protestant stones, master.'

The count began to be a little amused; he was pleased to see the abbé look alarmed, or even foolish.

'Egad, abbé,' said he, 'you turn as white as a sheet.'

'I don't fancy being murdered, my lord,' said the abbé, hastily; 'and murdered for a good work. It was but to be useful to yonder poor Irishman, who saved me as a prisoner in Flanders, when Marlborough would have hung me up like poor Macshane himself was yesterday.'

'Ah!' said the count, bursting out with some energy, 'I was thinking who the fellow could be ever since he robbed me on the Heath. I recollect the scoundrel now: he was a second in a duel I had here in the year '6.'

'Along with Major Wood, behind Montague House,' said Mr. Billings. 'I've heard on it.' And here he looked more knowing than ever.

'You!' cried the count, more and more surprised. 'And pray who the devil are you?'

'My name's Billings.'

'Billings?' said the count.

'I come out of Warwickshire,' said Mr. Billings.

'Indeed!'

'I was born at Birmingham town.'

'Were you, really!'

'My mother's name was Hayes,' continued Billings in a solemn voice. 'I was put out to nurse along with John Billings, a blacksmith; and my father run away. Now do you know who I am?'
Why, upon honor, now,' said the count, who was amused— "upon honor, Mr. Billings, I have not that advantage."

'Well, then, my lord, you're my father!'.

Mr. Billings, when he said this, came forward to the count with a theatrical air; and, flinging down the breeches of which he was the bearer, held out his arms and stared, having very little doubt but that his lordship would forthwith spring out of bed and hug him to his heart. A similar piece of naïveté many fathers of families have, I have no doubt, remarked in their children, who, not caring for their parents a single doit, conceive, nevertheless, that the latter are bound to show all sorts of affection for them. His lordship did move, but backward toward the wall and began pulling at the bell-rope with an expression of the most intense alarm.

'Keep back, sirrah! keep back! Suppose I am your father, do you want to murder me? Good Heavens, how the boy smells of gin and tobacco! Don't turn away, my lad! sit down there at a proper distance. And, La Rose, give him some eau-de-cologne, and get a cup of coffee. Well, now, go on with your story. Egad, my dear abbé, I think it is very likely that what the lad says is true.'

'If it is a family conversation,' said the abbé, 'I had better leave you.'

'Oh, for Heaven's sake, no! I could not stand the boy alone. Now, Mr. ah!—what's-your-name?—have the goodness to tell your story."

Mr. Billings was woefully disconcerted; for his mother and he had agreed that as soon as his father saw him he would be recognized at once, and, mayhap, made heir to the estates and title; in which, being disappointed, he very sulkily went on with his narrative, and detailed many of those events with which the reader has already been made acquainted. The count asked the boy's mother's Christian name, and being told it, his memory at once returned to him.

'What! are you little Cat's son?' said his Excellency. 'By Heaven's, mon cher abbé, a charming creature, but a tigress. I recollect the whole affair now. She's a little, fresh, black-haired woman, aint she? with a sharp nose and thick eyebrows, aye? Ah! yes, yes,' went on my lord, 'I recollect her, I recollect her. It was at Birmingham I first met her: she was my Lady Trippet's woman, wasn't she?'

'She was no such thing,' said Mr. Billings hotly. 'Her aunt kept the Bugle Inn on Waltham Green, and your lordship seduced her.'
Seduced her! Oh, 'gad, so I did. Stap me, now, I did. Yes, I made her jump on my black horse, and bore her off like—like Æneas bore away his wife from the siege of Rome! hey, l'abbé?'

'The events were precisely similar,' said the abbé. 'It is wonderful what a memory you have!'

'I was always remarkable for it,' continued his Excellency, 'Well, where was I—at the black horse? Yes, at the black horse. Well, I mounted her on the black horse, and rode her en croupe, egad—ha, ha!—to Birmingham; and there we billed and cooed together like a pair of turtle-doves: yes—ha!—that we did!'

'And this, I suppose, is the end of some of the billings?' said the abbé, pointing to Mr. Tom.

'Billings! What do you mean? Yes—oh—ah—a pun, a calembour. Fi donc, M. l'Abbé.' And then, after the won of very stupid people, M. de Galgenstein went on to explain to the abbé his own pun. 'Well, but to proceed,' cries he. 'We lived together at Birmingham, and I was going to be married to a rich heiress, egad! when what do you think this little Cat does? She murders me, egad! and makes me manquer the marriage. Twenty thousand, I think it was; and I wanted the money in those days. Now, wasn't she an abominable monster, that mother of yours, hey, Mr. a—What's-your-name?'

'She served you right!' said Mr. Billings, with a great oath, starting up out of all patience.

'Fellow!' said his Excellency, quite aghast, 'do you know to whom you speak—to a nobleman of seventy-eight descents; a count of the Holy Roman Empire; a representative of a sovereign? Ha, egad! don't stamp, fellow, if you hope for my protection.'

'D—n your protection!' said Mr. Billings in a fury. 'Curse you and your protection too! I'm a freeborn Briton, and no—French Papist! And any man who insults my mother—aye, or calls me feller, had better look to himself and the two eyes in his head, I can tell him!' And with this Mr. Billings put himself into the most approved attitude of the cockpit, and invited his father, the reverend gentleman, and M. La Rose, the valet, to engage with him in a pugilistic encounter. The two latter, the abbé especially, seemed dreadfully frightened; but the count now looked on with much interest; and giving utterance to a feeble kind of chuckle, which lasted for about half a minute, said:
'Paws off, Pompey! You young hangdog, you—egad, yes, aha! 'pon honor, you're a lad of spirit; some of your father's spunk in you, hey? I know him by that oath. Why, sir, when I was sixteen I used to swear—to swear, egad, like a Thames waterman, and exactly in this fellow's way! Buss me, my lad; no, kiss my hand. That will do'—and he held out a very lean yellow hand, peering from a pair of yellow ruffles. It shook very much, and the shaking made all the rings upon it shine only the more.

'Well,' says Mr. Billings, 'if you wasn't a-going to abuse me nor mother, I don't care if I shake hands with you. I aint proud!'

The abbé laughed with great glee; and that very evening sent off to his court a most ludicrous, spicy description of the whole scene of meeting between this amiable father and child; in which he said that young Billings was the élève favorite of M. Kitch, Ecuyer, le bourreau de Londres, and which made the duke's mistress laugh so much that she vowed that the abbé should have a bishopric on his return; for with such store of wisdom, look you, my son, wast the world governed in those days.

The count and his offspring meanwhile conversed with some cordiality. The former informed the latter of all the diseases to which he was subject, his manner of curing them, his great consideration as chamberlain to the Duke of Bavaria; how he wore his court suits, and of a particular powder which he had invented for the hair; how when he was seventeen he had run away with a canoness, egad! who was afterward locked up in a convent and grew to be sixteen stone in weight; how he remembered the time when ladies did not wear patches; and how the Duchess of Marlborough boxed his ears when he was so high because he wanted to kiss her.

All these important anecdotes took some time in the telling, and were accompanied by many profound remarks, such as, 'I can't abide garlic, nor white wine, stap me! nor sauerkraut, though his highness eats half a bushel per day. I ate it the first time at court; but when they brought it me a second time, I refused—refused, split me and grill me if I didn't! Everybody stared; his highness looked as fierce as a Turk; and that infernal Krähwinkel (my dear, I did for him afterward)—that cursed Krähwinkel, I say, looked as pleased as possible, and whispered to Countess Fritsch, "Blitzchen Frau Gräfinn," says he: "it's all over with Galgenstein." What did I do? I had the entrée, and demanded it. "Altesse," says I, falling on my knees, "I ate no kraut at dinner to-day. You remarked it: I saw your highness remark it."
"I did, M. le Compte," said his highness gravely.

"I had almost tears in my eyes; but it was necessary to come to a resolution, you know. "Sir," said I, "I speak with deep grief to your highness, who are my benefactor, my friend, my father; but of this I am resolved, I will never eat sauerkraut more; it don't agree with me. After being laid up for four weeks by the last dish of sauerkraut of which I partook, I may say with confidence—it don't agree with me. By impairing my health it impairs my intellect, and weakens my strength; and both I would keep for your highness' service."

"Tut, tut!" said his highness. "Tut, tut, tut!" Those were his very words.

"Give me my sword or my pen," said I. "Give me my sword or my pen, and with these Maximilian de Galgenstein is ready to serve you; but sure—sure, a great prince will pity the weak health of a faithful subject, who does not know how to eat sauerkraut?" His highness was walking about the room; I was still on my knees, and stretched forward my hand to seize his coat.

"Geht zum Teufel, sir," said he in a loud voice (it means "Go to the devil," my dear)—"Geht zum Teufel, and eat what you like!" With this he went out of the room abruptly, leaving in my hand one of his buttons, which I keep to this day. As soon as I was alone, amazed by his great goodness and bounty, I sobbed aloud—cried like a child? (the count's eyes filled and winked at the very recollection), and when I went back into the card room, stepping up to Krähwinkel, "Count," says I, "who looks foolish now?" Hey there, La Rose, give me the diamond—Yes, that was the very pun I made, and very good it was thought. "Krähwinkel," says I, "who looks foolish now?" and from that day to this I was never at a court day asked to eat sauerkraut—never.

"Hey there, La Rose! Bring me that diamond snuffbox in the drawer of my secrétaire,' and the snuffbox was brought. "Look at it, my dear," said the count, "for I saw you seemed to doubt. There is the button—the very one that came off his grace's coat.

Mr. Billings received it, and twisted it about with a stupid air. The story had quite mystified him; for he did not dare yet to think his father was a fool—his respect for the aristocracy prevented him.

When the count's communications had ceased, which they did as soon as the story of the sauerkraut was finished, a silence of some minutes ensued. Mr. Billings was trying to comprehend the circumstances above narrated; his lordship was exhausted; the chaplain had quitted the room directly the word sauerkraut was mentioned—he knew what was coming. His lordship looked for some time at his son, who returned the gaze with his mouth wide open. "Well," said the count—"well, sir? What are you sitting there for? If you have nothing to say, sir, you had better go. I had you here to amuse me—split me—and not to sit there staring!"

Mr. Billings rose in a fury.

"Hark ye, my lad," said the count, "tell La Rose to give thee five guineas, and, ah—come again some morning. A nice, well-grown young lad," mused the count as Master Tommy walked wondering out of the apartment; "a pretty fellow enough, and intelligent too."

"Well, he is an odd fellow, my father," thought Mr. Billings as he walked out, having received the sum offered to him. And he immediately went to call upon his friend Polly Briggs, from whom he had separated in the morning.

What was the result of their interview is not at all necessary to the progress of this history. Having made her, however, acquainted with the particulars of his visit to his father, he went to his mother's, and related to her all that had occurred.

Poor thing, she was very differently interested in the issue of it!

CHAPTER X.

SHOWING HOW GALGENSTEIN AND MRS. CAT RECOGNIZE EACH OTHER IN MARYLEBONE GARDENS—AND HOW THE COUNT DRIVES HER HOME IN HIS CARRIAGE.

About a month after the touching conversation above related there was given, at Marylebone Gardens, a grand concert and entertainment, at which the celebrated Mme. Aménaïde, a dancer of the theater at Paris, was to perform, under the patronage of several English and foreign noblemen, among whom was his Excellency the Bavarian Envoy. Mme. Aménaïde was, in fact, no other than the maitresse en titre of the M. de Galgenstein, who had her a great bargain from the Duke de Rohan-Chabot at Paris.

It is not our purpose to make a great and learned display here, otherwise the costumes of the company assembled at this fête might afford scope for at least half a dozen pages of fine writing; and we might give, if need were, specimens of the very songs and music sung on the occasion. Does not the Burney collection of music at the British Museum afford one an ample store of songs from which to choose? Are there not the memoirs of Colley Cibber? those of Mrs. Clark, the daughter of Colley? Is there not Congreve and Farquhar—nay, and at a pinch the 'Dramatic Biography,' or even the Spectator, from which the observant genius might borrow passages, and construct pretty antiquarian figments? Leave we these trifles to meaner souls! Our business is not with the breeches and periwigs, with the hoops and patches, but with the divine hearts of men, and the passions which agitate them. What need, therefore, have we to say that on this evening, after the dancing, the music, and the fireworks, M. de Galgenstein felt the strange and welcome pangs of appetite, and was picking a cold chicken, with an accompaniment of a bottle of champagne—when he was led to remark that a very handsome, plump little person, in a gorgeous stiff damask gown and petticoat, was sauntering up and down the walk running opposite his supping place, and bestowing continual glances toward his Excellency. The lady, whoever she was, was in a mask, such as ladies of high and low fashion wore at public places in those days, and had a male companion. He was a lad of only seventeen, marvelously well dressed—indeed, no other than the count's own son, Mr. Thomas Billings, who had at length received from his mother the silver-hilted sword, and the wig, which that affectionate parent had promised to him.

In the course of the month which had elapsed since the interview that has been described in the former chapter, Mr. Billings had several times had occasion to wait on his father; but though he had, according to her wishes, frequently alluded to the existence of his mother, the count had never at any time expressed the slightest wish to renew his acquaintance with that lady, who, if she had seen him, had only seen him by stealth.

The fact is that after Billings had related to her the particulars of his first meeting with his Excellency, which ended, like many of the latter visits, in nothing at all, Mrs. Hayes had found some pressing business, which continually took her to Whitehall, and had been prowling from day to day about M. de Galgenstein's lodgings. Four or five times in the week, as his Excellency stepped into his coach, he might have remarked, had he chosen, a woman in a black hood, who was looking most eagerly into his eyes; but those eyes had long since left off the practice of observing; and Madam Catherine's visits had so far gone for nothing.

On this night, however, inspired by gayety and drink, the count had been amazingly stricken by the gait and ogling of the lady in the mask. The Rev. O'Flaherty, who was with him, and had observed the figure in the black cloak, recognized, or thought he recognized, her. 'It is the woman who dogs your Excellency every day,' said he. 'She is with that tailor lad who loves to see people hanged—your Excellency's son, I mean.' And he was just about to warn the count of a conspiracy evidently made against him, and that the son had brought, most likely, the mother to play her arts upon him—he was just about, I say, to show to the count the folly and danger of renewing an old liaison with a woman such as he had described Mrs. Cat to be, when his Excellency, starting up, and interrupting his ghostly adviser at the very beginning of his sentence, said, 'Egad, l'abbé, you are right—it is my son, and a mighty smart-looking creature with him. Hey! Mr. What's-your-name—Tom, you rogue, don't you know your own father?' And so saying, and cocking his beaver on one side, M. de Galgenstein strutted jauntily after Mr. Billings and the lady.

It was the first time that the count had formally recognized his son.

'Tom, you rogue,' stopped at this, and the count came up. He had a white velvet suit, covered over with stars and orders, a neat modest wig and bag, and peach-colored silk stockings with silver clasps. 'The lady in the mask gave a start as his Excellency came forward. 'Law, mother, don't squeege so,' said Tom. The poor woman was trembling in every limb; but she had presence of mind to 'squeege' Tom a great deal harder; and the latter took the hint, I suppose, and was silent.

The splendid count came up. Ye gods, how his embroidery glittered in the lamps! What a royal exhalation of musk and bergamot came from his wig, his handkerchief, and his grand lace ruffles and frills! A broad yellow ribbon passed across his breast, and ended at his hip in a shining diamond cross—a diamond cross, and a diamond sword-hilt! Was anything ever seen so beautiful? And might not a poor woman tremble when such a noble creature drew near to her, and deigned, from the height of his rank and splendor, to look down upon her? As Jove came down to Semele in state, in his habits of ceremony, with all the grand cordons of his orders blazing about his imperial person—thus dazzling, magnificent, triumphant, the great Galgenstein descended toward Mrs. Catherine. Her cheeks glowed red hot under her coy velvet mask, her heart thumped against the whalebone prison of her stays. What a delicious storm of vanity was raging in her bosom! What a rush of long-pent recollections burst forth at the sound of that enchanting voice!

As you wind up a hundred-guinea chronometer with a twopenny watchkey—as by means of a dirty wooden plug you set all the waters of Versailles a raging and splashing and storming—in like manner, and by like humble agents, were Mrs. Catherine's tumultuous passions set going. The count, we have said, slipped up to his son, and merely saying, 'How do, Tom?' cut the young gentleman altogether, and passing round to the lady's side, said, 'Madam, 'tis a charming evening—egad it is!' She almost fainted; it was the old voice. There he was, after seventeen years, once more at her side!

Now I know what I could have done. I can turn out a quotation from Sophocles (by looking to the index) as well as another; I can throw off a bit of fine writing too, with passions, similes, and a moral at the end. What, pray, is the last sentence but one but the very finest writing? Suppose, for example, I had made Maximilian, as he stood by the side of Catherine, look up toward the clouds and exclaim, in the words of the voluptuous Cornelius Nepos,

*Δέναι τιμέσι
*Δραπάες φανεράν Δροσεράν φύσιν ενάγητον, κ. τ. λ.

Or suppose, again, I had said, in a style still more popular: The count advanced toward the maiden. They both were mute for a while; and only the beating of her heart interrupted that thrilling and passionate silence. Ah, what years of buried joys and fears, hopes and disappointments, arose from their graves in the far past, and in those brief moments flitted before the united ones! How sad was that delicious retrospect, and oh, how sweet! The tears that rolled down the cheeks of each were bubbles from the choked and moss-grown wells of youth; the sigh that heaved each bosom had some lurking odors in it—memories of the fragrance of boyhood, echoes of the hymns of the young heart! Thus is it ever—for these blessed recollections the soul always has a place; and while crime perishes, and sorrow is forgotten, the beautiful alone is eternal.

'Oh, golden legends, written in the skies!' mused de Galgenstein, 'ye shine as ye did in the olden days! We change, but ye speak ever the same language. Gazing in your abysmal depths, the feeble ratioci——

There, now, are six columns* of the best writing to be

*There were six columns, as mentioned by the accurate Mr. Solomons; but we have withdrawn two pages and three-quarters, because, although our correspondent has been excessively eloquent, according to custom, we were anxious to come to the facts of the story.

Mr. Solomons, by sending to our office, may have the canceled passages.—O. Y.
found in this or any other book. Galgenstein has quoted Euripides thrice, Plato once, Lycophron nine times, besides extracts from the Latin syntax and the minor Greek poets. Catherine's passionate embrauthings are of the most fashionable order; and I call upon the ingenious critic of the X. newspaper to say whether they do not possess the real impress of the giants of the olden time—the real Platonic smack, in a word. Not that I want in the least to show off; but it is as well, every now and then, to show the public what one can do.

Instead, however, of all this rant and nonsense, how much finer is the speech that the count really did make? 'It is a very fine evening—egad it is!' The 'egad' did the whole; Mrs. Cat was as much in love with him now as ever she had been; and, gathering up all her energies, she said, 'It is dreadful hot too, I think,' and with this she made a courtesy.

'Stiffing, split me!' added his Excellency. 'What do you say, madam, to a rest in an arbor, and a drink of something cool?'

'Sir!' said the lady, drawing back.

'Oh, a drink—a drink by all means,' exclaimed Mr. Billings, who was troubled with a perpetual thirst. 'Come, mo—Mrs. Jones, I mean; you're fond of a glass of cool punch, you know; and the rum here is prime, I can tell you.'

The lady in the mask consented with some difficulty to the proposal of Mr. Billings, and was led by the two gentlemen into an arbor, where she was seated between them; and some wax candles being lighted, punch was brought.

She drank one or two glasses very eagerly, and so did her two companions; although it was evident to see, from the flushed looks of both of them, that they had little need of any such stimulus. The count, in the midst of his champagne, it must be said, had been amazingly stricken and scandalized by the appearance of such a youth as Billings in a public place with a lady under his arm. He was, the reader will therefore understand, in the moral stage of liquor; and when he issued out it was not merely with the intention of examining Mr. Billings' female companion, but of administering to him some sound correction for venturing, at his early period of life, to form any such acquaintance. On joining Billings his Excellency's first step was naturally to examine the lady. After they had been sitting for a while over their punch he bethought him of his original purpose, and began to address a number of remarks to his son.

We have already given some specimens of M. de Galgenstein's sober conversation; and it is hardly necessary to trouble the reader with any further reports of his speeches. They were intolerably stupid and dull; as egotistical as his morning lecture had been, and a hundred times more rambling and prosy. If Cat had been in the possession of her sober senses she would have seen in five minutes that her ancient lover was a ninny, and have left him with scorn; but she was under the charm of old recollections, and the sound of that silly voice was to her magical. As for Mr. Billings, he allowed his Excellency to continue his prattle; only frowning, yawn- ing, cursing occasionally, but drinking continually.

So the count descanted at length upon the enormity of young Billings' early liaisons; and then he told his own, in the year four, with a burgomaster's daughter at Ratisbon, when he was in the Elector of Bavaria's service—then after Blenheim, when he had come over to the Duke of Marlborough, when a physician's wife at Bonn poisoned herself for him, etc., etc.; of a piece with the story of the canoness, which has been recorded before. All the tales were true. A clever, ugly man every now and then is successful with the ladies; but a handsome fool is irresistible. Mrs. Cat listened and listened. Good Heavens, she had heard all these tales before, and recollected the place and the time—how she was hemming a handkerchief for Max, who came round and kissed her, vowing that the physician's wife was nothing compared to her—how he was tired, and lying on the sofa, just come home from shooting. How handsome he looked! Cat thought he was only the handsomer now; and looked more grave and thoughtful, the dear fellow!

The garden was filled with a vast deal of company of all kinds, and parties were passing every moment before the arbor where our trio sat. About half an hour after his Excellency had quitted his own box and party the Rev. Mr. O'Flaherty came discreetly round to examine the proceedings of his diplomatical chef. The lady in the mask was listening with all her might; Mr. Billings was drawing figures on the table with punch; and the count talking incessantly. The father confessor listened for a moment; and then, with something resembling an oath, walked away to the entry of the gardens, where his Excellency's gilt coach, with three footmen, was waiting to carry him back to London. 'Get me a chair, Joseph,' said his reverence, who infinitely preferred a seat gratis in the coach. 'That fool,' muttered he, 'will not move for this hour.' The reverend gentleman knew that, when the count was on the subject of the physician's wife, his discourses were intolerably long; and took upon himself, therefore, to disappear, along with the rest of the count's party, who procured other conveyances, and returned to their homes.

After this quiet shadow had passed before the count's box many groups of persons passed and repassed; and among them was no other than Mrs. Polly Briggs, to whom we have been already introduced. Mrs. Polly was in company with one or two other ladies, and leaning on the arm of a gentleman with large shoulders and calves, a fierce cock to his hat, and a shabby genteel air. His name was Mr. Moffat, and his present occupation was that of doorkeeper at a gambling house in Covent Garden, where, though he saw many thousands pass daily under his eyes, his own salary amounted to no more than four-and-sixpence weekly—a sum quite insufficient to maintain him in the rank which he held.

Mr. Moffat had, however, received some funds—amounting, indeed, to a matter of twelve guineas—within the last month, and was treating Mrs. Briggs very generously to the concert. It may be as well to say that every one of the twelve guineas had come out of Mrs. Polly's own pocket, who, in return, had received them from Mr. Billings. And as the reader may remember that, on the day of Tommy's first interview with his father, he had previously paid a visit to Mrs. Briggs, having under his arm a pair of breeches, which Mrs. Briggs coveted—he should now be informed that she desired these breeches, not for pincushions, but for Mr. Moffat, who had long been in want of a pair.

Having thus episodically narrated Mr. Moffat's history, let us state that he, his lady, and their friends passed before the count's arbor, joining in a melodious chorus to a song which one of the society, an actor of Betterton's, was singing:

'Tis my will, when I'm dead, that no tear shall be shed,
No 'Hic jacet' be graved on my stone;
But pour o'er my ashes a bottle of red,
And say a good fellow is gone,
My brave boys!
And say a good fellow is gone.

'My brave boys' was given with vast emphasis by the party, Mr. Moffat growling it in a rich bass, and Mrs. Briggs in a soaring treble. As to the notes, when quavering up to the skies, they excited various emotions among the people in the gardens. 'Silence them blackguards!' shouted a barber, who was taking a pint of small-beer along with his lady. 'Stop that there infernal screeching!' said a couple of ladies, who were sipping ratafia in company with two pretty fellows.
'Dang it, it's Polly!' said Mr. Tom Billings, bolting out of the box, and rushing toward the sweet-voiced Mrs. Briggs. When he reached her, which he did quickly, and made his arrival known by tipping Mrs. Briggs slightly on the waist, and suddenly bouncing down before her and her friend, both of the latter drew back somewhat startled.

'Law, Mr. Billings!' says Mrs. Polly rather coolly, 'is it you? Who thought of seeing you here?'

'Who's this here young feller?' says towering Mr. Moffat with his bass voice.

'It's Mr. Billings, cousin, a friend of mine,' said Mrs. Polly beseechingly.

'Oh, cousin, if it's a friend of yours, he should know better how to conduct himself, that's all. Har you a dancing master, young feller, that you cut them there capers before gentlemen?' growled Mr. Moffat, who hated Mr. Billings for the excellent reason that he lived upon him.

'Dancing master be hanged!' said Mr. Billings with becoming spirit; 'if you call me dancing master I'll pull your nose.'

'What!' roared Mr. Moffat, 'pull my nose? My nose! I'll tell you what, my lad, if you durst move me, I'll cut your throat, curse me!'

'Oh, Moffy—cousin, I mean—'tis a shame to treat the poor boy so. Go away, Tommy; do go away; my cousin's in liquor,' whimpered Madam Briggs, who really thought that the great doorkeeper would put his threat into execution.

'Tommy!' said Mr. Moffat, frowning horribly; 'Tommy to me too? Dog, get out of my ssss——' Sight was the word which Mr. Moffat intended to utter; but he was interrupted; for, to the astonishment of his friends and himself, Mr. Billings did actually make a spring at the monster's nose, and caught it so firmly that the latter could not finish his sentence.

The operation was performed with amazing celerity; and, having concluded it, Mr. Billings sprung back, and whisked from out its sheath that new silver-hilted sword which his mamma had given him. 'Now,' said he with a fierce kind of calmness, 'now for the throat-cutting, cousin; I'm your man!'

How the brawl might have ended no one can say had the two gentlemen actually crossed swords; but Mrs. Polly, with a wonderful presence of mind, restored peace by exclaiming, 'Hush, hush! the beaks, the beaks!' Upon which, with one common instinct, the whole party made a rush for the garden gates, and disappeared into the fields. Mrs. Briggs knew her company; there was something in the very name of a constable which sent them all a flying.

After running a reasonable time Mr. Billings stopped. But the great Moffat was nowhere to be seen, and Polly Briggs had likewise vanished. Then Tom bethought him that he would go back to his mother, but arriving at the gate of the gardens, was refused admittance, as he had not a shilling in his pocket. 'I've left,' says Tommy, giving himself the airs of a gentleman, 'some friends in the gardens. I'm with his Excellency the Bavarian Henvy.

'Then you had better go away with him,' said the gate people. 'But I tell you I left him there, in the grand circle, with a lady; and, what's more, in the dark walk I have left a silver-hilted sword.'

'Oh, my lord, I'll go and tell him, then,' cried one of the porters, 'if you will wait.'

Mr. Billings seated himself on a post near the gate, and there consented to remain until the return of his messenger. The latter went straight to the dark walk, and found the sword, sure enough. But instead of returning it to its owner this discourteous knight broke the tranchant blade at the hilt, and flinging the steel away, pocketed the baser silver metal, and lurked off by the private door consecrated to the waiters and fiddlers.

In the meantime Mr. Billings waited and waited. And what was the conversation of his worthy parents inside the garden? I cannot say, but one of the waiters declared that he had served the great foreign count with two bowls of rack punch and some biscuits in No. 3; that in the box with him were first a young gentleman, who went away, and a lady; splendidly dressed and masked; that when the lady and his lordship were alone she edged away to the further end of the table, and they had much talk; that at last when his grace had pressed her very much, she took off her mask and said, 'Don't you know me now, Max?' that he cried out, 'My own Catherine, thou art more beautiful than ever!' and wanted to kneel down and vow eternal love to her; but she begged him not to do so in a place where all the world would see; that then his highness paid, and they left the gardens, the lady putting on her mask again.

When they issued from the gardens, 'Ho! Joseph La Rose, my coach!' shouted his Excellency in rather a husky voice; and the men who had been waiting came up with the carriage. A young gentleman, who was dozing on one of the posts at the entry, woke up suddenly at the blaze of the torches and the noise of the footmen. The count gave his arm to the lady in the mask, who slipped in; and he was whispering La Rose, when the lad who had been sleeping hit his Excellency on the shoulder, and said, 'I say, count, you can give me a cast home too,' and jumped into the coach.

When Catherine saw her son she threw herself into his arms, and kissed him with a burst of hysterical tears, of which Mr. Billings was at a loss to understand the meaning. The count joined them, looking not a little disconcerted; and the pair were landed at their own door, where stood Mr. Hayes in his nightcap, ready to receive them, astounded at the splendor of the equipage in which his wife returned to him.

CHAPTER XI.

OF SOME DOMESTIC QUARRELS, AND THE CONSEQUENCE THEREOF.

An ingenious magazine writer, who lived in the time of Mr.
Brock and the Duke of Marlborough, compared the latter gen-tleman’s conduct in battle, when he

In peaceful thought the field of death surveyed,
To fainting squadrons lent the timely aid;
Inspired repulsed battalions to engage,
And taught the doubtful battle where to rage—

Mr. Joseph Addison, I say, compared the Duke of Marlborough to an angel, who is sent by divine command to chastise a guilty people:

And pleased his Master's orders to perform,
Rides on the whirlwind, and directs the storm.

The four first of these novel lines touch off the duke’s disposition and genius to a tittle. He had a love for such scenes of strife; in the midst of them his spirit rose calm and supreme, soaring (like an angel or not, but anyway the compliment is a very pretty one) on the battle clouds majestic, and causing to ebb or to flow the mighty tide of war.

But as this famous simile might apply with equal propriety to a bad angel as to a good one, it may in like manner be employed to illustrate small quarrels as well as great—a little family squabble, in which two or three people are engaged, as well as a vast national dispute, argued on each side by the roaring throats of five hundred angry cannon. The poet means, in fact, that the Duke of Marlborough had an immense genius for mischief.

Our friend Brock, or Wood (whose actions we love to illustrate by the very handsomest similes), possessed this genius in common with his grace; and was never so happy, or seen to so much advantage, as when he was employed in setting people by the ears. His spirits, usually dull, then rose into the utmost gayety and good humor. When the doubtful battle flagged he by his art would instantly restore it. When, for instance, Tom's repulsed battalions of rhetoric fled from his mamma's fire, a few words of apt sneer or encouragement on Wood's part would bring the fight round again; or when Mr. Hayes' fainting squadrons of abuse broke upon the stubb follows of Tom's bristling obstinacy, it was Wood's delight to rally the former and bring him once more to the charge. A great share had this man in making those bad people worse. Many fierce words and bad passions, many falsehoods and knavery on Tom's part, much bitterness, scorn, and jealousy on the part of Hayes and Catherine, might be attributed to this hoary old tempter, whose joy and occupation it was to raise and direct the domestic storms and whirlwinds of the family of which he was a member. And do not let us be accused of an undue propensity to use sounding words because we compare three scoundrels in the Tyburn Road to so many armies, and Mr. Wood to a mighty field marshal. My dear sir, when you have well studied the world—how supremely great the meanest thing in this world is, and how infinitely mean the greatest—I am mistaken if you do not make a strange and proper jumble of the sublime and the ridiculous, the lofty and the low. I have looked at the world, for my part, and come to the conclusion that I know not which is which.

Well, then, on the night when Mrs. Hayes, as recorded by us, had been to the Marylebone Gardens, Mr. Wood had found the sincerest enjoyment in plying her husband with drink, so that, when Catherine arrived at home, Mr. Hayes came forward to meet her in a manner which showed that he was not only surly, but drunk. Tom stepped out of the coach first, and Hayes asked him, with an oath, where he had been. The oath Mr. Billings sternly flung back again (with another in its company), and at the same time refused to give his stepfather any sort of answer to his query.

'The old man is drunk, mother,' said he to Mrs. Hayes, as he handed that lady out of the coach (before leaving which she had to withdraw her hand rather violently from the grasp of the count, who was inside). Hayes instantly showed the correctness of his surmise by slamming the door courageously in Tom's face when he attempted to enter the house with his mother. And when Mrs. Catherine remonstrated, according to her wont, in a very angry and supercilious tone, Mr. Hayes replied with equal haughtiness, and a regular quarrel ensued.

People were accustomed in those days to use much more simple and expressive terms of language than are now thought polite; and it would be dangerous to give, in this present year 1840, the exact words of reproach which passed between Hayes and his wife in 1726. Mr. Wood sat near, laughing his sides out. Mr. Hayes swore that his wife should not go abroad to tea gardens in search of vile Popish noblemen, to which Mrs. Hayes replied that Mr. Hayes was a pitiful, lying, sneaking cur, and that she would go where she pleased. Mr. Hayes rejoined that if she said much more he would take a stick to her. Mr. Wood whispered, 'And serve her right.' Mrs. Hayes thereupon swore she had stood his cowardly blows once or twice before, but that if ever he did so again as sure as she was born she would stab him. Mr. Wood said, 'Curse me, but I like her spirit.'

Mr. Hayes took another line of argument, and said, 'The neighbors would talk, madam.'

'Aye, that they will, no doubt,' said Mr. Wood.

'Then let them,' said Catherine. 'What do we care about the neighbors? Didn't the neighbors talk when you sent Widow Wilkins to jail? Didn't the neighbors talk when you levied on poor old Thomson? You didn't mind then, Mr. Hayes.'

'Business, ma'am, is business; and if I did distrain on Thomson, and lock up Wilkins, I think you knew about it as much as I.'

'I'faith, I believe you're a pair,' said Mr. Wood.

'Pray, sir, keep your tongue to yourself. Your opinion isn't asked anyhow—no, nor your company wanted neither,' cried Mrs. Catherine with proper spirit.

At which remark Mr. Wood only whistled.

'I have asked this here gentleman to pass this evening along with me. We've been drinking together, ma'am.'

'What we have,' said Mr. Wood, looking at Mrs. Cat with the most perfect good humor.

'I say, ma'am, that we've been a-drinking together; and when we've been a-drinking together I say that a man is my friend. Dr. Wood is my friend, madam—the Rev. Dr. Wood. We've passed the evening in company, talking about politics, madam—politics and riddle-idle-igion. We've not been flaunting in tea gardens and ogling the men.'

'It's a lie!' shrieked Mrs. Hayes. 'I went with Tom—you know I did; the boy wouldn’t let me rest till I promised to go.

‘Hang him, I hate him,’ said Mr. Hayes; ‘he’s always in my way.’

‘He’s the only friend I have in the world, and the only being I care a pin for,’ said Catherine.

‘He’s an impudent, idle, good-for-nothing scoundrel, and I hope to see him hanged!’ shouted Mr. Hayes. ‘And pray, madam, whose carriage was that as you came home in? I warrant you paid something for the ride—ha, ha!’

‘Another lie!’ screamed Cat, and clutched hold of a supper knife. ‘Say it again, John Hayes, and, by ——, I’ll do for you.’

‘Do for me? Hang me,’ said Mr. Hayes, flourishing a stick, and perfectly pot-valiant, ‘do you think I care for a bastard and a——’

He did not finish the sentence, for the woman ran at him like a savage, knife in hand. He bounded back, flinging his arms about wildly, and struck her with his staff sharply across the forehead. The woman went down instantly. A lucky blow was it for Hayes and her; it saved him from death, perhaps, and her from murder.

All this scene—a very important one of our drama—might have been described at much greater length; but, in truth, the author has a natural horror of dwelling too long upon such hideous spectacles; nor would the reader be much edified by a full and accurate knowledge of what took place. The quarrel, however, though not more violent than many that had previously taken place between Hayes and his wife, was about to cause vast changes in the condition of this unhappy pair.

Hayes was at the first moment of his victory very much alarmed; he feared that he had killed the woman; and Wood started up rather anxiously too, with the same fancy. But she soon began to recover. Water was brought, her head was raised and bound up, and in a short time Mrs. Catherine gave vent to a copious fit of tears, which relieved her somewhat. These did not affect Hayes much—they rather pleased him, for he saw he had got the better; and although Cat fiercely turned upon him when he made some small attempt toward reconciliation, he did not heed her anger, but smiled and winked in a self-satisfied way at Wood. The coward was quite proud of his victory; and finding Catherine asleep, or apparently so, when he followed her to bed, speedily gave himself up to slumber too, and had some pleasant dreams to his portion.

Mr. Wood also went sniggering and happy upstairs to his chamber. The quarrel had been a real treat to him; it excited the old man—tickled him into good humor; and he promised himself a rare continuation of the fun when Tom should be made acquainted with the circumstances of the dispute. As for his Excellency the Count, the ride from Marylebone Gardens, and a tender squeeze of the hand which Catherine permitted to him on parting, had so inflamed the passions of the nobleman, that after sleeping for nine hours, and taking his chocolate as usual the next morning, he actually delayed to read the newspaper, and kept waiting a toy shop lady from Cornhill (with the sweetest bargain of mechlin lace) in order to discourse to his chaplain on the charms of Mrs. Hayes.

She, poor thing, never closed her lids except when she would have had Mr. Hayes imagine that she slumbered, but lay beside him, tossing and tumbling, with hot eyes wide open, and heart thumping, and pulse of 110, and heard the heavy hours tolling; and at last the day came peering, haggard, through the window curtains, and found her still wakeful and wretched.

Mrs. Hayes had never been, as we have seen, especially fond of her lord; but now, as the day made visible to her the sleeping figure and countenance of that gentleman, she looked at him with a contempt and loathing such as she had never felt even in all the years of her wedded life. Mr. Hayes was snoring profoundly; by his bedside, on his ledger, stood a large, greasy tin candlestick, containing a lank tallow candle, turned down in the shaft, and in the lower part his keys, purse, and tobacco pipe; his feet were huddled up in his greasy, threadbare clothes; his head and half his sallow face muffled up in a red woolen nightcap; his beard was of several days' growth; his mouth was wide open, and he was snoring profoundly; on a more despicable little creature the sun never shone. And to this sordid wretch was Catherine united forever. What a pretty rascal history might be read in yonder greasy daybook, which never left the miser!—he never read in any other. Of what a treasure were yonder keys and purse the keepers! Not a shilling they guarded but was picked from the pocket of necessity, plundered from needy wantonness, or pitilessly squeezed from starvation. 'A fool, a miser, and a coward! Why was I bound to this wretch?' thought Catherine—'I who am high-spirited and beautiful (did not he tell me so?); I who, born a beggar, have raised myself to competence, and might have mounted—who knows whither?—if cursed Fortune had not balked me!'
As Mrs. Cat did not utter these sentiments, but only thought them, we have a right to clothe her thoughts in the genteelest possible language; and, to the best of our power, have done so. If the reader examines Mrs. Hayes' train of reasoning he will not, we should think, fail to perceive how ingeniously she managed to fix all the wrong upon her husband, and yet to twist out some consolatory arguments for her own vanity. This perverse argumentation we have all of us, no doubt, employed in our time. How often have we—we poets, politicians, philosophers, family-men—found charming excuses for our own rascalities in the monstrous wickedness of the world about us; how loudly have we abused the times and our neighbors! All this devil's logic did Mrs. Catherine, lying wakeful in her bed on the night of the Marylebone fête, exert in gloomy triumph.

It must, however, be confessed, that nothing could be more just than Mrs. Hayes' sense of her husband's scoundrelism and meanness; for if we have not proved these in the course of this history, we have proved nothing. Mrs. Cat had a shrewd, observing mind; and if she wanted for proofs against Hayes she had but to look before and about her to find them. This amiable pair were lying in a large walnut bed, with faded silk furniture, which had been taken from under a respectable old invalid widow, who had become security for a prodigal son; the room was hung round with an antique tapestry (representing Rebecca at the Well, Bathsheba Bathing, Judith and Holofernes, and other subjects from Holy Writ) which had been many score times sold for fifty pounds, and bought back by Mr. Hayes for two, in those accommodating bargains which he made with young gentlemen, who received fifty pounds of money and fifty of tapestry in consideration of their hundred-pound bills. Against this tapestry, and just cutting off Holofernes' head, stood an enormous ominous black clock, the spoil of some other usurious transaction. Some chairs, and a dismal old black cabinet, completed the furniture of this apartment: it wanted but a ghost to render its gloom complete.

Mrs. Hayes sat up in the bed sternly regarding her husband. There is, be sure, a strong magnetic influence in wakeful eyes so examining a sleeping person (do not you, as a boy, remember waking of bright summer mornings and finding your mother looking over you? Had not the gaze of her tender eyes stolen into your senses long before you woke, and cast over your slumbering spirit a sweet spell of peace and love and fresh springing joy?). Some such influence had Catherine's looks upon her husband, for, as he slept under them, the man began to writhe about uneasily, and to burrow his head in the pillow, and to utter quick, strange moans and cries, such as have often jarred one's ear while watching at the bed of the feverish sleeper. It was just upon six, and presently the clock began to utter those dismal grinding sounds, which issue from clocks at such periods, and which sound like the death rattle of the departing hour. Then the bell struck the knell of it; and with this Mr. Hayes awoke, and looked up, and saw Catherine gazing at him.

Their eyes met for an instant, and Catherine turned away, burning red, and looking as if she had been caught in the commission of a crime.

A kind of blank terror seized upon old Hayes' soul: a horrible icy fear, and presentiment of coming evil; and yet the woman had but looked at him. He thought rapidly over the occurrences of the last night, the quarrel, and the end of it. He had often struck her before when angry, and heaped all kinds of bitter words upon her; but in the morning she bore no malice, and the previous quarrel was forgotten, or at least passed over. Why should the last night's dispute not have the same end? Hayes calculated all this, and tried to smile.

'I hope we're friends, Cat?' said he. 'You know I was in liquor last night, and sadly put out by the loss of that fifty pound. They'll ruin me, dear—I know they will.'

Mrs. Hayes did not answer.

'I should like to see the country again, dear,' said he in his most wheedling way. 'I've a mind, do you know, to call in all our money? It's you who've made every farthing of it, that's sure; and it's a matter of two thousand pounds by this time. Suppose we go into Warwickshire, Cat, and buy a farm, and live genteel. Shouldn't you like to live a lady in your own country again? How they'd stare at Birmingham! hey, Cat?'

And with this Mr. Hayes made a motion as if he would seize his wife's hand, but she flung his back again.

'Coward!' said she, 'you want liquor to give you courage, and then you've only heart enough to strike women.'

'It was only in self-defense, my dear,' said Hayes, whose courage was all gone. 'You tried, you know, to—to—'

'To stab you; and I wish I had!' said Mrs. Hayes, setting her teeth, and glaring at him like a demon; and so saying she sprung out of bed. There was a great stain of blood on her pillow. 'Look at it,' said she. 'That blood's of your shedding!' and at this Hayes fairly began to weep, so utterly downcast and frightened was the miserable man. The wretch's tears only inspired his wife with a still greater rage and loathing; she cared not so much for the blow, but she hated the man: the man to whom she was tied forever—forever! The bar between her and wealth, happiness, love, rank perhaps. 'If I were free,' thought Mrs. Hayes (the thought had been sitting at her pillow all night, and whispering ceaselessly into her ear)—'if I were free, Max would marry me; I know he would—he said so yesterday!'

As if by a kind of intuition, old Wood seemed to read all this woman's thoughts; for he said that day, with a sneer, that he would wager she was thinking how much better it would be to be a count's lady than a poor miser's wife. 'And faith,' said he, 'a count and a chariot and six is better than an old skinflint with a cudgel.' And then he asked her if her head was better, and supposed that she was used to beating; and cut sundry other jokes, which made the poor wretch's wounds of mind and body feel a thousand times sorer.

Tom, too, was made acquainted with the dispute, and swore his accustomed vengeance against his stepfather. Such feelings Wood, with a dexterous malice, would never let rest; it was his joy, at first quite a disinterested one, to goad Catherine and to frighten Hayes, though, in truth, that unfortunate creature had no occasion for incitements from without to keep up the dreadful state of terror and depression into which he had fallen.

For from the morning after the quarrel the horrible words and looks of Catherine never left Hayes' memory; but a cold fear followed him—a dreadful prescience. He strove to overcome this fate as a coward would—to kneel to it for compassion—to coax and wheedle it into forgiveness. He was slavishly gentle to Catherine, and bore her fierce taunts with mean resignation. He trembled before young Billings, who was now established in the house (his mother said to protect her against the violence of her husband), and suffered his brutal language and conduct without venturing to resist.

The young man and his mother lorded over the house; Hayes hardly dared to speak in their presence; seldom sat with the family except at meals, but slipped away to his chamber (he slept apart now from his wife) or passed the evening at the public house, where he was constrained to drink—to spend some of his beloved sixpences for drink!

And of course the neighbors began to say, 'John Hayes neglects his wife.' 'He tyrannizes over her, and beats her.'
'Always at the public house, leaving an honest woman alone at home!'

The unfortunate wretch did not hate his wife. He was used to her—fond of her as much as he could be fond—sighed to be friends with her again—repeatedly would creep whimpering to Wood's room, when the latter was alone, and beg him to bring about a reconciliation. They were reconciled, as much as ever they could be. The woman looked at him, thought what she might be but for him, and scorned and loathed him with a feeling that almost amounted to insanity. What nights she lay awake, weeping and cursing herself and him! His humility and beseeching looks only made him more despicable and hateful to her.

If Hayes did not hate the mother, however, he hated the boy—hated and feared him dreadfully. He would have poisoned him if he had had the courage; but he dared not even look at him as he sat there, the master of the house, in insolent triumph. O God! how the lad's brutal laughter rung in Hayes' ears; and how the stare of his fierce, bold black eyes pursued him! Of a truth, if Mr. Wood loved mischief, as he did, honestly and purely for mischief's sake, he had enough here. There was mean malice and fierce scorn and black revenge and sinful desire boiling up in the hearts of these wretched people, enough to content Mr. Wood's great master himself.

Hayes' business, as we have said, was nominally that of a carpenter; but since, for the last few years, he had added to it that of a lender of money, the carpenter's trade had been neglected altogether for one so much more profitable. Mrs. Hayes had exerted herself, with much benefit to her husband, in his usurious business. She was a resolute, clear-sighted, keen woman, that did not love money, but loved to be rich and push her way in the world. She would have nothing to do with the trade now, however, and told her husband to manage it himself. She felt that she was separated from him forever, and could no more be brought to consider her interests as connected with his own.

The man was well fitted for the creeping and niggling of his dastardly trade; and gathered his moneys, and busied himself with his lawyer, and acted as his own bookkeeper and clerk, not without satisfaction. His wife's speculations, when they worked in concert, used often to frighten him. He never sent out his capital without a pang, and only because he dared not question her superior judgment and will. He began now to lend no more; he could not let the money out of his sight. His sole pleasure was to creep up into his room, and count and recount it. When Billings came into the house Hayes had taken a room next to that of Wood. It was a protection to him; for Wood would often rebuke the lad for using Hayes ill; and both Catherine and Tom treated the old man with deference.

At last—it was after he had collected a good deal of his money—Hayes began to reason with himself, 'Why should I stay—stay to be insulted by that boy, or murdered by him? He is ready for any crime.' He determined to fly. He would send Catherine money every year. No—she had the furniture; let her let lodgings—that would support her. He would go, and live away abroad in some cheap place—away from that boy and his horrible threats. The idea of freedom was agreeable to the poor wretch; and he began to wind up his affairs as quickly as he could.

Hayes would now allow no one to make his bed or enter his room; and Wood could hear him through the panels fidgeting perpetually to and fro, opening and shutting of chests, and clinking of coin. At the least sound he would start up, and would go to Billings' door and listen. Wood used to hear him creeping through the passages, and returning stealthily to his own chamber.

One day the woman and her son had been angrily taunting him in the presence of a neighbor. The neighbor retired soon; and Hayes, who had gone with him to the door, heard, on returning, the voice of Wood in the parlor. The old man laughed in his usual saturnine way, and said, 'Have a care, Mrs. Cat; for if Hayes were to die suddenly, by the laws, the neighbors would accuse thee of his death.'

Hayes started as if he had been shot. 'He too is in the plot,' thought he. 'They are all leagued against me; they will kill me; they are only biding their time.' Fear seized him, and he thought of flying that instant and leaving all; and he stole into his room and gathered his money together. But only a half of it was there; in a few weeks all would have come in. He had not the heart to go. But that night Wood heard Hayes pause at his door before he went to listen at Mrs. Catherine's. 'What is the man thinking of?' said Wood. 'He is gathering his money together. Has he a hoard yonder unknown to us all?'

Wood thought he would watch him. There was a closet between the two rooms; Wood bored a hole in the panel, and peeped through. Hayes had a brace of pistols, and four or five little bags before him on the table. One of these he opened and placed, one by one, five-and-twenty guineas into it. Such a sum had been due that day—Catherine spoke of it only in the morning; for the debtor’s name had by chance been mentioned in the conversation. Hayes commonly kept but a few guineas in the house. For what was he amassing all these? The next day Wood asked for change for a twenty-pound bill. Hayes said he had but three guineas. And when asked by Catherine where the money was that was paid the day before, said that it was at the banker’s. ‘The man is going to fly,’ said Wood; ‘that is sure; if he does I know him—he will leave his wife without a shilling.’

He watched him for several days regularly; two or three more bags were added to the former number. ‘They are pretty things, guineas,’ thought Wood, ‘and tell no tales, like bank bills.’ And he thought over the days when he and Mac-shane used to ride abroad in search of them.

I don’t know what thoughts entered into Mr. Wood’s brain; but the next day, after seeing young Billings, to whom he actually made a present of a guinea, that young man, in conversing with his mother, said, ‘Do you know, mother, that if you were free, and married the count, I should be a lord? It’s the German law, Mr. Wood says; and you know he was in them countries with Marlborough.’

‘Aye, that he would,’ said Mr. Wood, ‘in Germany; but Germany isn’t England; and it’s no use talking of such things.’

‘Hush, child,’ said Mrs. Hayes quite eagerly; ‘how can I marry the count? Besides, aint I married, and isn’t he too great a lord for me?’

‘Too great a lord? Not a whit, mother. If it wasn’t for Hayes I might be a lord now. He gave me five guineas only last week; but curse the skinflint who never will part with a shilling.’

‘It’s not so bad as his striking your mother, Tom. I had my stick up, and was ready to fell him t’other night,’ added Mr. Wood. And herewith he smiled, and looked steadily in Mrs. Catherine’s face. She dared not look again; but she felt that the old man knew a secret that she had been trying to hide from herself. Fool! he knew it; and Hayes knew it dimly; and never, never, since that day of the gala, had it left her, sleeping or waking. When Hayes, in his fear, had proposed to sleep away from her, she started with joy; she had been afraid that she might talk in her sleep, and so let slip her horrible confession.

Old Wood knew all her history since the period of the Marylebone fête. He had wormed it out of her day by day; he had counseled her how to act; warned her not to yield; to procure, at least, a certain provision for her son, and a handsome settlement for herself, if she determined on quitting her husband. The old man looked on the business in a proper philosophical light, told her bluntly that he saw she was bent upon going off with the count, and bade her take precautions, else she might be left as she had been before.

Catherine denied all these charges; but she saw the count daily, notwithstanding, and took all the measures which Wood had recommended to her. They were very prudent ones.
Galgenstein grew hourly more in love; never had he felt such a flame; not in the best days of his youth; not for the fairest princess, countess, or actress from Vienna to Paris.

At length—it was the night after he had seen Hayes counting his money bags—old Wood spoke to Mrs. Hayes very seriously. 'That husband of yours, Cat,' said he, 'meditates some treason; aye, and fancies we are about such. He listens nightly at your door and at mine; he is going to leave you, be sure on't; and if he leaves you he leaves you to starve.'

'I can be rich elsewhere,' said Mrs. Cat.

'What, with Max?'

'Aye, with Max; and why not?' said Mrs. Hayes.

'Why not, fool! Do you recollect Birmingham? Do you think that Galgenstein, who is so tender now because he hasn't won you, will be faithful because he has? Psha, woman, men are not made so! Don't go to him until you are sure; if you were a widow, now, he would marry you; but never leave yourself at his mercy; if you were to leave your husband to

That husband of yours, Cat,' said he, 'meditates some treason; aye, and fancies we are about such. He listens nightly at your door and at mine; he is going to leave you, be sure on't; and if he leaves you he leaves you to starve.'

'I can be rich elsewhere,' said Mrs. Cat.

'What, with Max?'

'Aye, with Max; and why not?' said Mrs. Hayes.

'Why not, fool! Do you recollect Birmingham? Do you think that Galgenstein, who is so tender now because he hasn't won you, will be faithful because he has? Psha, woman, men are not made so! Don't go to him until you are sure; if you were a widow, now, he would marry you; but never leave yourself at his mercy; if you were to leave your husband to go to him he would desert you in a fortnight.'

She might have been a countess! she knew she might, but for this cursed barrier between her and her fortune. Wood knew what she was thinking of, and smiled grimly.

'Besides,' he continued, 'remember Tom. As sure as you leave Hayes without some security from Max, the boy's ruined; he who might be a lord if his mother had but—— Psha! never mind; that boy will go on the road as sure as my name's Wood. He's a Turpin cock in his eye, my dear—a regular Tyburn look. He knows too many of that sort already, and is too fond of a bottle and a girl to resist and be honest when it comes to a pinch.'
'It's all true,' said Mrs. Hayes. 'Tom's a mettlesome fellow, and would no more mind a ride on Hounslow Heath than he does a walk now in the Mall.'

'Do you want him hanged, my dear?' said Wood.

'Ah, doctor!'

'It is a pity, and that's sure,' concluded Mr. Wood, knocking the ashes out of his pipe, and closing this interesting conversation. 'It is a pity that that old skinflint should be in the way of both your fortunes; and he about to fling you over too!'

Mrs. Catherine retired musing, as Mr. Billings had previously done; a sweet smile of contentment lighted up the venerable features of Dr. Wood, and he walked abroad into the streets as happy a fellow as any in London.

CHAPTER XII.

TREATS OF LOVE, AND PREPARES FOR DEATH.

And to begin this chapter we cannot do better than quote a part of a letter from M. l'Abbé O'Flaherty to Mme. la Comtesse de X. at Paris:

MADAM: The little Arouet de Voltaire, who hath come hither to take a turn in England, as I see by the post of this morning, hath brought me a charming packet from your ladyship's hands, which ought to render a reasonable man happy; but, alas! makes your slave miserable. I think of dear Paris (and something more dear than all Paris, of which, madam, I may not venture to speak further)—I think of dear Paris, and find myself in this dismal Villehall, where, when the fog clears up, I can catch a glimpse of muddy Thames, and of that fatal palace which the kings of England have been obliged to exchange for your noble castle of St. Germans, that stands so stately by silver Seine. Truly no bad bargain. For my part I would give my grand ambassadorial saloons, hangings, gildings, feasts, valets, ambassadors, and all, for a bicoque in sight of the Thulleries' towers, or my little cell in the Irlandois.

My last sheets have given you a pretty notion of our ambassador's public doings; now for a pretty piece of private scandal respecting that great man. Figure to yourself, madam, his Excellency is in love; actually in love, talking day and night about a certain fair one whom he hath picked out of a gutter; who is well nigh forty years old; who was his mistress when he was in England a captain of dragoons, some sixty, seventy, or a hundred years since; who hath had a son by him, moreover, a sprightly lad, apprentice to a tailor of eminence that has the honor of making his Excellency's breeches.

Since one fatal night when he met this fair creature at a certain place of publice resort called Marylebone Gardens, our Cyrus hath been an altered creature. Love hath mastered this brainless ambassador, and his antics afford me food for perpetual mirth. He sits now opposite to me at a table inditing a letter to his Catherine, and copying it from—what do you think?—from the 'Grand Cyrus.' 'I swear, madam, that my happiness would be to offer you this hand, as I have my heart long ago, and I beg you to bear in mind this declaration.' I have just dictated to him the above tender words; for our envoy, I need not tell you, is not strong at writing or thinking.

The fair Catherine, I must tell you, is no less than a carpenter's wife, a well-to-do bourgeois, living at the Tyburn or Gallows Road. She found out her ancient lover very soon after our arrival, and hath a marvelous hankering to be a count's lady. A pretty little creature is this Madam Catherine. Billets, breakfasts, pretty walks, presents of silks and satins, pass daily between the pair; but strange to say, the lady is as virtuous as Diana and hath resisted all my count's cajoleries hitherto. The poor fellow told me, with tears in his eyes, that he believed he should have carried her by storm on the very first night of their meeting but that her son stepped into the way; and he or somebody else hath been in the way ever since. Madam will never appear alone. I believe it is this wondrous chastity of the lady that has elicited this wondrous constancy.
of the gentleman. She is holding out for a settlement; who knows if not for a marriage? Her husband, she says, is ailing, her lover is fool enough, and she herself conducts her negotiations, as I must honestly own, with a pretty notion of diplomacy.

This is the only part of the reverend gentleman’s letter that directly affects this history. The rest contains some scandal concerning greater personages about the court, a great share of abuse of the Elector of Hanover, and a pretty description of a boxing match at Mr. Figg’s amphitheater in Oxford Road, where John Wells of Edmund Bury (as by the papers may be seen), master of the noble science of self-defense, did engage with Edward Sutton of Gravesend, master of the said science; and the issue of the combat.

N. B. [adds the father, in a postscript]—M. Figue gives a hat to be cudgeled for before the master mount; and the whole of this fashionable information hath been given me by monseigneur’s son, M. Billings, garcon-tailleur, Chevalier de Galgenstein.

Mr. Billings was, in fact, a frequent visitor at the ambassador’s house, to whose presence he, by a general order, was always admitted. As for the connection between Mrs. Catherine and her former admirer, the abbé’s history of it is perfectly correct; nor can it be said that this wretched woman, whose tale now begins to wear a darker hue, was, in anything but soul, faithless to her husband. But she hated him, longed to leave him, and loved another; the end was coming quickly, and every one of our unknowing actors and actresses were to be implicated, more or less, in the catastrophe.

It will be seen that Mrs. Cat had followed pretty closely the injunctions of Mr. Wood in regard to her dealings with the count, who grew more heartstricken and tender daily, as the completion of his wishes was delayed, and his desires goaded by contradiction. The abbé has quoted one portion of a letter written by him; here is the entire performance, extracted, as the holy father said, chiefly from the romance of the ‘Grand Cyrus’:

\begin{center}
Unhappy Maximilian unto unjust Catherine.
\end{center}

\textbf{Madam:} It must needs be that I love you better than any ever did, since, notwithstanding your injustice in calling me perfidious, I love you no less than I did before. On the contrary, my passion is so violent, and your unjust accusation makes me so sensible of it, that if you did but know the resentments of my soule, you would confess your selfe the most cruel and unjust woman in the world. You shall, ere long, madam, see me at your feete; and as you were my first passion, so you will be my last.

On my knees I will tell you, at the first handsome opportunity, that the grandure of my passion can only be equaled by your beauty; it hath driven me to such a fatal necessity as that I cannot hide the misery which you have caused. Sure, the hostil goddes have, to plague me, ordained that fatal marriage, by which you are bound to one so infinitely below you in degree. Were that bond of ill-omind Hymen cut in twain witch binds you, I swear, madam, that my happinies woulde be to offer you this hande, as I have my harte long agoe. And I praye you to beare in minde this declaracion, which I here signe with my hande, and wish I pray you may one day be called upon to prove the truth on. Beleave me, madam, that there is none in the world who doth more honor to your vertue than my selfe, nor who wishes your happinnesse with more zeal than

\textbf{Maximilian.}

From my lodgings in Whitehall, this 25th of February.

To the incomparable Catherine, these, with a scarlet satten petticoat.
The count had debated about the sentence promising marriage in the event of Hayes' death; but the honest abbé cut these scruples very short by saying, justly, that, because he wrote in that manner, there was no need for him to act so; that he had better not sign and address the note in full; and that he presumed his Excellency was not quite so timid as to fancy that the woman would follow him all the way to Germany when his diplomatic duties would be ended, as they would soon.

The receipt of this billet caused such a flash of joy and exultation to unhappy happy Mrs. Catherine that Wood did not fail to remark it, and speedily learned the contents of the letter. Wood had no need to bid the poor wretch guard it very carefully; it never from that day forth left her; it was her title of nobility—her pass to rank, wealth, happiness. She began to look down on her neighbors; her manner to her husband grew more than ordinarily scornful; the poor, vain wretch longed to tell her secret, and to take her place openly in the world. She a countess, and Tom a count's son! She felt that she should royally become the title!

About this time—and Hayes was very much frightened at the prevalence of the rumor—it suddenly began to be bruited about in his quarter that he was going to quit the country. The story was in everybody's mouth; people used to sneer when he turned pale, and wept, and passionately denied it. It was said, too, that Mrs. Hayes was not his wife, but his mistress—everybody had this story—his mistress, whom he treated most cruelly, and was about to desert. The tale of the blow which had felled her to the ground was known in all quarters. When he declared that the woman tried to stab him, nobody believed him; the women said he would have been served right if she had done so. How had these stories gone abroad? 'Three days more and I will fly,' thought Hayes; 'and the world may say what it pleases.'

Aye, fool, fly—away so swiftly that Fate cannot overtake thee; hide so cunningly that Death shall not find thy place of refuge!

CHAPTER XIII.

BEING A PREPARATION FOR THE END.

The reader, doubtless, doth now partly understand what dark acts of conspiracy are beginning to gather around Mr. Hayes, and possibly hath comprehended,
1. That if the rumor was universally credited which declared that Mrs. Catherine was only Hayes' mistress, and not his wife,

She might, if she so inclined, marry another person; and thereby not injure her fame and excite wonderment, but actually add to her reputation.

2. That if all the world did steadfastly believe that Mr. Hayes intended to desert this woman, after having cruelly maltreated her,

The direction which his journey might take would be of no consequence; and he might go to Highgate, to Edinburgh, to Constantinople, nay, down a well, and no soul would care to ask whither he had gone.

These points Mr. Hayes had not considered duly. The latter case had been put to him, and annoyed him, as we have seen; the former had actually been pressed upon him by Mrs. Hayes herself, who, in almost the only communication she had had with him since their last quarrel, had asked him angrily, in the presence of Wood and her son, whether he had dared to utter such lies, and how it came to pass that the neighbors looked scornfully at her and avoided her.

To this charge Mr. Hayes pleaded, very meekly, that he was not guilty; and young Billings, taking him by the collar, and clinching his fist in his face, swore a dreadful oath that he would have the life of him if he dared abuse his mother. Mrs. Hayes then spoke of the general report abroad that he was going to desert her; which, if he attempted to do, Mr. Billings vowed that he would follow him to Jerusalem, and have his blood. These threats, and the insolent language of young Billings, rather calmed Hayes than agitated him: he longed to be on his journey; but he began to hope that no obstacle would be placed in the way of it. For the first time since many days he began to enjoy a feeling something akin to security, and could look with tolerable confidence toward a comfortable completion of his own schemes of treason.

These points being duly settled, we are now arrived, oh, public, at a point for which the author's soul hath been yearning ever since this history commenced. We are now come, oh, critic, to a stage of the work when this tale begins to assume an appearance so interestingly horrific that you must have a heart of stone if you are not interested by it. Oh, candid and discerning reader, who are sick of the hideous scenes of brutal bloodshed which have of late come forth from pens of certain eminent wits,* if you turn away disgusted from the book, remember that this passage hath not been written for you, or such as you, who have taste to know and hate the style in which it hath been composed; but for the public which hath no such taste—for the public which can patronize four different representations of Jack Sheppard—for the public whom its literary providers have gorged with blood and foul Newgate garbage, and to whom we poor creatures, humbly following at the tail of our great high priests and prophets of the press, may, as in duty bound, offer some small gift of our own—a little mite truly, but given with good will. Come up, then, fair Catherine, and brave count; appear, gallant Brock, and faultless Billings; hasten hither, honest John Hayes: the former chapters are but flowers in which we have been decking you for the sacrifice. Ascend to the altar, ye innocent lambs, and prepare for the final act: lo! the knife is sharpened, and the sacrificer ready! Stretch your throats, sweet ones—for the public is thirsty, and must have blood!

*This was written in 1840.

CHAPTER THE LAST.

That Mr. Hayes had some notion of the attachment of M. de Galgenstein for his wife is very certain: the man could not but perceive that she was more gayly dressed and more frequently absent than usual; and must have been quite aware that from the day of the quarrel until the present period Catherine had never asked him for a shilling for the house expenses. He had not the heart to offer, however; nor, in truth, did she seem to remember that money was due.

She received, in fact, many sums from the tender count. Tom was likewise liberally provided by the same personage, who was, moreover, continually sending presents of various kinds to the person on whom his affections were centered.

One of these gifts was a hamper of choice mountain wine, which had been some weeks in the house, and excited the longing of Mr. Hayes, who loved wine very much. This liquor was generally drank by Wood and Billings, who applauded it greatly; and many times, in passing through the back parlor, which he had to traverse in order to reach the stair, Hayes had cast a tender eye toward the drink, of which, had he dared, he would have partaken.

On the 1st of March, in the year 1726, Mr. Hayes had gathered together almost the whole sum with which he intended to decamp; and having on that very day recovered the amount of a bill which he thought almost hopeless, he returned home in tolerable good humor, and feeling, so near was his period of departure, something like security. Nobody had attempted the least violence on him; besides, he was armed with pistols, had his money in bills and a belt about his person, and really reasoned with himself that there was no danger for him to apprehend.

He entered the house about dusk, at five o'clock. Mrs. Hayes was absent with Mr. Billings; only Mr. Wood was smoking, according to his wont, in the little back parlor; and as Mr. Hayes passed, the old gentleman addressed him in a friendly voice, and, wondering that he had been such a stranger, invited him to sit and take a glass of wine. There was a light and a foreman in the shop; Mr. Hayes gave his injunctions to that person, and saw no objection to Mr. Wood's invitation.

The conversation, at first a little stiff between the two gentlemen, began speedily to grow more easy and confidential; and so particularly bland and good-humored was Mr. or Dr. Wood that his companion was quite caught, and softened by the charm of his manner; and the pair became as good friends as in the former days of their intercourse.

'I wish you would come down sometimes of evenings,' quoth Dr. Wood; 'for, though no book-learned man, Mr. Hayes, look you, you are a man of the world, and I can't abide the society of boys. There's Tom, now, since this tiff with Mrs. Cat, the scoundrel plays the Grand Turk here! The pair of 'em, betwixt them, have completely gotten the upper hand of you. Confess that you are beaten, Master Hayes, and don't like the boy?'

'No more I do,' said Hayes; 'and that's the truth on't. A man doth not like to have his wife's sins flung in his face, nor to be perpetually bullied in his own house by such a fiery sprig as that.'

'Mischief, sir—mischief only,' said Wood; 'tis the fun of youth, sir, and will go off as age comes to the lad. Bad as you may think him—and he is as skittish and fierce, sure enough, as a young colt—there is good stuff in him; and though he hath, or fancies he hath, the right to abuse everyone, by the Lord, he will let none others do so! Last week, now, didn't he tell Mrs. Cat that you served her right in the last beating matter? and weren't they coming to knives, just as in your case? By my faith, they were. Aye, and at the Braund's Head, when some fellow said that you were a bloody Blue-beard, and would murder your wife, stab me if Tom wasn't up in an instant and knocked the fellow down for abusing of you!"

The first of these stories was quite true; the second was only a charitable invention of Mr. Wood, and employed, doubtless, for the amiable purpose of bringing the old and young men together. The scheme partially succeeded; for, though Hayes was not so far mollified toward Tom as to entertain any affection for a young man whom he had cordially detested ever since he knew him, yet he felt more at ease and cheerful regarding himself: and surely not without reason. While indulging in these benevolent sentiments, Mrs. Catherine and her son arrived, and found, somewhat to their astonishment, Mr. Hayes seated in the back parlor, as in former times; and they were invited by Mr. Wood to sit down and drink.

We have said that certain bottles of mountain wine were presented by the count to Mrs. Catherine: these were, at Mr. Wood's suggestion, produced; and Hayes, who had long been coveting them, was charmed to have an opportunity to drink his fill. He forthwith began bragging of his great powers as a drinker, and vowed that he could manage eight bottles without becoming intoxicated.

Mr. Wood grinned strangely, and looked in a peculiar way at Tom Billings, who grinned too. Mrs. Cat's eyes were turned toward the ground; but her face was deadly pale.

The party began drinking. Hayes kept up his reputation as a toper, and swallowed one, two, three bottles without wincing. He grew talkative and merry, and began to sing songs and to cut jokes, at which Wood laughed hugely, and Billings after him. Mrs. Cat could not laugh, but sat silent. What ailed her? Was she thinking of the count? She had been with Max that day, and had promised him, for the next night at ten, an interview near his lodgings at Whitehall. It was the first time that she would see him alone. They were to meet (not a very cheerful place for a love-tryst) at St. Margaret's churchyard, near Westminster Abbey. Of this, no doubt, Cat was thinking; but what could she mean by whispering to Wood, 'No, no! for God's sake, not to-night!'

'She means we are to have no more liquor,' said Wood to Mr. Hayes, who heard this sentence, and seemed rather alarmed.

'That's it—no more liquor,' said Catherine eagerly; 'you have had enough to-night. Go to bed, and lock your door, and sleep, Mr. Hayes.'
"But I say I've not had enough drink!" screamed Hayes. "I'm good for five bottles more, and wager I will drink them too."

"Done, for a guinea!" said Wood.

"Done, and done!" said Billings.

"Be you quiet!" growled Hayes, scowling at the lad. "I will drink what I please, and ask no counsel of yours." And he muttered some more curses against young Billings, which showed what his feelings were toward his wife's son, and which the latter, for a wonder, only received with a scornful smile, and a knowing look at Wood.

Well! the five extra bottles were brought, and drank by Mr. Hayes; and seasoned by many songs of the "recueil" of Mr. Thomas D'Urfey and others. The chief part of the talk and merriment was on Hayes' part; as, indeed, was natural—for while he drank bottle after bottle of wine, the other two gentleman confined themselves to small-beer—both pleading illness as an excuse for their sobriety.

And now we depict, with much accuracy, the course of Mr. Hayes' intoxication as it rose from the merriment of the three-bottle point to the madness of the four—from the uproarious quarrelsomeness of the sixth bottle to the sickly stupidity of the seventh; but we are desirous of bringing this tale to a conclusion, and must pretermite all consideration of a subject so curious, so instructive, and so delightful. Suffice it to say, as a matter of history, that Mr. Hayes did actually drink seven bottles of mountain wine; and that Mr. Thomas Billings went to the Braund's Head, in Bond Street, and purchased another, which Hayes likewise drank.

"That'll do," said Mr. Wood to young Billings; and they led Hayes up to bed, whither, in truth, he was unable to walk himself.

Mrs. Springatt, the lodger, came down to ask what the noise was. "'Tis only Tom Billings making merry with some friends from the country," answered Mrs. Hayes; whereupon Springatt retired, and the house was quiet.

Some scuffling and stamping was heard about eleven o'clock.

After they had seen Mr. Hayes to bed Billings remembered that he had a parcel to carry to some person in the neighborhood of the Strand; and, as the night was remarkably fine, he and Mr. Wood agreed to walk together, and set forth accordingly.
[Here follows a description of the Thames at Midnight, in a fine historical style, with an account of Lambeth, Westminster, the Savoy, Baynard's Castle, Arundel House, the Temple; of Old London Bridge, with its twenty arches, 'on which he houses build'd, so that it seemeth rather a continuall street than a bridge'; of Bankside, and the Globe and the Fortune Theatres; of the ferries across the river, and of the pirates who infest the same—namely tinklermen, patermen, hebbermen, trawlermen; of the fleet of barges that lay at the Savoy steps; and of the long lines of slim wherries sleeping on the river banks and basking and shining in the moonbeams. A combat on the river is described, that takes place between the crews of a tinklerman's boat and the water bailiff's. Shouting his war-cry, 'St. Mary Overy à la rescousse!' the water bailiff sprung at the throat of the tinklerman captain. The crews of both the vessels, as if aware that the struggle of their chiefs would decide the contest, ceased hostilities, and awaited on their respective poops the issue of the death-shock. It was not long coming, 'Yield, dog!' said the water bailiff. The tinklerman could not answer—for his throat was grasped too tight in the iron clench of the city champion; but drawing his snicker-snee he plunged it seven times in the bailiff's chest, still the latter fell not. The death rattle gurgled in the throat of his opponent; his arms fell heavily to his side. Foot to foot, each standing at the side of his boat, stood the two brave men—they were both dead! 'In the name of St. Clement Danes,' said the master, 'give way, my men!' and, thrusting forward his halberd (seven feet long, richly decorated with velvet and brass nails, and having the city arms, argent, a cross gules, and in the first quarter a dagger displayed of the second), he thrust the tinklerman's boat away from his own; and at once the bodies of the captains plunged down, down, down in the unfathomable waters.

After this follows another episode. Two masked ladies quarrel at the door of a tavern overlooking the Thames; they turn out to be Stella and Vanessa, who have followed Swift thither, who is in the act of reading 'Gulliver's Travels' to Gay, Arbuthnot, Bolingbroke, and Pope. Two fellows are sitting shuddering under a doorway; to one of them Tom Billings flung a sixpence. He little knew that the names of those two young men were—Samuel Johnson and Richard Savage.]

ANOTHER LAST CHAPTER.

Mr. Hayes did not join the family the next day; and it appears that the previous night's reconciliation was not very durable; for when Mrs. Springatt asked Wood for Hayes, Mr. Wood stated that Hayes had gone away without saying whither he was bound, or how long he might be absent. He only said, in rather a sulky tone, that he should probably pass the night at a friend's house. 'For my part, I know of no friend he hath,' added Mr. Wood; 'and pray Heaven that he may not think of deserting his poor wife, whom he hath beaten and ill used so already!' In this prayer Mrs. Springatt joined; and so these two worthy people parted.

What business Billings was about cannot be said; but he was this night bound toward Marylebone Fields, as he was the night before for the Strand and Westminster; and, although the night was very stormy and rainy, as the previous evening had been fine, old Wood good-naturedly resolved upon accompanying him; and forth they sallied together.

Mrs. Catherine, too, had her business, as we have seen; but this was of a very delicate nature. At nine o'clock she had an appointment with the count; and faithfully, by that hour, had found her way to St. Margaret's churchyard, near Westminster Abbey, where she awaited M. de Galgenstein.
The spot was convenient, being very lonely, and at the same time close to the count's lodgings at Whitehall. His Excellency came, but somewhat after the hour; for, to say the truth, being a freethinker, he had the most firm belief in ghosts and demons, and did not care to pace a churchyard alone. He was comforted, therefore, when he saw a woman muffled in a cloak, who held out her hand to him at the gate, and said, 'Is that you?' He took her hand—it was very clammy and cold; and at her desire he bade his confidential footman, who had attended him with a torch, to retire, and leave him to himself.

The torch-bearer retired, and left them quite in darkness; and the pair entered the little cemetery, cautiously threading their way among the tombs. They sat down on one, underneath a tree it seemed to be; the wind was very cold, and its piteous howling was the only noise that broke the silence of the place. Catherine's teeth were chattering, for all her wraps; and when Max drew her close to him, and encircled her waist with one arm, and pressed her hand, she did not repulse him, but rather came close to him, and with her own damp fingers feebly returned his pressure.

The poor thing was very wretched and weeping. She confided to Max the cause of her grief. She was alone in the world—alone and penniless. Her husband had left her; she had that very day received a letter from him which confirmed all that she had suspected so long. He had left her, carried away all his property, and would not return!

If we say that a selfish joy filled the breast of M. de Galgenstein, the reader will not be astonished. A heartless libertine, he felt glad at the prospect of Catherine's ruin; for he hoped that necessity would make her his own. He clasped the poor thing to his heart, and vowed that he would replace the husband she had lost, and that his fortune should be hers.

'Will you replace him?' said she.

'Yes, truly, in everything but the name, dear Catherine; and when he dies I swear you shall be Countess de Galgenstein.'

'Will you swear?' she cried eagerly.

'By everything that is most sacred; were you free now, I would' (and here he swore a terrific oath) 'at once make you mine.'

We have seen before that it cost M. de Galgenstein nothing to make these vows. Hayes was likely, too, to live as long as Catherine—as long, at least, as the count's connection with her; but he was caught in his own snare.
She took his hand and kissed it repeatedly, and bathed it in her tears, and pressed it to her bosom. ‘Max,’ she said, ‘I am free! Be mine, and I will love you as I have done for years and years.’

Max started back. ‘What, is he dead?’ he said. ‘No, no, not dead; but he never was my husband.’

He let go her hand, and, interrupting her, said sharply, ‘Indeed, madam, if this carpenter never was your husband, I see no cause why I should be. If a lady who hath been for twenty years the mistress of a miserable country boor cannot find it in her heart to put up with the protection of a nobleman—a sovereign’s representative—she may seek a husband elsewhere!’

‘I was no man’s mistress except yours,’ sobbed Catherine, wringing her hands and sobbing wildly; ‘but, O Heaven! I deserved this. Because I was a child, and you saw, and ruined, and left me—because, in my sorrow and repentance, I wished to repair my crime, and was touched by that man’s love, and married him—because he too deceives and leaves me—because, after loving you—madly loving you for twenty years—I will not now forfeit your respect, and degrade myself by yielding to your will, you too must scorn me! It is too much—too much—O Heaven!’ And the wretched woman fell back almost fainting.

Max was almost frightened by this burst of sorrow on her part, and was coming forward to support her; but she motioned him away, and, taking from her bosom a letter, said, ‘If it were light you could see, Max, how cruelly I have been betrayed by that man who called himself my husband. Long before he married me, he was married to another. This woman is still living, he says; and he says he leaves me forever.’

At this moment the moon, which had been hidden behind Westminster Abbey, rose above the vast black mass of that edifice, and poured a flood of silver light upon the little church of St. Margaret’s, and the spot where the lovers stood. Max was at a little distance from Catherine, pacing gloomily up and down the flags. She remained at her old position at the tombstone under the tree, or pillar, as it seemed to be, as the moon got up. She was leaning against the pillar, and holding out to Max, with an arm beautifully white and rounded, the letter she had received from her husband. ‘Read it, Max,’ she said; ‘I asked for light, and here is heaven’s own, by which you may read.’

But Max did not come forward to receive it. On a sudden his face assumed a look of the most dreadful surprise and agony. He stood still, and stared with wild eyes starting from their sockets; he stared upward, at a point seemingly above Catherine's head. At last he raised up his finger slowly, and said, 'Look Cat—the head—the head!' Then uttering a horrible laugh, he fell down groveling among the stones, gibbering and writhing in a fit of epilepsy.

Catherine started forward and looked up. She had been standing against a post, not a tree—the moon was shining full on it now; and on the summit, strangely distinct, and smiling ghastly, was a livid human head.

The wretched woman fled—she dared look no more. And some hours afterward, when, alarmed by the count's continued absence, his confidential servant came back to seek for him in the churchyard, he was found sitting on the flags, staring full at the head, and laughing, and talking to it wildly, and nodding at it. He was taken up a hopeless idiot, and so lived for years and years, clanking the chain, and moaning under the lash, and howling through long nights when the moon peered through the bars of his solitary cell, and he buried his face in the straw.

There—the murder is out! And having indulged himself in a chapter of the very finest writing, the author begs the attention of the British public toward it, humbly conceiving that it possesses some of those peculiar merits which have rendered the fine writing in other chapters of the works of other authors so famous.

Without bragging at all, let us just point out the chief claims of the above pleasing piece of composition. In the first place, it is perfectly stilted and unnatural, the dialogue and the sentiments being artfully arranged so as to be as strong and majestic as possible. Our dear Cat is but a poor, illiterate country wench, who has come from cutting her husband's throat; and yet, see! she talks and looks like a tragedy princess, who is suffering in the most virtuous blank verse. This is the proper end of fiction, and one of the greatest triumphs that a novelist can achieve; for to make people sympathize with virtue is a vulgar trick that any common fellow can do; but it is not everybody who can take a scoundrel, and cause us to weep and whimper over him as though he were a very saint. Give a young lady of five years old a skein of silk and a brace of netting needles, and she will in a short time turn you out a decent silk purse—anybody can; but try her with a sow's ear, and see whether she can make a silk purse out of that. That is the work for your real great artist; and pleasant it is to see how many have succeeded in these latter days.

The subject is strictly historical, as anyone may see by referring to the Daily Post of March 3, 1726, which contains the following paragraph:

'Yesterday morning, early, a man's head, that by the freshness of it seemed to have been newly cut off from the body, having its own hair on, was found by the river's side, near Millbank, Westminster, and was afterward exposed to public view in St. Margaret's churchyard, where thousands of people have seen it; but none could tell who the unhappy person was, much less who committed such a horrid and barbarous action. There are various conjectures relating to the deceased; but there being nothing certain, we omit them. The head was much hacked and mangled in the cutting off.'

The head which caused such an impression upon M. de Galgenstein was, indeed, once on the shoulders of Mr. John Hayes, who lost it under the following circumstances. We have seen how Mr. Hayes was induced to drink. Mr. Hayes having been encouraged in drinking the wine, and growing very merry therewith, he sang and danced about the room; but his wife, fearing the quantity he had drunk would not have the wished-for effect on him, she sent away for another bottle, of which he drank also. This effectually answered their expectations; and Mr. Hayes became thereby intoxicated, and deprived of his understanding.

He, however, made shift to get into the other room, and, throwing himself upon the bed, fell asleep; upon which Mrs. Hayes reminded them of the affair in hand, and told them that was the most proper juncture to finish the business.*

Ring, ding, ding! the gloomy green curtain drops, the dramatis personæ are duly disposed of, the nimble candle-snuffers put out the lights, and the audience goeth pondering home. If the critic take the pains to ask why the author, who hath been so diffuse in describing the early and fabulous acts of Mrs. Catherine’s existence, should so hurry off the catastrophe where a deal of the very finest writing might have been employed,

* The description of the murder and the execution of the culprits, which here follows in the original, was taken from the newspapers of the day. Coming from such a source they have, as may be imagined, no literary merit whatever. The details of the crime are simply horrible, without one touch of even that sort of romance which sometimes gives a little dignity to murder. As such they precisely suited Mr. Thackeray’s purpose at the time—which was to show the real manners and customs of the Shepards and Turpils who were then the popular heroes of fiction. But nowadays there is no such purpose to serve, and therefore these too literal details are omitted.
Solomons remarks that the 'ordinary' narrative is far more emphatic than any composition of his own could be, with all the rhetorical graces which he might employ. Mr. Aram's trial, as taken by the penny-a-liners of those days, hath always interested him more than the lengthened and poetical report which an eminent novelist has given of the same. Mr. Turpin's adventures are more instructive and agreeable to him in the account of the Newgate Plutarch than in the learned Ainsworth's 'Biographical Dictionary.' And as he believes that the professional gentlemen who are employed to invest such heroes with the rewards that their great actions merit, will go through the ceremony of the grand cordon with much more accuracy and dispatch than can be shown by the most distinguished amateur; in like manner he thinks that the history of such investitures should be written by people directly concerned, and not by admiring persons without, who must be ignorant of many of the secrets of Ketchcraft. We very much doubt if Milton himself could make a description of an execution half so horrible as the simple lines in the Daily Post of a hundred and ten years since, that now lies before us—'herrlich wie am ersten Tag'—as bright and clean as on the day of publication. Think of it! it has been read by Belinda at her toilet, scanned at Button's and Will's, sneered at by wits, talked of in palaces and cottages, by a busy race in wigs, red heels, hoops, patches, and rags of all variety—a busy race that hath long since plunged and vanished in the unfathomable gulf toward which we march so briskly.

Where are they? 'Afflativ Deus'—and they are gone! Hark! is not the same wind roaring still that shall sweep us down? and yonder stands the compositor at his types who shall put up a pretty paragraph some day to say how 'Yesterday, at his house in Grosvenor Square,' or 'At Botany Bay, universally regretted,' died so-and-so. Into what profound moralities is the paragraph concerning Mrs. Catherine's burning leading us!

Aye, truly, and to that very point have we wished to come; for, having finished our delectable meal, it behooves us to say a word or two by way of grace at its conclusion, and be heartily thankful that it is over. It has been the writer's object carefully to exclude from his drama (except in two very insignificant instances—merely walking gentlemen parts), any characters but those of scoundrels of the very highest degree. That he has not altogether failed in the object he had in view is evident from some newspaper critiques which he has had the good fortune to see; and which abuse the tale of "Catherine" as one of the dullest, most vulgar, and immoral works extant. It is highly gratifying to the author to find that such opinions are abroad, as they convince him that the taste for Newgate literature is on the wane, and that when the public critic has right down undisguised immorality set before him, the honest creature is shocked at it, as he should be, and can declare his indignation in good round terms of abuse. The characters of the tale are immoral, and no doubt of it; but the writer humbly hopes the end is not so. The public was, in our notion, dosed and poisoned by the prevailing style of literary practice, and it was necessary to administer some medicine that would produce a wholesome nausea, and afterward bring about a more healthy habit.

And thank Heaven this effect has been produced in very many instances, and that the "Catherine" cathartic has acted most efficaciously. The author has been pleased at the disgust which his work has excited, and has watched with benevolent carefulness the wry faces that have been made by many of the patients who have swallowed the dose. Solomons remembers, at the establishment in Birchin Lane where he had the honor of receiving his education, there used to be administered to the boys a certain cough medicine, which was so excessively agreeable that all the lads longed to have colds in order to partake of the remedy. Some of our popular novelists have compounded their drugs in a similar way, and made them so palatable that a public, once healthy and honest, has been well-nigh poisoned by their wares. Solomons defies anyone to say the like of himself—that his doses have been as pleasant as champagne, and his pills as sweet as barley sugar; it has been his attempt to make vice to appear entirely vicious; and in those instances where he hath occasionally introduced something like virtue, to make the sham as evident as possible, and not allow the meanest capacity a single chance to mistake it.

And what has been the consequence? That wholesome nausea which it has been his good fortune to create wherever he has been allowed to practice in his humble circle.

Has anyone thrown away a halfpennyworth of sympathy upon any person mentioned in this history? Surely no. But abler and more famous men than Solomons have taken a different plan; and it becomes every man in his vocation to cry out against such, and expose their errors as best he may.

Laboring under such ideas, Mr. Isaac Solomons, junior, produced the romance of Mrs. Cat, and confesses himself completely happy to have brought it to a conclusion. His poem may be dull—aye, and probably is. The great Blackmore, the great Dennis, the great Sprat, the great Pomfret, not to mention great men of our own time—have they not also been dull, and had pretty reputations too? Be it granted, Solomons is dull; but don't attack his morality; he humbly submits that, in his poem, no man shall mistake virtue for vice, no man shall allow a single sentiment of pity or admiration to enter his bosom for any character of the piece, it being from beginning to end a scene of unmixed rascality performed by persons who never deviate into good feeling. And, although he doth not pretend to equal the great modern authors whom he hath mentioned in wit or descriptive power; yet, in the point of moral, he meekly believes that he has been their superior, feeling the greatest disgust for the characters he describes, and using his humble endeavor to cause the public also to hate them.

Horsemonger Lane, January, 1840.
DENIS DUVAL.

CHAPTER I.

THE FAMILY TREE.

To plague my wife, who does not understand pleasantries in the matter of pedigree, I once drew a fine family tree of my ancestors, with Claud Duval, captain and highwayman, sus. per coll. in the reign of Charles II., dangling from a top branch. But this is only my joke with her High Mightiness my wife, and his Serene Highness my son. None of us Duvals have been suspercollated to my knowledge. As a boy, I have tasted a rope's end often enough, but not round my neck; and the persecutions endured by my ancestors in France for our Protestant religion, which we early received and steadily maintained, did not bring death upon us, as upon many of our faith, but only fines and poverty, and exile from our native country. The world knows how the bigotry of Lewis XIV. drove many families out of France into England, who have become trusty and loyal subjects of the British crown. Among the thousand fugitives were my grandfather and his wife. They settled at Winchelsea, in Sussex, where there has been a French church ever since Queen Bess' time and the dreadful day of St. Bartholomew. Three miles off, at Rye, is another colony and church of our people: another fester Burg, where, under Britannia's sheltering buckler, we have been free to exercise our fathers' worship, and sing the songs of our Zion.

My grandfather was elder and precentor of the church of Winchelsea, the pastor being M. Denis, father of Rear-Admiral Sir Peter Denis, Baronet, my kind and best patron. He sailed with Anson in the famous Centurion, and obtained his first promotion through that great seaman; and of course you will all remember that it was Captain Denis who brought our good Queen Charlotte to England (7th September, 1761), after a stormy passage of nine days, from Stade. As a child I was taken to his house in Great Ormond Street, Queen Square, London, and also to the admiral's country seat, Valence, near Westerham, in Kent, where Colonel Wolfe lived, father of the famous General James Wolfe, the glorious conqueror of Quebec.*

My father, who was of a wandering disposition, happened to be at Dover in the year 1761, when the commissioners passed through, who were on their way to sign the treaty of peace known as the Peace of Paris. He had parted, after some hot words, I believe, from his mother, who was, like himself, of a quick temper, and he was on the lookout for employment when Fate threw these gentlemen in his way. Mr. Duval spoke English, French, and German, his parents being of Alsace, and Mr. —— having need of a confidential person to attend him who was master of the languages, my father offered himself, and was accepted mainly through the good offices of Captain Denis, our patron, whose ship was then in the Downs. Being at Paris, father must needs visit Alsace, our native country, and having scarce one guinea to rub against another, of course chose to fall in love with my mother and marry her out of hand. Monsieur mon père, I fear, was but a prodigal; but he was his parents' only living child, and when he came home to Winchelsea, hungry and penniless, with a wife on his hand, they killed their fattest calf, and took both wanderers in. A short while after her marriage my mother inherited some property from her parents in France, and most tenderly nursed my grandmother through a long illness, in which the good lady died. Of these matters I knew nothing personally, being at the time a child two or three years old, crying and sleeping, drinking and eating, growing and having my infantile ailments, like other little darlings.

A violent woman was my mother, jealous, hot, and domineering, but generous and knowing how to forgive. I fancy my papa gave her too many opportunities of exercising this virtue, for during his brief life he was ever in scrapes and trouble. He met with an accident when fishing off the French coast, and was brought home and died, and was buried at Winchelsea; but the cause of his death I never knew until my good friend Sir Peter Denis told me in later years, when I had come to have troubles of my own.

I was born on the same day with his Royal Highness the Duke of York, viz., the 13th of August, 1763, and used to be called the Bishop of Osnaburg by the boys in Winchelsea, where between us French boys and the English boys I promise

---[Footnote: * I remember a saying of G—- Aug-at-s S-lw-n, Esq., regarding the general, which has not been told, as far as I know, in the anecdotes. A macaroni guardsman, speaking of Mr. Wolfe, asked, 'Was he a Jew?' Wolfe was a Jewish name.' 'Certainly,' says Mr. S-lw-n, 'Mr. Wolfe was the Height of Abraham.']--- you there was many a good battle. Besides being ancien and precentor of the French church at Winchelsea, grandfather was a perruquier and barber by trade; and, if you must know it, I have curled and powdered a gentleman's head before this, and taken him by the nose and shaved him. I do not brag of having used lather and brush; but what is the use of disguising anything? Toutse spait, as the French have it, and a great deal more too. There is Sir Humphrey Howard, who served with me as second lieutenant in the Meleager—he says he comes from the N—f-lk Howards; but his father was a shoemaker, and we always called him Humphrey Snob in the gunroom.

In France very few wealthy ladies are accustomed to nurse their children, and the little ones are put out to farmers' wives and healthy nurses, and perhaps better cared for than by their own meager mothers. My mother's mother, an honest farmer's wife in Lorraine (for I am the first gentleman of my family, and chose my motto * of fecimus ipsi not with pride, but with humble thanks for my good fortune), had brought up Mlle Clarisse de Viomesnil, a Lorraine lady, between whom and her foster-sister there continued a tender friendship long after the marriage of both. Mother came to England, the wife of Monsieur mon papa; and Mlle. de Viomesnil married in her own country. She was of the Protestant branch of the Viomesnil family, and all the poorer in consequence of her parents' fidelity to their religion. Other members of the family were of the Catholic religion, and held in high esteem at Versailles.

Some short time after my mother's arrival in England she heard that her dear foster-sister Clarisse was going to marry a Protestant gentleman of Lorraine, Vicomte de Barr, only son of M. le Comte de Saverne, a chamberlain to his Polish Majesty King Stanislas, father of the French Queen. M. de Saverne, on his son's marriage, gave up to the Vicomte de Barr his house at Saverne, and here for a while the newly married couple lived. I do not say the young couple, for the Vicomte de Barr was five-and-twenty years older than his wife, who was but eighteen when her parents married her. As my mother's eyes were very weak, or, to say truth, she was not very skillful in reading, it used to be my lot as a boy to spell out my lady viscountess' letters to her soeur de lait, her good Ursule; and many a smart rap with the rolling pin have I had over my noodle from mother as I did my best to read. It was a word and a blow with mother. She did not spare the rod and spoil the child, and that I suppose is the reason why I am so well grown—six feet two in my stockings, and fifteen stone four last Tuesday, when I was weighed along with our pig. Mem.—My neighbor's hams at Rose Cottage are the best in all Hampshire.

*The admiral insisted on taking or on a bend sable, three razors displayed proper, with the above motto. The family have adopted the mother's coat of arms.

I was so young that I could not understand all I read. But I remember mother used to growl in her rough way (she had a grenadier height and voice, and a pretty smart pair of black whiskers too)—my mother used to cry out, 'She suffers—my Biche is unhappy—she has got a bad husband. He is a brute. All men are brutes.' And with this she would glare at grandpapa, who was a very humble little man, and trembled before his bru, and obeyed her most obsequiously. Then mother would vow she would go home, she would go and suc- cor her Biche; but who would take care of these two imbeciles? meaning me and my grandpapa. Besides, Mme. Duval was wanted at home. She dressed many ladies' heads, with very great taste, in the French way, and could shave, frizz, cut hair, and tie a cue along with the best barber in the county. Grandfather and the apprentice wove the wigs; when I was at home I was too young for that work, and was taken off from it, and sent to a famous good school, Pocock's grammar school at Rye, where I learned to speak English like a Briton born as I am, and not as we did at home, where we used a queer Alsatian jargon of French and German. At Pocock's I got a little smattering of Latin, too, and plenty of fighting for the first month or two. I remember my patron coming to see me in uniform, blue and white laced with gold, silk stockings and white breeches, and two of his officers along with him. 'Where is Denis Duval?' says he, peeping into our schoolroom, and all the boys looking round with wonder at the great gentleman. Master Denis Duval was standing on a bench at that very moment for punishment, for fighting, I suppose, with a black eye as big as an omelet. 'Denis would do very well if he would keep his fist off other boys' noses,' says the master; and the captain gave me a seven-shilling piece, and I spent it all but twopence before the night was over, I remember. While I was at Pocock's I boarded with Mr. Rudge, a tradesman, who, besides being a grocer at Rye, was in the seafaring way, and part owner of a fishing boat; and he took some very queer fish in his nets, as you shall hear soon. He was a chief man among the Wesleyans, and I attended his church with him, not paying much attention to those most serious and sacred things in my early years, when I was a thoughtless boy, caring for nothing but lollipops, hoops, and marbles.

Captain Denis was a very pleasant, lively gentleman, and on this day he asked the master, Mr. Coates, what was the Latin for a holiday, and hoped Mr. C. would give one to his boys. Of course we sixty boys shouted yes to that proposal; and as for me, Captain Denis cried out, 'Mr. Coates, I press this fellow with the black eye here, and intend to take him to dine with me at the Star.' You may be sure I skipped off my bench, and followed my patron. He and his two officers went to the Star, and after dinner called for a crown bowl of punch, and though I would drink none of it, never having been able to bear the taste of rum or brandy, I was glad to come out and sit with the gentlemen, who seemed to be amused with my childish prattle. Captain Denis asked me what I learned, and I dare say I bragged of my little learning; in fact I remember talking in a pompous way about Corderius and Cornelius Nepos; and I have no doubt gave myself very grand airs. He asked whether I liked Mr. Rudge, the grocer with whom I boarded. I did not like him much, I said; but I hated Miss Rudge and Bevil the apprentice most because they were always—— Here I stopped. 'But there is no use in telling tales out of school,' says I. 'We don't do that at Pocock's, we don't.'

And what was my grandmother going to make of me? I said I should like to be a sailor, but a gentleman sailor, and fight for King George. And if I did I would bring all my prize-money home to Agnes, that is, almost all of it—only keep a little of it for myself.

'And so you like the sea, and go out sometimes?' asks Mr. Denis.

Oh, yes, I went out fishing. Mr. Rudge had a half share of a boat along with grandfather, and I used to help to clean her, and was taught to steer her, with many a precious slap on the head if I got her in the wind; and they said I was a very good lookout. I could see well, and remember bluffs and headlands and so forth; and I mentioned several places, points of our coasts, aye, and the French coast too.

'And what do you fish for?' asks the captain.

'Ch, sir, I'm not to say anything about that, Mr. Rudge says!' on which the gentlemen roared with laughter. They knew Master Rudge's game, though I in my innocence did not understand it.

'And so you won't have a drop of punch?' asks Captain Denis.
'No, sir; I made a vow I would not when I saw Miss Rudge so queer.'
'Miss Rudge is often queer, is she?'
'Yes, the nasty pig! And she calls names, and slips downstairs, and knocks the cups and saucers about, and fights the apprentice, and—but I mustn't say anything more. I never tell tales, I don't!'

In this way I went on Prattling with my patron and his friends, and they made me sing them a song in French, and a song in German, and they laughed and seemed amused at my antics and capers. Captain Denis walked home with me to our lodgings, and I told him how I liked Sunday the best day of the week—that is, every other Sunday—because I went away quite early, and walked three miles to mother and grandfather at Winchelsea, and saw Agnes.

And who, pray, was Agnes? To-day her name is Agnes Duval, and she sits at her worktable hard by. The lot of my life has been changed by knowing her. To win such a prize in life's lottery is given but to very, very few. What I have done (of any worth) has been done in trying to deserve her. I might have remained, but for her, in my humble native lot, to be neither honest nor happy, but that my good angel yonder succored me. All I have I owe to her; but I pay with all I have, and what creature can do more?

CHAPTER II.

THE HOUSE OF SAVERNE.

Mme. De Saverne came from Alsace, where her family occupied a much higher rank than that held by the worthy Protestant elder from whom her humble servant is descended. Her mother was a Viomesnil, her father was of a noble Alsatian family, Counts of Barr and Saverne. The old Count de Saverne was alive, and a chamberlain in the court of his Polish Majesty good King Stanislas at Nanci, when his son the Vicomte de Barr, a man already advanced in years, brought home his blooming young bride to that pretty little capital.

The Count de Saverne was a brisk and cheery old gentleman, as his son was gloomy and severe. The count's hotel at Nanci was one of the gayest of the little court. His Protestantism was by no means austere. He was even known to regret that there were no French convents for noble damsels of the Protestant confession, as there were across the Rhine, where his own two daughters might be bestowed out of the way. Mles. de Saverne were ungainly in appearance, fierce and sour in temper, resembling, in these particulars, their brother M. le Baron de Barr.

In his youth M. de Barr had served not without distinction, being engaged against Messieurs the English at Hasting- beck and Laufeldt, where he had shown both courage and capacity. His Protestantism prevented his promotion in the army. He left it, steadfast in his faith, but soured in his temper. He did not care for whist or music, like his easy old father. His appearance at the count's little suppers was as cheerful as a death's-head at a feast. M. de Barr only frequented these entertainments to give pleasure to his young wife, who pined and was wretched in the solitary family mansion of Saverne, where the vicomte took up his residence when first married.

He was of an awful temper, and subject to storms of passion. Being a very conscientious man, he suffered extremely after one of these ebulitions of rage. Between his alternations of anger and remorse his life was a sad one; his household trembled before him, and especially the poor little wife whom he had brought out of her quiet country village to be the victim of his rage and repentances. More than once she fled to the old Count of Saverne at Nanci, and the kindly selfish old gentleman used his feeble endeavors to protect his poor little daughter-in-law. Quickly after these quarrels letters would arrive, containing vows of the most abject repentance on the baron's part. These matrimonial campaigns followed a regular course. First rose the outbreak of temper; then the lady's flight ensued to papa-in-law at Nanci; then came letters expressive of grief; then the repentant criminal himself arrived, whose anguish and cries of mea culpa were more insupportable than his outbreaks of rage. After a few years Mme. de Barr lived almost entirely with her father-in-law at Nanci, and was scarcely seen in her husband's gloomy mansion of Saverne.

For some years no child was born of this most unhappy union. Just when poor King Stanislas came by his lamentable death (being burned at his own fire), the old Count de Saverne died, and his son found that he inherited little more than his father's name and title of Saverne, the family estate being greatly impoverished by the late count's extravagant and indolent habits, and much weighed down by the portions awarded to the Demoiselles de Saverne, the elderly sisters of the present elderly lord.

The town house at Nanci was shut up for a while, and the new Lord of Saverne retired to his castle with his sisters and his wife. With his Catholic neighbors the stern Protestant gentleman had little communion, and the society which frequented his dull house chiefly consisted of Protestant clergymen who came from the other side of the Rhine. Along its left bank, which had only become French territory of late years, the French and German languages were spoken indifferently; in the latter language M. de Saverne was called the Herr von Zabern. After his father's death, Herr von Zabern may have melted a little, but he soon became as moody, violent, and ill-conditioned as ever the Herr von Barr had been. Saverne was a little country town, with the crumbling old Hôtel de Saverne in the center of the place, and a straggling street stretching on either side. Behind the house were melancholy gardens, squared and clipped after the ancient French fashion, and beyond the garden wall some fields and woods, part of the estate of the Saverne family. These fields and woods were fringed by another great forest, which had once been the property of the house of Saverne, but had been purchased from the late easy proprietor by Messeigneurs de Rohan, Princes of the Empire, of France, and the Church, Cardinals, and Archbishops of Strasbourg, between whom and their gloomy Protestant neighbor there was no good will. Not only questions of faith separated them, but questions of chasse. The Count de Saverne, who loved shooting, and beat his meager woods for game with a couple of lean dogs and a fowling-piece over his shoulder, sometimes came in sight of the grand hunting parties of Monseigneur the Cardinal, who went to the chase like a prince as he was, with piqueurs and hornblowers, whole packs of dogs, and a troop of gentlemen in his uniform. Not seldom his Eminence's keepers and M. de Saverne's solitary garde-chasse had quarrels. 'Tell your master that I will shoot any red-legs which come upon my land,' M. de Saverne said in one of these controversies, as he held up a partridge which he had just brought down; and the keeper knew the moody nobleman would be true to his word.

Two neighbors so ill disposed toward one another were speedily at law; and in the courts at Strasbourg a poor provincial gentleman was likely to meet with scanty justice when opposed to such a powerful enemy as the prince archbishop of the province, one of the greatest noblemen of the kingdom. Boundary questions in a land where there are no hedges, game, forest, and fishery questions—how can I tell, who am no lawyer, what set the gentlemen at loggerheads? In later days I met one M. Georgel, an abbé, who had been a secretary of the prince cardinal, and he told me that M. de Saverne was a headlong, violent, ill-conditioned little mauvais coucheur, as they say in France, and ready to quarrel with or without a reason.

These quarrels naturally took the Count de Saverne to his advocates and lawyers at Strasbourg, and he would absent himself for days from home, where his poor wife was perhaps not sorry to be rid of him. It chanced on one of these expeditions to the chief town of his province that he fell in with a former comrade in his campaigns of Hastingeb and Laufeldt, an officer of Soubise’s regiment, the Baron de la Motte.* La Motte had been destined to the Church, like many cadets of good family, but, his elder brother dying, he was released from the tonsure and the seminary, and entered the army under good protection. Mles. de Saverne remembered this M. de la Motte at Nanci in old days. He bore the worst of characters; he was gambler, intriguer, duellist, profligate. I suspect that most gentlemen’s reputations came off ill under the tongues of these old ladies, and have heard of other countries where mesdemoiselles are equally hard to please. ‘Well, have we not all our faults?’ I imagine M. de Saverne saying in a rage. ‘Is there no such thing as calumny? Are we never to repent if we have been wrong? I know he has led a wild youth. Others may have done as much. But prodigals have been reclaimed ere now, and I for my part will not turn my back on this one.’ ‘Ah, I wish he had!’ De la Motte said to me myself in later days, ‘but it was his fate, his fate!’

One day, then, the Count de Saverne returns home from Strasbourg with his new friend; presents the Baron de la Motte to the ladies of his house, makes the gloomy place as cheerful as he can for his guest, brings forth the best wine from his cave, and beats his best covers for game. I myself knew the baron some years later—a handsome, tall, sallow-faced man, with a shifty eye, a soft voice, and a grand manner. M. de Saverne for his part was short, black, and ill favored, as I have heard my mother say. But Mrs. Duval did not love him, fancying that he ill treated her Biche. Where she disliked people my worthy parent would never allow them a single good quality; but she always averred that M. de la Motte was a perfect fine gentleman.

The intimacy between these two gentlemen increased apace.

* That unlucky Prince de Rohan was to suffer by another Delamotte, who, with his ‘Valois’ of a wife, played such a notorious part in the famous ‘diamond necklace’ business, but the two worthies were not, I believe, related.—D. D.
M. de la Motte was ever welcome at Saverne; a room in the house was called his room; their visitor was an acquaintance of their enemy the cardinal also, and would often come from the one château to the other. Laughingly he would tell how angry monseigneur was with his neighbor. He wished he could make peace between the two houses. He gave quite good advice to M. de Saverne, and pointed out the danger he ran in provoking so powerful an adversary. Men had been imprisoned for life for less reason. The cardinal might get a lettre de cachet against his obstinate opponent. He could, besides, ruin Saverne with fines and law costs. The contest between the two was quite unequal, and the weaker party must inevitably be crushed, unless these unhappy disputes should cease. As far as the ladies of the house dared speak, they coincided in the opinion of M. de la Motte, and were for submission and reconciliation with their neighbors. Mme. de Saverne's own relations heard of the feud, and implored the count to bring it to an end. It was one of these, the Baron de Viomesnil, going to command in Corsica, who entreated M. de Saverne to accompany him on the campaign. Anywhere the count was safer than in his own house with an implacable and irresistible enemy at his gate. M. de Saverne yielded to his kinsman's importunities. He took down his sword and pistols of Lanfeldt from the wall, where they had hung for twenty years. He set the affairs of his house in order, and after solemnly assembling his family, and on his knees confiding it to the gracious protection of Heaven, he left home to join the suite of the French General.

A few weeks after he left home—several weeks after his marriage—his wife wrote to inform him that she was likely to be a mother. The stern man, who had been very unhappy previously, and chose to think that his wife's barrenness was a punishment of Heaven for some crime of his or hers, was very much moved by this announcement. I have still at home a German Bible which he used, and in which is written in the German a very affecting prayer composed by him, imploring the divine blessing upon the child about to be born, and hoping this infant might grow in grace, and bring peace and love and unity into the household. It would appear that he made no doubt that he should have a son. His hope and aim were to save in every possible way for his child. I have read many letters of his which he sent from Corsica to his wife, and which she kept. They were full of strange minute orders as to the rearing and education of this son that was to be born.
He enjoined saving amounting to niggardliness in his household, and calculated how much might be put away in ten, in twenty years, so that the coming heir might have a property worthy of his ancient name. In case he should fall in action, he laid commands upon his wife to pursue a system of the most rigid economy, so that the child at coming of age might be able to appear creditably in the world. In these letters, I remember, the events of the campaign were dismissed in a very few words; the main part of the letters consisted of prayers, speculations, and prophecies regarding the child, and sermons couched in the language of the writer's stern creed. When the child was born, and a girl appeared in place of the boy upon whom the poor father had set his heart, I hear the family were so dismayed that they hardly dared to break the news to the chief of the house.

Who told me? The same man who said he wished he had never seen M. de Saverne; the man for whom the unhappy gentleman had conceived a warm friendship; the man who was to bring a mysterious calamity upon those whom, as I do think, and in his selfish way, he loved sincerely, and he spoke at a time when he could have little desire to deceive me.

The lord of the castle is gone on the campaign. The châte-laine is left alone in her melancholy tower with her two dismal duennes. My good mother, speaking in later days about these matters, took up the part of her Biche against the ladies of Barr and their brother, and always asserted that the tyranny of the duennes, and the meddling and the verbosity and the ill temper of M. de Saverne himself, brought about the melancholy events which now presently ensued. The Count de Saverne was a little man (my mother said) who loved to hear himself talk, and who held forth from morning till night. His life was a fuss. He would weigh the coffee, and count the lumps of sugar, and have a finger in every pie in his frugal house. Night and morning he preached sermons to his family, and he continued to preach when not en chaire, laying down the law upon all subjects, untiringly voluble. Cheerfulness in the company of such a man was hypocrisy. Mmes. de Barr had to disguise weariness, to assume an air of contentment, and to appear to be interested when the count preached. As for the count's sisters, they were accustomed to listen to their brother and lord with respectful submission. They had a hundred domestic occupations; they had baking and boiling and pickling and washing and endless embroidery; the life of the little château was quite supportable to them. They knew no better. Even in their father's days at Nanci the ungainly women kept pretty much aloof from the world, and were little better than domestic servants in waiting on monseigneur.

And Mme. de Saverne, on her first entrance into the family, accepted the subordinate position meekly enough. She spun and she bleached, and she worked great embroideries, and busied herself about her house, and listened demurely while the M. le Compte was preaching. But then there came a time when her duties interested her no more, when his sermons became especially wearisome, when sharp words passed between her and her lord, and the poor thing exhibited symptoms of impatience and revolt. And with the revolt arose awful storms and domestic battles; and after battles, submission, reconciliation, forgiveness, hypocrisy.

It has been said that M. de Saverne loved the sound of his own croaking voice, and to hold forth to his own congregation. Night after night he and his friend M. de la Motte would have religious disputes together, in which the Huguenot gentleman flattered himself that he constantly had the better of the ex-pupil of the seminary. I was not present naturally, not setting my foot on French ground until five-and-twenty years after, but I can fancy Madame the Countess sitting at her tambour frame, and the old duenna ladies at their cards, and the combat of the Churches going on between these two champions in the little old saloon of the Hôtel de Saverne. 'As I hope for pardon,' M. de la Motte said to me at a supreme moment of his life, 'and to meet those whom on earth I loved and made unhappy, no wrong passed between Clarisse and me save that wrong which consisted in disguising from her husband the regard we had for one another. Once, twice, thrice, I went away from their house, but that unhappy Saverne would bring me back, and I was only too glad to return. I would let him talk for hours—I own it—so that I might be near Clarisse. I had to answer from time to time, and rubbed up my old seminary learning to reply to his sermons. I must often have spoken at random, for my thoughts were far away from the poor man's radotages, and he could no more change my convictions than he could change the color of my skin. Hours and hours thus passed away. They would have been intolerably tedious to others; they were not so to me. I preferred that gloomy little château to the finest place in Europe. To see Clarisse was all I asked. Denis! There is a power irresistible impelling all of us. From the moment I first set eyes on her I knew she was my fate. I shot an English grenadier at Hastenbeck who would have bayoneted poor Saverne but for me. As I lifted him up from the ground I thought, "I shall have to repent of ever having seen that man." I felt the same thing, Duval, when I saw you. And as the unhappy gentleman spoke I remembered how I for my part felt a singular and unpleasant sensation as of terror and approaching evil when first I looked at that handsome, ill-omened face.

I thankfully believe the words which M. de la Motte spoke to me at a time when he could have no cause to disguise the truth, and am assured of the innocence of the Countess de Saverne. Poor lady! if she erred in thought she had to pay so awful a penalty for her crime that we humbly hope it has been forgiven her. She was not true to her husband, though she did him no wrong. If, while trembling before him, she yet had dissimulation enough to smile and be merry, I suppose no preacher or husband would be very angry with her for that hypocrisy. I have seen a slave in the West Indies soundly cuffs for looking sulky; we expect our negroes to be obedient and to be happy too.

Now when M. de Saverne went away to Corsica I suspect he was strongly advised to take that step by his friend M. de la Motte. When he was gone M. de la Motte did not present himself at the Hotel de Saverne, where an old schoolfellow of his, a pastor and preacher from Kehl, on the German Rhine bank, was installed in command of the little garrison, from which its natural captain had been obliged to withdraw; but there is no doubt that poor Clarisse deceived this gentleman and her two sisters-in-law, and acted toward them with a very culpable hypocrisy.

Although there was a deadly feud between the two châteaux of Saverne—namely, the cardinal's new-built castle in the park and the count's hotel in the little town—yet each house knew more or less of the other's doings. When the prince cardinal and his court were at Saverne Milles. de Barr were kept perfectly well informed of all the festivities which they did not share. In our little Fareport here do not the Miss Prys, my neighbors, know what I have for dinner, the amount of my income, the price of my wife's last gown, and the items of my son's, Captain Scapegrace's, tailor's bill? No doubt the ladies of Barr were equally well informed of the doings of the prince coadjutor and his court. Such gambling, such splendor, such painted hussies from Strasbourg, such plays, masquerades, and orgies as took place in that castle! Mesdemoiselles had the very latest particulars of all these horrors, and the cardinal's castle was to them as the castle of a wicked ogre. From her little dingy tower at night Mme. de Saverne could look out and see the cardinal's sixty palace windows all aflame. Of summer nights gusts of unhallowed music would be heard from the great house, where dancing festivals, theatrical pieces even, were performed. Though Mme. de Saverne was forbidden by her husband to frequent those assemblies, the townspeople were up to the palace from time to time, and madame could not help hearing of the doings there. In spite of the count's prohibition his gardener poached in the cardinal's woods; one or two of the servants were smuggled in to see a fête or a ball; then madame's own woman went; then madame herself began to have a wicked longing to go, as madame's first ancestress had for the fruit of the forbidden tree. Is not the apple always ripe on that tree, and does not the tempter forever invite you to pluck and eat? Mme. de Saverne had a lively little waiting maid, whose bright eyes loved to look into neighbor's parks and gardens, and who had found favor with one of the domestics of the prince archbishop. This woman brought news to her mistress of the feasts, balls, banquets, nay, comedies, which were performed at the prince cardinal's. The prince's gentlemen went hunting in his uniform. He was served on plate, and a lackey in his livery stood behind each guest. He had the French comedians over from Strasbourg. Oh! that M. de Molière was a droll gentleman, and how grand the 'Cid' was!

Now to see these plays and balls Martha, the maid, must have had intelligence in and out of both the houses of Saverne. She must have deceived those old dragons mesdemoiselles. She must have had means of creeping out at the gate, and silently creeping back again. She told her mistress everything she saw, acted the plays for her, and described the dresses of the ladies and gentlemen. Mme. de Saverne was never tired of hearing her maid's stories. When Martha was going to a fête madame lent her some little ornament to wear, and yet when Pasteur Schnorr and mesdemoiselles talked of the proceedings at Great Saverne, and as if the fires of Gomorrah were ready to swallow up that palace and all within it, the lady of Saverne sat demurely in silence and listened to their croaking and sermons. Listened? The pastor exhorted the household, the old ladies talked night after night, and poor Mme. de Saverne never heeded. Her thoughts were away in Great Saverne; her spirit was forever hankering about those woods. Letters came now and again from M. de Saverne, with the army. They had been engaged with the enemy. Very good. He was unhurt. Heaven be praised! And then the grim husband read his poor little wife a grim sermon; and the grim sisters and the chaplain commented on it. Once, after an action at Calvi, M. de Saverne, who was always specially lively in moments of danger, described how narrowly he had escaped with his life, and the chaplain took advantage of the circumstance, and delivered to the household a prodigious discourse on death, on danger, on preservation here and hereafter, and alas, and alas! poor Mme. de Saverne found that she had not listened to a word of the homily. Her thoughts were not with the preacher, nor with the captain of Viomesnil's regiment before Calvi; they were in the palace at Great Saverne, with the balls, and the comedies, and the music, and the fine gentlemen from Paris and Strasbour, and out of the empire beyond the Rhine, who frequented the prince's entertainments.

What happened where the wicked spirit was whispering, 'Eat,' and the tempting apple hung within reach? One night when the household was at rest, Mme. de Saverne, muffled in cloak and calash, with a female companion similarly disguised, tripped silently out of the back gate of the Hôtel de Saverne, found a cariole in waiting, with a driver who apparently knew the road and the passengers he was to carry, and after half an hour's drive through the straight avenues of the park of Great Saverne, alighted at the gates of the château, where the driver gave up the reins of the cariole to a domestic in waiting, and by doors and passages which seemed perfectly well known to him the coachman and the two women entered the castle together and found their way to a gallery in a great hall, in which many lords and ladies were seated, and at the end of which was a stage with a curtain before it. Men and women came backward and forward on this stage, and recited dialogue in verses. Oh, mercy! it was a comedy they were acting, one of those wicked delightful plays which she was forbidden to see, and which she was longing to behold! After the comedy was to be a ball, in which the actors would dance in their stage habits. Some of the people were in masks already, and in that box near to the stage surrounded by a little crowd of dominoes, sat Monseigneur the Prince Cardinal himself. Mme. de Saverne had seen him and his cavalcade sometimes returning from hunting. She would have been as much puzzled to say what the play was about as to give an account of Pasteur Schnorr's sermon a few hours before. But Frontin made jokes with his master Damis; and Géronde locked up the doors of his house and went to bed grumbling; and it grew quite dark, and Mathurine flung a rope ladder out of window, and she and her mistress Elmire came down the ladder; and Frontin held it, and Elmire, with a little cry, fell into the arms of M. Damis; and master and man, and maid and mistress, sang a merry chorus together, in which human frailty was very cheerfully depicted; and when they had done, away they went to the gondola which was in waiting at the canal stairs and so good-night. And when old Géronde, wakened up by the disturbance, at last came forth in his nightcap, and saw the boat paddling away out of reach, you may be sure that the audience laughed at the poor impotent raging old wretch. It was a very merry play indeed, and is still popular and performed in France and elsewhere.

After the play came a ball. Would madame dance? Would the noble Countess of Saverne dance with a coachman? There were others below on the dancing floor dressed in mask and domino as she was. Who ever said she had a mask and domino? You see, it has been stated that she was muffled in cloak and calash. Well, is not a domino a cloak? and has it not a hood or calash appended to it? and pray, do not women wear masks at home as well as at the Ridotto?

Another question arises here. A highborn lady intrusts herself to a charioteer, who drives her to the castle of a prince, her husband's enemy. Who was her companion? Of course he could be no other than that luckless M. de la Motte. He had never been very far away from Mme. de Saverne since her husband's departure. In spite of chaplains and duennas and guards and locks and keys he had found means of communicating with her. How? By what lies and stratagems? By what arts and bribery? These poor people are both gone to their account. Both suffered a fearful punishment. I will not describe their follies, and don't care to be M. Figaro, and hold the ladder and lantern, while the count scales Rosina's window. Poor frightened erring soul! She suffered an awful penalty for what, no doubt, was a great wrong.

A child almost, she was married to M. de Saverne, without knowing him, without liking him, because her parents ordered her, and because she was bound to comply with their will. She was sold, and went to her slavery. She lived at first obediently enough. If she shed tears they were dried; if she quarreled with her husband the two were presently reconciled. She bore no especial malice, and was as gentle, subordinate a slave as ever you shall see in Jamaica or Barbadoes. Nobody's tears were sooner dried, as I should judge; none would be more ready to kiss the hand of the overseer who drove her. But you don't expect sincerity and subservience too. I know, for my part, a lady who only obeys when she likes; and faith! it may be it is I who am the hypocrite, and have to tremble and smile and whine before her.

When Mme. de Saverne's time was nearly come it was ordered that she should go to Strasbourg, where the best medical assistance is to be had; and here, six months after her husband's departure for Corsica, their child Agnes de Saverne was born.

Did secret terror and mental disquietude and remorse now fall on the unhappy lady? She wrote to my mother, at this time her only confidant (and yet not a confidant at all!): 'O Ursule! I dread this event. Perhaps I shall die. I think I hope I shall. In these long days, since he has been away, I have got so to dread his return that I believe I shall go mad when I see him. Do you know, after the battle before Calvi, when I read that many officers had been killed, I thought, is M. de Saverne killed? And I read the list down, and his name was not there; and, my sister, my sister, I was not glad! Have I come to be such a monster as to wish my own husband—No. I wish I was. I can't speak to M. Schnorr about this. He is so stupid. He doesn't understand me. He is like my husband, forever preaching me his sermons.

'Listen, Ursule! Speak it to nobody! I have been to hear a sermon. Oh, it was indeed divine!' It was not from one of our pastors. Oh, how they weary me! It was from a good bishop of the French Church—not our German Church—the Bishop of Amiens—who happens to be here on a visit to the cardinal prince. The bishop's name is M. de la Motte. He is a relative of a gentleman of whom we have seen a great deal lately—of a great friend of M. de Saverne, who saved my husband's life in the battle M. de S. is always talking about.

'How beautiful the cathedral is! It was night when I went. The church was lighted like the stars, and the music was like heaven. Ah, how different from M. Schnorr at home, from—from somebody else at my new home who is always preaching—that is, when he is at home! Poor man! I wonder whether he preaches to them in Corsica!' I pity them if he does. Don't mention the cathedral if you write to me. The dragons don't know anything about it. How they would scold if they did! Oh, how they ennuyent me, the dragons! Behold them! They think I am writing to my husband.' Ah, Ursule! When I write to him I sit for hours before the paper. I say nothing; and what I say seems to be lies. Whereas when I write to you my pen runs—runs! The paper is covered before I think I have begun. So it is when I write to—
I do believe that villain dragon is peering at my note with her spectacles! Yes, my good sister, I am writing to M. le Comte!'

To this letter a postscript is added, as by the countess' command, in the German language, in which Mme. de Saverne's medical attendant announces the birth of a daughter, and that the child and mother are doing well.

That daughter is sitting before me now—with spectacles on nose too—very placidly spelling the Portsmouth paper, where I hope she will soon read the promotion of Monsieur Scapegrace, her son. She has exchanged her noble name for mine, which is only humble and honest. My dear! your eyes are not so bright as once I remember them, and the raven locks are streaked with silver. To shield thy head from dangers has been the blessed chance and duty of my life. When I turn toward her, and see her moored in our harbor of rest, after our life's checkered voyage, calm and happy, a sense of immense gratitude fills my being, and my heart says a hymn of praise.

The first days of the life of Agnes de Saverne were marked by incidents which were strangely to influence her career. Around her little cradle a double, a triple tragedy was about to be enacted. Strange that death, crime, revenge, remorse, mystery, should attend around the cradle of one so innocent and pure—as pure and innocent, I pray Heaven now, as upon that day when, at scarce a month old, the adventures of her life began.

That letter to my mother, written by Mme. de Saverne on the eve of her child's birth, and finished by her attendant, bears date November 25, 1768. A month later Martha Seebach, her attendant, wrote (in German) that her mistress had suffered frightfully from fever: so much so that her reason left her for some time, and her life was despaired of. Milles. de Barr were for bringing up the child by hand; but not being versed in nursery practices, the infant had ailed sadly until restored to its mother. Mme. de Saverne was now tranquil. Madame was greatly better. She had suffered most fearfully. In her illness she was constantly calling for her foster-sister to protect her from some danger, which, as she appeared to fancy menaced madame.

Child as I was at the time when these letters were passing, I remember the arrival of the next. It lies in yonder drawer, and was written by a poor fevered hand which is now cold, in ink which is faded after fifty years.* I remember my mother screaming out in German, which she always spoke when strongly moved, 'Dear Heaven, my child is mad—is mad!' And indeed that poor faded letter contains a strange rhapsody.

'Ursule!' she wrote (I do not care to give at length the words of the poor wandering creature), 'after my child was born the demons wanted to take her from me. But I struggled and kept her quite close, and now they can no longer hurt her. I took her to church. Martha went with me, and He was there—he always is—to defend me from the demons, and I had her christened Agnes, and I was christened Agnes too. Think of my being christened at twenty-two! Agnes the First, and Agnes the Second. But though my name is changed, I am always the same to my Ursule, and my name now is Agnes Clarisse de Saverne, born de Viomesnil.'

She had actually, when not quite mistress of her own reason, been baptized into the Roman Catholic Church with her child. Was she sane when she so acted? Had she thought of the step before taking it? Had she known Catholic clergymen at Saverne, or had she other reasons for her conversion than those which were furnished in the conversations which took place between her husband and M. de la Motte? In this letter the poor lady says, 'Yesterday two persons came to my bed with gold crowns round their heads. One was dressed like a priest; one was beautiful and covered with arrows, and they said, "We are St. Fabian and St. Sebastian; and to-morrow is the day of St. Agnes; and she will be at church to receive you there."'

What the real case was I never knew. The Protestant clergyman whom I saw in after days could only bring his book to show that he had christened the infant, not Agnes, but Augustine. Martha Seebach is dead. La Motte, when I conversed with him, did not touch upon this part of the poor lady's history. I conjecture that the images and pictures which she had seen in the churches operated upon her fevered brain; that, having procured a Roman calendar and missal, she knew saints' days and feasts; and, not yet recovered from her delirium or quite responsible for the actions which she performed, she took her child to the cathedral, and was baptized there.

And now, no doubt, the poor lady had to practice more deceit and concealment. The 'demons' were the old maiden sisters left to watch over her. She had to hoodwink these. Had she not done so before—when she went to the cardinal's palace at Saverne? Wherever the poor thing moved I fancy

* The memoirs appear to have been written in the years '20, '21. Mr. Duval was gazetted rear-admiral and K.C.B. in the promotions on the accession of King George IV.
those ill-omened eyes of La Motte glimmering upon her out of the darkness. Poor Eve—not lost quite, I pray and think,—but that serpent was ever trailing after her, and she was to die poisoned in its coil. Who shall understand the awful ways of Fate? A year after that period regarding which I write a lovely imperial princess rode through the Strasbourg streets radiant and blushing, amid pealing bells, roaring cannon, garlands and banners and shouting multitudes. Did anyone ever think that the last stage of that life’s journey was to be taken in a hideous tumbrel, and to terminate on a scaffold? The life of Mme. de Saverne was to last but a year more, and her end to be scarcely less tragical.

Many physicians have told me how often after the birth of a child the brain of a mother will be affected. Mme. de Saverne remained for some time in this febrile condition, if not unconscious of her actions, at least not accountable for all of them. At the end of three months she woke up as out of a dream, having a dreadful recollection of the circumstances which had passed. Under what hallucinations we never shall know, or yielding to what persuasions, the wife of a stern Protestant nobleman had been to a Roman Catholic church and had been christened there with her child. She never could recall that step. A great terror came over her as she thought of it—a great terror and a hatred of her husband, the cause of all her grief and her fear. She began to look out lest he should return; she clutched her child to her breast, and barred and bolted all doors for fear people should rob her of the infant. The Protestant chaplain, the Protestant sisters-in-law, looked on with dismay and anxiety; they thought justly that Mme. de Saverne was not yet quite restored to her reason; they consulted the physicians, who agreed with them; who arrived, who prescribed; who were treated by the patient with scorn, laughter, insult sometimes; sometimes with tears and terror, according to her wayward mood. Her condition was most puzzling. The sisters wrote from time to time guarded reports respecting her to her husband in Corsica. He, for his part, replied instantly with volumes of his wonted verbose commonplace. He acquiesced in the decrees of Fate when informed that a daughter was born to him; and presently wrote whole reams of instructions regarding her nature, dress, and physical and religious training. The child was called Agnes? He would have preferred Barbara, as being his mother’s name. I remember in some of the poor gentleman’s letters there were orders about the child’s pap, and instructions as to the nurse’s diet. He was coming home soon. The Corsicans had been defeated in every action. Had he been a Catholic he would have been a knight of the king’s orders long ere this. M. de Viomesnil hoped still to get for him the order of Military Merit (the Protestant order which his Majesty had founded ten years previously). These letters (which were subsequently lost by an accident at sea*) spoke modestly enough of the count’s personal adventures. I hold him to have been a very brave man, and only not tedious and prolix when he spoke of his own merits and services.

The count’s letters succeeded each other post after post. The end of the war was approaching, and with it his return was assured. He exulted in the thought of seeing his child, and leading her in the way she should go—the right way, the true way. As the mother’s brain cleared, her terror grew greater—her terror and loathing of her husband. She could not bear the thought of his return, or to face him with the confession which she knew she must make. His wife turn Catholic and baptize his child? She felt he would kill her if he knew what had happened. She went to the priest who had baptized her. M. Georgel (his Eminence’s secretary) knew her husband. The prince cardinal was so great and powerful a prelate, Georgel said, that he would protect her against all the wrath of all the Protestants in France. I think she must have had interviews with the prince cardinal, though there is no account of them in any letter to my mother.

The campaign was at an end. M. de Vaux, M. de Viomesnil, both wrote in highly eulogistic terms of the conduct of the Count de Saverne. Their good wishes would attend him home; Protestant as he was, their best interest should be exerted in his behalf.

The day of the count’s return approached. The day arrived. I can fancy the brave gentleman with beating heart ascending the steps of the homely lodging where his family have been living at Strasbourg ever since the infant’s birth. How he has dreamt about that child: prayed for her and his wife at night watch and bivouac—prayed for them as he stood, calm and devout, in the midst of battle...

When he enters the room he sees only two frightened domestics and the two ghastly faces of his scared old sisters.

‘Where are Clarisse and the child?’ he asks.

The child and the mother were gone. The aunts knew not where.

* The letters from Mme. de Saverne to my mother at Winchelsea were not subject to this mishap, but were always kept by Mme. Duval in her own escritoire.
A stroke of palsy could scarcely have smitten the unhappy gentleman more severely than did the news which his trembling family was obliged to give him. In later days I saw M. Schnorr, the German pastor from Kehl, who has been mentioned already, and who was installed in the count's house as tutor and chaplain during the absence of the master. 'When Mme. de Saverne went to make her coucher at Strasbourg' (M. Schnorr said to me), 'I retired to my duties at Kehl, glad enough to return to the quiet of my home, for the noble lady's reception of me was anything but gracious; and I had to endure much female sarcasm and many unkind words from Mme. la Comtesse whenever, as in duty bound, I presented myself at her table. Sir, that most unhappy lady used to make sport of me before her domestics. She used to call me her jailer. She used to mimic my ways of eating and drinking. She would yawn in the midst of my exhortations, and cry out, “Oh, que c'est bête!” and when I gave out a psalm, would utter little cries, and say, “Pardon me, M. Schnorr, but you sing so out of tune you make my head ache,” so that I could scarcely continue that portion of the service, the very domestics laughing at me when I began to sing. My life was a martyrdom, but I bore my tortures meekly, out of a sense of duty and my love for M. le Comte. When her ladyship kept her chamber I used to wait almost daily upon mesdemoiselles the count's sisters to ask news of her and her child. I christened the infant, but her mother was too ill to be present, and sent me out word by Mme. Martha that she should call the child Agnes, though I might name it what I pleased. This was on the 21st January, and I remember being struck, because in the Roman calendar the feast of St. Agnes is celebrated on that day.

'Haggard and actually grown gray, from a black man which he was, my poor lord came to me with wildness and agony of grief in all his features and actions, to announce to me that Madame the Countess had fled, taking her infant with her. And he had a scrap of paper with him, over which he wept and raged as one demented, now pouring out fiercer imprecations, now bursting into passionate tears and cries, calling upon his wife, his darling, his prodigal, to come back, to bring him his child, when all should be forgiven. As he thus spoke his screams and groans were so piteous that I myself was quite unmanned, and my mother, who keeps house for me (and who happened to be listening at the door), was likewise greatly alarmed by my poor lord's passion of grief. And when I read on that paper that my lady countess had left the faith to which our fathers gloriously testified in the midst of trouble, slaughter, persecution, and bondage, I was scarcely less shocked than my good lord himself.

' We crossed the bridge to Strasbourg back again, and went to the cathedral church, and entering there, we saw the Abbé Georgel coming out of a chapel where he had been to perform his devotions. The abbé, who knew me, gave a ghastly smile as he recognized me, and for a pale man, his cheek blushed up a little when I said, 'This is M. the Comte de Saverne.'

"Where is she?" asked my poor lord, clutching the abbé's arm.

"Who?" asked the abbé, stepping back a little.

"Where is my child? where is my wife?" cries the count.

"Silence, monsieur!" says the abbé. "Do you know in whose house you are?" and the chant from the altar, where the service was being performed, came upon us, and smote my poor lord as though a shot had struck him. We were standing, he tottering against a pillar in the nave, close by the christening font, and over my lord's head was a picture of St. Agnes.

The agony of the poor gentleman could not but touch anyone who witnessed it. "M. le Comte," says the abbé, "I feel for you. This great surprise has come upon you unprepared—I—I pray that it may be for your good."

"You know, then, what has happened?" asked M. de Saverne; and the abbé was obliged to stammer a confession that he did know what had occurred. He was, in fact, the very man who had performed the rite which separated my unhappy lady from the church of her fathers.

"Sir," he said with some spirit, "this was a service which no clergyman could refuse. I would to Heaven, monsieur, that you too might be brought to ask it from me."

The poor count, with despair in his face, asked to see the register which confirmed the news, and there we saw that on the 21st January, 1769, being the feast of St. Agnes, the noble lady Clarisse, Countess of Saverne, born de Viomesnil, aged twenty-two years, and Agnes, only daughter of the same Count of Saverne and Clarisse his wife, were baptized and received into the Church in the presence of two witnesses (clerics) whose names were signed.

The poor count knelt over the registry book with an awful grief in his face, and in a mood which I heartily pitied. He bent down, uttering what seemed an imprecation rather than a prayer, and at this moment it chanced the service at the chief altar was concluded, and monseigneur and his suite of clergy came into the sacristy. Sir, the Count de Saverne, starting up, clutching his sword in his hand, and shaking his fist at the cardinal, uttered a wild speech calling down imprecations upon the Church of which the prince was a chief. "Where is my lamb that you have taken from me?" he said, using the language of the prophet toward the king who had despoiled him.

"The cardinal haughtily said the conversion of Mme. de Saverne was of Heaven, and no act of his, and adding, "Bad neighbor as you have been to me, sir, I wish you so well that I hope you may follow her."

"At this the count, losing all patience, made a violent attack upon the Church of Rome, denounced the cardinal, and called down maledictions upon his head; said that a day should come when his abominable pride should meet with a punishment and fall; and spoke, as, in fact, the poor gentleman was able to do only too readily and volubly, against Rome and all its errors.

"The Prince Louis de Rohan replied with no little dignity, as I own. He said that such words in such a place were offensive and out of all reason; that it only depended on him to have M. de Saverne arrested, and punished for blasphemy and insult to the Church; but that, pitying the count's unhappy condition, the cardinal would forget the hasty and insolent words he had uttered—as he would know how to defend Mme. de Saverne and her child after the righteous step which she had taken. And he swept out of the sacristy with his suite, and passed through the door which leads into his palace, leaving my poor count still in his despair and fury.

"As he spoke with those Scripture phrases which M. de Saverne ever had at command, I remember how the prince cardinal tossed up his head and smiled. I wonder whether he thought of the words when his own day of disgrace came, and the fatal affair of the diamond necklace which brought him to ruin.'*

"Not without difficulty' (M. Schnorr resumed) 'I induced the poor count to quit the church where his wife's apostasy had been performed. The outer gates and walls are decorated with numberless sculptures of saints of the Roman calendar; and for a minute or two the poor man stood on the threshold shouting imprecations in the sunshine, and calling down woe upon France and Rome. I hurried him away. Such language was dangerous, and could bring no good to either of us. He was almost a madman when I conducted him back to his home,

*My informant, Protestant though he was, did not, as I remember, speak with very much asperity against the prince cardinal. He said that the prince lived an edifying life after his fall, succoring the poor, and doing everything in his power to defend the cause of royalty. — D. D.
where the ladies his sisters, scared with his wild looks, besought me not to leave him.

'Again he went into the room which his wife and child had inhabited, and, as he looked at the relics of both which still were left there, gave way to bursts of grief which were pitiable indeed to witness. I speak of what happened near forty years ago, and remember the scene as though yesterday: the passionate agony of the poor gentleman, the sois and prayers. On a chest of drawers there was a little cap belonging to the infant. He seized it; kissed it; wept over it; calling upon the mother to bring the child back and he would forgive all. He thrust the little cap into his breast; opened every drawer, book, and closet, seeking for some indications of the fugitives. My opinion was, and that even of the ladies, sisters of M. le Comte, that madame had taken refuge in a convent with the child, that the cardinal knew where she was, poor and friendless, and that the Protestant gentleman would in vain seek for her. Perhaps when tired of that place—I for my part thought Mme. la Comtesse a light-minded, willful person, who certainly had no vocation, as the Catholics call it, for a religious life—I thought she might come out after a while, and gave my patron such consolation as I could devise upon this faint hope. He who was all forgiveness at one minute, was all wrath at the next. He would rather see his child dead than receive her as a Catholic. He would go to the king, surrounded by harlots as he was, and ask for justice. There were still Protestant gentlemen left in France, whose spirit was not altogether trodden down, and they would back him in demanding reparation for this outrage.

'I had some vague suspicion, which, however, I dismissed from my mind as unworthy, that there might be a third party cognizant of madame's flight; and this was a gentleman, once a great favorite of M. le Comte, and in whom I myself was not a little interested. Three or four days after the Comte de Saverne went away to the war, as I was meditating on a sermon which I proposed to deliver, walking at the back of my lord's house of Saverne, in the fields which skirt the wood where the prince cardinal's great schloss stands, I saw this gentleman with a gun over his shoulder, and recognized him—the Chevalier de la Motte, the very person who had saved the life of M. de Saverne in the campaign against the English.

'M. de la Motte said he was staying with the cardinal, and trusted that the ladies of Saverne were well. He sent his respectful compliments to them; in a laughing way said he had been denied the door when he came to a visit, which he thought was an unkind act toward an old comrade; and at the same time expressed his sorrow at the count's departure—
'for, Herr Pfarrer,' said he, 'you know I am a good Catholic, and in many most important conversations which I had with the Comte de Saverne the differences between our two Churches was the subject of our talk, and I do think I should have converted him to ours.' I, humble village pastor as I am, was not afraid to speak in such a cause, and we straightway had a most interesting conversation together, in which, as the gentleman showed, I had not the worst of the argument. It appeared he had been educated for the Roman Church, but afterward entered the army. He was a most interesting man, and his name was le Chevalier de la Motte. You look as if you had known him, M. le Capitaine—will it please you to replenish your pipe, and take another glass of my beer?'

I said I had effectivement known M. de la Motte; and the good old clergyman (with many compliments to me for speaking French and German so glibly) proceeded with his artless narrative: 'I was ever a poor horseman; and when I came to be chaplain and major-domo at the Hôtel de Saverne, in the count's absence, madame more than once rode entirely away from me, saying that she could not afford to go at my clerical jog-trot. And being in a scarlet amazon, and a conspicuous object, you see, I thought I saw her at a distance talking to a gentleman on a schimmel horse, in a grass-green coat. When I asked her to whom she spoke she said, 'M. le Pasteur, you radotez with your gray horse and your green coat. If you are set to be a spy over me ride faster, or bring out the old ladies to bark at your side.' The fact is, the countess was forever quarreling with those old ladies, and they were a yelping ill-natured pair. They treated me, a pastor of the Reformed Church of the Augsburg Confession, as no better than a lackey, sir, and made me eat the bread of humiliation; whereas Mme. la Comtesse, though often haughty, flighty, and passionate, could also be so winning and gentle that no one could resist her. Ah, sir!' said the pastor, 'that woman had a coaxing way with her when she chose, and when her flight came I was in such a way that the jealous old sister-in-laws said I was in love with her myself. Pfui! For a month before my lord's arrival I had been knocking at all doors to see if I could find my poor wandering lady behind them. She, her child, and Martha her maid were gone, and we knew not whither.

'On that very first day of his unhappy arrival M. le Comte discovered what his sisters, jealous and curious as they were, what I, a man of no inconsiderable acumen, had failed to note, Among torn papers and chiffons, in her ladyship’s bureau. there was a scrap with one line in her handwriting—“Ursule, Ursule, le tyran rev—” and no more.
‘“Ah!” M. le Comte said, “she is gone to her foster-sister in England! Quick, quick, horses!” And before two hours were passed he was on horseback, making the first stage of that long journey.’

CHAPTER III.

THE TRAVELERS.

The poor gentleman was in such haste that the old proverb was realized in his case, and his journey was anything but speedy. At Nanci he fell ill of a fever, which had nearly carried him off, and in which he unceasingly raved about his child, and called upon his faithless wife to return her. Almost before he was convalescent he was on his way again, to Boulogne, where he saw that English coast on which he rightly conjectured his fugitive wife was sheltered.

And here, from my boyish remembrance, which, respecting these early days, remains extraordinarily clear, I can take up the story, in which I was myself a very young actor, playing in the strange, fantastic, often terrible, drama which ensued a not insignificant part. As I survey it now the curtain is down, and the play long over; as I think of its surprises, disguises, mysteries, escapes, and dangers I am amazed myself, and sometimes inclined to be almost as great a fatalist as M. de la Motte, who vowed that a superior Power ruled our actions for us, and declared that he could no more prevent his destiny from accomplishing itself than he could prevent his hair from growing. What a destiny it was! What a fatal tragedy was now about to begin!

One evening in our midsummer holidays, in the year 1769, I remember being seated in my little chair at home, with a tempest of rain beating down the street. We had custom on most evenings, but there happened to be none on this night; and I remember I was puzzling over a bit of Latin grammar, to which mother used to keep me stoutly when I came home from school.

It is fifty years since.* I have forgotten who knows how many events of my life, which are not much worth the remembering; but I have as clearly before my eyes now a little scene which occurred on this momentous night as though it had been acted within this hour. As we are sitting at our various employments, we hear steps coming up the street, which was empty, and silent but for the noise of the wind and rain. We hear steps—several steps—along the pavement, and they stop at our door.

* The narrative seems to have been written about the year 1782.

‘Mme. Duval! It is Gregson!’ cries a voice from without.

‘Ah, bon Dieu!’ says mother, starting up and turning quite white.

And then I heard the cry of an infant. Dear heart! How well I remember that little cry!

As the door opens, a great gust of wind sets our two candles flickering, and I see enter

A gentleman, giving his arm to a lady who is veiled in cloaks and wraps, an attendant carrying a crying child, and Gregson the boatman after them.

My mother gives a great hoarse shriek, and crying out, ‘Clarisse! Clarisse!’ rushes up to the lady, and hugs and embraces her passionately. The child cries and wails. The nurse strives to soothe the infant. The gentleman takes off his hat and wrings the wet from it, and looks at me. It was then I felt a strange shock and terror. I have felt the same shock once or twice in my life; and once, notably, the person so affecting me has been my enemy, and has come to a dismal end.

‘We have had a very rough voyage,’ says the gentleman (in French) to my grandfather. ‘We have been fourteen hours at sea. Madame has suffered greatly, and is much exhausted.’

‘Thy rooms are ready,’ says mother fondly. ‘My poor Biche, thou shalt sleep in comfort to-night, and need fear nothing, nothing!’

A few days before I had seen mother and her servant mightily busy in preparing the rooms on the first floor, and decorating them. When I asked whom she was expecting she boxed my ears, and bade me be quiet; but these were evidently the expected visitors; and, of course, from the names which mother used, I knew that the lady was the Countess of Saverne.

‘And this is thy son, Ursule?’ says the lady. ‘He is a great boy! My little wretch is always crying.’

‘Oh, the little darling,’ says mother, seizing the child, which fell to crying louder than ever, ‘scared by the nodding plume and bristling crest’ of Mme. Duval, who wore a great cap in those days, and indeed looked as fierce as any Hector. When the pale lady spoke so harshly about the child I remember myself feeling a sort of surprise and displeasure. Indeed, I have loved children all my life, and am a fool about them (as witness my treatment of my own rascal), and no one can say that I was ever a tyrant at school, or ever fought there except to hold my own.

My mother produced what food was in the house, and welcomed her guests to her humble table. What trivial things remain impressed on the memory! I remember laughing in my boyish way because the lady said, 'Ah! c'est ça du thé? je n'en ai jamais goûté. Mais c'est très mauvais, n'est-ce pas, M. le Chevalier?' I suppose they had not learned to drink tea in Alsace yet. Mother stopped my laughing with her usual appeal to my ears. I was daily receiving that sort of correction from the good soul. Grandfather said, If Madame the Countess would like a little tass of real Nantes brandy after her voyage he could supply her; but she would have none of that either, and retired soon to her chamber, which had been prepared for her with my mother's best sheets and diapers, and in which was a bed for her maid Martha, who had retired to it with the little crying child. For M. le Chevalier de la Motte an apartment was taken at Mr. Billis' the baker's, down the street—a friend who gave me many a plum cake in my childhood, and whose wigs grandfather dressed, if you must know the truth.

At morning and evening we used to have prayers, which grandfather spoke with much eloquence; but on this night, as he took out his great Bible, and was for having me read a chapter, my mother said, 'No. This poor Clarisse is fatigued, and will go to bed.' And to bed accordingly the stranger went. And as I read my little chapter, I remember how tears fell down mother's cheeks, and how she cried, 'Ah, mon Dieu, mon Dieu! ayez pitié d'elle,' and when I was going to sing our evening hymn, 'Nun ruhen alle Wälder,' she told me to hush. Madame upstairs was tired, and wanted to sleep. And she went upstairs to look after madame, and bade me be a little guide to the strange gentleman, and show him the way to Billis' house. Off I went, prattling by his side; I dare say I soon forgot the terror which I felt when I first saw him. You may be sure all Winchelsea knew that a French lady and her child and her maid were come to stay with Mme. Duval, and a French gentleman to lodge over the baker's.

I never shall forget my terror and astonishment when mother told me that this lady who came to us was a Papist. There were two gentlemen of that religion living in our town, at a handsome house called the Priory; but they had little to do with persons in my parents' humble walk of life, though of course my mother would dress Mrs. Weston's head as well as any other lady's. I forgot also to say that Mrs. Duval went out sometimes as ladies' nurse, and in that capacity had attended Mrs. Weston, who, however, lost her child. The Westons had a chapel in their house, in the old grounds of the Priory, and clergymen of their persuasion used to come over from my Lord Newburgh's of Slindon, or from Arundel, where there is another great Papist house; and one or two Roman Catholics—there were very few of them in our town—were buried in a part of the old gardens of the Priory, where a monks' burying place had been before Harry VIII.'s time.

The new gentleman was the first Papist to whom I had ever spoken; and as I trotted about the town with him, showing him the old gates, the church, and so forth, I remember saying to him, 'And have you burned any Protestants?'

'Oh, yes!' says he, giving a horrible grin, 'I have roasted several, and eaten them afterward.' And I shrank back from him and his pale grinning face, feeling once more that terror which had come over me when I first beheld him. He was a queer gentleman; he was amused by my simplicity and odd sayings. He was never tired of having me with him. He said I should be his little English master; and indeed he learned the language surprisingly quick, whereas poor Mme. de Saverne never understood a word of it.

She was very ill—pale, with a red spot on either cheek, sitting for whole hours in silence, and looking round frightened, as if a prey to some terror. I have seen my mother watching her and looking almost as scared as the countess herself. At times madame could not bear the crying of the child, and would order it away from her. At other times she would clutch it, cover it with cloaks, and lock her door, and herself into the chamber with her infant. She used to walk about the house of a night. I had a little room near mother's which I occupied during the holidays and on Saturdays and Sundays when I came over from Rye. I remember quite well waking up one night and hearing madame's voice at mother's door, crying out, 'Ursula, Ursula! quick! horses! I must go away. He is coming; I know he is coming!' And then there were remonstrances on mother's part, and madame's maid came out of her room with entreaties to her mistress to return. At the cry of the child the poor mother would rush away from whatever place she was in and hurry to the infant. Not that she loved it. At the next moment she would cast the child down on the bed, and go to the window again and look to the sea. For hours she sat at that window with a curtain twisted round her as if hiding from someone. Ah! how have I looked up at that window since and the light twinkling here! I wonder does the house remain yet? I don't like now to think of the passionate grief I have passed through as I looked up to yon glimmering lattice.

It was evident our poor visitor was in a deplorable condition.
The apothecary used to come and shake his head and order medicine. The medicine did little good. The sleeplessness continued. She was a prey to constant fever. She would make incoherent answers to questions put to her; laugh and weep at odd times and places; push her meals away from her though they were the best my poor mother could supply; order my grandfather to go and sit in the kitchen, and not have the impudence to sit down before her; coax and scold my mother by turns, and take her up very sharply when she rebuked me. Poor Mme. Duval was scared by her foster-sister. She, who ruled everybody, became humble before the poor crazy lady. I can see them both now, the lady in white, listless and silent as she would sit for hours, taking notice of no one, and mother watching her with terrified dark eyes.

The Chevalier de la Motte had his lodgings, and came and went between his house and ours. I thought he was the lady's cousin. He used to call himself her cousin; I did not know what our pastor M. Borel meant when he came to mother one day and said, 'Fi, donc, what a pretty business thou hast commenced, Mme. Denis—thou an elder's daughter of our Church!'

'What business?' says mother.

'That of harboring crime and sheltering iniquity,' says he, naming the crime, viz., No. VII. of the Decalogue.

Being a child, I did not then understand the word he used.
But as soon as he had spoken, mother, taking up a saucepan of soup, cries out, 'Get out of there, monsieur, all pastor as you are, or I will send this soup at thy ugly head and the saucepan afterward.' And she looked so fierce that I am not surprised the little man trotted off.

Shortly afterward grandfather comes home, looking almost as frightened as his commanding officer, M. Borel. Grandfather expostulated with his daughter-in-law. He was in a great agitation. He wondered how she could speak so to the pastor of the Church. 'All the town,' says he, 'is talking about you and this unhappy lady.'

'All the town is an old woman,' replies Mme. Duval, stamping her foot and twisting her mustache, I might say, almost,
'What? These white-beaks of French cry out because I receive my foster-sister? What? It is wrong to shelter a poor foolish dying woman? Oh, the cowards, the cowards! Listen, petit papa; if you hear a word said at the club against your bru, and do not knock the man down, I will.' And faith I think grandfather's bru would have kept her word.

I fear my own unlucky simplicity brought part of the opprobrium down upon my poor mother which she had now to suffer in our French colony; for one day a neighbor, Mme. Crochu by name, stepping in and asking, 'How is your boarder, and how is her cousin the count?'

'Mme. Clarisse is no better than before,' said I, shaking my head wisely, 'and the gentleman is not a count, and he is not her cousin, Mme. Crochu!'

'Oh, he is no relation?' says the mantuamaker. And that story was quickly told over the little town, and when we went to church next Sunday M. Borel preached a sermon which made all the congregation look to us, and poor mother sat boiling red like a lobster fresh out of the pot. I did not quite know what I had done; I know what mother was giving me for my pains when our poor patient entering the room, hearing, I suppose, the hissing of the stick (and never word from me; I used to bite a bullet and hold my tongue), rushed into the room, whipped the cane out of mother's hand, flung her to the other end of the room with a strength quite surprising, and clasped me in her arms and began pacing up and down the room, and glaring at mother. 'Strike your own child, monster, monster!' says the poor lady. 'Kneel down and ask pardon, or as sure as I am the queen I will order your head off!'

At dinner she ordered me to come and sit by her. 'Bishop!' she said to grandfather, 'my lady of honor has been naughty. She whipped the little prince with a scorpion. I took it from her hand. Duke! if she does it again, there is a sword; I desire you to cut the countess' head off!' And then she took a carving knife and waved it, and gave one of her laughs, which always set poor mother a crying. She used to call us dukes and princes—I don't know what—poor soul. It was the Chevalier de la Motte whom she generally styled duke, holding out her hand and saying, 'Kneel, sir, kneel, and kiss our royal hand.' And M. de la Motte would kneel with a sad, sad face, and go through this hapless ceremony. As for grandfather, who was very bald, and without his wig, being one evening below her window culling a salad in his garden, she beckoned him to her smiling, and when the poor old man came, she upset a dish of tea over his bald pate, and said, 'I appoint you and anoint you Bishop of St. Denis!'

The woman Martha, who had been the companion of the Countess de Saverne in her unfortunate flight from home—I believe that since the birth of her child the poor lady had never been in her right senses at all—broke down under the ceaseless watching and care her mistress' condition necessitated, and I have no doubt found her duties yet more painful and difficult when a second mistress, and a very harsh, imperious, and jealous one, was set over her in the person of worthy Mme. Duval. My mother was for ordering everybody who would submit to her orders, and entirely managing the affairs of all those whom she loved. She put the mother to bed, and the baby in her cradle; she prepared food for both of them, dressed one and the other with an equal affection, and loved that unconscious mother and child with a passionate devotion. But she loved her own way, was jealous of all who came between her and the objects of her love, and no doubt led her subordinates an uncomfortable life.

Three months of Mme. Duval tired out the countess' Alsatian maid Martha. She revolted and said she would go home. Mother said she was an ungrateful wretch, but was delighted to get rid of her. She always averred the woman stole articles of dress and trinkets and laces belonging to her mistress before she left us; and in an evil hour this wretched Martha went away. I believe she really loved her mistress, and would have loved the child, had my mother's rigid arms not pushed her from its cot. Poor little innocent, in what tragic gloom did thy life begin! But an unseen Power was guarding that helpless innocence; and sure a good angel watched it in its hour of danger.

So Mme. Duval turned Martha out of her tent as Sarah thrust out Hagar. Are women pleased after doing these pretty tricks? Your ladyships know best. Mme. D. not only thrust out Martha, but flung stones after Martha all her life. She went away, not blameless perhaps, but wounded to the quick with ingratitude which had been shown to her, and a link in that mysterious chain of destiny which was binding all these people—me the boy of seven years old; yonder little speechless infant of as many months; that poor wandering lady bereft of reason; that dark inscrutable companion of hers who brought evil with him wherever he came.

From Dungeness to Boulogne is but six-and-thirty miles, and our boats, when war was over, were constantly making journeys there. Even in war times the little harmless craft left each other alone, and, I suspect, carried on a great deal of peaceful and fraudulent trade together. Grandfather had share of a ‘fishing’ boat with one Thomas Gregson of Lydd. When Martha was determined to go one of our boats was ready to take her to the place from whence she came, or transfer her to a French boat, which would return into its own harbor.* She was carried back to Boulogne and landed. I know the day full well from a document now before me, of which the dismal writing and signing were occasioned by that very landing.

As she stepped out from the pier (a crowd of people, no doubt, tearing the poor wretch’s slender luggage from her to carry it to the customs) almost the first person on whom the woman’s eyes fell was her master the Count de Saverne. He had actually only reached the place on that very day, and walked the pier, looking toward England, as many a man has done from the same spot, when he saw the servant of his own wife come up the side of the pier.

He rushed to her, as she started back screaming and almost fainting, but the crowd of beggars behind her prevented her retreat. ‘The child—does the child live?’ asked the poor count, in the German tongue, which both spoke.

The child was well. Thank God, thank God! The poor father’s heart was freed from that terror, then! I can fancy the gentleman saying, ‘Your mistress is at Winchelsea, with her foster-sister?’

‘Yes, M. le Comte.’

‘The Chevalier de la Motte is always at Winchelsea?’

‘Ye—oh, no, no, M. le Comte!’

‘Silence, liar! He made the journey with her. They stopped at the same inns. M. le Brun, merchant, aged thirty-four; his sister, Mme. Dubois, aged twenty-four, with a female infant in her arms, and a maid, left this port, on the 20th April, in the English fishing boat Mary of Rye. Before embarking they slept at the Ecu de France. I knew I should find them.’

‘By all that is sacred, I never left madame once during the voyage!’

‘Never till to-day? Enough. How was the fishing boat called which brought you to Boulogne?’

One of the boat’s crew was actually walking behind the unhappy gentleman at the time, with some packet which Martha had left in it.† It seemed as if fate was determined

---

*There were points for which our boats used to make, and meet the French boats when not disturbed, and do a good deal more business than I could then understand.

†I had this from the woman herself, whom we saw when we paid our visit to Lorraine and Alsace in 1814.
upon suddenly and swiftly bringing the criminal to justice, and under the avenging sword of the friend he had betrayed. He bade the man follow him to the hotel. There should be a good drink-money for him.

‘Does he treat her well?’ asked the poor gentleman as he and the maid walked on.

‘Dame! No mother can be more gentle than he is with her!’ Where Martha erred was in not saying that her mistress was utterly deprived of reason, and had been so almost since the child’s birth. She owned that she had attended her lady to the cathedral when the countess and the infant were christened, and that M. de la Motte was also present. ‘He has taken body and soul too,’ no doubt the miserable gentleman thought.

He happened to alight at the very hotel where the fugitives of whom he was in search had had their quarters four months before (so that for two months at least poor M. de Saverne must have lain ill at Nanciat the commencement of his journey). The boatman, the luggage people, and Martha the servant followed the count to this hotel; and the femme-de-chambre remembered how Mme. Dubois and her brother had been at the hotel—a poor sick lady, who sat up talking the whole night. Her brother slept in the right wing across the court. Monsieur has the lady’s room. How that child did cry! See, the windows look on the port. ‘Yes, this was the lady’s room.’

‘And the child lay on which side?’

‘On that side.’

M. de Saverne looked at the place which the woman pointed out, stooped his head toward the pillow, and cried as if his heart would break. The fisherman’s tears rolled down too over his brown face and hands. _Le pauvre homme, le pauvre homme!_

‘Come into my sitting room with me,’ he said to the fisherman. The man followed him and shut the door.

His burst of feeling was now over. He became entirely calm.

‘You know the house from which this woman came, at Winchelsea, in England?’

‘Yes.’

‘You took a gentleman and a lady thither?’

‘Yes.’

‘You remember the man?’

‘Perfectly.’

‘For thirty louis will you go to sea to-night, take a passenger, and deliver a letter to M. de la Motte?’

The man agreed; and I take out from my secretary that letter, in its tawny ink of fifty years' date, and read it with a strange interest always:

To the Chevalier François Joseph de la Motte, at Winchelsea, in England.

I knew I should find you. I never doubted where you were. But for a sharp illness which I made at Nancy I should have been with you two months earlier. After what has occurred between us, I know this invitation will be to you as a command, and that you will hasten as you did to my rescue from the English bayonets at Hastenbeck. Between us, M. le Chevalier, it is to life or death. I depend upon you to communicate this to no one, and to follow the messenger, who will bring you to me.

COUNT DE SAVERNE.

This letter was brought to our house one evening as we sat in the front shop. I had the child on my knee, which would have no other playfellow but me. The countess was pretty quiet that evening—the night calm, and the windows open. Grandfather was reading his book. The countess and M. de la Motte were at cards, though, poor thing, she could scarce play for ten minutes at a time; and there comes a knock, at which grandfather puts down his book.*

‘All’s well,’ says he. ‘Entrez. Comment! c’est vous, Bidois?’

‘Oui, c’est bien moi, patron?’ says M. Bidois, a great fellow in boots and petticoat, with an eelskin cue hanging down to his heels. ‘C’est là le petit du pauv’ Jean Louis? Est i genti le pti patron!’

And as he looks at me, he rubs a hand across his nose.

And this moment Mme. la Comtesse gave one, two, three screams, a laugh, and cries: ‘Ah, c’est mon mari qui revient de la guerre. Il est là—à la croisée. Bon jour, M. le Comte! Bon jour. Vous avez une petite fille bien laide, bien laide, que je n’aime pas du tout, pas du tout, pas du tout! He is there! I saw him at the window. There! there! hide me from him. He will kill me, he will kill me!’ she cried.

‘Calmez-vous, Clarisse,’ says the chevalier, who was weary, no doubt, of the poor lady’s endless outcries and follies.

‘Calmez-vous, ma fille!’ sings out mother from the inner room, where she was washing.

‘Ah, monsieur is the Chevalier de la Motte?’ says Bidois. ‘Après monsieur,’ says the chevalier, looking haughtily up from the cards.

‘In that case, I have a letter for M. le Chevalier.’ And the sailor handed to the Chevalier de la Motte that letter which I have translated, the ink of which was black and wet then, though now it is sere and faded.

This chevalier had faced death and danger in a score of dare-devil expeditions. At the game of steel and lead there was no cooler performer. He put the letter which he had received quietly into his pocket, finished his game with the countess, and telling Bidois to follow him to his lodgings, took leave of the company. I dare say the poor countess built up a house with the cards, and took little more notice. Mother, going to close the shutters, said, 'It was droll, that little man, the friend to Bidois, was still standing in the street.' You see, we had all sorts of droll friends. Seafaring men, speaking a jargon of English, French, Dutch, were constantly dropping in upon us. Dear Heaven, when I think in what a company I have lived, and what a galère I rowed in, is it not a wonder that I did not finish where some of my friends did?

* There was a particular knock, as I learned later, in use among grandpapa’s private friends, and M. Bidois no doubt had this signal.

I made a drôle de métier at this time. I was set by grandfather to learn his business. Our apprentice taught me the commencement of the noble art of wig-weaving. As soon as I was tall enough to stand to a gentleman's nose I was promised to be promoted to be a shaver. I trotted on mother's errands with her handboxes, and what not; and I was made dry nurse to poor madame's baby, who, as I said, loved me most of all in the house; and who would put her little dimpled hands out and crow with delight to see me. The first day I went out with this little baby, in a little wheel chair mother got for her, the town boys made rare fun of me, and I had to fight one, as poor little Agnes sat sucking her little thumb in her chair, I suppose; and while the battle was going on, who should come up but Dr. Barnard, the English rector of St. Philip's, who lent us French Protestants the nave of his church for our service, while our tumble-down old church was being mended. Dr. Barnard (for a reason which I did not know at that time, but which I am compelled to own now was a good one) did not like grandfather, nor mother, nor our family. You may be sure our people abused him in return. He was called a haughty priest—a villain beeg-veeg, mother used to say, in her French-English. And perhaps one of the causes of her dislike to him was that his big vig—a fine cauliflower it was—was powdered at another barber's. Well, while the battle royal was going on between me and Tom Caffin (dear heart! how I remember the fellow, though—let me see—it is fifty-four years since we punched each other's little noses), Dr. Barnard walks up to us boys and stops the fighting. 'You little rogues! I'll have you all put in the stocks and whipped by my beadle,' says the doctor, who was a magistrate too: 'as for this little French barber, he is always in mischief.'

'They laughed at me and called me "dry-nurse," and wanted to upset the little cart, sir, and I wouldn't bear it. And it's my duty to protect a poor child that can't help itself,' said I very stoutly. 'Her mother is ill. Her nurse has run away, and she has nobody—nobody to protect her but me—and "Notre Père qui est aux cieux"; and I held up my little hands as grandfather used to do; 'and if those boys hurt the child I will fight for her.'

The doctor rubbed his hand across his eyes, and felt in his pocket and gave me a dollar.

'And come to see us all at the rectory, child,' Mrs. Barnard says, who was with the doctor; and she looked at the little baby that was in its cot and said, 'Poor thing, poor thing!'

And the doctor, turning round to the English boys, still holding me by the hand, said, 'Mind, all you boys! If I hear of you being such cowards again as to strike this little lad for doing his duty I will have you whipped by my beadle as sure as my name is Thomas Barnard. Shake hands, you Thomas Caffin, with the French boy;' and I said, 'I would shake hands or fight it out whenever Tom Caffin liked' ; and so took my place as pony again, and pulled my little cart down Sandgate.

These stories got about among the townspeople and fishermen and seafaring folk, I suppose, and the people of our little circle; and they were the means, God help me, of bringing me in those very early days a legacy which I have still. You see, the day after Bidois, the French fisherman, paid us a visit, as I was pulling my little cart up the hill to a little farmer's house where grandfather and a partner of his had some pigeons, of which I was very fond as a boy, I met a little dark man whose face I cannot at all recall to my mind, but who spoke French and German to me like grandfather and mother. 'That is the child of Mme. von Zabern?' says he, trembling very much.

'Ja, Herr,' says the little boy. . .

O Agnes, Agnes! How the years roll away. What strange events have befallen us; what passionate griefs have we had to suffer; what a merciful Heaven has protected us since that day when your father knelt over the little car in which his child lay sleeping. I have the picture in my mind now. I see a winding road leading down to one of the gates of our town; the blue marsh land, and yonder, across the marsh, Rye towers and gables; a great silver sea stretching beyond, and that dark man's figure stooping and looking at the child asleep. He never kissed the infant or touched her. I remember it woke smiling and held out its little arms, and he turned away with a sort of groan.

Bidois, the French fisherman I spoke of as having been to see us on the night before, came up here with another companion, an Englishman, I think.

'Ah! we seek for you everywhere, M. le Comte,' says he. 'The tide serves and it is full time.'

'M. le Chevalier is on board?' says the Count de Saverne.

'Il est bien là,' says the fisherman. And they went down the hill through the gate without turning to look back.

Mother was quite quiet and gentle all that day. It seemed as if something scared her. The poor countess prattled and laughed, or cried in her unconscious way. But grandfather at evening prayer that night making the exposition rather long, motherstamped her foot and said, 'Assez bavardé comme ça, mon père,' and sank back in her chair with her apron over her face.

She remained all the next day very silent, crying often, and reading in our great German Bible. She was kind to me that day. I remember her saying, in her deep voice, 'Thou art a brave boy, Denikin.' It was seldom she patted my head so softly. That night our patient was very wild, and laughing a great deal, and singing so that people would stop in the streets to listen.

Dr. Barnard again met me that day dragging my little carriage, and he fetched me into the rectory for the first time, and gave me cake and wine and the book of the 'Arabian Nights,' and the ladies admired the little baby, and said it was a pity it was a little Papist, and the doctor hoped I was not going to turn Papist, and I said, 'Oh, never.' Neither mother nor I liked that darkling Roman Catholic clergyman who was fetched over from our neighbors at the Priory by M. de la Motte. The chevalier was very firm himself in that religion. I little thought then that I was to see him on a day when his courage and his faith were both to have an awful trial.

... I was reading then in this fine book of M. Galland which the doctor had given me. I had no orders to go to bed, strange to say, and I dare say was peeping into the cave of the forty thieves along with Master Ali Baba, when I heard the clock whirring previously to striking twelve, and steps coming rapidly up our empty street.

Mother started up looking quite haggard, and undid the bolt of the door.

'C'est lui!' says she, with her eyes starting, and the Chevalier de la Motte came in looking as white as a corpse.

Poor Mme. de Saverne upstairs, awakened by the striking clock perhaps, began to sing overhead, and the chevalier gave a great start, looking more ghastly than before, as my mother with an awful face looked at him.
Il l’a voulu,’ says M. de la Motte, hanging down his head; and again poor madame’s crazy voice began to sing.

REPORT.

On the 27th June of this year, 1769, the Comte de Saverne arrived at Boulogne-sur-Mer, and lodged at the Ecu de France, where also was staying M. le Marquis du Quesne Menneville, Chef d’Escadre of the Naval Armies of his Majesty. The Comte de Saverne was previously unknown to the Marquis du Quesne, but recalling to M. du Quesne’s remembrance the fact that his illustrious ancestor the Admiral Duquesne professed the Reformed religion, as did M. de Saverne himself, M. de Saverne entertained the Marquis du Quesne to be his friend in a rencontre which deplorable circumstances rendered unavoidable.

At the same time, M. de Saverne stated to M. le Marquis du Quesne the cause of his quarrel with the Chevalier Francis Joseph de la Motte, late officer of the regiment of Soubise, at present residing in England in the town of Winchelsea, in the county of Sussex. The statement made by the Comte de Saverne was such as to convince M. du Quesne of the count’s right to exact a reparation from the Chevalier de la Motte.

A boat was dispatched on the night of the 29th June, with a messenger bearing the note of M. le Comte de Saverne. And in this boat M. de la Motte returned from England.

The undersigned Comte de Bérigny, in garrison at Boulogne, and an acquaintance of M. de la Motte, consented to serve as his witness in the meeting with M. de Saverne.

The meeting took place at seven o’clock in the morning, on the sands at half a league from the port of Boulogne, and the weapons chosen were pistols. Both gentlemen were perfectly calm and collected, as one might expect from officers distinguished in the king’s service, who had faced the enemies of France as comrades together.

Before firing, M. le Chevalier de la Motte advanced four steps, and holding his pistol down and laying his hand on his heart, he said, ‘I swear on the faith of a Christian, and the honor of a gentleman, that I am innocent of the charge laid against me by M. de Saverne.’

The Comte de Saverne said: ‘M. le Chevalier de la Motte, I have made no charge; and if I had, a lie costs you nothing.’

M. de la Motte, saluting the witnesses courteously, and with grief rather than anger visible upon his countenance, returned to his line on the sand which was marked out as the place where he was to stand, at a distance of ten paces from his adversary.

At the signal being given both fired simultaneously. The ball of M. de Saverne grazed M. de la Motte’s side curl, while his ball struck M. de Saverne in the right breast. M. de Saverne stood a moment, and fell.

The seconds, the surgeon, and M. de la Motte advanced toward the fallen gentleman, and M. de la Motte, holding up his hand, again said,—‘I take Heaven to witness the person is innocent.’

The Comte de Saverne seemed to be about to speak. He lifted himself from the sand, supporting himself on one arm; but all he said was, ‘You, you——’ and a great issue of blood rushed from his throat, and he fell back, and, with a few convulsions, died.

(Signed)

MARQUIS DU QUESNE MENNEVILLE,
Chef d’Escadre aux Armées Navales du Roy.
COMTE DE BÉRIGNY,
Brigadier de Cavalerie.

SURGEON’S REPORT.

I, Jean Baptiste Drouot, Surgeon-Major of the Regiment Royal Cravate, in garrison at Boulogne-sur-Mer, certify that I was present at the meeting which ended so lamentably. The death of the gentleman who succumbed was immediate; the ball, passing to the right of the middle of the breast bone, penetrated the lung and the large artery supplying it with blood, and caused death by immediate suffocation.

CHAPTER IV.

OUT OF THE DEPTHS.

That last night which he was to pass upon earth M. de Saverne spent in a little tavern in Winchelsea, frequented by fishing people, and known to Bidois, who, even during the war, was in the constant habit of coming to England upon errands in which Monsieur Grandpapa was very much interested—precentor, elder, perruquier as he was.
The Comte de Saverne had had some talk with the fisherman during the voyage from Boulogne, and more conversation took place on this last night, when the count took Bidois partly into his confidence; and without mentioning the precise cause of his quarrel with M. de la Motte, said that it was inevitable; that the man was a villain who ought not to be allowed to pollute the earth; and that no criminal was ever more righteously executed than this chevalier would be on the morrow, when it was agreed that the two were to meet.

The meeting would have taken place on that very night, but M. de la Motte demanded, as indeed he had a right to do, some hours for the settlement of his own affairs; and preferred to fight on French ground rather than English, as the survivor of the quarrel would be likely to meet with very rough treatment in this country.

La Motte betook himself then to arranging his papers. As for the Count de Saverne, he said all his dispositions were made. A dowry—that which his wife brought—would go to her child. His own property was devised to his own relations, and he could give the child nothing. He had only a few pieces in his purse, and, 'Tenez,' says he, 'this watch. Should anything befall me, I desire it may be given to the little boy who saved my—that is, her child.' And the voice of M. le Comte broke as he said these words, and the tears ran over his fingers. And the seaman wept too as he told the story to me years after, nor were some of mine wanting. I think, for that poor heartbroken, wretched man, writhing in helpless agony, as the hungry sand drank his blood. Assuredly, the guilt of that blood was on thy head, Francis de la Motte.

The watch is ticking on the table before me as I write. It has been my companion for half a century. I remember my childish delight when Bidois brought it to me, and told my mother the tale of the meeting of the two gentlemen.

'You see her condition,' M. de la Motte said to my mother at this time. 'We are separated forever, as hopelessly as though one or other were dead. My hand slew her husband. Perhaps my fault destroyed her reason. I transmit misfortunes to those I love and would serve. Shall I marry her? I will if you think I can serve her. As long as a guinea remains to me, I will halve it with her. I have but very few left now. My fortune has crumbled under my hands, as have my friendships, my once bright prospects, my ambitions. I am a doomed man: somehow, I drag down those who love me into my doom.'

And so indeed there was a Cain mark, as it were, on this unhappy man. He did bring wreck and ruin on those who loved him. He was as a lost soul, I somehow think, whose tortures had begun already. Predestined to evil, to crime, to gloom; but now and again someone took pity upon this poor wretch, and among those who pitied him was my stern mother.

And here I may relate how it happened that I 'saved' the child, for which act poor M. de Saverne rewarded me. Bidois no doubt told that story to M. le Comte in the course of their gloomy voyage. Mrs. Martha, the countess' attendant, had received or taken leave of absence one night, after putting the child and the poor lady, who was no better than a child, to bed. I went to my bed, and to sleep as boys sleep; and I forget what business called away my mother likewise, but when she came back to look for her poor Biche and the infant in its cradle—both were gone.

I have seen the incomparable Siddons, in the play, as, white and terrified, she passed through the darkened hall after King Duncan's murder. My mother's face wore a look of terror to the full as tragical, when, starting up from my boyish sleep, I sat up in my bed and saw her. She was almost beside herself with terror. The poor insane lady and her child were gone—who could say where? Into the marshes—into the sea—into the darkness—it was impossible to say whither the countess had fled.

'We must get up, my boy, and find them,' says mother in a hoarse voice, and I was sent over to Mr. Bliss', the grocer, in East Street, where the chevalier lived, and where I found him sitting (with two priests, by the way, guests, no doubt, of Mr. Weston at the Priory), and all these, and mother, on her side, with me following her, went out to look for the fugitives.

We went by pairs, taking different roads. Mother's was the right one, as it appeared, for we had not walked many minutes when we saw a white figure coming toward us, glimmering out of the dark, and heard a voice singing.

'Ah, mon Dieu!' says mother, and 'Gott sey dank,' and I know not what exclamations of gratitude and relief. It was the voice of the countess.

As we came up, she knew us with our light, and began to imitate, in her crazy way, the cry of the watchman, whom the poor sleepless soul had often heard under the windows. 'Past twelve o'clock, a starlight night!' she sang, and gave one of her sad laughs.

When we came up to her we found her in a white wrapper, her hair flowing down her back and over her poor pale face, and again she sang, 'Past twelve o'clock.'
The child was not with her. Mother trembled in every limb. The lantern shook so in her hand I thought she would drop it. She put it down on the ground. She took her shawl off her back, and covered the poor lady with it, who smiled in her childish way, and said, 'C'est bon; c'est chaud ça; ah! que c'est bien!'

As I chanced to look down at the lady's feet, I saw one of them was naked. Mother, herself in a dreadful agitation, embraced and soothed Mme. de Saverne. 'Tell me, my angel, tell me, my love, where is the child?' says mother, almost fainting. 'The child, what child? That little brat who always cries? I know nothing about children,' says the poor thing. 'Take me to my bed this moment, madam! How dare you bring me into the street, with naked feet!'

'Where have you been walking, my dear?' says poor mother, trying to soothe her.

'I have been to Great Saverne. I wore a domino. I knew the coachman quite well, though he was muffled up all but his nose. I was presented to Monseigneur the Cardinal. I made him such a courtesy—like this. Oh, my foot hurts me!'

She often rambled about this ball and play, and hummed snatches of tunes and little phrases of dialogue which she may have heard there. Indeed, I believe it was the only play and ball the poor thing ever saw in her life; her brief life, her wretched life. 'Tis pitiful to think how unhappy it was. When I recall it, it tears my heart-strings somehow, as it doth to see a child in pain.

As she held up the poor bleeding foot I saw that the edge of her dress was all wet, and covered with sand.

'Mother, mother!' said I, 'she has been to the sea!'

'Have you been to the sea, Clarisse?' asks mother.

'J'ai été au bal; j'ai dansé; j'ai chanté. J'ai bien reconnu mon cocher. J'ai été au bal chez le cardinal. But you must not tell M. de Saverne. Oh, no, you mustn't tell him!'

A sudden thought came to me. And, whenever I remember it, my heart is full of thankfulness to the gracious Giver of all good thoughts. Madame, of whom I was not afraid, and who sometimes was amused by my prattle, would now and then take a walk accompanied by Martha, her maid, who held the infant, and myself, who liked to draw it in its little carriage. We used to walk down to the shore, and there was a rock there, on which the poor lady would sit for hours.

'You take her home, mother,' says I, all in a tremble. 'You give me the lantern, and I'll go—I'll go——' I was off before I said where. Down I went, through Westgate; down I ran along the road toward the place I guessed at. When I had gone a few hundred yards I saw in the road something white. It was the countess' slipper, that she had left there. I knew she had gone that way.

I got down to the shore, running, running with all my little might. The moon had risen by this time, shining gloriously over a great silver sea. A tide of silver was pouring in over the sand. Yonder was that rock where we often had sat. The infant was sleeping on it under the stars, unconscious. He, who loves little children, had watched over it... I scarce can see the words as I write them down. My little baby was waking. She had known nothing of the awful sea coming nearer with each wave; but she knew me as I came, and smiled, and warbled a little infant welcome. I took her up in my arms, and trotted home with my pretty burden. As I paced up the hill M. de la Motte and one of the French clergymen met me. By ones and twos the other searchers after my little wanderer came home from their quest. She was laid in her little crib, and never knew, until years later, the danger from which she had been rescued.

My adventures became known in our town, and I made some acquaintances who were very kind to me, and were the means of advancing me in after life. I was too young to understand much what was happening round about me; but now, if the truth must be told, I must confess that old grandfather, besides his business of perruquier, which you will say is no very magnificent trade, followed others which were far less reputable. What do you say, for instance, of a Church elder, who lends money à la petite semaine, and at great interest? The fishermen, the market-people, nay, one or two farmers and gentlemen round about, were beholden to grandfather for supplies, and they came to him to be shaved in more ways than one. No good came out of his gains, as I shall presently tell; but meanwhile his hands were ever stretched out to claw other folks' money toward himself; and it must be owned that madame sa bru loved a purse too, and was by no means scrupulous as to the way of filling it. M. le Chevalier de la Motte was free-handed and grand in his manner. He paid a pension, I know not how much, for the maintenance of poor Mme. de Saverne. He had brought her to the strait in which she was, poor thing. Had he not worked on her she never would have left her religion; she never would have fled from her husband; that fatal duel would never have occurred; right or wrong, he was the cause of her calamity, and he would make it as light as it might be. I know how, for years, extravagant and embarrassed as he was, he yet supplied means for handsomely maintaining the little Agnes when she was presently left an orphan in the world, when mother and father both were dead, and her relatives at home disowned her.

The ladies of Barr, Agnes’ aunts, totally denied that the infant was their brother’s child, and refused any contribution toward her maintenance. Her mother’s family equally disavowed her. They had been taught the same story, and I suppose we believe willingly enough what we wish to believe. The poor lady was guilty. Her child had been born in her husband’s absence. When his return was announced she fled from her home, not daring to face him; and the unhappy Count de Saverne died by the pistol of the man who had already robbed him of his honor. La Motte had to bear this obloquy, or only protest against it by letters from England. He could not go over to Lorraine, where he was plunged in debt. ‘At least, Duval,’ said he to me when I shook hands with him, and with all my heart forgave him, ‘mad, and reckless as I have been, and fatal to all whom I loved, I have never allowed the child to want, and have supported her in comfort when I was myself almost without a meal.’ A bad man no doubt this was, and yet not utterly wicked; a great criminal who paid an awful penalty. Let us be humble, who have erred too; and thankful, if we have a hope that we have found mercy.

I believe it was some braggart letter which La Motte wrote to a comrade in M. de Vaux’s camp, and in which he boasted of making the conversion of a petite Protestante at Strasbourg, which came to the knowledge of poor M. de Saverne, hastened his return home, and brought about this dreadful end. La Motte owned as much, indeed, in the last interview I ever had with him.

Who told Mme. de Saverne of her husband’s death? It was not for years after that I myself (unlucky chatterbox, whose tongue was always blabbing) knew what had happened. My mother thought that she must have overheard Bidois the boatman, who told the whole story over his glass of Geneva in our parlor. The countess’ chamber was overhead, and the door left open. The poor thing used to be very angry at the notion of a locked door, and since that awful escapade to the seashore my mother slept in her room, or a servant whom she liked pretty well supplied mother’s place.

In her condition the dreadful event affected her but little;
and we never knew that she was aware of it until one evening when it happened that a neighbor, one of our French people of Rye, was talking over the tea table, and telling us of a dreadful thing he had seen on Penenden Heath as he was coming home. He there saw a woman burned at the stake for the murder of her husband. The story is in the Gentleman's Magazine for the year 1769, and that will settle pretty well the date of the evening when our neighbor related the horri-bile tale to us.

Poor Mme. de Saverne (who had a very grand air, and was perfectly like a lady) said quite simply, 'In this case, my good Ursule, I shall be burned too. For you know I was the cause of my husband being killed. M. le Chevalier went and killed him in Corsica.' And she looked round with a little smile, and nodded, and arranged her white dress with her slim hot hands.

When the poor thing spoke the chevalier sank back as if he had been shot himself.

'Good-night, neighbor Marion,' groans mother; 'she is very bad to-night. Come to bed, my dear, come to bed.'
And the poor thing followed mother, courtesying very finely to the company, and saying, quite softly, 'Oui, oui, oui, they will burn me; they will burn me.'

This idea seized upon her mind, and never left it. Mme.
la Comtesse passed a night of great agitation, talking incessantly. Mother and her maid were up with her all night. All night long we could hear her songs, her screams, her terrible laughter... Oh, pitiful was thy lot in this world, poor guiltless, harmless lady. In thy brief years how little happiness! For thy marriage portion only gloom and terror and submission, and captivity. The awful Will above us ruled it so. Poor frightened spirit! it has woke under serener skies now, and passed out of reach of our terrors and temptations and troubles.

At my early age I could only be expected to obey my elders and parents, and to consider all things were right which were done round about me. Mother's cuffs on the head I received without malice, and if the truth must be owned, had not seldom to submit to the major operation, which my grandfather used to perform with a certain rod which he kept in a locked cupboard, and accompany with long wearisome sermons between each cut or two of his favorite instrument. These good people, as I gradually began to learn, bore but an indifferent reputation in the town which they inhabited, and were neither liked by the French of their own colony nor by the English among whom we dwelt. Of course, being a simple little fellow,
I honored my father and mother as became me—my grandfather and mother, that is—father being dead some years.

Grandfather, I knew, had a share in a fishing boat, as numbers of people had both at Rye and Winchelsea. Stokes, our fisherman, took me out once or twice, and I liked the sport very much; but it appeared that I ought to have said nothing about the boat and the fishing—for one night when we pulled out only a short way beyond a rock which we used to call the Bull Rock, from a pair of horns which stuck out of the water, and there were hailed by my old friend Bidois, who had come from Boulogne in his lugger—and then— Well then, I was going to explain the whole matter artlessly to one of our neighbors who happened to step in to supper, when grandpapa (who had made a grace of five minutes long before taking the dish-cover off) fetched me a slap across the face which sent me reeling off my perch. And the chevalier, who was supping with us, only laughed at my misfortune.

This being laughed at somehow affected me more than the blows. I was used to those, from grandfather and mother too; but when people once had been kind to me I could not bear a different behavior from them. And this gentleman certainly was. He improved my French very much, and used to laugh at my blunders and bad pronunciation. He took a good deal of pains with me when I was at home, and made me speak French like a little gentleman.

In a very brief time he learned English himself, with a droll accent, to be sure, but so as to express himself quite intelligibly. His headquarters were at Winchelsea, though he would frequently be away at Deal, Dover, Canterbury, even London. He paid mother a pension for little Agnes, who grew apace, and was the most winning child I ever set eyes on. I remember, as well as yesterday, the black dress which was made for her after her poor mother's death, her pale cheeks, and the great solemn eyes gazing out from under the black curling ringlets which fell over her forehead and face.

Why do I make zigzag journeys? 'Tis the privilege of old age to be garrulous, and its happiness to remember early days. As I sink back in my armchair, safe and sheltered post tot discrimina, and happier than it has been the lot of most fellow-sinners to be, the past comes back to me—the stormy past, the strange unhappy yet happy past—and I look at it scared and astonished sometimes; as huntsmen look at the gaps and ditches over which they have leapt, and wonder how they are alive.

My good fortune in rescuing that little darling child caused the chevalier to be very kind to me; and when he was with us I used to hang on to the skirts of his coat and prattle for hours together, quite losing all fear of him. Except my kind namesake the captain and admiral this was the first gentleman I ever met in intimacy—a gentleman with many a stain, nay, crime, to reproach him; but not all lost, I hope and pray. I own to having a kindly feeling toward that fatal man. I see myself a child prattling at his coat-skirts, and trotting along our roads and marshes with him. I see him with his sad pale face—and a kind of blighting look he had—looking at that unconscious lady, at that little baby. My friends the Neapolitans would have called his an evil eye, and exorcised it accordingly. A favorite walk we had was to a house about a mile out of Winchelsea, where a grazing farmer lived. My delight then was to see not his cattle, but his pigeons, of which he had a good stock, of croppers, pouters, runts, and turbits; and among these I was told there were a sort of pigeons called carriers, which would fly for prodigious distances, returning from the place to which they were taken though it were ever so distant to that where they lived and were bred.

While I was at Mr. Perreau's one of these pigeons actually came in flying from the sea, as it appeared to me; and Perreau looked at it, and fondled it, and said to the chevalier, 'There is nothing. It is to be at the old place.' On which M. le Chevalier only said, 'C'est bien;' and as we walked away told me all he knew about pigeons, which I dare say was no great knowledge.

Why did he say there was nothing? I asked in the innocence of my prattle. The chevalier told me that these birds sometimes brought messages, written on a little paper, and tied under their wings, and that Perreau said there was nothing because there was nothing.

'Oh, then! he sometimes does have messages with his birds?' The chevalier shrugged his shoulder, and took a great pinch out of his fine snuffbox. 'What did papa Duval do to you the other day when you began to talk too fast?' says he. 'Learn to hold thy little tongue, Denis, mon garçon. If thou livest a little longer, and tellst all thou seest, the Lord help thee!' And I suppose our conversation ended here and he strode home, and I trotted after him.

I narrate these things occurring in childhood by the help of one or two marks which have been left behind—as the ingenious boy found his way home by the pebbles which he dropped along his line of march. Thus I happen to know the year when poor Mme. de Saverne must have been ill by referring to the date of the execution of the woman whom our neighbor saw burned on Penenden Heath. Was it days, was it weeks after this that Mme. de Saverne’s illness ended as all our illnesses will end one day?

During the whole course of her illness, whatever its length may have been, those priests from Slindon (or from Mr. Weston’s, the Popish gentleman’s at the Priory) were constantly in our house, and I suppose created a great scandal among the Protestants of the town. M. de la Motte showed an extraordinary zeal in this business; and, sinner as he was, certainly was a most devout sinner, according to his persuasion. I do not remember, or was not cognizant, when the end came; but I remember my astonishment as, passing by her open chamber door, I saw candles lighted before her bed, and some of those clergy watching there, and the Chevalier de la Motte kneeling in the passage in an attitude of deep contrition and grief.

On that last day there was, as it appeared, a great noise and disturbance round our house. The people took offense at the perpetual coming in and out of the priest; and on the very night when the coffin was to be taken from our house, and the clergymen were performing the last services there, the windows of the room where the poor lady lay were broken in by a great volley of stones, and a roaring mob shouting, ‘No Popery; down with priests!’

Grandfather lost all courage at these threatening demonstrations, and screamed out at his brus for bringing all this persecution and danger upon him. ‘Silence, miserable!’ says she. ‘Go sit in the back kitchen, and count your money bags!’ She, at least, did not lose her courage.

M. de la Motte, though not frightened, was much disturbed. The matter might be very serious. I did not know at the time how furiously angry our townspeople were with my parents for harboring a Papist. Had they known that the lady was a converted Protestant they would, doubtless, have been more violent still.

We were in a manner besieged in our house; the garrison being—the two priests in much terror; my grandfather, under the bed for what I know, or somewhere where he would be equally serviceable; my mother and the chevalier, with their wits about them; and little Denis Duval, no doubt very much in the way. When the poor lady died it was thought advisable to send her little girl out of the way; and Mrs. Weston at the Priory took her in, who belonged, as has before been said, to the ancient faith.
We looked out with no little alarm for the time when the hearse should come to take the poor lady's body away; for the people would not leave the street, and barricaded either end of it, having perpetrated no actual violence beyond the smashing of the windows as yet, but ready, no doubt, for more mischief.

Calling me to him, M. de la Motte said, 'Denis, thou rememberest about the carrier pigeon the other day with nothing under his wing?' I remembered, of course.

'Thou shalt be my carrier pigeon. Thou shalt carry no letter, but a message. I can trust thee now with a secret.' And I kept it, and will tell it now that the people are quite out of danger from that piece of intelligence, as I can promise you.

'You know Mr. Weston's house?' Know the house where Agnes was—the best house in the town? Of course I did. He named eight or ten houses besides Weston's at which I was to go and say, 'The mackerel are coming in. Come as many of you as can.' And I went to the houses, and said the words; and when the people said, 'Where?' I said, 'Opposite our house,' and so went on.

The last and handsomest house (I had never been in it before) was Mr. Weston's at the Priory; and there I went and called to see him. And I remember Mrs. Weston was walking up and down a gallery over the hall with a little crying child who would not go to sleep.

'Agnes, Agnes!' says I, and that baby was quiet in a minute, smiling and crowing and flinging out her arms. Indeed, mine was the first name she could speak.

The gentlemen came out of their parlor, where they were over their pipes, and asked me, surlily enough, 'what I wanted.' I said, 'The mackerel were out, and the crews were wanted before Peter Duval's, the barber's.' And one of them, with a scowl on his face, and an oath, said they would be there, and shut the door in my face.

As I went away from the Priory, and crossed the churchyard by the rectory gate, who should come up but Dr. Barnard in his gig, with lamps lighted; and I always saluted him after he had been so kind to me, and had given me the books and the cake. 'What,' says he, 'my little shrimper? Have you fetched any fish off the rocks to-night?'

'Oh, no, sir!' says I. 'I have been taking messages all round.'

'And what message, my boy?'

I told him the message about the mackerel, etc.; but added that I must not tell the names, for the chevalier had desired me not to mention them. And then I went on to tell how there was a great crowd in the street, and that they were breaking windows at our house.

‘Breaking windows? What for?’ I told him what had happened. ‘Take Dolly to the stables. Don’t say anything to your mistress, Samuel, and come along with me, my little shrimper,’ says the doctor. He was a very tall man in a great white wig. I see him now skipping over the tombstones, by the great ivy tower of the church, and so through the churchyard gate toward our house.

The hearse had arrived by this time. The crowd had increased, and there was much disturbance and agitation. As soon as the hearse came, a yell rose up from the people. ‘Silence, shame! Hold your tongue! Let the poor woman go in quiet,’ a few people said. These were the men of the mackerel fishery, whom the Weston gentlemen presently joined. But the fishermen were a small crowd; the townspeople were many and very angry. As we passed by the end of Port Street (where our house was) we could see the people crowding at either end of the street, and in the midst the great hearse, with its black plumes, before our door.

It was impossible that the hearse could pass through the crowd at either end of the street if the people were determined to bar the way. I went in, as I had come, by the back gate of the garden, where the lane was still quite solitary, Dr. Barnard following me. We were awfully scared as we passed through the back kitchen (where the oven and boiler is) by the sight of an individual who suddenly leapt out of the copper, and who cried out, ‘Oh, mercy, mercy, save me from the wicked men!’ This was my grandpapa, and, with all respect for grandpapas (being of their age and standing myself now), I cannot but own that mine on this occasion cut rather a pitiful figure.

‘Save my house! Save my property!’ shouts my ancestor, and the doctor turns away from him scornfully, and passes on.

In the passage out of this back kitchen we met M. de la Motte, who says, ‘Ah, c’est toi, mon garçon. Thou hast been on thy errands. Our people are well there!’ and he makes a bow to the doctor, who came in with me, and who replied by a salutation equally stiff. M. de la Motte, reconnoitering from the upper room, had, no doubt, seen his people arrive. As I looked toward him I remarked that he was armed. He had a belt with pistols in it, and a sword by his side.

In the back room were the two Roman Catholic clergymen, and four men who had come with the hearse. They had been fiercely assailed as they entered the house with curses, shouts, hustling, and I believe even sticks and stones. My mother was serving them with brandy when we came in. She was astonished when she saw the rector make his appearance in our house. There was no love between his reverence and our family.

He made a very grand obeisance to the Roman Catholic clergymen. ' Gentlemen,' said he, 'as rector of this parish, and magistrate of the county, I have come to keep the peace; and if there is any danger, to share it with you. The lady will be buried in the old churchyard, I hear. Mr. Trestles, are you ready to move?'

The men said they would be prepared immediately, and went to bring down their melancholy burden. 'Open the door, you!' says the doctor. The people within shrank back. 'I will do it,' says mother.

'Et moi, parbleu!' says the chevalier advancing, his hand on his hilt.

'I think, sir, I shall be more serviceable than you,' says the doctor very coldly. 'If these gentlemen my confrères are ready we will go out; I will go first, as rector of this parish.' And mother drew the bolts, and he walked out and took off his hat.

A Babel roar of yells, shouts, curses, came pouring into the hall as the door opened, and the doctor remained on the steps, bareheaded and undaunted.

'How many of my parishioners are here? Stand aside all who come to my church!' he called out very bold.

At this arose immense roars of 'No Popery! down with the priests! down with them! drown them!' and I know not what more words of hatred and menace.

'You men of the French church,' shouted out the doctor, 'are you here?'

'We are here! Down with Popery!' roar the Frenchmen.

'Because you were persecuted a hundred years ago you want to persecute in your turn. Is that what your Bible teaches you? Mine doesn't. When your church wanted repair I gave you my nave, where you had your service, and were welcome. Is this the way you repay kindness which has been shown to you, you who ought to know better? For shame on you! I say for shame! Don't try and frighten me. Roger Hooker, I know you, you poaching vagabond. Who kept your wife and children when you were at Lewes Jail? How dare you be persecuting anybody, Thomas Flint? As sure as my name is Barnard, if you stop this procession, I will commit you to-morrow.'

Here was a cry of 'Huzzay for the doctor! huzzay for the rector!' which I am afraid came from the mackerels, who were assembled by this time, and were not mum, as fish generally are.

'Now, gentlemen, advance, if you please!' This he said to the two foreign clergymen, who came forward courageously enough, the Chevalier de la Motte walking behind them.

'Listen, you friends and parishioners, churchmen and dissenters! These two foreign dissenting clergymen are going to bury, in a neighboring churchyard, a departed sister, as you foreign dissenters have buried your own dead without harm or hindrance; and I will accompany these gentlemen to the grave prepared for the deceased lady, and I will see her laid in peace there, as surely as I hope myself to lie in peace.'

Here the people shouted; but it was with admiration for the rector. There was no outcry any more. The little procession fell into an orderly rank, passed through the streets, and round the Protestant church to the old burying ground behind the house of the Priory. The rector walked between the two Roman Catholic clergymen. I imagine the scene before me now—the tramp of the people, the flicker of a torch or two; and then we go in at the gate of the Priory ground into the old graveyard of the monastery, where a grave had been dug, on which the stone still tells that Clarissa, born de Viomesnil, and widow of Francis Stanislas, Count of Saverne and Barr in Lorraine, lies buried beneath.

When the service was ended the Chevalier de la Motte (by whose side I stood, holding by his cloak) came up to the doctor. 'M. le Docteur,' said he, 'you have acted like a gallant man; you have prevented bloodshed—'

'I am fortunate, sir,' says the doctor.

'You have saved the lives of these two worthy ecclesiastics, and rescued from insult the remains of one—'

'Of whom I know the sad history,' says the doctor very gravely.

'I am not rich, but will you permit me to give you this purse for your poor?'

'Sir, it is my duty to accept it,' replied the doctor. The purse contained a hundred louis, as he afterward told me.

'And may I ask to take your hand, sir?' cries the poor chevalier, clasping his own together.

'No, sir!' said the doctor, putting his own hands behind his back. 'Your hands have that on them which the gift of a few guineas cannot wash away.' The doctor spoke very good French. 'My child, good-night; and the best thing I can wish thee is to wish thee out of the hands of that man.'
'Monsieur!' says the chevalier, laying his hand on his sword mechanically.

'I think, sir, the last time it was with the pistol you showed your skill!' says Dr. Barnard, and went in at his own wicket as he spoke, leaving poor La Motte like a man who has just been struck with a blow; and then he fell to weeping, and crying that the curse—the curse of Cain was upon him.

'My good boy,' the old rector said to me in after days while talking over these adventures, 'thy friend the chevalier was the most infernal scoundrel I ever set eyes on, and I never looked at his foot without expecting to see it was cloven.'

'And could he tell me anything about the poor countess?' I asked. He knew nothing. He saw her but once, he thought.

'And faith,' says he, with an arch look, 'it so happened that I was not too intimate with your own worthy family.

CHAPTER V.

I HEAR THE SOUND OF BOW BELLS.

Whatever may have been the rector's dislike to my parents, in respect to us juniors, and my dear little Agnes de Saverne, he had no such prejudices, and both of us were great favorites with him. He considered himself to be a man entirely without prejudices; and toward Roman Catholics he certainly was most liberal. He sent his wife to see Mrs. Weston, and an acquaintance was made between the families, who had scarcely known each other before. Little Agnes was constantly with these Westons, with whom the Chevalier de la Motte also became intimate. Indeed, we have seen that he must have known them already, when he sent me on the famous 'mackerel' message which brought together a score at least of townspeople. I remember Mrs. Weston as a frightened-looking woman who seemed as if she had a ghost constantly before her. Frightened, however, or not, she was always kind to my little Agnes.

The younger of the Weston brothers (he who swore at me the night of the burial) was a red-eyed, pimple-faced, cock-fighting gentleman, forever on the trot, and known, I dare say not very favorably, all the country round. They were said to be gentlemen of good private means. They lived in a pretty genteel way, with a post chaise for the lady, and excellent nags to ride. They saw very little company; but this may have been because they were Roman Catholics, of whom there were not many in the county, except at Arundel and Slindon, where the lords and ladies were of too great quality to associate with a pair of mere fox-hunting, horse-dealing squires. M. de la Motte, who was quite the fine gentleman, as I have said, associated with these people freely enough; but then he had interests in common with them, which I began to understand when I was some ten or a dozen years old, and used to go to see my little Agnes at the Priory. She was growing apace to be a fine lady. She had dancing masters, music masters, language masters (those foreign tonsured gentry who were always about the Priory), and was so tall that mother talked of putting powder in her hair. Ah, belle dame! another hand has since whitened it, though I love it ebony or silver!

I continued at Rye School, boarding with Mr. Rudge and his dram-drinking daughter, and got a pretty fair smattering of such learning as was to be had at the school. I had a fancy to go to sea, but Dr. Barnard was strong against that wish of mine; unless, indeed, I should go out of Rye and Winchelsea altogether—get into a king's ship, and perhaps on the quarter-deck, under the patronage of my friend Sir Peter Denis, who ever continued to be kind to me.

Every Saturday night I trudged home from Rye, as gay as schoolboy could be. After Mme. de Saverne's death the Chevalier de la Motte took our lodgings on the first floor. He was of an active disposition, and found business in plenty to occupy him. He would be absent from his lodgings for weeks and months. He made journeys on horseback into the interior of the country; went to London often; and sometimes abroad with our fishermen's boats. As I have said, he learned our language well, and taught me his. Mother's German was better than her French, and my book for reading the German was Dr. Luther's Bible; indeed, that very volume in which poor M. de Saverne wrote down his prayer for the child whom he was to see only twice in this world.

Though Agnes' little chamber was always ready at our house, where she was treated like a little lady, having a servant specially attached to her, and all the world to spoil her, she passed a great deal of time with Mrs. Weston of the Priory, who took a great affection for the child even before she lost her own daughter. I have said that good masters were here found for her. She learned to speak English as a native, of course, and French and music from the fathers who always were about the house. Whatever the child's expenses or wants were, M. de la Motte generously defrayed them. After his journeys he would bring her back toys, sweetmeats, knickknacks fit for a little duchess. She lorded it over great and small in the Priory, in the Perruquery, as we may call my mother’s house, aye, and in the rectory too, where Dr. and Mrs. Barnard were her very humble servants, like all the rest of us.

And here I may as well tell you that I was made to become a member of the Church of England, because mother took huff at our French Protestants, who would continue persecuting her for harboring the Papists, and insisted that between the late poor countess and the chevalier there had been an unlawful intimacy. M. Borel, our pastor, preached at poor mother several times, she said. I did not understand his inuendoes, being a simple child, I fear not caring much for sermons in those days. For grandpapa’s I know I did not; he used to give us half an hour at morning, and half an hour at evening. I could not help thinking of grandfather skipping out of the copper, and calling on us to spare his life on the day of the funeral; and his preaching went in at one ear and out at t’other.

One day—apropos of some pomatum which a customer wanted to buy, and which I know mother made with lard and bergamot herself—I heard him tell such a fib to a customer that somehow I never could respect the old man afterward. He actually said the pomatum had just come to him from France direct—from the dauphin’s own hairdresser; and our neighbor, I dare say, would have bought it, but I said, ‘Oh, grandpapa, you must mean some other pomatum! I saw mother make this with her own hands.’ Grandfather actually began to cry when I said this. He said I was being his death. He asked that somebody should fetch him out and hang him that moment. Why is there no bear, says he, to eat that little monster’s head off and destroy that prodigy of crime? Nay, I used to think I was a monster sometimes, he would go on so fiercely about my wickedness and perverseness.

Dr. Barnard was passing by our pole one day, and our open door, when grandfather was preaching upon this sin of mine, with a strap in one hand, laying over my shoulders in the intervals of the discourse. Down goes the strap in a minute as the doctor’s lean figure makes its appearance at the door; and grandfather begins to smirk and bow, and hope his reverence was well. My heart was full. I had had sermon in the morning, and sermon at night, and strapping every day that week; and, Heaven help me, I loathed that old man and loathe him still.

‘How can I, sir,’ says I, bursting out into a passion of tears—‘how can I honor my grandfather and mother if grandfather tells such d— lies as he does?’ And I stamped with my feet, trembling with wrath and indignation at the disgrace put upon me. I then burst out with my story, which there was no controverting, and I will say grandfather looked at me as if he would kill me; and I ended my tale sobbing at the doctor's knees.

'Listen, Mr. Duval,' says Dr. Barnard very sternly; 'I know a great deal more than you think about you and your doings. My advice to you is to treat this child well, and to leave off some practices which will get you into trouble as sure as your name is what it is. I know where your pigeons go to and where they come from. And some day, when I have you in my justice room, we shall see whether I will show you any more mercy than you have shown to this child. I know you to be——' and the doctor whispered something into grandfather's ears and stalked away.

Can you guess by what name the doctor called my grandfather? If he called him hypocrite, ma foi, he was not far wrong. But the truth is he called him smuggler, and that was a name which fitted hundreds of people along our coast, I promise you. At Hythe, at Folkestone, at Dover, Deal, Sandwich, there were scores and scores of these gentry. All the way to London they had depots, friends, and correspondents. Inland and along the Thames there were battles endless between them and the revenue people. Our friends 'the mackerel,' who came out at M. de la Motte's summons, of course were of this calling. One day when he came home from one of his expeditions, I remember jumping forward to welcome him, for he was at one time very kind to me, and as I ran into his arms he started back, and shrieked out an oath and a sacrébleu or two. He was wounded in the arm. There had been a regular battle at Deal between the dragoons and revenue officers on the one side and the smugglers and their friends. Cavalry had charged cavalry, and M. de la Motte (his smuggling name, he told me afterward, was Mr. Paul, or Pole) had fought on the mackerel side.

So were my gentlemen at the Priory of the mackerel party. Why, I could name you great names of merchants and bankers at Canterbury, Dover, Rochester, who were engaged in this traffic. My grandfather, you see, howled with the wolves; but then he used to wear a snug lamb's skin over his wolf's hide. Ah, shall I thank Heaven, like the Pharisee, that I am not as those men are? I hope there is no harm in being thankful that I have been brought out of temptation, that I was not made a rogue at a child's age, and that I did not come to the gallows as a man. Such a fate has befallen more than one of the precious friends of my youth, as I shall have to relate in due season.
That habit I had of speaking out everything that was on my mind brought me, as a child, into innumerable scrapes, but I do thankfully believe has preserved me from still greater. What could you do with a little chatterbox who, when his grandfather offered to sell a pot of pomatum as your true Pommade de Cythère, must cry out, 'No, grandpapa, mother made it with marrow and bergamot?' If anything happened which I was not to mention I was sure to blunder out some account of it. Good Dr. Barnard and my patron Captain Denis (who was a great friend of our rector), I suppose used to joke about this propensity of mine, and would laugh for ten minutes together as I told my stories; and I think the doctor had a serious conversation with my mother on the matter; for she said, 'He has reason. The boy shall not go any more. We will try and have one honest man in the family.'

Go any more where? Now I will tell you (and I am much more ashamed of this than of the barber's pole, M. mon fils, that I can promise you). When I was boarding at the grocer's at Rye I and other boys were constantly down at the water, and we learned to manage a boat pretty early. Rudge did not go out himself, being rheumatic and lazy, but his apprentice would be absent frequently all night, and on more than one occasion I went out as odd boy in the boat to put my hand to anything.

Those pigeons I spoke of anon came from Boulogne. When one arrived he brought a signal that our Boulogne correspondent was on his way and we might be on the lookout. The French boat would make for a point agreed upon, and we lie off until she came. We took cargo from her; barrels without number, I remember. Once we saw her chased away by a revenue cutter. Once the same ship fired at us. I did not know what the balls were which splashed close alongside of us; but I remember the apprentice of Rudge's (he used to make love to Miss R., and married her afterward), singing out, 'Lord, have mercy,' in an awful consternation, and the chevalier crying out, 'Hold your tongue, misérable! You were never born to be drowned or shot.' He had some hesitation about taking me out on this expedition. He was engaged in running smuggled goods, that is the fact; and 'smuggler' was the word which Dr. Barnard whispered in my grandfather's ear. If we were hard pressed at certain points which we knew, and could ascertain by cross-bearings which we took, we would sink our kegs till a more convenient time, and then return and drag for them, and bring them up with line and grapnel.
I certainly behaved much better when we were fired at, than that oaf of a Bevil, who lay howling his 'Lord, have mercy upon us,' at the bottom of the boat; but somehow the chevalier discouraged my juvenile efforts in the smuggling line, from his fear of that unlucky tongue of mine, which would blab everything I knew. I may have been out a fishing half a dozen times in all; but especially after we had been fired at La Motte was for leaving me at home. My mother was averse, too, to my becoming a seaman (a smuggler) by profession. Her aim was to make a gentleman of me, she said, and I am most unfeignedly thankful to her for keeping me out of mischief's way. Had I been permitted to herd along with the black sheep Dr. Barnard would never have been so kind to me as he was; and indeed that good man showed me the greatest favor. When I came home from school he would often have me to the rectory, and hear me my lessons, and he was pleased to say I was a lively boy of good parts.

The doctor received rents for his college at Oxford, which has considerable property in these parts, and twice a year would go to London and pay the moneys over. In my boyish times these journeys to London were by no means without danger; and if you will take a Gentleman's Magazine from the shelf you will find a highway robbery or two in every month's chronicle. We boys at school were never tired of talking of highwaymen and their feats. As I often had to walk over to Rye from home of a night (so as to be in time for early morning school), I must needs buy a little brass-barreled pistol, with which I practiced in secret, and which I had to hide, lest mother or Rudge or the schoolmaster should take it away from me. Once as I was talking with a school-fellow, and vaporizing about what we would do were we attacked, I fired my pistol and shot away a piece of his coat. I might have hit his stomach, not his coat—Heaven be good to us!—and this accident made me more careful in the use of my artillery. And now I used to practice with small shot instead of bullets, and pop at sparrows whenever I could get a chance.

At Michaelmas, in the year 1776 (I promise you I remember the year), my dear and kind friend Dr. Barnard, having to go to London with his rents, proposed to take me to London to see my other patron, Sir Peter Denis, between whom and the doctor there was a great friendship; and it is to those dear friends that I owe the great good fortune which has befallen me in life. Indeed, when I think of what I might have been, and of what I have escaped, my heart is full of thankfulness for the great mercies which have fallen to my share. Well, at this happy and eventful Michaelmas of 1776, Dr. Barnard says to me, ‘Denis, my child, if thy mother will grant leave I have a mind to take thee to see thy godfather, Sir Peter Denis, in London. I am going up with my rents, my neighbor Weston will share the horses with me, and thou shalt see the Tower and Mrs. Salmon’s waxwork before thou art a week older.’

You may suppose that this proposition made Master Denis Duval jump for joy. Of course I had heard of London all my life, and talked with people who had been there, but that I should go myself to Admiral Sir Peter Denis’ house, and see the play, St. Paul’s, and Mrs. Salmon’s, here was a height of bliss I never had hoped to attain. I could not sleep for thinking of my pleasure; I had some money, and I promised to buy as many toys for Agnes as the chevalier used to bring her. My mother said I should go like a gentleman, and turned me out in a red waistcoat with plate buttons, a cock to my hat, and ruffles to my shirts. How I counted the hours of the night before our departure! I was up before the dawn packing my little valise. I got my little brass-barreled pocket pistol, and I loaded it with shot. I put it away into my breast pocket; and if we met with a highwayman I promised myself he should have my charge of lead in his face. The doctor’s post chaise was at his stables not very far from us. The stable lanterns were alight, and Brown, the doctor’s man, cleaning the carriage, when Mr. Denis Duval comes up to the stable door, lugging his portmanteau after him through the twilight. Was ever day-light so long in coming? Ah! There come the horses at last; the horses from the King’s Head, and old Pascoe, the one-eyed postilion. How well I remember the sound of their hoofs in that silent street! I can tell everything that happened on that day: what we had for dinner—viz., veal cutlets and French beans, at Maidstone; where we changed horses, and the color of the horses. ‘Here, Brown! Here’s my portmanteau! I say, where shall I stow it?’ My portmanteau was about as large as a good-sized apple pie. I jump into the carriage and we drive up to the rectory; and I think the doctor will never come out. There he is at last; with his mouth full of buttered toast, and I bob my head to him a hundred times out of the chaise window. Then I must jump out, forsooth. ‘Brown, shall I give you a hand with the luggage?’ says I, and I dare say they all laugh. Well, I am so happy that anybody may laugh who likes. The doctor comes out, his precious box under his arm. I see dear Mrs. Barnard’s great cap nodding at us out of the parlor window as we drive away from the rectory door to stop a hundred yards farther on at the Priory.

There at the parlor window stands my dear little Agnes in a white frock, in a great cap with a blue ribbon and bow, and curls clustering over her face. I wish Sir Joshua Reynolds had painted thee in those days, my dear; but thou wert the very image of one of his little ladies, that one who became Duchess of Buccleuch afterward. There is my Agnes, and now presently comes out Mr. Weston's man and luggage, and it is fixed on the roof. Him his master, Mr. George Weston, follows. This was the most good-natured of the two, and I shall never forget my sensation of delight when I saw him bring out two holster pistols, which he placed each in a pocket of the chaise. Is Tomny Chapman, the apothecary's son of Westgate alive yet, and does he remember my wagging my head to him as our chaise whirled by? He was shaking a mat at the door of his father's shop as my lordship accompanied by my noble friends passed by.

First stage, Ham Street, The Bear. A gray horse and a bay to change, I remember them. Second stage, Ashford. Third stage—— I think I am asleep about the third stage; and no wonder, a poor little wretch who had been awake half the night before, and no doubt many nights previous, thinking of this wonderful journey. Fourth stage, Maidstone, The Bell. 'And here we will stop to dinner, Master Shrimp-catcher,' says the doctor, and I jump down out of the carriage nothing loath. The doctor followed with his box, of which he never lost sight.

The doctor liked his ease in his inn, and took his sip of punch so comfortably that I, for my part, thought he never would be gone. I was out in the stables and looking at the horses, and talking to the hostler who was rubbing his nags down. I dare say I had a peep into the kitchen, and at the pigeons in the inn yard, and at all things which were to be seen at The Bell, while my two companions were still at their interminable punch. It was an old-fashioned inn, with a gallery round the courtyard. Heaven bless us! Falstaff and Bardoirdolph may have stopped there on the road to Gadshill. I was in the stable looking at the nags when Mr. Weston comes out of the inn, looks round the court, opens the door of the post chaise, takes out his pistols, looks at the priming, and puts them back again. Then we are off again, and time enough too. It seemed to me many hours since we had arrived at that creaking old Bell. And away we go through Addington, Eynesford, by miles and miles of hop gardens. I dare say I did not look at the prospect much, beautiful though it might be, my young eyes being forever on the look out for St. Paul's and London.

For a great part of the way Dr. Barnard and his companion had a fine controversy about their respective religions, for which each was alike zealous. Nay, it may be the rector invited Mr. Weston to take a place in his post chaise in order to have this battle, for he never tired of arguing the question between the two Churches. Toward the close of the day Master Denis Duval fell asleep on Dr. Barnard's shoulder, and the good-natured clergyman did not disturb him.

I woke up with the sudden stoppage of the carriage. The evening was falling. We were upon a lonely common, and a man on horseback was at the window of the post chaise.

'Give us out that there box! and your money!' I heard him say in a very gruff voice. 'O Heavens! we were actually stopped by a highwayman! It was delightful.

Mr. Weston jumped at his pistols very quick. 'Here's our money, you scoundrel!' says he, and he fired point-blank at the rogue's head. Confusion! The pistol missed fire. He aimed the second, and again no report followed!

'Some scoundrel has been tampering with these,' says Mr. Weston, aghast.

'Come,' says Captain Macheath, 'come, your——'

But the next word the fellow spoke was a frightful oath; for I took out my little pistol, which was full of shot, and fired it into his face. The man reeled, and I thought would have fallen out of his saddle. The postilion, frightened, no doubt, clapped spurs to his horse, and began to gallop. 'Shan't we stop and take that rascal, sir?' said I to the doctor. On which Mr. Weston gave a peevish kind of push at me, and said, 'No, no. It is getting quite dark. Let us push on.' And, indeed, the highwayman's horse had taken fright, and we could see him galloping away across the common.

I was so elated to think that I, a little boy, had shot a live highwayman that I dare say I bragged outrageously of my action. We set down Mr. Weston at his inn in the Borough, and crossed London Bridge, and there I was in London at last. Yes, and that was the Monument, and then we came to the Exchange, and yonder, yonder was St. Paul's. We went up Holborn, and so to Ormond Street, where my patron lived in a noble mansion; and where his wife, my Lady Denis, received me with a great deal of kindness. You may be sure the battle with the highwayman was fought over again, and I got due credit from myself and others for my gallantry.
Sir Peter and his lady introduced me to a number of their acquaintances as the little boy who shot the highwayman. They received a great deal of company, and I was frequently had in to their dessert. I suppose I must own that my home was below in the housekeeper's room with Mrs. Jellicoe; but my lady took such a fancy to me that she continually had me upstairs, took me out driving in her chariot, or ordered one of the footmen to take me to the sights of the town, and sent me in his charge to the play. It was the last year Garrick performed; and I saw him in the play of 'Macbeth,' in a gold-laced blue coat, with scarlet plush waistcoat and breeches. Ormond Street, Bloomsbury, was on the outskirts of the town then, with open country behind, stretching as far as Hampstead. Bedford House, north of Bloomsbury Square, with splendid gardens, was close by, and Montague House, where I saw stuffed camelopards, and all sorts of queer things from foreign countries. Then there were the Tower and the Waxwork and Westminster Abbey and Vauxhall. What a glorious week of pleasure it was! At the week's end the kind doctor went home again, and all those dear kind people gave me presents and cakes and money, and spoilt the little boy who shot the highwayman.

The affair was actually put into the newspapers, and who should come to hear of it but my gracious sovereign himself. One day Sir Peter Denis took me to see Kew Gardens and the new Chinese pagoda her Majesty had put up. While walking here, and surveying this pretty place, I had the good fortune to see his M—j—sty, walking with our most gracious qu—n, the Pr—nce of W—s, the Bishop of Osnaburg, my namesake, and I think two, or it may be three, of the princesses. Her M—j—sty knew Sir Peter from having sailed with him, saluted him very graciously, and engaged him in conversation. And the Best of Monarchs, looking toward his humblest subject and servant, said, 'What, what? Little boy shot the highwayman. Shot him in the face! Shot him in the face!' On which the youthful pr—nces graciously looked toward me, and the king, asking Sir Peter what my profession was to be, the admiral said I hoped to be a sailor and serve his Majesty.

I promise you I was a mighty grand personage when I went home; and both at Rye and Winchelsea scores of people asked me what the king said. On our return we heard of an accident which had happened to Mr. Joseph Weston, which ended most unhappily for that gentleman. On the very day when we set out for London he went out shooting—a sport of which he was very fond; but in climbing a hedge, and dragging his gun incautiously after him, the lock caught in a twig, and the piece discharged itself into the poor gentleman's face, lodging a number of shot into his left cheek, and into his eye, of which he lost the sight, after suffering much pain and torture.

'Bless my soul! A charge of small shot in his face! What an extraordinary thing!' cries Dr. Barnard, who came down to see mother and grandfather the day after our return home. Mrs. Barnard had told him of the accident at supper on the night previous. Had he been shot or shot someone himself, the doctor could scarce have looked more scared. He put me in mind of Mr. Garrick, whom I had just seen at the playhouse, when he comes out after murdering the king.

'You look, docteur, as if you done it yourself,' says M. de la Motte, laughing, and in his English jargon. 'Two time, three time, I say, Weston, you shoot yourself, you carry you gun that way, and he say he not born to be shot, and he swear!'

'But, my good chevalier, Dr. Blades picked some bits of crape out of his eye, and thirteen or fourteen shot. What is the size of your shot, Denny, with which you fired at the highwayman?'

'Quid autem vides festucam in oculo fratri tu? doctor?' says the chevalier. 'That is good doctrine—Protestant or Popish, eh?' On which the doctor held down his head, and said, 'Chevalier, I am corrected; I was wrong—very wrong.'

'And as for crape,' La Motte resumed, 'Weston is in mourning. He go to funeral at Canterbury four days ago. Yes, he tell me so. He and my friend Lütterloch go.' This Mr. Lütterloch was a German living near Canterbury, with whom M. de la Motte had dealings. He had dealings with all sorts of people; and very queer dealings too, as I began to understand now that I was a stout boy approaching fourteen years of age, and standing pretty tall in my shoes.

De la Motte laughed then at the doctor's suspicions. 'Parsons and women all the same, save your respect, ma bonne Mme. Duval: all tell tales; all believe evil of their neighbors. I tell you I see Weston shoot twenty, thirty time. Always drag his gun through hedge.'

'But the crape—'

'Bah! Always in mourning, Weston is! For shame of your cancans, little Denis! Never think such thing again. Don't make Weston your enemy. If a man say that of me, I would shoot him myself, parbleu!'

'But if he has done it?'

'Parbleu! I would shoot him so much ze mor!' says the chevalier, with a stamp of his foot. And the first time he saw me alone he reverted to the subject. 'Listen, Denisot!' says he: 'thou becomest a great boy. Take my counsel and hold thy tongue. This suspicion against Mr. Joseph is a monstrous crime, as well as a folly. A man say that of me—right or wrong—I burn him the brain. Once I come home, and you run against me, and I cry out and swear and pest. I was wounded myself, I deny it not.'

'And I said nothing, sir,' I interposed.

'No, I do thee justice: thou didst say nothing. You know the métier we make sometimes? That night in the boat' ('zat night in ze boat,' he used to say), 'when the revenue cutter fire, and your poor camarade howl—ah, how he howl—you don't suppose we were there to look for lobstarepot, eh? Tu n'as pas bronché, toi. You did not crane; you show yourself a man of heart. And now, petit, apprends à te taire!' And he gave me a shake of the hand, and a couple of guineas in it too, and went off to his stables on his business. He had two or three horses now, and was always on the trot; he was very liberal with his money, and used to have handsome entertainments in his upstairs room, and never quarreled about the bills which mother sent in. 'Hold thy tongue, Denisot,' said he. 'Never tell who comes in or who goes out. And mind thee, child, if thy tongue wags, little birds come whisper me, and say, "He tell."'

I tried to obey his advice, and to rein in that truant tongue of mine. When Dr. and Mrs. Barnard themselves asked me questions I was mum, and perhaps rather disappointed the good lady and the rector too by my reticence. For instance, Mrs. Barnard would say, 'That was a nice goose I saw going from market to your house, Deiny.'

'Goose is very nice, ma'am,' says I.

'The chevalier often has dinners?'

'Dines every day, regular, ma'am."

'Sees the Westons a great deal?'

'Yes, ma'am,' I say, with an indescribable heart-pang. And the cause of that pang I may as well tell. You see, though I was only thirteen years old and Agnes but eight, I loved that little maid with all my soul and strength. Boy or man, I never loved any other woman. I write these very words by my study fire in Fareport with madam opposite dozing over her novel till the neighbors shall come in to tea and their rubber. When my ink is run out and my little tale is written, and yonder church that is ringing to seven o'clock prayer shall toll for a certain D. D., you will please, good neighbors, to remember that I never loved any but yonder lady, and keep a place by Darby for Joan when her turn shall arrive.

Now in the last year or two, since she had been adopted at the Priory, Agnes came less and less often to see us. She did not go to church with us, being a Catholic. She learned from the good fathers, her tutors. She learned music and French and dancing to perfection. All the county could not show a finer little lady. When she came to our shop it was indeed a little countess honoring us with a visit. Mother was gentle before her—grandfather obsequious—I, of course, her most humble little servant. Wednesday (a half holiday), and half Saturday and all Sunday I might come home from school, and how I used to trudge, and how I longed to see that little maiden, any gentleman may imagine who has lost his heart to an Agnes of his own.

The first day of my arrival at home, after the memorable London journey, I presented myself at the Priory, with my pocket full of presents for Agnes. The footman let me into the hall civilly enough; but the young lady was out with Mrs. Weston in the post chaise. I might leave my message.

I wanted to give my message. Somehow, in that fortnight’s absence from home, I had so got to long after Agnes that I never had my little sweetheart quite out of my mind. It may have been a silly thing, but I got a little pocketbook, and wrote in French a journal of all I saw in London. I dare say there were some pretty faults in grammar. I remember a fine paragraph about my meeting the royal personages at Kew, and all their names written down in order; and this little pocketbook I must needs send to Mlle. de Saverne.

The next day I called again. Still Mlle. de Saverne was not to be seen; but in the evening a servant brought a little note from her, in which she thanked her dear brother for his beautiful book. That was some consolation. She liked the pocketbook, anyhow. I wonder can you young people guess what I did to it before I sent it away? Yes, I did. "One, tree, feeftly time," as the chevalier would say. The next morning, quite early, I had to go back to school, having promised the doctor to work hard after my holiday; and work I did with a will, at my French and my English and my navigation. I thought Saturday would never come; but it did at last, and I trotted as quick as legs would carry me from school to Winchelsea. My legs were growing apace now; and especially as they took me homeward, few could outrun them.

All good women are matchmakers at heart. My dear Mrs. Barnard saw quite soon what my condition of mind was, and was touched by my boyish fervor. I called once, twice, thrice, at the Priory, and never could get a sight of Miss Agnes. The servant used to shrug his shoulders and laugh at me in an insolent way, and the last time said—'You need not call any more. We don't want our hair cut here, nor no pomatum, nor no soap, do you understand that?' and she slammed the door in my face. I was stunned by this insolence, and beside myself with rage and mortification. I went to Mrs. Barnard, and told her what had happened to me. I burst into tears of passion and grief as I flung myself on a sofa by the good lady. I told her how I had rescued little Agnes, how I loved the little thing better than all the world. I spoke my heart out, and eased it somewhat, for the good lady wiped her eyes more than once, and finished by giving me a kiss. She did more; she invited me to tea with her on the next Wednesday when I came home from school, and who should be there but little Agnes. She blushed very much. Then she came toward me. Then she held up her little cheek to be kissed, and then she cried—oh, how she did cry! There were three people whimpering in that room. (How well I recollect it opening into the garden, and the little old blue dragon teacups and silver pot!) There were three persons, I say, crying: a lady of fifty, a boy of thirteen, and a little girl of seven years of age. Can you guess what happened next? Of course the lady of fifty remembered that she had forgotten her spectacles, and went upstairs to fetch them; and then the little maiden began to open her heart to me, and told her dear Denny how she had been longing to see him, and how they were very angry with him at the Priory; so angry that his name was never to be spoken. 'The chevalier said that, and so did the gentlemen—especially Mr. Joseph, who had been dreadful since his accident, and one day [says my dear] when you called, he was behind the door with a great horsewhip, and said he would let you in, and flog your soul out of your body, only Mrs. Weston cried, and Mr. George said, "Don't be a fool, Joe." But something you have done to Mr. Joseph, dear Denny, and when your name is mentioned he rages and swears so that it is dreadful to hear him. What can make the gentleman so angry with you?'

'So he actually was waiting with a horsewhip, was he? In that case I know what I would do. I would never go about without my pistol. I have hit one fellow,' said I, 'and if any other man threatens me I will defend myself.'

My dear Agnes said they were very kind to her at the Priory, although she could not bear Mr. Joseph—that they gave her good masters, that she was to go to a good school kept by a Catholic lady at Arundel. And oh, how she wished her Denny would turn Catholic, and she prayed for him always, always! And for that matter I know someone who never night or morning on his knees has forgotten that little maiden. The father used to come and give her lessons three or four times in the week, and she used to learn her lessons by heart, walking up and down in the great green walk in the kitchen garden every morning at eleven o'clock. I knew the kitchen garden! the wall was in North Lane, one of the old walls of the convent: at the end of the green walk there was a pear tree. And that was where she always went to learn her lessons.

And here, I suppose, Mrs. Barnard returned to the room, having found her spectacles. And as I take mine off my nose and shut my eyes, that well-remembered scene of boyhood passes before them—that garden basking in the autumn evening—that little maiden with peachy cheeks, and glistening curls, that dear and kind old lady, who says, 'Tis time now, children, you should go home.'

I had to go to school that night, but before I went I ran up North Lane and saw the old wall and the pear tree behind it. And do you know I thought I would try and get up the wall, and easy enough it was to find a footing between those crumbling old stones, and when on the top I could look down from the branches of the tree into the garden below, and see the house at the farther end. So that was the broad walk where Agnes learned her lessons? Master Denis Duval pretty soon had that lesson by heart.

Yes; but one day in the Christmas holidays, when there was a bitter frost, and the stones and the wall were so slippery that Mr. D. D. tore his fingers and his small-clothes in climbing to his point of observation, it happened that little Agnes was not sitting under the tree learning her lessons, and none but an idiot would have supposed that she would have come out on such a day.

But who should be in the garden, pacing up and down the walk all white with hoar frost, but Joseph Weston with his patch over his eye. Unluckily he had one eye left, with which he saw me; and the next moment I heard the report of a tremendous oath, and then a brickbat came whizzing at my head, so close that, had it struck me, it would have knocked out my eye, and my brains too.

I was down the wall in a moment: it was slippery enough; and two or three more brickbats came à mon adresse, but luckily failed to hit their mark.

CHAPTER VI.

I ESCAPE FROM A GREAT DANGER.

I SPOKE of the affair of the brickbats, at home, to M. de la Motte only, not caring to tell mother, lest she should be inclined to resume her box-on-the-ear practice, for which I thought I was growing too old. Indeed, I had become a great boy. There were not half a dozen out of the sixty at Pocock’s who could beat me when I was thirteen years old, and from these champions, were they ever so big, I never would submit to a thrashing without a fight on my part, in which, though I might get the worst, I was pretty sure to leave some ugly marks on my adversary’s nose and eyes. I remember one lad especially, Tom Parrot by name, who was three years older than myself, and whom I could no more beat than a frigate can beat a seventy-four; but we engaged nevertheless, and, after we had had some rounds together, Tom put one hand in his pocket, and, with a queer face and a great black eye I had given him, says, ‘Well, Denny, I could do it—you know I could; but I’m so lazy I don’t care about going on.’ And one of the bottle-holders beginning to jeer, Tom fetches him such a rap on the ear that I promise you he showed no inclination for laughing afterward. By the way, that knowledge of the noble art of fisticuffs which I learned at school I had to practice at sea presently, in the cockpit of more than one of his Majesty’s ships of war.

In respect of the slapping and caning at home, I think M.
de la Motte remonstrated with my mother, and represented to her that I was now too old for that kind of treatment. Indeed, when I was fourteen I was as tall as grandfather, and in a tussle I am sure I could have tripped his old heels up easily enough, and got the better of him in five minutes. Do I speak of him with undue familiarity? I pretend no love for him; I never could have any respect. Some of his practices which I knew of made me turn from him, and his loud professions only increased my distrust. Monsieur mon fils, if ever you marry, and have a son, I hope the little chap will have an honest man for a grandfather, and that you will be able to say, ‘I loved him,’ when the daisies cover me.

La Motte, then, caused ‘the abolition of torture’ in our house, and I was grateful to him. I had the queerest feelings toward that man. He was a perfect fine gentleman when he so wished; of his money most liberal, witty (in a dry, cruel sort of way)—most tenderly attached to Agnes. Eh, bien! As I looked at his yellow handsome face cold shudders would come over me, though at this time I did not know that Agnes' father had fallen by his fatal hand.

When I informed him of Mr. Joe Weston’s salute of brick-bats he looked very grave. And I told him then, too, a thing which had struck me most forcibly—viz., that the shout which Weston gave, and the oath which he uttered when he saw me on the wall, were precisely like the oath and execration uttered by the man with the crapped face, at whom I fired from the post chaise.

‘Bah, bêtise!’ says La Motte. ‘What didst thou on the wall! One does not steal pears at thy age.’

I dare say I turned red. ‘I heard somebody’s voice,’ I said. ‘In fact, I heard Agnes singing in the garden, and—and I got on the wall to see her.’

‘What, you—you, a little barber’s boy, climb a wall to speak to Mlle. Agnes de Saverne, of one of the most noble houses of Lorraine?’ La Motte yelled, with a savage laugh. ‘Parbleu! M. Weston has well done!’

‘Sir!’ said I, in a towering rage, ‘barber as I am, my fathers were honorable Protestant clergymen in Alsace, and we are as good as highwaymen at any rate! Barber, indeed!’ I say again. ‘And now I am ready to swear that the man who swore at me, and the man I shot on the road, are one and the same; and I’ll go to Dr. Barnard’s and swear it before him!’

The chevalier looked aghast, and threatening for a while. ‘Tu me menaces, je crois, petit manant!’ says he, grinding his teeth. ‘This is too strong. Listen, Denis Duval! Hold thy tongue, or evil will come to thee. Thou wilt make for thyself enemies the most unscrupulous, and the most terrible—do you hear? I have placed Mlle. Agnes de Saverne with that admirable woman Mistress Weston because she can meet at the Priory with society more fitting her noble birth than that which she will find under your grandfather’s pole—parbleu. Ah, you dare mount on wall to look for Mlle. de Saverne? Gare aux manstraps, mon garçon! Vive Dieu, if I see thee on that wall I will fire on thee, moi le premier! You pretend to Mlle. Agnes. Ha! ha! ha!’ And he grinned and looked like that cloven-footed gentleman of whom Dr. Barnard talked.

I felt that henceforward there was war between La Motte and me. At this time I had suddenly shot up to be a young man, and was not the obedient, prattling child of last year. I told grandfather that I would bear no more punishment, such as the old man had been accustomed to bestow upon me; and once when my mother lifted her hand, I struck it up, and gripped it so tight that I frightened her. From that very day she never raised a hand to me. Nay, I think she was not ill pleased, and soon actually began to spoil me. Nothing was too good for me. I know where the silk came from which made my fine new waistcoat, and the cambric for my ruffled shirts, but very much doubt whether they ever paid any duty. As I walked to church I dare say I cocked my hat, and strutted very consequentially. When Tom Billis, the baker’s boy, jeered at my fine clothes, ‘Tom,’ says I, ‘I will take my coat and waistcoat off for half an hour on Monday, and give thee a beating if thou hast a mind; but to-day let us be at peace, and go to church.’

On the matter of church I am not going to make any boast. That awful subject lies between a man and his conscience. I have known men of lax faith pure and just in their lives, as I have met very loud-professing Christians loose in their morality, and hard and unjust in their dealings. There was a little old man at home—Heaven help him!—who was of this sort, and who, when I came to know his life, would put me into such a rage of revolt while preaching his daily and nightly sermons that it is a wonder I was not enlisted among the scoffers and evil-doers altogether. I have known many a young man fall away, and become utterly reprobate, because the bond of discipline was tied too tightly upon him, and because he has found the preacher who was perpetually prating over him lax in his own conduct. I am thankful, then, that I had a better instructor than my old grandfather with his strap and his cane; and was brought (I hope and trust, to a right state of thinking by a man whose brain was wise, as his life was excellently benevolent and pure. This was my good friend Dr. Barnard, and to this day I remember the conversations I had with him, and am quite sure they influenced my future life. Had I been altogether reckless and as lawless as many people of our acquaintance and neighborhood, he would have ceased to feel any interest in me; and instead of wearing his Majesty’s epaulets (which I trust I have not disgraced), I might have been swabbing a smuggler’s boat, or riding in a night caravan, with kegs beside me, and pistols and cutlasses to defend me, as that unlucky La Motte owned for his part that he had done. My good mother, though she gave up the practice of smuggling, never could see the harm in it; but looked on it as a game where you played your stake, and lost or won it. She ceased to play, not because it was wrong, but it was expedient no more; and Mr. Denis, her son, was the cause of her giving up this old trade.

For me, I thankfully own that I was taught to see the matter in a graver light, not only by our doctor’s sermons (two or three of which, on the text of ‘Render unto Cæsar,’ he preached, to the rage of a great number of his congregation), but by many talks which he had with me; when he showed me that I was in the wrong to break the laws of my country, to which I owed obedience, as did every good citizen. He knew (though he never told me, and his reticence in this matter was surely very kind) that my poor father had died of wounds received in a smuggling encounter; but he showed me how such a life must be loose, lawless, secret, and wicked; must bring a man among desperate companions, and compel him to resist Cæsar’s lawful authority by rebellion, and possibly murder. ‘To thy mother I have used other arguments, Denny, my boy,’ he said very kindly. ‘I and the admiral want to make a gentleman of thee. Thy old grandfather is rich enough to help us if he chooses. I won’t stop to inquire too strictly where all his money came from;* but ’tis clear we cannot make a gentleman of a smuggler’s boy, who may be transported any day, or, in case of armed resistance, may be—’ And here my good doctor puts his hand to his ear, and indicates the punishment for piracy which was very common in my young time. ‘My Denny does not want to ride with a crape over his face, and fire pistols at revenue officers! No! I pray you will ever show an honest countenance to the world. You will render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar’s, and—the rest, my child, you know.’

Now I remarked about this man that when he approached a certain subject an involuntary awe came over him, and he hushed as it were at the very idea of that sacred theme. It was very different with poor grandfather prating his sermons (and with some other pastors I have heard), who used this Name as familiarly as any other, and— But who am I to judge? and, my poor old grandfather, is there any need at this distance of time that I should be picking out the trabem in oculo tuo? . . . Howbeit, on that night, as I was walking home after drinking tea with my dear doctor, I made a vow that I would strive henceforth to lead an honest life; that my tongue should speak the truth, and my hand should be sullied by no secret crime. And as I spoke I saw my dearest little maiden’s light glimmering in her chamber and the stars shining overhead, and felt—who could feel more bold and happy than I?

* Eheu i where a part of it went to, I shall have to say presently.—D. D.

That walk schoolward by West Street certainly was a détour. I might have gone a straighter road, but then I should not have seen a certain window: a little twinkling window in a gable of the Priory House, where the light used to be popped out at nine o'clock. T'other day, when we took over the King of France to Calais (his Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence being in command), I must needs hire a post chaise from Dover to look at that old window in the Priory House at Winchelsea. I went through the old tears, despairs, tragedies. I sighed as sentimentally, after forty years, as though the infandi dolores were fresh upon me, as though I were the schoolboy trudging back to his task, and taking a last look at his dearest joy. I used as a boy to try and pass that window at nine, and I know a prayer was said for the inhabitant of yonder chamber. She knew my holidays and my hours of going to school and returning thence. If my little maid hung certain signals in that window (such as a flower, for example, to indicate all was well, a cross curtain, and so forth), I hope she practiced no very unjustifiable stratagems. We agreed to consider that she was a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, and we had few means of communication save these simple artifices, which are allowed to be fair in love and war. M. de la Motte continued to live at our house when his frequent affairs did not call him away thence; but, as I said, few words passed between us after that angry altercation already described, and he and I were never friends again.

He warned me that I had another enemy, and facts strangely confirmed the chevalier's warning. One Sunday night as I was going to school a repetition of the brickbat assault was made upon me, and this time the smart cocked hat which mother had given me came in for such a battering as effectually spoiled its modish shape. I told Dr. Barnard of this second attempt, and the good doctor was not a little puzzled. He began to think that he was not so very wrong in espying a beam in Joseph Weston's eye. We agreed to keep the matter quiet, however, and a fortnight after, on another Sunday evening, as I was going on my accustomed route to school, whom should I meet but the doctor and Mr. Weston walking together! A little way beyond the town gate there is a low wall round a field, and Dr. Barnard, going by this field a quarter of an hour before my usual time for passing, found Mr. Joseph Weston walking there behind the stone inclosure!

'Good-night, Denny,' says the doctor when he and his companion met me; but surly Mr. Weston said nothing. 'Have you had any more brickbats at your head, my boy?' the rector continued.

I said I was not afraid. I had got a good pistol and a bullet in it this time.

'He shot that scoundrel on the same day you were shot, Mr. Weston,' says the doctor.

'Did he?' growls the other.

'And your gun was loaded with the same sized shot which Denis used to pepper his rascal,' continues the doctor. 'I wonder if any of the rascal's wound?'

'Sir,' said Mr. Weston, with an oath, 'what do you mean for to hint?'

'The very oath the fellow used whom Denny hit when your brother and I traveled together. I am sorry to hear you use the language of such scoundrels, Mr. Weston.'

'If you dare to suspect me of anything unbecoming a gentleman I'll have the law of you, Mr. Parson, that I will!' roars the other.

'Denis, mon garçon, tire ton pistolet de suite, et vise moi bien cet homme là,' says the doctor; and gripping hold of Weston's arm, what does Dr. Barnard do but plunge his hand into Weston's pocket, and draw thence another pistol! He said afterward he saw the brass butt sticking out of Weston's coat as the two were walking together.

'What!' shrieks Mr. Weston, 'is that young miscreant to go about armed, and tell everybody he will murder me; and aint I for to defend myself? I walk in fear of my life for him!'

'You seem to me to be in the habit of traveling with pistols, Mr. Weston, and you know when people pass sometimes with money in their post chaises.'

'You scoundrel, you—you boy! I call you to witness the words this man have spoken. He have insulted me, and libeled me, and I'll have the lor on him as sure as I am born!' shouts the angry man.

'Very good, Mr. Joseph Weston,' replied the other fiercely. 'And I will ask Mr. Blades, the surgeon, to bring the shot which he took from your eye, and the scraps of crape adhering to your face, and we will go to lor as soon as you like!'

Again I thought with a dreadful pang how Agnes was staying in that man's house, and how this quarrel would more than ever divide her from me; for now she would not be allowed to visit the rectory—the dear neutral ground where I sometimes hoped to see her.
Weston never went to law with the doctor, as he threatened. Some awkward questions would have been raised, which he would have found a difficulty in answering; and though he averred that his accident took place on the day before our encounter with the beau masque on Dartford Common, a little witness on our side was ready to aver that Mr. Joe Weston left his house at the Priory before sunrise on the day when we took our journey to London, and that he returned the next morning with his eye bound up, when he sent for Mr. Blades, the surgeon of our town. Being awake, and looking from her window, my witness saw Weston mount his horse by the stable lantern below, and heard him swear at the groom as he rode out at the gate. Curses used to drop naturally out of this nice gentleman's lips; and it is certain in his case that bad words and bad actions went together.

The Westons were frequently absent from home, as was the chevalier our lodger. My dear little Agnes was allowed to come and see us at these times; or slipped out by the garden door, and ran to see her nurse Duval, as she always called my mother. I did not understand for a while that there was any prohibition on the Westons' part to Agnes' visiting us, or know that there was such mighty wrath harbored against me in that house.

I was glad, for the sake of a peaceable life at home, as for honesty's sake too, that my mother did not oppose my determination to take no share in that smuggling business in which our house still engaged. Anyone who opposed mother in her own house had, I promise you, no easy time; but she saw that if she wished to make a gentleman of her boy he must be no smuggler's apprentice; and when M. le Chevalier, being appealed to, shrugged his shoulders and said he washed his hands of me—'Eh bien, M. de la Motte!' says she, 'we shall see if we can't pass ourselves of you and your patronage. I imagine that people are not always the better for it.' 'No,' replied he, with a groan, and one of his gloomy looks, 'my friendship may do people harm, but my enmity is worse—entendez-vous?' 'Bah, bah!' says the stout old lady. 'Denisot has a good courage of his own. What do you say to me about enmity to a harmless boy, M. le Chevalier?'

I have told how, on the night of the funeral of Mme. de Saverne, M. de la Motte sent me out to assemble his mackerel men. Among these was the father of one of my town playfellows, by name Hookham, a seafaring man, who had met with an accident at his business—strained his back—and was incapable of work for a time. Hookham was an improvident man; the rent got into arrears. My grandfather was his landlord, and I fear me not the most humane creditor in the world. Now when I returned home after my famous visit to London, my patron, Sir Peter Denis, gave me two guineas, and my lady made me a present of another. No doubt I should have spent this money had I received it sooner in London; but in our little town of Winchelsea there was nothing to tempt me in the shops, except a fowling piece at the pawnbroker's, for which I had a great longing. But Mr. Triboulet wanted four guineas for the gun, and I had but three, and would not go into debt. He would have given me the piece on credit, and frequently tempted me with it, but I resisted manfully, though I could not help hankering about the shop, and going again and again to look at the beautiful gun. The stock fitted my shoulder to a nicety. It was of the most beautiful workmanship. 'Why not take it now, Master Duval?' M. Triboulet said to me; 'and pay me the remaining guinea when you please. Ever so many gentlemen have been to look at it; and I should be sorry now, indeed I should, to see such a beauty go out of the town.' As I was talking to Triboulet (it may have been for the tenth time), someone came in with a telescope to pawn, and went away with fifteen shillings. 'Don't you know who that is?' says Triboulet (who was a chatterbox of a man). 'That is John Hookham's wife. It is but hard times with them since John's accident. I have more of their goods here, and, entre nous, John has a hard landlord, and quarter-day is just at hand.' I knew well enough that John's landlord was hard, as he was my own grandfather. 'If I take my three pieces to Hookham,' thought I, 'he may find the rest of the rent.' And so he did; and my three guineas went into my grandfather's pocket out of mine; and I suppose someone else bought the fowling piece for which I had so longed.

'What, it is you who have given me this money, Master Denis?' says poor Hookham, who was sitting in his chair, groaning and haggard with his illness. 'I can't take it—I ought not to take it.'

'Nay,' said I; 'I should only have bought a toy with it, and if it comes to help you in distress, I can do without my plaything.' There was quite a chorus of benedictions from the poor family in consequence of this act of good nature; and I dare say I went away from Hookham's mightily pleased with myself and my own virtue.

It appears I had not been gone long when Mr. Joe Weston came in to see the man, and when he heard that I had relieved him, broke out into a flood of abuse against me, cursed me for a scoundrel and impertinent jackanapes, who was always giving myself the airs of a gentleman, and flew out of the house in a passion. Mother heard of the transaction too, and pinched my ear with a grim satisfaction. Grandfather said nothing, but pocketed my three guineas when Mrs. Hookham brought them; and, though I did not brag about the matter much, everything is known in a small town, and I got a great deal of credit for a very ordinary good action.

And now, strangely enough, Hookham's boy confirmed to me what the Slindon priests had hinted to good Dr. Barnard. 'Swear,' says Tom (with that wonderful energy we used to have as boys)—'swear, Denis, "So help you, strike you down dead!" you never will tell!'

'So help me, strike me down dead!' said I.

'Well, then, those—you know who—the gentlemen—want to do you some mischief.'

'What mischief can they do to an honest boy?' I asked.

'Oh, you don't know what they are,' says Tom. 'If they mean a man harm, harm will happen to him. Father says no man ever comes to good who stands in Mr. Joe's way. Where's John Wheeler of Rye, who had a quarrel with Mr. Joe? He's in jail. Mr. Barnes of Playden had words with him at Hastings market; and Barnes' ricks were burnt down before six months were over. How was Thomas Berry taken, after deserting from the man-of-war? He is an awful man, Mr. Joe Weston is. Don't get into his way. Father says so. But you are not to tell—no, never, that he spoke about it. Don't go alone to Rye of nights, father says. Don't go on any—and you know what not—any fishing business, except with those you know.' And so Tom leaves me with a finger to his lip and terror in his face.

As for the fishing, though I loved a sail dearly, my mind was made up by good Dr. Barnard's advice to me. I would have no more night fishing such as I had seen sometimes as a boy; and when Rudge's apprentice one night invited me, and called me a coward for refusing to go, I showed him I was no coward as far as fisticuffs went, and stood out a battle with him, in which I do believe I should have proved conqueror, though the fellow was four years my senior, had not his ally, Miss Sukey Rudge, joined him in the midst of our fight, and knocked me down with the kitchen bellows, when they both belabored me as I lay kicking on the ground. Mr. Elder Rudge came in at the close of this dreadful combat, and his abandoned hussy of a daughter had the impudence to declare that the quarrel arose because I was rude to her—I, an innocent boy, who would as soon have made love to a negress as to that hideous, pock-marked, squinting, crooked, tipsy Sukey Rudge. I fall in love with Miss Squintum, indeed! I knew a pair of eyes at home so bright, innocent, and pure that I should have been ashamed to look in them had I been guilty of such a rascally treason. My little maid of Winchelsea heard of this battle, as she was daily hearing slanders against me from those worthy Mr. Westons; but she broke into a rage at the accusation, and said to the assembled gentlemen (as she told my good mother in after days), 'Denis Duval is not wicked. He is brave and he is good. And it is not true, the story you tell against him. It is a lie!'

And now once more it happened that my little pistol helped to confound my enemies, and was to me, indeed, a gute Wehr und Waffen. I was forever popping at marks with this little piece of artillery. I polished, oiled, and covered it with the utmost care, and kept it in my little room in a box of which I had the key. One day, by a most fortunate chance, I took my schoolfellow, Tom Parrot, who became a great cryon of mine, into the room. We went upstairs, by the private door of Rudge's house, and not through the shop, where Mademoiselle Figs and monsieur the apprentice were serving their customers; and arrived in my room, we boys opened my box, examined the precious pistol, screw, barrel, flints, powder horn, etc., locked the box, and went away to school, promising ourselves a good afternoon's sporton that half-holiday. Lessons over, I returned home to dinner, to find black looks from all the inmates of the house where I lived, from the grocer, his daughter, his apprentice, and even the little errand boy who blacked the boots and swept the shop stared at me impertinently, and said, 'Oh, Denis, aint you going to catch it!'

'What is the matter?' I asked very haughtily.

'Oh, my lord! we'll soon show your lordship what is the matter.' (This was a silly nickname I had in the town and at school, where I believe I gave myself not a few airs since I had worn my fine new clothes, and paid my visit to London.)

'This accounts for his laced waistcoat, and his guineas which he flings about. Does your lordship know these here shillings, and this half crown? Look at them, Mr. Beales! See the marks on them which I scratched with my own hand before I put them into the till from which my lord took 'em.'
Shillings—till? What did they mean? 'How dare you ask, you little hypocrite!' screams out Miss Rudge. 'I marked them shillings and that half crown with my own needle, I did; and of that I can take my Bible oath.'

'Well, and what then?' I asked, remembering how this young woman had not scrupled to bear false witness in another charge against me.

'What then? They were in the till this morning, young fellow; and you know well enough where they were found afterward,' says Mr. Beales. 'Come, come! This is a bad job. This is a sessions job, my lad.'

'But where were they found?' again I asked.

'We'll tell you that before Squire Boroughs and the magistrates, you young vagabond!'

'You little viper, that have turned and stung me!'

'You precious young scoundrel!'

'You wicked little story-telling, good-for-nothing little thief,' crys Rudge, the apprentice, and Miss Rudge in a breath. And I stood bewildered by their outcry, and, indeed, not quite comprehending the charge which they made against me.

'The magistrates are sitting at townhall now. We will take the little villain thereat once,' says the grocer. 'You bring the box along with you, constable. Lord! Lord! what will his poor grandfathers say?' And, wondering still at the charge made against me, I was made to walk through the streets to the town hall, passing on the way by at least a score of our boys, who were enjoying their half holiday. It was market day, too, and the town full. It is forty years ago, but I dream about that dreadful day still; and, an old gentleman of sixty, fancy myself walking through Ryemarket, with Mr. Beales' fist clutching my collar!

A number of our boys joined this dismal procession, and accompanied me into the magistrates' room. 'Denis Duval up for stealing money!' cries one. 'This accounts for his fine clothes,' sneers another. 'He'll be hung,' says a third. The market people stare and crowd round and jeer. I feel as if in a horrible nightmare. We pass under the pillars of the market house, up the steps to the town hall, where the magistrates were, who chose market day for their sittings.

How my heart throbbed as I saw my dear Dr. Barnard seated among them.

'Oh, doctor,' cries poor Denis, clasping his hands, 'you don't believe me guilty?'

'Guilty of what?' cries the doctor, from the raised table round which the gentlemen sat.
'Guilty of stealing.'
'Guilty of robbing my till.'
'Guilty of taking two half crowns, three shillings, and two pence in copper, all marked,' shriek out Rudge, the apprentice, and Miss Rudge in a breath.
'Denny Duval steal sixpences!' cries the doctor. 'I would as soon believe he stole the dragon off the church steeple!'
'Silence, you boys! Silence in the court, there; or flog 'em and turn 'em all out,' says the magistrates' clerk. Some of our boys—friends of mine—who had crowded into the place, were hurringay at my kind Dr. Barnard's speech.
'It is a most serious charge,' says the clerk.
'But what is the charge, my good Mr. Hickson? You might as well put me into the dock as that—'
'Pray, sir, will you allow the business of the court to go on?' asks the clerk testily. 'Make your statement, Mr. Rudge, and don't be afraid of anybody. You are under the protection of the court, sir.'

And now for the first time I heard the particulars of the charge made against me. Rudge, and his daughter after him, stated (on oath, I am shocked to say) that for some time past they had missed money from the till; small sums of money, in shillings and half crowns, they could not say how much. It might be two pounds, three pounds, in all; but the money was constantly going. At last Miss Rudge said she was determined to mark some money, and did so; and that money was found in that box which belonged to Denis Duval, and which the constable brought into court.
'Oh, gentlemen!' I cried out in agony, 'it's a wicked, wicked lie, and it's not the first she has told about me. A week ago she said I wanted to kiss her, and she and Bevil both set on me, and I never wanted to kiss the nasty thing, so help me——'
'You did, you lying wicked boy!' cries Miss Sukey. 'And Edward Bevil came to my rescue; and you struck me, like a low mean coward; and we beat him well, and served him right, the little abandoned boy.'
'And he kicked one of my teeth out—you did, you little villain!' roars Bevil, whose jaws had indeed suffered in that scuffle in the kitchen, when his precious sweetheart came to his aid with the bellows.
'He called me a coward, and I fought him fair, though he is ever so much older than me,' whimpers out the prisoner. 'And Sukey Rudge set upon me, and beat me too; and if I kicked him, he kicked me.'
Evidence for the defence.
'And since this kicking match they have found out that you stole their money, have they?' says the doctor, and turns round, appealing to his brother magistrates.

'Miss Rudge, please to tell the rest of your story?' calls out the justices' clerk.

The rest of the Rudges' story was that, having their suspicions roused against me, they determined to examine my cupboards and boxes in my absence to see whether the stolen objects were to be found, and in my box they discovered the two marked half crowns, the three marked shillings, and a brass-barreled pistol, which were now in court. 'Me and Mr. Bevil, the apprentice, found the money in the box; and we called my papa from the shop, and we fetched Mr. Beales, the constable, who lives over the way; and when the little monster came back from school we seized upon him and brought him before your worship, and hanging is what I said he would always come to,' shrieks my enemy Miss Rudge.

'Why, I have the key of that box in my pocket now!' I cried out.

'We had means of opening it,' says Miss Rudge, looking very red.

'Oh, if you have another key——' interposes the doctor.

'We broke it open with the tongs and poker,' says Miss Rudge, 'me and Edward did—I mean Mr. Bevil, the apprentice.'

'When?' said I in a great tremor.

'When? When you was at school, you little miscreant! Half an hour before you came back to dinner.'

'Tom Parrot, Tom Parrot!' I cried. 'Call Tom Parrot, gentlemen. For goodness' sake, call Tom!' I said, my heart beating so that I could hardly speak.

'Here I am, Denny!' pipes Tom in the crowd, and presently he comes up to their honors on the bench.

'Speak to Tom, doctor, dear Dr. Barnard!' I continued. 'Tom, when did I show you my pistol?'

'Just before ten o'clock school.'

'What did I do?'

'You unlocked your box, took the pistol out of a handkerchief, showed it to me, and two flints, a powder horn, a bullet mold, and some bullets, and put them back again and locked the box.'

'Was there any money in the box?'

'There was nothing in the box but the pistol and the bullets and things. I looked into it. It was as empty as my hand.'

'And Denis Duval has been sitting by you in school ever since?'
DENIS DUVAL.

Ever since—except when I was called up and caned for my Corderius," says Tom, with a roguish look; and there was a great laughter and shout of applause from our boys of Pocock's when this testimony was given in their school-fellow's favor.

My kind doctor held his hand over the railing to me, and when I took it my heart was so full that my eyes overflowed. I thought of little Agnes. What would she have felt if her Denis had been committed as a thief? I had such a rapture of thanks and gratitude that I think the pleasure of the acquittal was more than equivalent to the anguish of the accusation. What a shout all Pocock's boys set up as I went out of the justice room! We trooped joyfully down the stairs, and there were fresh shouts and huzzazys as we got down to the market. I saw Mr. Joe Weston buying corn at a stall. He only looked at me once. His grinding teeth and his clenched riding whip did not frighten me in the least now.

CHAPTER VII.

THE LAST OF MY SCHOOL DAYS.

As our joyful procession of boys passed by Partlett's the pastry cook's, one of the boys—Samuel Arbin—I remember the fellow well—a greedy boy, with a large beard and whiskers, though only fifteen years old—insisted that I ought to stand treat in consequence of my victory over my enemies. As far as a groat went, I said I was ready; for that was all the money I had.

'Oh, you story-teller!' cries the other. 'What have you done with your three guineas which you were bragging about and showing to the boys at school? I suppose they were in the box when it was broken open.' This Samuel Arbin was one of the boys who had jeered when I was taken in charge by the constable, and would have liked me to be guilty, I almost think. I am afraid I had bragged about my money when I possessed it, and may have shown my shining gold pieces to some of the boys in school.

'I know what he has done with his money!' broke in my steadfast crony Tom Parrot. 'He has given away every shilling of it to a poor family who wanted it, and nobody ever knew you give away a shilling, Samuel Arbin,' he says.

'Unless he could get eighteenpence by it!' sang out another little voice.

'Tom Parrot, I'll break every bone in your body, as sure as my name is Arbin!' cried the other in a fury.
‘Sam Arbin,’ said I, ‘after you have finished Tom you must try me; or we’ll do it now, if you like.’ To say the truth, I had long had an inclination to try my hand against Arbin. He was an ill friend to me, and among the younger boys a bully and a usurer to boot. The rest called out, ‘A ring! a ring! Let us go on the green and have it out!’ being in their innocent years always ready for a fight.

But this one was never to come off; and (except in later days, when I went to revisit the old place, and ask for a half holiday for my young successors at Pocock’s) I was never again to see the ancient schoolroom. While we boys were brawling in the market place before the pastry cook’s door, Dr. Barnard came up, and our quarrel was hushed in a moment.

‘What! fighting and quarreling already?’ says the doctor sternly.

‘It wasn’t Denny’s fault, sir!’ cried out several of the boys. ‘It was Arbin began.’ And, indeed, I can say for myself that in all the quarrels I have had in life—and they have not been few—I consider I always have been in the right.

‘Come along with me, Denny,’ says the doctor, taking me by the shoulder; and he led me away and we took a walk in the town together, and as we passed old Ypres Tower, which was built by King Stephen, they say, and was a fort in old days, but is used as the town prison now, ‘Suppose you had been looking from behind those bars now, Denny, and awaiting your trial at assizes? Yours would not have been a pleasant plight,’ Dr. Barnard said.

‘But I was innocent, sir! You know I was!’

‘Yes. Praise be where praise is due. But if you had not providentially been able to prove your innocence—if you and your friend Parrot had not happened to inspect your box, you would have been in yonder place. Ha! there is the bell ringing for afternoon service, which my good friend Dr. Wing keeps up. What say you? Shall we go and—and—offer up our thanks, Denny—for the—the immense peril from which—you have been—delivered!’

I remember how my dear friend’s voice trembled as he spoke, and two or three drops fell from his kind eyes on my hand, which he held. I followed him into the church. Indeed and indeed I was thankful for my deliverance from a great danger, and even more thankful to have the regard of the true gentleman, the wise and tender friend, who was there to guide and cheer and help me.

As we read the last psalm appointed for that evening service, I remember how the good man, bowing his own head, put his hand upon mine, and we recited together the psalm of thanks to the Highest, who had had respect unto the lowly, and who had stretched forth his hand upon the furiousness of my enemies, and whose right hand had saved me.

Dr. Wing recognized and greeted his comrade when service was over; and the one doctor presented me to the other, who had been one of the magistrates on the bench at the time of my trial. Dr. Wing asked us into his house, where dinner was served at four o’clock, and of course the transactions of the morning were again discussed. What could be the reason of the persecution against me? Who instigated it? There were matters connected with this story regarding which I could not speak. Should I do so, I must betray secrets which were not mine, and which implicated I knew not whom, and regarding which I must hold my peace. Now they are secrets no more. That old society of smugglers is dissolved long ago: nay, I shall have to tell presently how I helped myself to break it up. Grandfather, Rudge, the chevalier, the gentlemen of the Priory, were all connected in that great smuggling society of which I have spoken, which had its depots all along the coast and inland, and its correspondents from Dunkirk to Havre de Grace. I have said as a boy how I had been on some of these ‘fishing’ expeditions, and how, mainly by the effect of my dear doctor’s advice, I had withdrawn from all participation in this lawless and wicked life. When Bevil called me coward for refusing to take a share in a night cruise, a quarrel ensued between us, ending in that battle royal which left us all sprawling, and cuffing and kicking each other on the kitchen floor. Was it rage at the injury to her sweetheart’s teeth, or hatred against myself, which induced my sweet Miss Sukey to propagate calumnies against me? The provocation I had given certainly did not seem to warrant such a deadly enmity as, a prosecution and a perjury showed must exist. Howbeit, there was a reason for the anger of the grocer’s daughter and apprentice. They would injure me in any way they could; and (as in the before-mentioned case of the bellows) take the first weapon at hand to overthrow me.

As magistrates of the county, and knowing a great deal of what was happening round about them, and the character of their parishioners and neighbors, the two gentlemen could not, then, press me too closely. Smuggled silk and lace, rum and brandy? Who had not these in his possession along the Sussex and Kent coast? ‘And, Wing, will you promise me there are no ribbons in your house but such as have paid duty?' asks one doctor of the other.

'My good friend, it is lucky my wife has gone to her tea table,' replies Dr. Wing, 'or I would not answer for the peace being kept.'

'My dear Wing,' continues Dr. Barnard, 'this brandy punch is excellent and is worthy of being smuggled. To run an anker of brandy seems no monstrous crime, but when men engage in these lawless ventures at all who knows how far the evil will go? I buy ten kegs of brandy from a French fishing boat, I land it under a lie on the coast, I send it inland ever so far, be it from here to York, and all my consignees lie and swindle. I land it, and lie to the revenue officer. Under a lie (that is, a mutual secrecy) I sell it to the landlord of The Bell at Maidstone, say—where a good friend of ours, Denny, looked at his pistols. You remember the day when his brother received the charge of shot in his face! My landlord sells it to a customer under a lie. We are all engaged in crime, conspiracy, and falsehood; nay, if the revenue looks too closely after us, we out with our pistols, and to crime and conspiracy add murder. Do you suppose men engaged in lying every day will scruple about a false oath in a witness box? Crime engenders crime, sir. Round about us, Wing, I know there exists a vast confederacy of fraud, greed, and rebellion. I name no names, sir. I fear men high placed in the world's esteem, and largely endowed with its riches too, are concerned in the pursuit of this godless traffic of smuggling, and to what does it not lead them? To falsehood, to wickedness, to murder, to——'

'Tea, sir, if you please, sir,' says John, entering. 'My mistress and the young ladies are waiting.'

The ladies had previously heard the story of poor Dennis Duval's persecution and innocence, and had shown him great kindness. By the time when we joined them after dinner they had had time to perform a new toilet, being engaged to cards with some neighbors. I knew Mrs. Wing was a customer to my mother for some of her French goods, and she would scarcely, on an ordinary occasion, have admitted such a lowly guest to her table as the humble dressmaker's boy; but she and the ladies were very kind, and my persecution and proved innocence had interested them in my favor.

'You have had a long sitting, gentlemen,' says Mrs. Wing; 'I suppose you have been deep in politics, and the quarrel with France.'
'We have been speaking of France and French goods, my dear,' said Dr. Wing dryly.

'And of the awful crime of smuggling and encouraging smuggling, my dear Mrs. Wing!' cried my doctor.

'Indeed, Dr. Barnard!' Now Mrs. Wing and the young ladies were dressed in smart new caps, and ribbons, which my poor mothers supplied; and they turned red, and I turned as red as the cap-ribbons, as I thought how my good ladies had been provided. No wonder Mrs. Wing was desirous to change the subject of conversation.

'What is this young man to do after his persecution?' she asked. 'He can't go back to Mr. Rudge—that horrid Wesleyan who has accused him of stealing.'

No, indeed, I could not go back. We had not thought about the matter until then. There had been a hundred things to agitate and interest me in the half dozen hours since my apprehension and dismissal.

The doctor would take me to Winchelsea in his chaise. I could not go back to my persecutors, that was clear, except to reclaim my little property and my poor little boxes, which they had found means to open. Mrs. Wing gave me a hand, the young ladies a stately courtesy; and my good Dr. Barnard putting a hand under the arm of the barber's grandson, we quitted these kind people. I was not on the quarter-deck as yet, you see. I was but a humble lad belonging to ordinary tradesmen.

By the way, I had forgotten to say that the two clergymen, during their after dinner talk, had employed a part of it in examining me as to my little store of learning at school, and my future prospects. Of Latin I had a smattering; French, owing to my birth, and mainly to M. de la Motte's instruction and conversation, I could speak better than either of my two examiners, and with quite the good manner and conversation. I was well advanced, too, in arithmetic and geometry; and Dampier's Voyages were as much my delight as those of Sinbad or my friends Robinson Crusoe and Man Friday. I could pass a good examination in navigation and seamanship, and could give an account of the different sailings, working tides, double altitudes, and so forth.

'And you can manage a boat at sea too?' says Dr. Barnard dryly. I blushed, I suppose. I could do that, and could steer, reef, and pull an oar. At least I could do so two years ago.

'Denny, my boy,' says my good doctor, 'I think 'tis time for thee to leave this school at any rate, and that our friend Sir Peter must provide for thee.'
However he may desire to improve in learning, no boy, I fancy, is very sorry when a proposal is made to him to leave school. I said that I should be too glad if Sir Peter, my patron, would provide for me. With the education I had, I ought to get on, the doctor said, and my grandfather he was sure would find the means for allowing me to appear like a gentleman.

To fit a boy for appearance on the quarter-deck, and to enable him to rank with others, I had heard would cost thirty or forty pounds a year at least. I asked, Did Dr. Barnard think my grandfather could afford such a sum?

'I know not your grandfather's means,' Dr. Barnard answered, smiling. 'He keeps his own counsel. But I am very much mistaken, Denny, if he cannot afford to make you a better allowance than many a fine gentleman can give his son. I believe him to be rich. Mind, I have no precise reason for my belief; but I fancy, Master Denis, your good grandpapa's fishing has been very profitable to him.'

How rich was he? I began to think of the treasures in my favorite 'Arabian Nights,' Did Dr. Barnard think grandfather was very rich? Well—the doctor could not tell. The notion in Winchelsea was that old Mr. Peter was very well to do. At any rate I must go back to him. It was impossible that I should stay with the Rudge family after the insulting treatment I had had from them. The doctor said he would take me home with him in his chaise if I would pack my little trunks; and with this talk we reach Rudge's shop, which I entered not without a beating heart. There was Rudge glaring at me from behind his desk, where he was posting his books. The apprentice looked daggers at me as he came up through a trapdoor from the cellar with a string of dip candles; and my charming Miss Susan was behind the counter tossing up her ugly head.

'Ho! he's come back, have he?' says Miss Rudge. 'As all the cupboards is locked in the parlor, you can go in, and get your tea there, young man.'

'I am going to take Denis home, Mr. Rudge,' said my kind doctor. 'He cannot remain with you after the charge which you made against him this morning.'

'Of having our marked money in his box? Do you go for to dare for to say we put it there?' cries miss, glaring now at me, now at Dr. Barnard. 'Go to say that! Please to say that once, Dr. Barnard, before Mrs. Barker and Mrs. Scales' (these were two women who happened to be in the shop purchasing goods). 'Just be so good for to say before these ladies that we have put the money in that boy's box, and we'll see whether there is not justice in Hengland for a poor girl whom you insult, because you are a doctor and a magistrate indeed! Eh, if I was a man I wouldn't let some people's gowns and cassocks, and bands remain long on their backs—that I wouldn't. And some people wouldn't see a woman insulted if they wasn't cowards!' As she said this Miss Sukey looked at the cellar trap, above which the apprentice's head had appeared, but the doctor turned also toward it with a glance so threatening that Bevil let the trap fall suddenly down, not a little to my doctor's amusement.

'Go and pack thy trunk, Denny. I will come back for thee in half an hour. Mr. Rudge must see that after being so insulted as you have been you never as a gentleman can stay in this house.'

'A pretty gentleman, indeed!' ejaculates Miss Rudge. 'Pray how long since was barber's gentlemen, I should like to know? Mrs. Scales, mum, Mrs. Barker, mum—did you ever have your hair dressed by a gentleman? If you want for to have it you must go to Mounseer Duval at Winchelsea, which one of the name was hung, Mrs. Barker, mum, for a thief and a robber, and he won't be the last neither!'

There was no use in bandying abuse with this woman. 'I will go and get my trunk and be ready, sir,' I said to the doctor; but his back was no sooner turned than the raging virago opposite me burst out with a fury of words that I certainly can't remember after five-and-forty years. I fancy I see now the little green eyes gleaming hatred at me, the lean arms akimbo, the feet stamping as she hisses out every imaginable imprecation at my poor head.

'Will no man help me, and stand by and see that barber's boy insult me?' she cried. 'Bevil, I say—Bevil! 'Elp me!'

I ran upstairs to my little room, and was not twenty minutes in making up my packages. I had passed years in that little room, and somehow grieved to leave it. The odious people had injured me, and yet I would have liked to part friends with them. I had passed delightful nights there in the company of Robinson Crusoe, Mariner, and M. Galland and his Contes Arabes, and Hector of Troy, whose adventures and lamentable death (out of Mr. Pope) I could recite by heart; and I had had weary nights, too, with my schoolbooks, cramming that crabbled Latin grammar into my puzzled brain. With arithmetic, logarithms, and mathematics I have said I was more familiar. I took a pretty good place in our school with them, and ranked before many boys of greater age.

And now my boxes being packed (my little library being stowed away in that which contained my famous pistol), I brought them downstairs with nobody to help me, and had them in the passage ready against Dr. Barnard's arrival. The passage is behind the back shop at Rudge's (dear me! how well I remember it!), and a door thence leads into a side street. On the other side of this passage is the kitchen, where had been the fight which has been described already, and where we commonly took our meals.

I declare I went into that kitchen disposed to part friends with all these people—to forgive Miss Sukey her lies and Bevil his cuffs, and all the past quarrels between us. Old Rudge was by the fire, having his supper, Miss Sukey opposite to him. Bevil, as yet, was minding the shop.

'I am come to shake hands before going away,' I said.

'You're a-going, are you? And pray, sir, whereher are you a-going of?' says Miss Sukey, over her tea.

'I am going home with Dr. Barnard. I can't stop in this house after you have accused me of stealing your money.'

'Stealing! Wasn't the money in your box, you little beastly thief?'

'Oh, you young reprobate, I am surprised the bears don't come in and eat you,' groans old Rudge. 'You have shortened my life with your wickedness, that you have; and if you don't bring your good grandfather's gray hairs in sorrow to the grave I shall be surprised, that I shall. You, who come of a pious family—I tremble when I think of you, Denis Duval!'

'Tremble! Faugh! the wicked little beast! he makes me sick, he do!' cries Miss Sukey, with looks of genuine loathing.

'Let him depart from among us!' cries Rudge.

'Never do I wish to see his ugly face again!' exclaims the gentle Susan.

'I am going as soon as Dr. Barnard's chaise comes,' I said.

'My boxes are in the passage now, ready packed.'

'Ready packed, are they? Is there any more of our money in them, you little miscreant? Pa, is your silver tankard in the cupboard, and is the spoons safe?'

I think poor Sukey had been drinking to drive away the mortifications of the morning in the court house. She became more excited and violent with every word she spoke, and shrieked and clenched her fists at me like a madwoman.

'Susanna, you have had false witness bore against you, my child; and you are not the first of your name. But be calm, be calm; it's our duty to be calm!'

'Eh!' (here she gives a grunt). 'Calm with that sneak—that pig—that liar—that beast! Where's Edward Bevil? Why don't he come forward like a man, and flog the young scoundrel's life out?' shrieks Susanna. 'Oh, with this here horsewhip how I would like to give it you!' (She clutched her father's whip from the dresser, where it commonly hung on two hooks.)
'Oh, you—you villain! you have got your pistol, have you?
Shoot me, you little coward, I aint afraid of you! You have your pistol in your box, have you?' (I uselessly said as much in reply to this taunt.) 'Stop! I say, pa—that young thief isn't going away with them boxes, and robbing the whole house as he may. Open the boxes this instant! We'll see he's stole nothing! Open them, I say!'

I said I would do nothing of the kind. My blood was boiling up at this brutal behavior; and as she dashed out of the room to seize one of my boxes I put myself before her, and sat down on it.

This was assuredly a bad position to take, for the furious vixen began to strike me and lash at my face with the riding whip, and it was more than I could do to wrench it from her.

Of course at this act of defense on my part Miss Sukey yelled for help, and called out, 'Edward! Ned Bevil! The coward is a-striking me! Help, Ned!' At this, the shop door flies open, and Sukey's champion is about to rush on me, but he breaks down over my other box with a crash of his shins, and frightful execrations. His nose is prone on the pavement; Miss Sukey is wildly laying about her with her horsewhip (and I think Bevil's jacket came in for most of the blows); we are all higgledy-piggledy, plunging and scuffling in the dark—when a carriage drives up, which I had not heard in the noise of action; and as the hall door opened, I was pleased to think that Dr. Barnard had arrived, according to his promise.

It was not the doctor. The newcomer wore a gown, but not a cassock. Soon after my trial before the magistrates was over, our neighbor, John Jephson of Winchelsea, mounted his cart and rode home from Rye market. He straightway went to our house, and told my mother of the strange scene which had just occurred, and of my accusation before the magistrates and acquittal. She begged, she ordered Jephson to lend her his cart. She seized whip and reins; she drove over to Rye; and I don't envy Jephson's old gray mare that journey with such a charioteer behind her. The door, opening from the street, flung light into the passage; and behold, we three warriors were sprawling on the floor in the higgledy-piggledy stage of the battle as my mother entered!
What a scene for a mother with a strong arm, a warm heart, and a high temper! Mme. Duval rushed instantly at Miss Susan, and tore her shrieking from my body, which fair Susan was pummeling with the whip. A part of Susan's cap and tufts of her red hair were torn off by this maternal amazon, and Susan was hurled through the open door into the kitchen, where she fell before her frightened father. I don't know how many blows my parent inflicted upon this creature. Mother might have slain her, but that the chaste Susanna, screaming shrilly, rolled under the deal kitchen table.

Mme. Duval had wrenched away from this young person the horsewhip with which Susan had been operating upon the shoulders of her only son, and snatched the weapon as her fallen foe dropped. And now my mamma, seeing old Mr. Rudge sitting in a ghastly state of terror in the corner, rushed at the grocer, and in one minute, with butt and thong, inflicted a score of lashes over his face, nose, and eyes, for which anybody who chooses may pity him. 'Ah, you will call my boy a thief, will you? Ah, you will take my Denny before the justices, will you? Prends moi ça, gredin! Attrape, lâche!' Nimmt noch ein paar Schläge, Spitzbube!' cries out mother, in that polyglot language of English, French, High Dutch, which she always used when excited. My good mother could shave and dress gentlemen's heads as well as any man; and faith I am certain that no man in all Europe got a better dressing than Mr. Rudge on that evening.

Bless me! I have written near a page to describe a battle which could not have lasted five minutes. Mother's cart was drawn up at the side street while she was victoriously engaged within. Meanwhile Dr. Barnard's chaise had come to the front door of the shop, and he strode through it, and found us conquerors in possession of both fields. Since my last battle with Bevil we both knew that I was more than a match for him. 'In the king's name, I charge you drop your daggers,' as the man says in the play. Our wars were over on the appearance of the man of peace. Mother left off plying the horsewhip over Rudge; Miss Sukey came out from under the table; Mr. Bevil rose, and slunk off to wash his bleeding face; and when the wretched Rudge whimpered out that he would have the law for this assault, the doctor sternly said, 'You were three to one during part of the battle, three to two afterward, and after your testimony to-day, you perjured old miscreant, do you suppose any magistrate will believe you?'

No. Nobody did believe them. A punishment fell on these bad people. I don't know who gave them the name, but Rudge and his daughter were called Ananias and Saphira in Rye; and from that day the old man's affairs seemed to turn to the bad. When our boys of Pocock's met the grocer, his daughter, or his apprentice the little miscreants would cry out, 'Who put the money in Denny's box?' 'Who bore false witness against his neighbor?' 'Kiss the book, Sukey, my dear, and tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, do you hear?' They had a dreadful life, that poor grocer's family. As for that rogue Tom Parrot, he comes into the shop one market day when the place was full, and asks for a penn'orth of sugar candy, in payment for which he offers a penny to old Rudge sitting at his books behind his high desk. 'It's a good bit of money,' says Tom (as bold as the brass which he was tendering). 'It ain't marked, Mr. Rudge, like Denny Duval's money!' And, no doubt, at a signal from the young reprobate, a chorus of boys posted outside began to sing 'Ananias, Ananias! He pretends to be so pious! Ananias and Saphia——' Well, well, the Saphia of these young wags was made to rhyme incorrectly with a word beginning with L. Nor was this the only punishment which befell the unhappy Rudge: Mrs. Wing and several of his chief patrons took away their custom from him and dealt henceforth with the opposition grocer. Not long after my affair Miss Sukey married the toothless apprentice, who got a bad bargain with her, sweetheart or wife. I shall have to tell presently what a penalty they (and some others) had to pay for their wickedness; and of an act of contrition on poor Miss Sukey's part, whom, I am sure, I heartily forgive. Then was cleared up that mystery (which I could not understand, that Dr. Barnard could not, or would not) of the persecutions directed against a humble lad who never, except in self-defense, did harm to any mortal.

I shouldered the trunks, causes of the late lamentable war, and put them into mother's cart, into which I was about to mount, but the shrewd old lady would not let me take a place beside her. 'I can drive well enough. Go thou in the chaise with the doctor. He can talk to thee better, my son, than an ignorant woman like me. Neighbor Jephson told me how the good gentleman stood by thee in the justice court. If ever I or mine can do anything to repay him, he may command me. Houp, Schimmel! Fort! Shalt soon be to house!' And with this she was off with my bag and baggage, as the night was beginning to fall.

I went out of the Rudges' house, into which I have never since set foot. I took my place in the chaise by my kind Dr. Barnard. We passed through Winchelsea gate, and dipped down into the marshy plain beyond, with bright glimpses of the Channel shining beside us, and the stars glittering overhead. We talked of the affair of the day, of course—the affair most interesting, that is, to me, who could think of nothing but magistrates and committals and acquittals. The doctor repeated his firm conviction that there was a great smuggling conspiracy all along the coast and neighborhood. Master Rudge was a member of the fraternity (which, indeed, I knew, having been out with his people once or twice, as I have told, to my shame). ‘Perhaps there were other people of my acquaintance who belonged to the same society?’ the doctor said dryly. ‘Gee up, Daisy! There were other people of my acquaintance, who were to be found at Winchelsea as well as at Rye. Your precious one-eyed enemy is in it; so, I have no doubt, is M. le Chevalier de la Motte; so is—can you guess the name of anyone besides, Denny?’

‘Yes, sir,’ I said sadly; I knew my own grandfather was engaged in that traffic. ‘But if—if others are, I promise you, on my honor, I never will embark in it,’ I added.

‘Twill be more dangerous now than it has been. There will be obstacles to crossing the Channel which the contraband gentlemen have not known for some time past. Have you not heard the news?’

‘What news?’ Indeed I had thought of none but my own affairs. A post had come in that very evening from London, bringing intelligence of no little importance even to poor me, as it turned out. And the news was that his Majesty the King, having been informed that a treaty of amity and commerce had been signed between the court of France and certain persons employed by his Majesty’s revolted subjects in North America, ‘has judged it necessary to send orders to his ambassador to withdraw from the French court . . . and relying with the firmest confidence upon the zealous and affectionate support of his faithful people, he is determined to prepare to exert, if it should be necessary, all the forces and resources of his kingdoms, which he trusts will be adequate to repel every insult and attack, and to maintain and uphold the power and reputation of this country.’

So as I was coming out of Rye court house, thinking of nothing but my enemies and my trials and my triumphs, post-boys were galloping all over the land to announce that we were at war with France. One of them, as we made our way home, clattered past us with his twanging horn, crying his news of war with France. As we wound along the plain, we could see the French lights across the Channel. My life has lasted for fifty years since then, and scarcely ever since, but for very, very brief intervals, has that baleful war-light ceased to burn.

The messenger who bore this important news arrived after we left Rye, but, riding at a much quicker pace than that which our doctor's nag practiced, overtook us ere we had reached our own town of Winchelsea. All our town was alive with the news in half an hour; and in the market place, the public houses, and from house to house people assembled and talked. So we were at war again with our neighbors across the Channel, as well as with our rebellious children in America; and the rebellious children were having the better of the parent at this time. We boys at Pocock's had fought the war stoutly and with great elation at first. Over our maps we had pursued the rebels, and beaten them in repeated encounters. We routed them on Long Island. We conquered them at Brandywine. We vanquished them gloriously at Bunker's Hill. We marched triumphantly into Philadelphia with Howe. We were quite bewildered when we had to surrender with General Burgoyne at Saratoga, being, somehow, not accustomed to hear of British armies surrendering, and British valor being beat. 'We had a half holiday for Long Island,' says Tom Parrot, sitting next to me in school. 'I suppose we shall be flogged all round for Saratoga.' As for those Frenchmen, we knew of their treason for a long time past, and were gathering up wrath against them. Protestant Frenchmen, it was agreed, were of a different sort; and I think the banished Huguenots of France have not been unworthy subjects of our new sovereign.

There was one dear little Frenchwoman in Winchelsea who I own was a sad rebel. When Mrs. Barnard, talking about the war, turned round to Agnes and said, 'Agnes, my child, on what side are you?' Mlle. de Barr blushed very red, and said, 'I am a French girl, and I am of the side of my country. Vive la France! vive le roi!'

'O Agnes! oh, you perverted, ungrateful little, little monster!' cries Mrs. Barnard, beginning to weep.

But the doctor, far from being angry, smiled and looked pleased; and making Agnes a mock reverence, he said, 'Mlle. de Saverne, I think a little Frenchwoman should be for France; and here is the tray, and we won't fight until after supper.' And as he spoke that night the prayer appointed by his Church for the time of war—prayed that we might be armed with His defense who is the only giver of all victory—I thought I never heard the good man's voice more touching and solemn.

When this daily and nightly ceremony was performed at the rectory, a certain little person who belonged to the Roman Catholic faith used to sit aloof, her spiritual instructors forbidding her to take part in our English worship. When it was over, and the doctor's household had withdrawn, Miss Agnes had a flushed, almost angry face.

'But what am I to do, Aunt Barnard?' said the little rebel.

'If I pray for you, I pray that my country may be conquered, and that you may be saved and delivered out of our hands.'

'No, faith, my child, I think we will not call upon thee for amen,' says the doctor, patting her cheek.

'I don't know why you should wish to prevail over my country,' whimpers the little maid. 'I am sure I won't pray that any harm may happen to you and Aunt Barnard and Denny—never, never!' And in a passion of tears, she buried her head against the breast of the good man, and we were all not a little moved.

Hand in hand we two young ones walked from the rectory to the Priory House, which was only too near. I paused ere I rang at the bell, still holding her wistful little hand in mine.

'You will never be my enemy, Denny, will you?' she said, looking up.

'My dear,' I faltered out, 'I will love you forever and ever!' I thought of the infant whom I brought home in my arms from the seashore, and once more my dearest maiden was held in them, and my heart throbbed with an exquisite bliss.

CHAPTER VIII.

I ENTER HIS MAJESTY'S NAVY.

I promise you there was no doubt or hesitation next Sunday regarding our good rector's opinions. Ever since the war with America began he had, to the best of his power, exhorted his people to be loyal, and testified to the authority of Caesar. 'War,' he taught, 'is not altogether an evil; and ordained of Heaven, as our illnesses and fevers doubtless are, for our good. It teaches obedience and contentment under privations; it fortifies courage; it tests loyalty; it gives occasion for showing mercifulness of heart; moderation in victory; endurance and cheerfulness under defeat. The brave who do battle victoriously in their country's cause leave a legacy of honor to their children. We English of the present day are the better for Crecy and Agincourt and Blenheim. I do not grudge the Scots their day of Bannockburn, nor the French their Fontenoy. Such valor proves the manhood of nations. When we have conquered the American rebellion, as I have no doubt we shall do, I trust it will be found that these rebellious children of ours have comported themselves in a manner becoming our English race, that they have been hardy and resolute, merciful and moderate. In that declaration of war against France, which has just reached us, and which interests all England, and the men of this coast especially, I have no more doubt in my mind that the right is on our side than I have that Queen Elizabeth had a right to resist the Spanish Armada. In an hour of almost equal peril I pray we may show the same watchfulness, constancy, and valor; bracing ourselves to do the duty before us, and leaving the issue to the Giver of all Victory.

Ere he left the pulpit our good rector announced that he would call a meeting for next market day in our town hall—a meeting of gentry, farmers, and seafaring men, to devise means for the defense of our coast and harbors. The French might be upon us any day; and all our people were in a buzz of excitement, volunteers and fencibles patrolling our shores, and fishermen's glasses forever on the lookout toward the opposite coast.

We had a great meeting in the town hall, and of the speakers it was who should be most loyal to king and country. Subscriptions for a defense fund were straightforwardly set afoot. It was determined the Cinque Port towns should raise a regiment of fencibles. In Winchelsea alone the gentry and chief tradesmen agreed to raise a troop of volunteer horse to patrol along the shore and communicate with depots of the regular military formed at Dover, Hastings, and Deal. The fishermen were enrolled to serve as coast and lookout men. From Margate to Folkestone the coast was watched and patrolled; and privateers were equipped and sent to sea from many of the ports along our line. On the French shore we heard of similar warlike preparations. The fishermen on either coast did not harm each other as yet, though presently they too fell to blows: and I have sad reason to know that a certain ancestor of mine did not altogether leave off his relations with his French friends.

However, at the meeting in the town hall, grandfather came forward with a subscription and a long speech. He said that he and his co-religionists and countrymen of France had now for near a century experienced British hospitality and freedom; that when driven from home by Papist persecution, they had found protection here; and that now was the time for French Protestants to show that they were grateful and faithful subjects of King George. Grandfather's speech was very warmly received; that old man had lungs, and a knack of speaking, which never failed him. He could spin out sentences by the yard, as I knew, who had heard him expound for half hours together with that droning voice which had long ceased (Heaven help me!) to carry conviction to the heart of grandfather's graceless grandson.

When he had done Mr. George Weston of the Priory spoke, and with a good spirit too. (He and my dear friend Mr. Joe were both present, and seated with the gentlefolks and magistrates at the raised end of the hall.) Mr. George said that as Mr. Duval had spoken for the French Protestants, he, for his part, could vouch for the loyalty of another body of men, the Roman Catholics of England. In the hour of danger he trusted that he and his brethren were as good subjects as any Protestants in the realm. And as a trifling test of his loyalty—though he believed his neighbor Duval was a richer man than himself (grandfather shrieked a 'No, no!' and there was a roar of laughter in the hall)—he offered as a contribution to a defense fund to lay down two guineas for Mr. Duval's one!

'I will give my guinea, I am sure,' says grandfather very meekly, 'and may that poorman's mite be accepted and useful!'

'One guinea!' roars Weston; 'I will give a hundred guineas!'

'And I another hundred,' says his brother. 'We will show, as Roman Catholic gentry of England, that we are not inferior in loyalty to our Protestant brethren.'

'Put my fizer-in-law, Peter Duval, down for one 'ondred guinea!' calls out my mother in her deep voice. 'Put me down for twenty-fife guinea, and my son Denis for twenty-fife guinea! We have eaten of English bread and we are grateful, and we sing with all our hearts, God save King George!'

Mother's speech was received with great applause. Farmers, gentry, shopkeepers, rich and poor, crowded forward to offer their subscription. Before the meeting broke up a very handsome sum was promised for the arming and equipment of the Winchelsea Fencibles; and old Colonel Evans, who had been present at Minden and Fontenoy, and young Mr. Barlow, who had lost a leg at Brandywine, said that they would superintend the drilling of the Winchelsea Fencibles, until such time as his Majesty should send officers of his own to command the corps. It was agreed that everybody spoke and acted with public spirit. ‘Let the French land!’ was our cry. ‘The men of Rye, the men of Winchelsea, the men of Hastings, will have a guard of honor to receive them on the shore!’

That the French intended to try and land was an opinion pretty general among us, especially when his Majesty’s proclamation came, announcing the great naval and military armaments which the enemy was preparing. We had certain communications with Boulogne, Calais, and Dunkirk still, and our fishing boats sometimes went as far as Ostend. Our informants brought us full news of all that was going on in those ports; of the troops assembled there, and royal French ships and privateers fitted out. I was not much surprised one night to find our old Boulogne ally Bidois smoking his pipe with grandfather in the kitchen, and regaling himself with a glass of his own brandy, which I know had not paid unto Cæsar Cæsar’s due. The pigeons on the hill were making their journeys still. Once when I went up to visit Farmer Perreau I found M. de la Motte and a companion of his sending off one of these birds, and La Motte’s friend said sulkily, in German, ‘What does the little Spitzbube do here?’ ‘Versteht vielleicht Deutsch,’ murmured La Motte hurriedly, and turned round to me with a grin of welcome, and asked news of grandfather and my mother.

This ally of the chevalier’s was a Lieutenant Lütterloh, who had served in America in one of the Hessian regiments on our side, and who was now pretty often in Winchelsea, where he talked magnificently about war and his own achievements, both on the Continent and in our American provinces. He lived near Canterbury, as I heard. I guessed, of course, that he was one of the ‘mackerel’ party, and engaged in smuggling, like La Motte, the Westons, and my graceless old grandfather and his ally, Mr. Rudge of Rye. I shall have presently to tell how bitterly M. de la Motte had afterward to rue his acquaintance with this German.

Knowing the chevalier’s intimacy with the gentlemen connected with the mackerel fishery, I had little cause to be surprised at seeing him and the German captain together; though a circumstance now arose which might have induced me to suppose him engaged in practices yet more lawless and dangerous than smuggling. I was walking up to the hill—must I let slip the whole truth, madame, in my memoirs? Well, it never did or will hurt anybody; and, as it only concerns you and me, may be told without fear. I frequently, I say, walked up the hill to look at these pigeons, for a certain young person was a great lover of pigeons too, and occasionally would come to see Farmer Perreau's columbarium. Did I love the sight of this dear white dove more than any other? Did it come sometimes fluttering to my heart? Ah! the old blood throbs there with the mere recollection. I feel—shall we say how many years younger, my dear? In fine, those little walks to the pigeon-house are among the sweetest of all our stores of memories.

I was coming away, then, once from this house of billing and cooing, when I chanced to espy an old schoolmate, Thomas Measom by name, who was exceedingly proud of his new uniform as a private of our regiment of Winchelsea Fencibles, was never tired of wearing it, and always walked out with his firelock over his shoulder. As I came up to Tom, he had just discharged his piece, and hit his bird too. One of Farmer Perreau's pigeons lay dead at Tom's feet—one of the carrier pigeons, and the young fellow was rather scared at what he had done, especially when he saw a little piece of paper tied under the wing of the slain bird.

He could not read the message, which was written in our German handwriting, and was only in three lines, which I was better able to decipher than Tom. I supposed at first that the message had to do with the smuggling business, in which so many of our friends were engaged, and Measom walked off rather hurriedly, being by no means anxious to fall into the farmer's hands, who would be but ill pleased at having one of his birds killed.

I put the paper in my pocket, not telling Tom what I thought about the matter; but I did have a thought, and determined to converse with my dear Dr. Barnard regarding it. I asked to see him at the rectory, and there read to him the contents of the paper which the poor messenger was bearing when Tom's ball brought him down.

My good doctor was not a little excited and pleased when I interpreted the pigeon's message to him, and especially praised me for my reticence with Tom upon the subject. 'It may be a mare's nest we have discovered, Denny, my boy,' says the doctor; 'it may be a matter of importance. I will see Colonel Evans on this subject to-night.' We went off to Mr. Evans' lodgings; he was the old officer who had fought under the Duke of Cumberland, and was, like the doctor, a justice of peace for our county. I translated for the colonel the paper, which was to the following effect:

[Left blank by Mr. Thackeray.]
Mr. Evans looked at a paper before him, containing an authorized list of the troops at the various Cinque Port stations, and found the poor pigeon's information quite correct. 'Was this the chevalier's writing?' the gentleman asked. No, I did not think it was M. de la Motte's handwriting. Then I mentioned the other German in whose company I had seen M. de la Motte; the M. Lütterloh, whom Mr. Evans said he knew quite well. 'If Lütterloh is engaged in the business,' said Mr. Evans, 'we shall know more about it;' and he whispered something to Dr. Barnard. Meanwhile he praised me exceedingly for my caution, enjoined me to say nothing regarding the matter, and to tell my comrade to hold his tongue.

As for Tom Measom he was less cautious. Tom talked about his adventures to one or two cronies, and to his parents, who were tradesmen like my own. They occupied a snug house in Winchelsea, with a garden and a good paddock. One day their horse was found dead in the stable. Another day their cow burst and died. There used to be strange acts of revenge perpetrated in those days; and farmers, tradesmen, or gentry who rendered themselves obnoxious to certain parties had often to rue the enmity which they provoked. That my unhappy old grandfather was, and remained in the smugglers' league, I fear is a fact which I can't deny or palliate. He paid a heavy penalty, to be sure, but my narrative is not advanced far enough to allow of my telling how the old man was visited for his sins.

There came to visit our Winchelsea magistrates Captain Pearson of the Serapis frigate, then in the Downs; and I remembered this gentleman, having seen him at the house of my kind patron, Sir Peter Denis, in London. Mr. Pearson also recollected me as the little boy who shot the highwayman; and was much interested when he heard of the carrier pigeon, and the news which he bore. It appeared that he, as well as Colonel Evans, was acquainted with Mr. Lütterloh. 'You are a good lad,' the captain said; 'but we know,' said the captain, 'all the news those birds carry.'

At this time our whole coast was alarmed, and hourly expectant of a French invasion. The French fleet was said to outnumber ours in the Channel: the French army we knew was enormously superior to our own. I can remember the terror and the excitement; the panic of some, the braggart behavior of others; and specially I recall the way in which our church was cleared one Sunday by a rumor which ran through the pews that the French were actually landed. How the people rushed away from the building, and some of them whom I remember the loudest among the braggarts, and singing their 'Come if you dare!' Mother and I in our pew, and Captain Pearson in the rector's, were the only people who sat out the sermon, of which Dr. Barnard would not abridge a line, and which, I own, I thought was extremely tantalizing and provoking. He gave the blessing with more than ordinary slowness and solemnity; and had to open his own pulpit door and stalk down the steps without the accompaniment of his usual escort the clerk, who had skipped out of his desk, and run away like the rest of the congregation. Dr. Barnard had me home to dinner at the rectory, my good mother being much too shrewd to be jealous of this kindness shown to me and not to her. When she waited upon Mrs. Barnard with her basket of laces and perfumeries, mother stood as became her station as a tradeswoman. 'For thee, my son, 'tis different,' she said, 'I will have thee be a gentleman.' And faith, I hope I have done the best of my humble endeavor to fulfill the good lady's wish.

The war, the probable descent of the French, and the means of resisting the invasion of course formed the subject of the gentlemen's conversation; and though I did not understand all that passed, I was made to comprehend subsequently, and may as well mention facts here which only came to be explained to me later. The pigeons took over certain information to France, in return for that which they brought. By these and other messengers our government was kept quite well instructed as to the designs and preparations of the enemy, and I remember how it was stated that his Majesty had occult correspondents of his own in France, whose information was of surprising accuracy. Master Lütterloh dabbled in the information line. He had been a soldier in America, a recruiting cirphere, and I know not what besides; but the information he gave was given under the authority of his employers, to whom in return he communicated the information he received from France. The worthy gentleman was, in fact, a spy by trade, and though he was not born to be hanged, came by an awful payment for his treachery, as I shall have to tell in due time. As for M. de la Motte, the gentlemen were inclined to think that his occupation was smuggling, not treason, and in that business the chevalier was allied with scores, nay, hundreds, of people round about him. One I knew, my pious grandpapa; other two lived at the Priory, and I could count many more, even in our small town, namely, all the mackerel men to whom I had been sent on the night of poor Mme. de Saverne's funeral.
Captain Pearson shook me by the hand very warmly when I rose to go home, and I saw, by the way in which the good doctor regarded me, that he was meditating some special kindness in my behalf. It came very soon, and at a moment when I was plunged in the very dismallest depths of despair. My dear little Agnes, though a boarder at the house of those odious Westons, had leave given to her to visit Mrs. Barnard, and that kind lady never failed to give me some signal by which I knew that my little sweetheart was at the rectory. One day the message would be, 'The rector wants back his volume of the "Arabian Nights," and Denis had better bring it.' Another time my dearest Mrs. Barnard would write on a card, 'You may come to tea if you have done your mathematics well,' or 'You may have a French lesson,' and so forth—and there, sure enough, would be my sweet little tutoress. How old, my dear, was Juliet when she and young Capulet began their loves? My sweetheart had not done playing with dolls when our little passion began to bud: and the sweet talisman of innocence I wore in my heart hath never left me through life, and shielded me from many a temptation.

Shall I make a clean breast of it? We young hypocrites used to write each other little notes, and pop them in certain cunning corners known to us two. Juliet used to write in a great round hand in French; Romeo replied, I dare say, with doubtful spelling.

We had devised sundry queer receptacles where our letters lay _poste restante_. There was the China potpourri jar on the Japan cabinet in the drawing room. There, into the midst of the roses and spices, two cunning young people used to thrust their hands, and stir about spice and rose leaves, until they lighted upon a little bit of folded paper more fragrant and precious than all your flowers and cloves. Then in the hall we had a famous post office, namely, the barrel of the great blunderbuss over the mantelpiece, from which hung a ticket on which 'loaded' was written, only I knew better, having helped Martin, the doctor's man, to clean the gun. Then in the churchyard, under the wing of the left cherub on Sir Jasper Billing's tomb, there was a certain hole in which we put little scraps of paper written in a cipher devised by ourselves, and on these scraps of paper we wrote—well, can you guess what? We wrote the old song which young people have sung ever since singing began. We wrote 'Amo, amas,' etc., in our childish handwriting. Ah! thanks be to Heaven, though the hands tremble a little now, they write the words still! My Dear, the last time I was in Winchelsea I went and looked at Sir Jasper’s tomb, and at the hole under the cherub’s wing; there was only a little mold and moss there. Mrs. Barnard found and read one or more of these letters, as the dear lady told me afterward, but there was no harm in them; and when the doctor put on his grand sérieux (as to be sure he had a right to do), and was for giving the culprits a scolding, his wife reminded him of a time when he was captain of Harrow School and found time to write other exercises than Greek and Latin to a young lady who lived in the village. Of these matters, I say, she told me in later days; in all days, after our acquaintance began, she was my truest friend and protectress.

But this dearest and happiest season of my life (for so I think it, though I am at this moment happy, most happy, and thankful) was to come to an abrupt ending, and poor Humpty Dumpty having climbed the wall of bliss, was to have a great and sudden fall, which, for a while, perfectly crushed and bewildered him. I have said what harm came to my companion Tom Measom for meddling in M. Lütterloh’s affairs and talking of them. Now there were two who knew mein herr’s secret, Tom Measom, namely, and Denis Duval; and though Denis held his tongue about the matter, except in conversing with the rector and Captain Pearson, Lütterloh came to know that I had read and explained the pigeon dispatch of which Measom had shot the bearer; and, indeed, it was Captain Pearson himself, with whom the German had sundry private dealings, who was Lütterloh’s informer. Lütterloh’s rage, and that of his accomplice, against me, when they learned the unlucky part I had had in the discovery, were still greater than their wrath against Measom. The Chevalier de la Motte, who had once been neutral and even kind to me, was confirmed in a steady hatred against me, and held me as an enemy whom he was determined to get out of his way. And hence came that catastrophe which precipitated Humpty Dumpty Duval, Esq., off the wall from which he was gazing at his beloved as she disported in her garden below.

One evening—shall I ever forget that evening? It was Friday [left blank by Mr. Thackeray]—after my little maiden had been taking tea with Mrs. Barnard I had leave to escort her to her home at Mr. Weston’s at the Priory, which is not a hundred yards from the rectory door. All the evening the company had been talking about battle and danger and invasion and the war news from France and America; and my little maiden sat silent, with her great eyes looking at one speaker and another, and stitching at her sampler. At length the clock tolled the hour of nine, when Miss Agnes must return to her guardian. I had the honor to serve as her escort, and would have wished the journey to be ten times as long as that brief one between the two houses. 'Good-night, Agnes!' 'Good-night, Denis! On Sunday I shall see you!' We whisper one little minute under the stars; the little hand lingers in mine with a soft pressure; we hear the servants' footsteps over the marble floor within, and I am gone. Somehow, at night and at morning, at lessons and play, I was always thinking about this little maid.

'I shall see you on Sunday,' and this was Friday! Even that interval seemed long to me. Little did either of us know what a long separation was before us, and what strange changes, dangers, adventures, I was to undergo ere I again should press that dearest hand.

The gate closed on her, and I walked away by the church wall and toward my own home. I was thinking of that happy, that unforgotten night of my childhood, when I had been the means of rescuing the dearest little maiden from an awful death; how, since then, I had cherished her with my love of love; and what a blessing she had been to my young life. For many years she was its only cheerer and companion. At home I had food and shelter, and, from mother at least, kindness, but no society; it was not until I became a familiar of the good doctor's roof that I knew friendship and kind companionship. What gratitude ought I not to feel for a boon so precious as there was conferred on me? Ah, I vowed, I prayed that I might make myself worthy of such friends; and so was sauntering homeward lost in these happy thoughts when—when something occurred which at once decided the whole course of my after life.

This something was a blow with a bludgeon across my ear and temple which sent me to the ground utterly insensible. I remember half a dozen men darkling in an alley by which I had to pass, then a scuffle and an oath or two, and a voice crying, 'Give it him, curse him!' and then I was down on the pavement as flat and lifeless as the flags on which I lay. When I woke up I was almost blinded with blood; I was in a covered cart with a few more groaning wretches, and when I uttered a moan a brutal voice growled out with many oaths an instant order to be silent or my head should be broken again. I woke up in a ghastly pain and perplexity, but presently fainted once more. When I woke again to a half coniousness I felt myself being lifted from the cart and carried, and then flung into the bows of a boat, where I suppose I was joined by the rest of the dismal cart's company. Then someone came and washed my bleeding head with salt water (which made it throb and ache very cruelly). Then the man, whispering, 'I'm a friend,' bound my forehead tight with a handkerchief, and the boat pulled out to a brig that was lying as near to land as she could come, and the same man who had struck and sworn at me would have stabbed me once more as I reeled up the side but that my friend interposed in my behalf. It was Tom Hookham, to whose family I had given the three guineas, and who assuredly saved my life on that day, for the villain who attempted it afterward confessed that he intended to do me an injury. I was thrust into the fore peak with three or four more maimed and groaning wretches, and, the wind serving, the lugger made for her destination, whatever that might be. What a horrid night of fever and pain it was! I remember I fancied I was carrying Agnes out of the water; I called out her name repeatedly, as Tom Hookham informed me, who came with a lantern and looked at us poor wretches huddled in our shed. Tom brought me more water, and in pain and fever I slept through a wretched night.

In the morning our tender came up with a frigate that was lying off a town, and I was carried up the ship's side on Hookham's arm. The captain's boat happened to pull from shore at the very same time, and the captain and his friends and our wretched party of pressed men with their captors thus stood face to face. My wonder and delight were not a little aroused when I saw the captain was no other than my dear rector's friend, Captain Pearson. My face was bound up, and so pale and bloody as to be scarcely recognizable. 'So, my man,' he said rather sternly, 'you have been for fighting, have you? This comes of resisting men employed on his Majesty's service.'

'I never resisted,' I said; 'I was struck from behind, Captain Pearson.'

The captain looked at me with a haughty, surprised air. Indeed, a more disreputable looking lad he scarcely could see. After a moment he said, 'Why, bless my soul, is it you, my boy? Is it young Duval?'

'Yes, sir,' I said; and whether from emotion or fever or loss of blood and weakness, I felt my brain going again, and once more fainted and fell.

When I came to myself I found myself in a berth in the Serapis, where there happened to be but one other patient
I had had fever and delirium for a day, during which it appears I was constantly calling out, 'Agnes, Agnes!' and offering to shoot highwaymen. A very kind surgeon's mate had charge of me, and showed me much more attention than a poor wounded lad could have had a right to expect in my wretched humiliating position. On the fifth day I was well again, though still very weak and pale; but not too weak to be unable to go to the captain when he sent for me to his cabin. My friend the surgeon's mate showed me the way.

Captain Pearson was writing at his table, but sent away his secretary, and when the latter was gone shook hands with me very kindly, and talked unreservedly about the strange accident which had brought me on board his ship. His officer had information, he said, 'and I had information,' the captain went on to say, 'that some very good seamen of what we called the mackerel party were to be taken at a public house in Winchelsea,' and his officer netted a half dozen of them there, 'who will be much better employed' (says Captain Pearson) 'in serving the king in one of his Majesty's vessels than in cheating him on board their own.' You were a stray fish that was caught along with the rest. I know your story; I have, talked it over with our good friends at the rectory. For a young fellow, you have managed to make yourself some queer enemies in your native town; and you are best out of it. On the night when I first saw you I promised our friends to take you as a first-class volunteer. In due time you will pass your examination, and be rated as a midshipman. Stay—your mother is in Deal. You can go ashore, and she will fit you out. Here are letters for you. I wrote to Dr. Barnard as soon as I found who you were.'

With this, I took leave of my good patron and captain, and ran off to read my two letters. One, from Mrs. Barnard and the doctor conjointly, told how alarmed they had been at my being lost, until Captain Pearson wrote to say how I had been found. The letter from my good mother informed me, in her rough way, how she was waiting at the Blue Anchor Inn in Deal, and would have come to me; but my new comrades would laugh at a rough old woman coming off in a shore boat to look after her boy. It was better that I should go to her at Deal, where I should be fitted out in a way becoming an officer in his Majesty's service. To Deal accordingly I went by the next boat; the good-natured surgeon's mate, who had attended me and taken a fancy to me, lending me a clean shirt, and covering the wound on my head neatly, so that it was scarcely seen
DENIS'S VALET.
under my black hair. 'Le pauvre cher enfant! comme il est pâle!' How my mother's eyes kindled with kindness as she saw me! The good soul insisted on dressing my hair with her own hands, and tied it in a smart cue with a black ribbon. Then she took me off to a tailor in the town, and provided me with an outfit a lord's son might have brought on board. My uniforms were ready in a very short time. Twenty-four hours after they were ordered Mr. Levy brought them to our inn, and I had the pleasure of putting them on; and walked on the Parade, with my hat cocked, my hanger by my side, and mother on my arm. Though I was perfectly well pleased with myself, I think she was the prouder of the two. To one or two tradesmen and their wives, whom she knew, she gave a most dignified nod of recognition this day; but passed on without speaking, as if she would have them understand that they ought to keep their distance when she was in such fine company. 'When I am in the shop, I am in the shop, and my customers' very humble servant,' said she; 'but when I am walking on Deal Parade with thee, I am walking with a young gentleman in his Majesty's navy. And Heaven has blessed us of late, my child, and thou shalt have the means of making as good a figure as any young officer in the service.' And she put such a great heavy purse of guineas into my pocket that I wondered at her bounty. 'Remember, my son,' added she, 'thou art a gentleman now. Always respect yourself. Tradespeople are no company for thee. For me 'tis different, I am but a poor hairdresser and shopkeeper.' We supped together at the Anchor, and talked about home, that was but two days off, and yet so distant. She never once mentioned my little maiden to me, nor did I somehow dare to allude to her. Mother had prepared a nice bedroom for me at the inn, to which she made me retire early, as I was still weak and faint after my fever; and when I was in my bed she came and knelt down by it, and with tears rolling down her furrowed face, offered up a prayer in her native German language that He who had been pleased to succor me from perils hitherto would guard me for the future, and watch over me in the voyage of life which was now about to begin. Now, as it is drawing to its close, I look back at it with an immense awe and thankfulness for the strange dangers from which I have escaped, the great blessings I have enjoyed.

I wrote a long letter to Mrs. Barnard, narrating my adventures as cheerfully as I could, though, truth to say, when I thought of home and a little someone there, a large tear or two blotted my paper, but I had reason to be grateful for the kindness I had received, and was not a little elated at being actually a gentleman, and in a fair way to be an officer in his Majesty's navy.

As I was strutting on the Mall, on the second day of my visit to Deal, what should I see but my dear Dr. Barnard's well-known post chaise nearing us from the Dover Road? The doctor and his wife looked with a smiling surprise at my altered appearance; and as they stepped out of their chaise at the inn, the good lady fairly put her arms round me, and gave me a kiss. Mother, from her room, saw the embrace, I suppose. 'Thou hast found good friends there, Denis, my son,' she said, with sadness in her deep voice. 'Tis well. They can be friend thee better than I can. Now thou art well, I may depart in peace. When thou art ill, the old mother will come to thee, and will bless thee always, my son.' She insisted upon setting out on her return homeward that afternoon. She had friends at Hythe, Folkestone, and Dover (as I knew well), and would put up with one or other of them. She had before packed my chest with wonderful neatness. Whatever her feelings might be at our parting, she showed no signs of tears or sorrow, but mounted her little chaise in the inn-yard, and, without looking back, drove away on her solitary journey. The landlord of the Anchor and his wife bade her farewell, very cordially and respectfully. They asked me, would I not step in to the bar and take a glass of wine or spirits? I have said that I never drank either; and suspect that my mother furnished my host with some of these stores out of those fishing boats of which she was owner. 'If I had an only son, and such a good-looking one,' Mrs. Boniface was pleased to say (can I, after such a fine compliment, be so ungrateful as to forget her name?)—'if I had an only son, and could leave him as well off as Mrs. Duval can leave you, I wouldn't send him to sea in war time, that I wouldn't.' 'And though you don't drink any wine, some of your friends on board may,' my landlord added, 'and they are always welcome at the Blue Anchor. This was not the first time I had heard that my mother was rich. 'If she be so,' I said to my host, 'indeed it is more than I know.' On which he and his wife both commended me for my caution; adding with a knowing smile, 'We know more than we tell, Mr. Duval. Have you ever heard of Mr. Weston? Have you ever heard of M. de la Motte? We know where Boulogne is, and Ost—' 'Hush, wife!' here breaks in my landlord. 'If the captain don't wish to talk, why should he?' There is the bell ringing from the Benbow and your dinner going up to the doctor, Mr. Duval.' It was indeed as he said, and I sat down in the company of my good friends, bringing a fine appetite to their table.

The doctor on his arrival had sent a messenger to his friend Captain Pearson, and while we were at our meal, the captain arrived in his own boat from the ship, and insisted that Dr. and Mrs. Barnard should take their dessert in his cabin on board. This procured Mr. Denis Duval the honor of an invitation, and I and my new sea chest were accommodated in the boat and taken to the frigate. My box was consigned to the gunner's cabin, where my hammock was now slung. After sitting a short time at Mr. Pearson's table, a brother midshipman gave me a hint to withdraw, and make the acquaintance of my comrades, of whom there were about a dozen on board the Serapis. Though only a volunteer, I was taller and older than many of the midshipmen. They knew who I was, of course—the son of a shopkeeper at Winchelsea. Then, and afterward, I had my share of rough jokes, you may be sure; but I took them with good humor; and I had to fight my way, as I had learned to do at school before. There is no need to put down here the number of black eyes and bloody noses which I received and delivered. I am sure I bore but little malice; and, thank Heaven, never wronged a man so much as to be obliged to hate him afterward. Certain men there were who hated me: but they are gone, and I am here, with a pretty clear conscience, Heaven be praised, and little the worse for their enmity.

The first lieutenant of our ship, Mr. Page, was related to Mrs. Barnard, and this kind lady gave him such a character of her very grateful, humble servant, and narrated my adventures to him so pathetically, that Mr. Page took me into his special favor, and interested some of my messmates in my behalf. The story of the highwayman caused endless talk and jokes against me which I took in good part, and established my footing among my messmates by adopting the plan I had followed at school, and taking an early opportunity to fight a well-known bruiser among our company of midshipmen. 'You must know they called me 'Soapsuds,' 'Powderpuff,' and like names, in consequence of my grandfather's known trade of hairdresser; and one of my comrades bantering me one day, cried, 'I say, Soapsuds, where was it you hit the highwayman?' 'There!' said I, and gave him a clean left-handed blow on his nose, which must have caused him to see a hundred blue lights. I know about five minutes afterward he gave me just such another blow; and we fought it out and were good friends ever after. What is this? Did I not vow as I was writing the last page yesterday that I would not say a word about my prowess at fisticuffs? You see we are ever making promises to be good, and forgetting them. I suppose other people can say as much.

Before leaving the ship my kind friends once more desired to see me, and Mrs. Barnard, putting a finger to her lip, took out from her pocket a little packet, which she placed in my hand. I thought she was giving me money, and felt somehow disappointed at being so treated by her. But when she was gone to shore I opened the parcel and found a locket there, and a little curl of glossy black hair. Can you guess whose? Along with the locket was a letter in French, in a large girlish hand, in which the writer said that night and day she prayed for her dear Denis. And where, think you, is the locket now? Where it has been for forty-two years, and where it will remain when a faithful heart that beats under it hath ceased to throb.

At gunfire our friends took leave of the frigate, little knowing the fate that was in store for many on board her. In three weeks from that day what a change! The glorious misfortune which befell us is written in the annals of our country.

On the very evening while Captain Pearson was entertaining his friends from Winchelsea, he received orders to sail for Hull, and place himself under the command of the admiral there. From the Humber we presently were dispatched northward to Scarborough. There had been not a little excitement along the whole northern coast for some time past in consequence of the appearance of some American privateers, who had ransacked a Scottish nobleman's castle and levied contributions from a Cumberland seaport town. As we were close in with Scarborough a boat came off with letters from the magistrates of that place, announcing that this squadron had actually been seen off the coast. The commodore of this wandering piratical expedition was known to be a rebel Scotchman, who fought with a rope around his neck, to be sure. No doubt many of us youngsters vaporized about the courage with which we would engage him, and made certain, if we could only meet with him, of seeing him hang from his own yardarm. It was Diis aliter visum, as we used to say at Pocock's; and it was we threw deuceace too. Traitor, if you will, was M. John Paul Jones, afterward knight of his Most Christian Majesty's Order of Merit; but a braver traitor never wore sword.

We had been sent for in order to protect a fleet of merchantmen that were bound to the Baltic, and were to sail under the convoy of our ship and the Countess of Scarborough, commanded by Captain Piercy. And thus it came about that after being twenty-five days in his Majesty's service I had the fortune to be present at one of the most severe and desperate combats that has been fought in our or any time.

I shall not attempt to tell that story of the battle of the 23d September, which ended in our glorious captain striking his own colors to our superior and irresistible enemy. Sir Richard has told the story of his disaster in words nobler than any I could supply, who, though indeed engaged in that fearful action in which our flag went down before a renegade Briton and his motley crew, saw but a very small portion of the battle which ended so fatally for us. It did not commence till nightfall. How well I remember the sound of the enemy's gun of which the shot crashed into our side in reply to the challenge of our captain who hailed her! Then came a broadside from us—the first I had ever heard in battle.

NOTES ON DENIS DUVAL.

The readers of the Cornhill Magazine have now read the last line written by William Makepeace Thackeray. The story breaks off as his life ended—full of vigor, and blooming with new promise like the apple trees in this month of May: * the only difference between the work and the life is this, that the last chapters of the one have their little pathetical gaps and breaks of unfinished effort, the last chapters of the other were fulfilled and complete. But the life may be left alone; while as for the gaps and breaks in his last pages, nothing that we can write is likely to add to their significance. There they are; and the reader's mind has already fallen into them, with sensations not to be improved by the ordinary commentator. If Mr. Thackeray himself could do it, that would be another thing. Preacher he called himself in some of the Roundabout discourses in which his softer spirit is always to be heard, but he never had a text after his own mind so much as these last broken chapters would give him now. There is the date of a certain Friday to be filled in, and Time is no more. Is it very presumptuous to imagine the Roundabout that Mr. Thackeray would write upon this unfinished work of his, if he could come back to do it? We do not think it is, or very difficult either. What Carlyle calls the divine gift of speech was so largely his, especially in his maturer years, that he made clear in what he did say pretty much what he would say about anything that engaged his thought; and we have only to imagine a discourse 'On the Two Women at the Mill,' to read off upon our minds the sense of what Mr. Thackeray alone could have found language for.

* The last number of 'Denis Duval' appeared in the Cornhill Magazine of June, 1864.

Vain are these speculations—or are they vain? Not if we try to think what he would think of his broken labors, considering that one of these days our labors must be broken too. Still, there is not much to be said about it; and we pass on to the real business in hand, which is to show as well as we may what 'Denis Duval' would have been had its author lived to complete his work. Fragmentary as it is, the story must always be of considerable importance, because it will stand as a warning to imperfect critics never to be in haste to cry of any intellect, 'His vein is worked out; there is nothing left in him but the echoes of emptiness.' The deciers were never of any importance, yet there is more than satisfaction, there is something like triumph, in the mind of every honest man of letters when he sees, and knows everybody must see, how a genius which was sometimes said to have been guilty of passing behind a cloud toward the evening of his day came out to shine with new splendor before the day was done. 'Denis Duval' is unfinished, but it ends that question. The fiery genius that blazed over the city in 'Vanity Fair,' and passed on to a ripe afternoon in 'Esmond,' is not a whit less great, it is only broader, more soft, more mellow and kindly, as it sinks too suddenly in 'Denis Duval.'

This is said to introduce the settlement of another too-hasty notion which we believe to have been pretty generally accepted; namely, that Mr. Thackeray took little pains in the construction of his works. The truth is, that he very industriously did take pains. We find that out when we inquire, for the benefit of the readers of this magazine, whether there is anything to tell of his designs for 'Denis Duval.' The answer comes in the form of many most careful notes, and memoranda of inquiry into minute matters of details to make the story true. How many young novelists are there who haven't much genius to fall back upon, who yet, if they desired to set their hero down in Winchelsea a hundred years ago, for instance, would take the trouble to learn how the town was built, and what gate led to Rye (if the hero happened to have any dealings with that place), and who were its local magnates, and how it was governed? And yet this is what Mr. Thackeray did, though his investigation added not twenty lines to the story and no 'interest' whatever; it was simply so much conscientious effort to keep as near truth in feigning as he could. That Winchelsea had three gates, 'Newgate on S. W., Landgate on N. E., Strandgate [leading to Rye] on S. E.'; that 'the government was vested in a mayor and twelve jurats, jointly'; that 'it sends canopy bearers on occasion of a coronation,' etc., etc., etc., all is duly entered in a notebook with reference to authorities. And so about the refugees at Rye, and the French Reformed Church there; nothing is written that history cannot vouch for. The neat and orderly way in which the notes are set down is also remarkable. Each has its heading, as thus:

† 'Two women shall be grinding at the mill, one shall be taken and the other left.'

Refugees at Rye.—At Rye is a small settlement of French refugees, who are for the most part fishermen, and have a minister of their own.

French Reformed Church.—Wherever there is a sufficient number of faithful there is a church. The pastor is admitted to his office by the provincial synod, or the colloquy, provided it be composed of seven pastors at least. Pastors are seconded in their duties by laymen, who take the title of ancients, elders, and deacons precentors. The union of pastors, deacons, and elders forms a consistory.

Of course there is no considerable merit in care like this, but it is a merit which the author of 'Denis Duval' is not popularly credited with, and therefore it may as well be set down to him. Besides, it may serve as an example to fledgling geniuses of what he thought necessary to the perfection of his work.

But the chief interest of these notes and memoranda lies in the outlook they give us upon the conduct of the story. It is not desirable to print them all; indeed, to do so would be to copy a long list of mere references to books, magazines, and journals, where such byway bits of illustration are to be found as lit Mr. Thackeray's mind to so vivid an insight into manners and character. Still, we are anxious to give the reader as complete an idea of the story as we can.

First, here is a characteristic letter, in which Mr. Thackeray sketches his plot for the information of his publisher:

My dear Sir: I was born in the year 1764, at Winchelsea, where my father was a grocer and clerk of the Church. Everybody in the place was a good deal connected with smuggling. There used to come to our house a very noble French gentleman, called the Count de la Motte, and with him a German, the Baron de Lütterloh. My father used to take packages to Ostend and Calais for these two gentlemen, and perhaps I went to Paris once and saw the French Queen.

The squire of our town was Squire Weston of the Priory, who, with his brother, kept one of the genteelst houses in the country. He was churchwarden of our church, and much respected. Yes, but if you read the Annual Register of 1781 you will find that on the 13th July the sheriffs attended at the Tower of London to receive custody of a De la Motte, a prisoner charged with high treason. The fact is, this Alsatian nobleman being in difficulties in his own country (where he had commanded the Regiment Soubise), came to London, and under pretense of sending prints to France and Ostend, supplied the French ministers with accounts of the movements of the English fleets and troops. His go-between was Lütterloh, a Brunswicker, who had been a crimping agent, then a servant, who was a spy of France and Mr. Franklin, and who turned king's evidence on La Motte, and hanged him.

This Lütterloh, who had been a crimping agent for German troops during the American war, then a servant in London during the Gordon riots, then an agent for a spy, then a spy over a spy, I suspect to have been a consummate scoundrel, and doubly odious from speaking English with a German accent.

What if he wanted to marry THAT CHARMING GIRL, who lived with Mr. Weston at Winchelsea? Ha! I see a mystery here.

What if this scoundrel, going to receive his pay from the English admiral, with whom he was in communication at Portsmouth, happened to go on board the Royal George the day she went down?

As for George and Joseph Weston of the Priory, I am sorry to say they were rascals too. They were tried for robbing the Bristol mail in 1780; and being acquitted for want of evidence, were tried immediately after on another indictment for forgery—Joseph was acquitted, but George was capitally convicted. But this did not help poor Joseph. Before their trials, they and some others broke out of Newgate, and Joseph fired at, and wounded, a porter who tried to stop him, on Snow Hill. For this he was tried and found guilty on the Black Act, and hung along with his brother.

Now if I was an innocent participator in De la Motte’s treasons, and the Westons’ forgeries and robberies, what pretty scrapes I must have been in?

I married the young woman, whom the brutal Lütterloh would have had for himself, and lived happy ever after.

Here, it will be seen, the general idea is very roughly sketched, and the sketch was not in all its parts carried out. Another letter, never sent to its destination, gives a somewhat later account of Denis:

My grandfather’s name was Duval; he was a barber and perruquier by trade, and elder of the French Protestant Church at Winchelsea. I was sent to board with his correspondent, a Methodist grocer, at Rye.

These two kept a fishing boat, but the fish they caught was many and many a barrel of Nantz brandy, which we landed—never mind where—at a place to us well known. In the innocence of my heart, I—a child—got leave to go out fishing. We used to go out at night and meet ships from the French coast.

I learned to scuttle a marline spike, reef a lee scupper, keelhaul a bowsprit as well as the best of them. How well I remember the jabbering of the Frenchmen the first night as they hanged the kegs over to us! One night we were fired into by his Majesty’s revenue cutter Lynx. I asked what those balls were fizzing in the water, etc.

I wouldn’t go on with the smuggling; being converted by Mr. Wesley, who came to preach to us at Rye—but that is neither here nor there.

In these letters neither ‘my mother’ nor the Count de Saverne and his unhappy wife appear; while Agnes exists only as ‘that charming girl.’ Count de la Motte, the Baron de Lütterloh, and the Westons seem to have figured foremost in the author’s mind: they are historical characters. In the first letter we are referred to the Annual Register for the story of De la Motte and Lütterloh; and this is what we read there:
DENIS DUVAL. 265

January 5, 1781.—A gentleman was taken into custody for treasonable practices, named Henry Francis de la Motte, which he bore with the title of baron annexed to it. He has resided in Bond Street, at a Mr. Otley’s, a woolen draper, for some time.

When he was going upstairs at the Secretary of State’s office, in Cleveland Row, he dropped several papers on the staircase, which were immediately discovered by the messenger, and carried in with him to Lord Hillsborough. After his examination he was committed a close prisoner for high treason to the Tower. The papers taken from him are reported to be of the highest importance. Among them are particular lists of every ship of force in any of our yards and docks, etc., etc.

In consequence of the above papers being found, Henry Lütterloh, Esq., of Wickham, near Portsmouth, was afterward apprehended and brought to town. The messengers found Mr. Lütterloh ready bootied to go a hunting. When he understood their business he did not discover the least embarrassment, but delivered his keys with the utmost readiness. ... Mr. Lütterloh is a German, and had lately taken a house at Wickham, within a few miles of Portsmouth; and as he kept a pack of hounds, and was considered as a good companion, he was well received by the gentlemen in the neighborhood.

July 14, 1781.—Mr. Lütterloh’s testimony was of so serious a nature that the court seemed in a state of astonishment during the whole of his long examination. He said that he embarked in a plot with the prisoner in the year 1778 to furnish the French court with secret intelligence of the navy, for which, at first, he received only eight guineas a month. The importance of his information appeared, however, so clear to the prisoner that he shortly after allowed him fifty guineas a month, besides many valuable gifts; that, upon any emergency, he came post to town to M. de la Motte, but common occurrences relative to their treaty he sent by the post. He identified the papers found in his garden, and the seals, he said, were M. de la Motte’s, and well known in France. He had been to Paris by direction of the prisoner, and was closeted with M. Sartine, the French Minister. He had formed a plan for capturing Governor Johnstone’s squadron, for which he demanded 8000 guineas, and a third share of the ships, to be divided among the prisoner himself, and his friend in a certain office, but the French court would not agree to yielding more than an eighth share of the squadron. After agreeing to enable the French to take the commodore, he went to Sir Hugh Palliser, and offered a plan to take the French, and to defeat his original project with which he had furnished the French court.

The trial lasted for thirteen hours, when the jury, after a short deliberation, pronounced the prisoner guilty, when sentence was immediately passed upon him; the prisoner received the awful doom (he was condemned to be hanged, drawn, and quartered) with great composure, but inveighed against Mr. Lütterloh in warm terms. ... His behavior throughout the whole of this trying scene exhibited a combination of manliness, steadiness, and presence of mind. He appeared at the same time polite, condescending, and unaffected, and, we presume, could never have stood so firm and collected at so awful a moment if, when he felt himself fully convicted as a traitor to the state which gave him protection, he had not, however mistakenly, felt a conscious innocence within his own breast that he had devoted his life to the service of his country.

M. de la Motte was about five feet ten inches in height, fifty years of age, and of a comely countenance; his deportment was exceedingly genteel, and his eye was expressively strong penetration. He wore a white cloth coat, and a linen waistcoat worked in tambour.—Annual Register, vol. xxiv. p. 184.

It is not improbable that from this narrative of a trial for high treason in 1781 the whole story radiated. These are the very men whom we have seen in Thackeray’s pages; and it is a fine test of his insight and power to compare them as they lie embalmed in the Annual Register, and as they breathe again in ‘Denis Duval.’ The part they were to have played in the story is already intelligible, all but the way in which they were to have confused the lives of Denis and his love.

“‘At least, Duval,” De la Motte said to me when I shook hands with him and with all my heart forgave him, “mad and reckless as I have been, and fatal to all whom I loved, I have never allowed the child to want, and have supported her in comfort when I myself was almost without a meal."' What was the injury which Denis forgave with all his heart? Fatal to all whom he loved, there are evidences that De la Motte was to have urged Lütterloh's pretensions to Agnes; whose story at this period we find inscribed in the notebook in one word: Henriette Iphigenia.' For Agnes was christened Henriette originally, and Denis was called Blaise.*

As for M. Lütterloh, 'that consummate scoundrel, and doubly odious from speaking English with a German accent'—having hanged De la Motte, while confessing that he had made a solemn engagement with him never to betray each other, and then immediately laying a wager that De la Motte would be hanged, having broken open a secrétaire, and distinguished himself in various other ways—he seems to have gone to Winchelsea, where it was easy for him to threaten or cajole the Westons into trying to force Agnes into his arms. She was living with these people, and we know how they discountenanced her faithful affection for Denis. Overwrought by the importunities of Lütterloh and the Westons, she escaped to Dr. Barnard for protection; and soon unexpected help arrived. The De Viomesnîls, her mother's relations, became suddenly convinced of the innocence of the countess. Perhaps (and when we say perhaps, we repeat such hints of his plans as Mr. Thackeray uttered in conversation at his fireside) they knew of certain heritages to which Agnes would be entitled were her mother absolved; at any rate, they had reasons of their own for claiming her at this opportune moment—as they did. Agnes takes Dr. Barnard's advice and goes off to these prosperous relations, who, having neglected her so long, desire her so much. Perhaps Denis was thinking of the sad hour when he came home, long years afterward, to find his sweetheart gone, when he wrote: 'O Agnes, Agnes! how the years roll away! What strange events have befallen us; what passionate griefs have we had to suffer; what a merciful Heaven has protected us, since that day when

*Among the notes there is a little chronological table of events as they occur:

'Blaise, born 1763.
Henriette de Barr was born in 1766-7.
Her father went to Corsica, '68.
Mother fled, '68.
Father killed at B., '69.
Mother died, '70.
Blaise turned out, '79.
Henriette Iphigenia, '81.
La Motte's catastrophe, '92.
Rodney's action, '82.'
your father knelt over the little cot in which his child lay sleeping!

At the time she goes home to France, Denis is far away fighting on board the Arethusa, under his old captain Sir Richard Pearson, who commanded the Serapis in the action with Paul Jones. Denis was wounded early in this fight, in which Pearson had to strike his own colors, almost every man on board being killed or hurt. Of Pearson's career, which Denis must have followed in after days, there is more than one memorandum in Mr. Thackeray's notebook:

Serapis, R. Pearson. 'Beatson's Memoirs.'
Commanded the Arethusa off Ushant, 1781, 'Field of Mars,' in Kempenfeldt's action.

And then follows the question—

Qy. How did Pearson get away from Paul Jones?

But before that is answered we will quote the 'story of the disaster,' as Sir Richard tells it, 'in words nobler than any I could supply'; and, indeed, Mr. Thackeray seems to have thought much of the letter to the Admiralty Office, and to have found Pearson's character in it.

After some preliminary fighting

We dropped alongside of each other, head and stern, when the fluke of our spare anchor hooking his quarter, we became so close, fore and aft, that the muzzles of our guns touched each other's sides. In this position we engaged from half-past eight till half-past ten; during which time from the great quantity and variety of combustible matter which they threw in upon our decks, chains, and in short every part of the ship, we were on fire no less than ten or twelve times in different parts of the ship, and it was with the greatest difficulty and exertion imaginable at times that we were able to get it extinguished. At the same time the largest of the two frigates kept sailing round us the whole action and raking us fore and aft, by which means she killed or wounded almost every man on the quarter and main decks.

About half-past nine a cartridge of powder was set on fire, which, running from cartridge to cartridge all the way aft, blew up the whole of the people and officers that were quartered abaft the mainmast. . . . At ten o'clock they called for quarter from the ship alongside; hearing this, I called for the boarders, and ordered them to board her, which they did; but the moment they were on board her they discovered a superior number lying under cover with pikes in their hands ready to receive them; our people retreated instantly into our own ship, and returned to their guns till past ten, when the frigate coming across our stern and pouring her broadside into us again, without our being able to bring a gun to bear on her, I found it in vain, and in short impracticable, from the situation we were in, to stand out any longer with the least prospect of success. I therefore struck. Our mainmast at the same time went by the board . . .

I am extremely sorry for the misfortune that has happened—that of losing his Majesty's ship I had the honor to command; but at the same time I flatter myself with the hopes that their lordships will be convinced that she has not been given away, but that on the contrary every exertion has been used to defend her.

The Serapis, and the Countess of Scarborough, after drifting about in the North Sea, were brought into the Texel by Paul Jones; when Sir Joseph Yorke, our ambassador at the Hague, memorialized their High Mightinesses the States General of the Low Countries, requesting that these prizes might be given up. Their High Mightinesses refused to interfere.

Of course the fate of the Serapis was Denis’ fate; and the question also is, how did he get away from Paul Jones? A note written immediately after the query suggests a hairbreadth escape for him after a double imprisonment.

Some sailors are lately arrived from Amsterdam on board the Latitita, Captain March. They were taken out of the hold of a Dutch East Indiaman by the captain of the Kingston privateer, who, having lost some of his people, gained some information of their fate from a music girl, and had spirit enough to board the ship and search her. The poor wretches were all chained down in the hold, and but for this would have been carried to perpetual slavery.—Gentleman’s Magazine, 50, pp. 101.

Do we see how the truth and fiction were to have been married here? Suppose that Dennis Duval, escaping from one imprisonment in Holland, fell into the snares of Dutch East Indiamen, or was kidnapped with the men of the Kingston privateer? Dennis chained down in the hold, thinking one moment of Agnes and the garden wall, which alone was too much to separate them, and at the next moment of how he was now to be carried to perpetual slavery beyond hope. And then the music girl; and the cheer of the Kingston’s men as they burst into the hold and set the prisoners free. It is easy to imagine what those chapters would have been like.

At liberty, Dennis was still kept at sea, where he did not rise to the heroic in a day, but progressed through all the commonplace duties of a young seaman’s life, which we find noted down accordingly:

He must serve two years on board before he can be rated midshipman. Such volunteers are mostly put under the care of the gunner, who caters for them; and are permitted to walk the quarter-deck and wear the uniform from the beginning. When fifteen and rated midshipmen, they form a mess with the mates. When examined for their commissions they are expected to know everything relative to navigation and seamanship, are strictly examined in the different sailings, working tides, days’ works, and double altitudes—and are expected to give some account of the different methods of finding the longitude by a time keeper and the lunar observations. In practical seamanship they must show how to conduct a ship from one place to another under every disadvantage of wind, tide, etc. After this the candidate obtains a certificate from the captain, and his commission when he can get it.

Another note describes a personage whose acquaintance we have missed:

A seaman of the old school, whose hand was more familiar with the tar brush than with Hadley’s quadrant, who had peeped into the mysteries of navigation as laid down by J. Hamilton Moore, and who acquired an idea of the rattletraps and rigging of a ship through the famous illustrations which adorn the pages of Darcy Lever.

Denis was a seaman in stirring times. ‘The year of which we treat,’ says the Annual Register for 1779, ‘presented the most awful appearance of public affairs which perhaps this country had beheld for many ages;’ and Duval had part in more than one of the startling events which succeeded each other so rapidly in the wars with France and America and Spain. He was destined to come into contact with Major André, whose fate excited extraordinary sympathy at the time; Washington is said to have shed tears when he signed his death warrant. It was on the 2d of October, 1780, that this young officer was executed. A year later and Denis was to witness the trial and execution of one whom he knew better and was more deeply interested in, De la Motte. The courage and nobleness with which he met his fate moved the sympathy of Duval, whom he had injured, as well as of most of those who saw him die. Denis has written concerning him: 'Except my kind namesake, the captain and admiral, this was the first gentleman I ever met in intimacy; a gentleman with many a stain, nay, crime to reproach him, but not all lost, I hope and pray. I own to having a kindly feeling toward that fatal man.'

Lüttterloh's time had not yet come; but besides that we find him disposed of with the Royal George in the first-quoted letter, an entry in the notebook unites the fate of the bad man with that of the good ship.*

Meanwhile, the memorandum 'Rodney's action, 1782,' indicates that Duval was to take part in our victory over the French fleet commanded by the Count de Grasse, who was himself captured with the Ville de Paris and four other ships. 'De Grasse with his suite landed on Southsea Common, Portsmouth. They were conducted in carriages to the George, where a most sumptuous dinner had been procured for the count and his suite by Vice-Admiral Sir Peter Parkes, who entertained him and his officers at his own expense.' Here also was something for Denis to see; and in this same autumn came on the trial of the two Westons, when Denis was to be the means—unconsciously—of bringing his old enemy, Joseph Weston, to punishment. There are two notes to this effect:

1782-83. Jo. Weston, always savage against Blaise, fires on him in Cheapside.

The Black Act is 9 George II. c. 22. The preamble says: 'Whereas several ill-designing and disorderly persons have associated themselves under the name of Blacks, and entered into confederacies to support and assist one another in stealing and destroying deer, robbing warrens and fish-ponds... It then goes on to enact that 'if any person or persons shall willfully or maliciously shoot at any person in any dwelling house or other place, he shall suffer death as in cases of felony without benefit of the clergy.'

A Joseph Weston was actually found guilty under the Black Act of firing at and wounding a man on Snow Hill, and was hanged with his brother. Mr. Thackeray's notebook refers him to 'The Westons in "Session Papers," 1782, pp. 463, 470,*

*Contemporary accounts of the founder of the Royal George represent her crowded with people from the shore. We have seen how Lüttterloh was among these, having come on board to receive the price of his treason.
473,' to the Gentleman's Magazine, 1782, to 'Genuine Memoirs of George and Joseph Weston, 1782,' and Notes and Queries, Series I. vol. x.*

The next notes (in order of time) concern a certain very disinterested action of Duval's:

DEAL RIOTS, 1783.

Deal.—Here has been a great scene of confusion, by a party of Colonel Douglas' Light Dragoons, sixty in number, who entered the town in the dead of the night in aid to the excise officers, in order to break open the stores and make seizures: but the smugglers, who are never unprepared, having taken the alarm, mustered together, and a most desperate battle ensued."

Now old Duval, the perruquier, as we know, belonged to the great mackerel party, or smuggling conspiracy, which extended all along the coast; and frequent allusion has been made to his secret stores, and to the profits of his so-called fishing expeditions. Remembering what has been written of this gentleman, we can easily imagine the falsehoods, tears, lying asseverations of poverty and innocence which old Duval must have uttered on the terrible night when the excise officers visited him. But his exclamation were to no purpose, for it is a fact that when Denis saw what was going on, he burst out with the truth, and though he knew it was his own inheritance he was giving up, he led the officers right away to the hoards they were seeking.

His conduct on this occasion Denis has already referred to where he says: 'There were matters connected with this story regarding which I could not speak... Now they are secrets no more. That old society of smugglers is dissolved long ago; nay, I shall have to tell presently how I helped myself to break it up.' And therewith all old Duval's earnings, all Denis' fortune that was to be, vanished; but of course Denis prospered in his profession, and had no need of unlawful gains.†

But very sad times intervened between Denis and prosperity. He was to be taken prisoner by the French, and to fret many long years away in one of their arsenals. At last the Revolution broke out, and he may have been given up, or—thanks to his foreign tongue and extraction—found means to

* These notes also appear in the same connection:

'Horsetealers.—One Saunders was committed to Oxford Jail for horse stealing, who appears to have belonged to a gang, part of whom stole horses in the north counties, and the other part in the south, and about the midland counties they used to meet and exchange.—Gentleman's Magazine, 39, 168.

'1783. Capital Convictions.—At the Spring Assizes, 1783, 119 prisoners received sentence of death.'

† Notices of Sussex smuggling (says the notebook) are to be found in vol. x. of Sussex Archeological Collections, 69, 94. Reference is also made to the Gentleman's Magazine, vol. viii. pp. 292, 172.
escape. Perhaps he went in search of Agnes, whom we know he never forgot, and whose great relations were now in trouble; for the Revolution which freed him was terrible to 'aristocrats.'

This is nearly all the record we have of this part of Denis' life, and of the life which Agnes led while she was away from him. But perhaps it was at this time that Duval saw Marie Antoinette;* perhaps he found Agnes, and helped to get her away; or had Agnes already escaped to England, and was it in the old familiar haunts—Farmer Perreau's columbarium, where the pigeons were that Agnes loved; the rectory garden basking in the autumn evening; the old wall and the pear tree behind it; the plain from whence they could see the French lights across the Channel; the little twinkling window in a gable of the Priory House, where the light used to be popped out at nine o'clock—that Denis and Agnes first met after their long separation?

However that may have been, we come presently upon a note of 'a tailor contracts to supply three superfine suits for £11 11s. (Gazetteer and Daily Advertiser)'; and also of a villa at Beckenham, with 'four parlors, eight bedrooms, stables, two acres of garden, and fourteen acres of meadow, let for £70 a year,' which may have been the house the young people first lived in after they were married. Later they moved to Fareport, where, as we read, the admiral is weighed along with his own pig. But he cannot have given up the service for many years after his marriage, for he writes: 'T'other day when we took over the King of France to Calais (H. R. H. the Duke of Clarence being in command), I must needs have a post chaise from Dover to look at that old window in the Priory House at Winchelsea. I went through the old wars, despairs, tragedies. I sighed as vehemently after forty years as though the infandi dolores were fresh upon me, as though I were the schoolboy trudging back to his task, and taking a last look at his dearest joy.'

'And who, pray, was Agnes?' he writes elsewhere. 'Today her name is Agnes Duval, and she sits at her worktable hard by. The lot of my life has been changed by knowing her—to win such a prize in life's lottery has been given but to

---

* The following memoranda appear in the notebook:

'Marie Antoinette was born on the 2d November, 1755, and her saint's day is the Fête des Morts.'

* In the Corsican expedition the Légion de Lorraine was under the Baron de Viomesnil. He emigrated at the commencement of the Revolution, took an active part in the army of Condé, and in the emigration, returned with Louis XVIII., followed him to Gand, and was made marshal and peer of France after '15.

* Another Vi. went with Rochambeau to America in 1790.
very few. What I have done—of any worth—has been done by trying to deserve her.'... 'Monsieur mon fils' (this is to his boy), 'if ever you marry, and have a son, I hope the little chap will have an honest man for a grandfather, and that you will be able to say, ‘I loved him,” when the daisies cover me.' Once more of Agnes he writes: ‘When my ink is run out, and my little tale is written, and yonder church that is ringing to seven o'clock prayers shall toll for a certain D. D., you will please, good neighbors, to remember that I never loved any but yonder lady, and keep a place by Darby for Joan when her turn shall arrive.'
LOVEL THE WIDOWER.

CHAPTER I.

THE BACHELOR OF BEAK STREET.

Who shall be the hero of this tale? Not I who write it. I am but the chorus of the play. I make remarks on the conduct of the characters; I narrate their simple story. There is love and marriage in it; there is grief and disappointment; the scene is in the parlor, and the region beneath the parlor. No: it may be the parlor and kitchen, in this instance, are on the same level. There is no high life, unless, to be sure, you call a baronet's widow a lady in high life; and some ladies may be, while some certainly are not. I don't think there's a villain in the whole performance. There is an abominable selfish old woman, certainly; an old highway robber; an old sponger on other people's kindness; an old haunter of Bath and Cheltenham boarding houses (about which how can I know anything, never having been in a boarding house at Bath or Cheltenham in my life?); an old swindler of tradesmen, tyrant of servants, bully of the poor—who, to be sure, might do duty for a villain, but she considers herself as virtuous a woman as ever was born. The heroine is not faultless (ah! that will be a great relief to some folks, for many writers' good women are, you know, so very insipid). The principal personage you may very likely think to be no better than a muff. But is many a respectable man of our acquaintance much better? and do muff's know that they are what they are, or knowing it, are they unhappy? Do girls decline to marry one if he is rich? Do we refuse to dine with one? I listened to one at church last Sunday, with all the women crying and sobbing; and, oh, dear me! how finely he preached! Don't we give him great credit for wisdom and eloquence in the House of Commons? Don't we give him important commands in the army? Can you, or can you not, point out one who has been made a peer? Doesn't your wife call one in the moment any of the children are ill? Don't we read his dear poems, or even novels? Yes; perhaps even this one is read and written by—Well? Quid rides? Do you mean that I am painting a portrait which hangs before me every morning in the looking-glass when I am shaving? Après? Do you suppose that I suppose that I have not infirmities like my neighbors? Am I weak? It is notorious to all my friends there is a certain dish I can't resist; no, not if I have already eaten twice too much at dinner. So, dear sir, or madam, have you your weakness—your irresistible dish of temptation? (or if you don't know it your friends do). No, dear friend, the chances are that you and I are not people of the highest intellect, of the largest fortune, of the most ancient family, of the most consummate virtue, of the most faultless beauty in face and figure. We are no heroes nor angels; neither are we fiends from abodes unmentionable, black assassins, treacherous Lagos, familiar with stabbing and poison—murder our amusement, daggers our playthings, arsenic our daily bread, lies our conversation, and forgery our common handwriting. No, we are not monsters of crime, or angels walking the earth—at least I know one of us who isn't, as can be shown any day at home if the knife won't cut or the mutton comes up raw. But we are not altogether brutal and unkind, and a few folks like us. Our poetry is not as good as Alfred Tennyson's, but we can turn a couplet for Miss Fanny's album; our jokes are not always first-rate, but Mary and her mother smile very kindly when papa tells his story or makes his pun. We have many weaknesses, but we are not ruffians of crime. No more was my friend Lovel. On the contrary, he was as harmless and kindly a fellow as ever lived when I first knew him. At present, with his changed position, he is, perhaps, rather fine (and certainly I am not asked to his best dinner parties as I used to be, where you hardly see a commoner—but stay! I am advancing matters). At the time when this story begins, I say, Lovel had his faults—which of us has not? He had buried his wife, having notoriously been henpecked by her. How many men and brethren are like him! He had a good fortune—I wish I had as much—though I dare say many people are ten times as rich. He was a good-looking fellow enough; though that depends, ladies, upon whether you like a fair man or a dark one. He had a country house, but it was only at Putney. In fact, he was in business in the city, and being a hospitable man, and having three or four spare bedrooms, some of his friends were always welcome at Shrublands, especially after Mrs. Lovel's death, who liked me pretty well at the period of her early marriage with my friend, but got to dislike me at last and show me the cold shoulder. That is a joint I never could like (though I have known fellows, who persist in dining off it year after year, who cling hold of it, and refuse to be separated from it). I say, when Lovel’s wife began to show me that she was tired of my company, I made myself scarce; used to pretend to be engaged when Fred faintly asked me to Shrublands; to accept his meek apologies, proposals to dine en garçon at Greenwich, the club, and so forth; and never visit upon him my wrath at his wife’s indifference—for, after all, he had been my friend at many a pinch; he never stinted at Harts’ or Lovegrove’s, and always made a point of having the wine I liked, never mind what the price was. As for his wife, there was, assuredly, no love lost between us—I thought her a lean, scraggy, lackadaisical, egotistical, consequential, insipid creature; and as for his mother-in-law, who stayed at Fred’s as long and as often as her daughter would endure her, has anyone who ever knew that notorious old Lady Baker at Bath, at Cheltenham, at Brighton—wherever trumps and frumps were found together; wherever scandal was cackled; wherever fly-blown reputations were assembled, and dowagers with damaged titles trod over each other for the pas —who, I say, ever had a good word for that old woman?
LOVEL THE WIDOWER. 275

What party was not bored where she appeared? What tradesman was not done with whom she dealt? I wish with all my heart I was about to narrate a story with a good mother-in-law for a character; but then, you know, my dear madam, all good women in novels are insipid. This woman certainly was not.
She was not only not insipid, but exceedingly bad-tasted.
She had a foul, loud tongue, a stupid head, a bad temper, an immense pride and arrogance, an extravagant son, and very little money. Can I say much more of a woman than this? Aha! my good Lady Baker! I was a mauvais sujet, was I? I was leading Fred into smoking, drinking, and low bachelor habits, was I? I, his old friend, who have borrowed money from him any time these twenty years, was not fit company for you and your precious daughter? Indeed! I paid the money I borrowed from him like a man; but did you ever pay him, I should like to know? When Mrs. Lovel was in the first column of The Times, then Fred and I used to go off to Greenwich and Blackwall, as I said; then his kind old heart was allowed to feel for his friend; then we could have the other bottle of claret without the appearance of Bedford and the coffee, which in Mrs. L.’s time used to be sent in to us before we could ring for a second bottle, although she and Lady Baker had had three glasses each out of the first. Three full glasses each, I give you my word! No, madam, it was your turn to bully me once—now it is mine and I use it. No, you old catamaran, though you pretend you never read novels, some of your confounded good-natured friends will let you know of this one. Here you are, do you hear? Here you shall be shown up. And so I intend to show up other women and other men who have offended me. Is one to be subject to slights and scorn, and not have revenge? Kindnesses are easily forgotten; but injuries!—what worthy man does not keep those in mind?

Before entering upon the present narrative, may I take leave to inform a candid public that, though it is all true, there not a word of truth in it; that though Lovel is alive and prosperous, and you very likely have met him, yet I defy you to point him out; that his wife (for he is Lovel the widower no more) is not the lady you imagine her to be when you say (as you will persist in doing), 'Oh, that character is intended for Mrs. Thingamy, or was notoriously drawn from Lady So- and-so.' No. You are utterly mistaken. Why, even the advertising puffers have almost given up that stale stratagem of announcing 'Revelations from High Life.—The beau monde will be startled at recognizing the portraits of some of its brilliant leaders in Miss Wiggins' forthcoming roman de société.'

Or, 'We suspect a certain ducal house will be puzzled to guess how the pitiless author of "May Fair Mysteries" has become acquainted with (and exposed with a fearless hand) certain family secrets which were thought only to be known to a few of the very highest members of the aristocracy.' No, I say; these silly baits to catch an unsuspecting public shall not be our arts. If you choose to occupy yourself with trying to ascertain if a certain cap fits one among ever so many thousand heads, you may possibly pop it on the right one: but the capmaker will perish before he tells you; unless, of course, he has some private pique to avenge, or malice to wreak, upon some individual who can't by any possibility hit again;—then, indeed, he will come boldly forward and seize upon his victim (a bishop, say, or a woman without coarse, quarrelsome male relatives, will be best), and clap on him, or her, such a cap, with such ears, and that all the world shall laugh at the poor wretch, shuddering and blushing beet-root red, and whimpering deserving tears of rage and vexation, at being made the common butt of society. Besides, I dine at Lovel's still; his company and cuisine are among the best in London. If they suspected I was taking them off he and his wife would leave off inviting me. Would any man of a generous disposition lose such a valued friend for a joke, or be so foolish as to show him up in a story? All persons with a decent knowledge of the world will at once banish the thought, as not merely base, but absurd. I am invited to his house one day next week: vous concevez I can’t mention the very day, for then he would find me out—and of course there would be no more cards for his old friend. He would not like appearing, as it must be owned he does in this memoir, as a man of not very strong mind. He believes himself to be a most determined, resolute person. He is quick in speech, wears a fierce beard, speaks with asperity to his servants (who liken him to a—to that before-named sable or ermine contrivance in which ladies insert their hands in winter), and takes his wife to task so smartly that I believe she believes he believes he is the master of the house. ‘Elizabeth, my love, he must mean A, or B, or D,’ I fancy I hear Lovel say; and she says, ‘Yes; oh! it is certainly D—his very image!’ ‘D to a T,’ says Lovel (who is a neat wit). She may know that I mean to depict her husband in the above unpretending lines: but she will never let me know of her knowledge except by a little extra courtesy; except (may I make this pleasing exception?) by a few more invitations; except by a look of those unfathomable eyes (gracious goodness! to think she wore spectacles ever so long, and put a lid over them, as it were!), into which, when you gaze sometimes, you may gaze so deep, and deep, and deep, that I defy you to plumb halfway down into their mystery.

When I was a young man I had lodgings in Beak Street, Regent Street (I no more have lived in Beak Street than in Belgrave Square; but I choose to say so, and no gentleman will be so rude as to contradict another)—I had lodgings, I say, in Beak Street, Regent Street. Mrs. Prior was the landlady’s name. She had seen better days—landladies frequently have. Her husband—he could not be called the landlord, for Mrs. P. was manager of the place—had been in happier times captain or lieutenant in the militia; then of Diss, in Norfolk, of no profession; then of Norwich Castle, a prisoner for debt; then of Southampton Buildings, London, law writer; then of the Bom-Retiro Caçadores, in the service of H. M. the Queen of Portugal, lieutenant and paymaster; then of Melina Place, St. George’s Fields, etc.—I forbear to give the particulars of an existence which a legal biographer has traced step by step, and which has more than once been the subject of judicial investigation by certain commissioners in Lincoln’s Inn Fields. Well, Prior, at this time, swimming out of a hundred shipwrecks, had clambered on to a lighter, as it were, and was clerk to a coal merchant, by the riverside. 'You conceive, sir,' he would say, 'my employment is only temporary—the fortune of war, the fortune of war!' He smattered words in not a few foreign languages. His person was profusely scented with tobacco. Bearded individuals, padding the muddy hoof in the neighboring Regent Street, would call sometimes of an evening, and ask for 'the captain.' He was known at many neighboring billiard tables, and, I imagine, not respected. You will not see enough of Captain Prior to be very weary of him and his coarse swagger, to be disgusted by his repeated requests for small money loans, or to deplore his loss, which you will please to suppose has happened before the curtain of our present drama draws up. I think two people in the world were sorry for him: his wife, who still loved the memory of the handsome young man who had wooed and won her; his daughter Elizabeth, whom for the last few months of his life, and up to his fatal illness, he every evening conducted to what he called her 'academy.' You are right. Elizabeth is the principal character in this story. When I knew her, a thin, freckled girl of fifteen, with a lean frock, and hair of a reddish hue, she used to borrow my books, and play on the First Floor's piano, when he was from home—Slumley his name was. He was editor of the Swell, a newspaper then published, author of a great number of popular songs, a friend of several music-selling houses: and it was by Mr. Slumley's interest that Elizabeth was received as a pupil at what the family called 'the academy.'

Captain Prior then used to conduct his girl to the academy, but she often had to conduct him home again. Having to wait about the premises for two or three or five hours sometimes, while Elizabeth was doing her lessons, he would naturally desire to shelter himself from the cold at some neighboring house of entertainment. Every Friday a prize of a golden medal, nay, I believe sometimes of twenty-five silver medals, was awarded to Miss Bellenden and other young ladies for their good conduct and assiduity at this academy. Miss Bellenden gave her gold medal to her mother, only keeping five shillings for herself, with which the poor child bought gloves, shoes, and her humble articles of millinery.

Once or twice the captain succeeded in intercepting that piece of gold, and I dare say treated some of his whiskered friends, the clinking trampers of the Quadrant pavement. He was a free-handed fellow when he had anybody's money in his pocket. It was owing to differences regarding the settlement of accounts that he quarreled with the coal merchant, his very last employer. Bessy, after yielding once or twice to his importunity, and trying to believe his solemn promises of repayment, had strength of mind to refuse her father the pound which he would have taken. Her five shillings—her poor little slender pocket money, the representative of her charities and kindnesses to the little brothers and sisters; of her little toilet ornaments, nay, necessities; of those well-mended gloves, of those oft-darned stockings, of those poor boots, which had to walk many a weary mile after midnight; of those little knick-knacks, in the shape of brooch or bracelet, with which the poor child adorned her homely robe or sleeve—her poor five shillings, out of which Mary sometimes found a pair of shoes, or Tommy a flannel jacket, and little Bill a coat and horse—this wretched sum, this mite, which Bessy administered among so many poor—I very much fear her father sometimes confiscated. I charged the child with the fact, and she could not deny me. I vowed a tremendous vow that if ever I heard of her giving Prior money again I would quit the lodgings, and never give those children lollipop nor pegtop nor sixpence; nor the pungent marmalade, nor the biting gingerbread nut, nor the theater characters, nor the paint box to illuminate the same; nor the discarded clothes, which became smaller clothes upon the persons of little Tommy and little Bill, for whom Mrs. Prior and Bessy and the little maid cut, clipped, altered, ironed, darned, mangled, with the greatest ingenuity. I say, considering what had passed between me and the Priors—considering those money transactions and those clothes and my kindness to the children, it was rather hard that my jam pots were poached, and my brandy bottles leaked. And then to frighten her brother with the story of the inexorable creditor—oh, Mrs. Prior!—oh, fie, Mrs. P.!

So Bessy went to her school in a shabby shawl, a faded bonnet, and a poor little lean dress flounced with the mud and dust of all weathers, whereas there were some other young ladies, fellow-pupils of her, who laid out their gold medals to much greater advantage. Miss Delamere, with her eighteen shillings a week (calling them 'silver medals' was only my wit, you see), had twenty new bonnets, silk and satin dresses for all seasons, feathers in abundance, swan's-down muff and tippets, lovely pocket handkerchiefs and trinkets, and many and many a half-crown mold of jelly, bottle of sherry, blanket, or what not for a poor fellow-pupil in distress; and as for Miss Montanville, who had exactly the same sal—well, who had a scholarship of exactly the same value, viz., about fifty pounds yearly—she kept an elegant little cottage in the Regent's Park, a brougham with a horse all over brass harness, and a groom with a prodigious gold lace hat band, who was treated with frightful contumely at the neighboring cab stand; an aunt or a mother, I don't know which (I hope it was only an aunt), always comfortably dressed, and who looked after Montanville; and she herself had bracelets, brooches, and velvet pelisses of the very richest description. But then Miss Montanville was a good economist. She was never known to help a poor friend in distress, or give a fainting brother and sister a crust or a glass of wine. She allowed ten shillings a week to her father, whose name was Boskinson, said to be a clerk to a chapel in Paddington; but she would never see him—no, not when he was in hospital, where he was so ill; and though she certainly lent Miss Wilder thirteen pounds, she had Wilder arrested upon her promissory note for twenty-four, and sold up every stick of Wilder's furniture, so that the whole academy cried shame! Well, an accident occurred to Miss Montanville, for which those may be sorry who choose. On the evening of the 26th of December, eighteen hundred and something, when the conductors of the academy were giving their grand annual Christmas pant—I should say examination of the academy pupils before their numerous friends—Montanville, who happened to be present, not in her brougham this time, but in an aerial chariot of splendor drawn by doves, fell off a rainbow, and through the roof of the Revolving Shrine of the Amaranthine Queen, thereby very nearly damaging Bellenden, who was occupying the shrine, attired in a light blue spangled dress, waving a wand, and uttering some idiotic verses composed for her by the professor of literature attached to the academy. As for Montanville, let her go shrieking down that trapdoor, break her leg, be taken home, and never more be character of ours. She never could speak. Her voice was as hoarse as a fishwoman's. Can that immense stout old box-keeper at the —— Theater, who limps up to ladies on the first tier, and offers that horrible footstool, which everybody stumbles over, and makes a clumsy courtesy, and looks so knowing and hard, as if she recognized an acquaintance in the splendid lady who enters the box—can that old female be the once brilliant Emily Montanville? I am told there are no lady boxkeepers in the English theaters. This, I submit, is a proof of my consummate care and artifice in rescuing from a prurient curiosity the individual personages from whom the characters of the present story are taken. Montanville is not a box-opener. She may, under another name, keep a trinket shop in the Burlington Arcade, for what you know; but this secret no torture shall induce me to divulge. Life has its rises and its downfalls, and you have had yours, you hobbling old creature. Montanville, indeed! Go thy ways! Here is a shilling for thee. (Thank you, sir.) Take away that confounded footstool, and never let us see thee more!

Now the fairy Amarantha was like a certain dear young lady of whom we have read in early youth. Up to twelve o'clock, attired in sparkling raiment, she leads the dance with the prince (Gradini, known as Grady in his days of banishment at the T. R., Dublin). At supper, she takes her place by the prince's royal father (who is alive now, and still reigns occasionally, so that we will not mention his revered name). She makes believe to drink from the gilded pasteboard, and to eat of the mighty pudding. She smiles as the good old irascible monarch knocks the prime minister and the cooks about; she blazes in splendor; she beams with a thousand jewels, in comparison with which the Koh-i-noor is a wretched lusterless little pebble; she disappears in a chariot, such as a Lord Mayor never rode in—and at midnight who is that young woman tripping homeward through the wet streets in a battered bonnet, a cotton shawl, and a lean frock fringed with the dreary winter flounces?

Our Cinderella is up early in the morning; she does no little portion of the housework; she dresses her sisters and brothers; she prepares papa's breakfast. On days when she has not to go to morning lessons at her academy she helps with the dinner. Heaven help us! She has often brought mine when I have dined at home, and owns to having made that famous mutton broth when I had a cold. Foreigners come to the house—professional gentlemen—to see Slumley on the first floor; exiled captains of Spain and Portugal, companions of the warrior her father. It is surprising how she has learned their accents, and has picked up French, and Italian too. And she played the piano in Mr. Slumley's room sometimes, as I have said; but refrained from that presently, and from visiting him altogether. I suspect he was not a man of principle. His paper used to make direful attacks upon individual reputations; and you would find theater and opera people most curiously praised and assaulted in the Swell. I recollect meeting him several years after, in the lobby of the opera, in a very noisy frame of mind, when he heard a certain lady's carriage called, and cried out with exceeding strong language, which need not be accurately reported, 'Look at that woman! Confound her! I made her, sir! Got her an engagement when the family was starving, sir? Did you see her, sir? She wouldn't even look at me!' Nor indeed was Mr. S. at that moment a very agreeable object to behold.

Then I remembered that there had been some quarrel with this man when we lodged in Beak Street together. If difficulty there was, it was solved ambulando. He quitted the lodgings, leaving an excellent and costly piano as security for a heavy bill which he owed to Mrs. Prior, and the instrument was presently fetched away by the music sellers, its owners. But regarding Mr. S.'s valuable biography, let us speak very gently. You see it is 'an insult to literature' to say that there are disreputable and dishonest persons who write in newspapers.

Nothing, dear friend, escapes your penetration: if a joke is made in your company, you are down upon it instanter, and your smile rewards the wag who amuses you; so you knew at once, while I was talking of Elizabeth and her academy, that a theater was meant, where the poor child danced for a guinea or five-and-twenty shillings per week. Nay, she must have had not a little skill and merit to advance to the quarter of a hundred; for she was not pretty at this time, only a rough, tawny-haired filly of a girl, with great eyes. Dolphin, the manager, did not think much of her, and she passed before him in his regiment of sea nymphs, or bayadères, or fairies, or mazurka maidens (with their fluttering lances and little scarlet slyboots!) scarcely more noticed than Private Jones standing under arms in his company when his Royal Highness the Field Marshal gallops by. There were no dramatic triumphs for Miss Bellenden: no bouquets were flung at her feet; no cunning Mephistopheles—the emissary of some philandering Faustus outside—corrupted her duenna, or brought her caskets of diamonds. Had there been any such admirer for Bellenden, Dolphin would not only not have been shocked, but he would very likely have raised her salary. As it was, though himself, I fear, a person of loose morals, he respected better things. 'That Bellenden's a good honest gurl,' he said to the present writer: 'works hard; gives her money to her family; father a shy old cove. Very good family I hear they are!' and he passes on to some other of the innumerable subjects which engage a manager.

Now why should a poor lodging house keeper make such a mighty secret of having a daughter earning an honest guinea by dancing at a theater? Why persist in calling the theater an academy? Why did Mrs. Prior speak of it as such to me who knew what the truth was, and to whom Elizabeth herself made no mystery of her calling?

There are actions and events in its life over which decent Poverty often chooses to cast a veil that is not unbecoming wear. We can all, if we are minded, peer through this poor flimsy screen; often there is no shame behind it—only empty platters, poor scraps, and other threadbare evidence of want and cold. And who is called on to show his rags to the public, and cry out his hunger in the street? At this time (her character has developed itself not so amiably since) Mrs. Prior was outwardly respectable; and yet, as I have said, my groceries were consumed with remarkable rapidity; my wine and brandy bottles were all leaky, until they were excluded from air under a patent lock; my Morel’s raspberry jam, of which I was passionately fond, if exposed on the table for a few hours was always eaten by the cat, or that wonderful little wretch of a maid-of-all-work, so active, yet so patient, so kind, so dirty, so obliging. Was it the maid who took those groceries? I have seen the ‘Gazza Ladra,’ and know that poor little maids are sometimes wrongfully accused; and besides, in my particular case, I own I don’t care who the culprit was. At the year’s end a single man is not much poorer for this house tax which he pays. One Sunday evening, being confined with a cold, and partaking of that mutton broth which Elizabeth made so well, and which she brought me, I entreated her to bring from the cupboard, of which I gave her the key, a certain brandy bottle. She saw my face when I looked at her; there was no mistaking its agony. There was scarce any brandy left; it had all leaked away; and it was Sunday, and no good brandy was to be bought that evening.

Elizabeth, I say, saw my grief. She put down the bottle, and she cried; she tried to prevent herself from doing so at first, but she fairly burst into tears.

‘My dear—dear child,’ says I, seizing her hand, ‘you don’t suppose I fancy you—’

‘No—no!’ she says, drawing the large hand over her eyes, ‘no—no! but I saw it when you and Mr. Warrington last ’ad some. Oh! do have a patting lock!’

‘A patent lock, my dear!’ I remarked. ‘How odd that you, who have learned to pronounce Italian and French words so well, should make such strange slips in English! Your mother speaks well enough.’

‘She was born a lady. She was not sent to be a milliner’s girl, as I was, and then among those noisy girls at that—oh! that place! cries Bessy in a sort of desperation, clenching her hand.

Here the bells of St. Beak's began to ring quite cheerily for evening service. I heard 'Elizabeth!' cried out from the lower regions by Mrs. Prior's cracked voice. And the maiden went her way to church, which she and her mother never missed of a Sunday; and I dare say I slept just as well without the brandy and water.

Slumley being gone, Mrs. Prior came to me rather wistfully one day, and wanted to know whether I would object to Mme. Bentivoglio, the opera singer, having the first floor. This was too much, indeed! How was my work to go on with that woman practicing all day and roaring underneath me? But, after sending away so good a customer, I could not refuse to lend the Priors a little more money; and Prior insisted upon treating me to a new stamp, and making out a new and handsome bill for an amount nearly twice as great as the last; which he had no doubt under heaven, and which he pledged his honor as an officer and a gentleman, that he would meet. Let me see: That was how many years ago? Thirteen, fourteen, twenty? Never mind. My fair Elizabeth, I think if you saw your poor old father's signature now you would pay it. I came upon it lately in an old box I haven't opened these fifteen years, along with some letters written—never mind by whom—and an old glove that I used to set an absurd value by; and that emerald-green tabinet waistcoat which kind old Mrs. Macmanus gave me, and which I wore at the L—d L—t—nt's ball, Ph-n-x Park, Dublin, once, when I danced with her there! Lord! Lord! It would no more meet round my waist now than round Daniel Lambert's. How we outgrow things!

But as I never presented this united bill of £43 odd (the first portion of £23, etc., was advanced by me in order to pay an execution out of the house)—as I never expected to have it paid any more than I did to be Lord Mayor of London—I say it was a little hard that Mrs. Prior should write off to her brother (she writes a capital letter) blessing Providence that had given him a noble income, promising him the benefit of her prayers, in order that he should long live to enjoy his large salary, and informing him that an obdurate creditor, who shall be nameless (meaning me), who had Captain Prior in his power (as if, being in possession of that dingy scrawl, I should have known what to do with it), who held Mr. Prior's acceptance for £43 14s. 4d., due on the 3d July (my bill), would infallibly bring their family to ruin unless a part of the money was paid up. When I went up to my old college, and called on Sargent, at Boniface Lodge, he treated me as civilly as if I had been an undergraduate; scarcely spoke to me in hall, where, of course, I dined at the Fellows' table; and only asked me to one of Mrs. Sargent's confounded tea parties during the whole time of my stay. Now it was by this man's entreaty that I went to lodge at Prior's; he talked to me after dinner one day, he hummed, he ha'd, he blushed, he prated in his pompous way about an unfortunate sister in London—fatal early marriage—husband Captain Prior, Knight of the Swan with Two Necks of Portugal, most distinguished officer, but imprudent speculator—advantageous lodgings in the center of London, quiet, though near the clubs—if I was ill (I am a confirmed invalid) Mrs. Prior, his sister, would nurse me like a mother. So, in a word, I went to Prior's; I took the rooms; I was attracted by some children: Amelia Jane (that little dirty maid before mentioned) dragging a go-cart, containing a little dirty pair; another marching by them, carrying a fourth well nigh as big as himself. These little folks, having threaded the mighty flood of Regent Street, debouched into the quiet creek of Beak Street, just as I happened to follow them. And the door at which the small caravan halted—the very door I was in search of—was opened by Elizabeth, then only just emerging from childhood, with tawny hair falling into her solemn eyes.

The aspect of these little people, which would have deterred many, happened to attract me. I am a lonely man. I may have been ill treated by someone once, but that is neither here nor there. If I had had children of my own I think I should have been good to them. I thought Prior a dreadful vulgar wretch, and his wife a scheming, greedy little woman. But the children amused me; and I took the rooms, liking to hear overhead in the morning the patter of their little feet. The person I mean has several; husband, judge in the West Indies. Allons! now you know how I came to live at Mrs. Prior's.

Though I am now a steady, a confirmed old bachelor (I shall call myself Mr. Batchelor; if you please, in this story; and there is someone far—far away who knows why I will never take another title), I was a gay young fellow enough once. I was not above the pleasures of youth; in fact, I learned quadrilles on purpose to dance with her that long vacation when I went to read with my young friend Lord Viscount Poldoody at Dub—psha! Be still, thou foolish heart! Perhaps I misspent my time as an undergraduate.
Perhaps I read too many novels, occupied myself too much with 'elegant literature' (that used to be our phrase), and spoke too often at the Union, where I had a considerable reputation. But those fine words got me no college prizes; I missed my fellowship; was rather in disgrace with my relations afterward, but had a small independence of my own, which I eked out by taking a few pupils for little-goes and the common degree. At length, a relation dying, and leaving me a further small income, I left the university, and came to reside in London.

Now in my third year at college there came to St. Boniface a young gentleman, who was one of the few gentlemen-pensioners of our society. His popularity speedily was great. A kindly and simple youth, he would have been liked, I dare say, even though he had been no richer than the rest of us; but this is certain, that flattery, worldliness, mammon-worship, are vices as well known to young as to old boys; and a rich lad at school or college has his followers, tuft-hunters, led-captains, little courts, just as much as any elderly millionnaire of Pall Mall, who gazes round his club to see whom he shall take home to dinner, while humble trencher-men wait anxiously, thinking, Ah! will he take me this time? or will he ask that abominable sneak and toady Henchman again? Well—well! this is an old story about parasites and flatterers. My dear good sir, I am not for a moment going to say that you ever were one; and I dare say it was very base and mean of us to like a man chiefly on account of his money. 'I know'—Fred Lovel used to say—'I know fellows come to my rooms because I have a large allowance, and plenty of my poor old governor's wine, and give good dinners; I am not deceived; but, at least, it is pleasanter to come to me and have good dinners and good wine than to go to Jack Highson's dreary tea and turnout; or to Ned Roper's abominable Oxbridge port.' And so I admit at once that Lovel's parties were more agreeable than most men's in the college. Perhaps the goodness of the fare, by pleasing the guests, made them more pleasant. A dinner in hall and a pewter plate is all very well, and I can say grace before it with all my heart; but a dinner with fish from London, game, and two or three nice little entrées, is better—and there was no better cook in the university than ours at St. Boniface, and, ah me! there were appetites then, and digestions which rendered the good dinner doubly good.

Between me and young Lovel a friendship sprang up, which I trust even the publication of this story will not diminish. There is a period immediately after the taking of his bachelor's degree when many a university man finds himself embarrassed. The tradesmen rather rudely press for a settlement of their accounts. Those prints we ordered calidijuventa; those shirt studs and pins which the jewelers would insist in thrusting into our artless bosoms; those fine coats we would insist on having for our books, as well as ourselves: all these have to be paid for by the graduate. And my father, who was then alive, refusing to meet these demands, under the—I own—just plea that my allowance had been ample, and that my half sisters ought not to be mulcted of their slender portions in consequence of my extravagance, I should have been subject to very serious inconvenience—nay, possibly, to personal incarceration—had not Lovel, at the risk of rustication, rushed up to London to his mother (who then had especial reasons for being very gracious with her son), obtained a supply of money from her, and brought it to me at Mr. Shackell's horrible hotel, where I was lodged. He had tears in his kind eyes; he grasped my hand a hundred and hundred times as he flung the notes into my lap; and the recording tutor (Sargent was only tutor then), who was going to bring him up before the master for breach of discipline, dashed away a drop from his own lid, when, with a moving eloquence, I told what had happened, and blotted out the transaction with some particular old 1811 port, of which we freely partook in his private rooms that evening. By laborious instalments, I had the happiness to pay Lovel back. I took pupils, as I said; I engaged in literary pursuits; I become connected with a literary periodical, and, I am ashamed to say, I imposed myself upon the public as a good classical scholar. I was not thought the less learned when, my relative dying, I found myself in possession of a small independency; and my 'Translations from the Greek,' my 'Poems by Beta,' and my articles in the paper of which I was part proprietor for several years, have had their little success in their day.

Indeed at Oxbridge, if I did not obtain university honors, at least I showed literary tastes. I got the prize essay one year at Boniface, and plead guilty to having written essays, poems, and a tragedy. My college friends had a joke at my expense (a very small joke serves to amuse those port-wine-bibbing fogies, and keeps them laughing for ever so long a time)—they are welcome, I say, to make merry at my charges—in respect of a certain bargain which I made on coming to London, and in which, had I been Moses Primrose purchasing green spectacles, I could scarcely have been more taken in. My Jenkinson was an old college acquaintance, whom I was idiot enough to imagine a respectable man; the fellow had a very smooth tongue, and sleek, sanctified exterior. He was rather a popular preacher, and used to cry a good deal in the pulpit. He, and a queer wine merchant and bill discounter, Sherrick by name, had somehow got possession of that neat little literary paper the Museum, which, perhaps, you remember; and this eligible literary property my friend Honeyman, with his wheeling tongue, induced me to purchase. I bear no malice; the fellow is in India now, where I trust he pays his butcher and baker. He was in dreadful straits for money when he sold me the Museum. He began crying when I told him some short time afterward that he was a swindler, and from behind his pocket handkerchief sobbed a prayer that I should one day think better of him; whereas my remarks to the same effect produced an exactly contrary impression upon his accomplice, Sherrick, who burst out laughing in my face, and said, 'The more fool you.' Mr. Sherrick was right. He was a fool, without mistake, who had any money dealings with him; and poor Honeyman was right too: I don't think so badly of him as I did. A fellow so hardly pinched for money could not resist the temptation of extracting it from such a greenhorn. I dare say I gave myself airs as editor of that confounded Museum, and proposed to educate the public taste, to diffuse morality and sound literature throughout the nation, and to pocket a liberal salary in return for my services. I dare say I printed my own sonnets, my own tragedy, my own verses (to a Being who shall be nameless, but whose conduct has caused a faithful heart to bleed not a little). I dare say I wrote satirical articles, in which I piqued myself upon the fineness of my wit, and criticisms, got up for the nonce out of encyclopedias and biographical dictionaries; so that I would be actually astounded at my own knowledge. I dare say I made a gaby of myself to the world; pray, my good friend, hast thou never done likewise? If thou hast never been a fool, be sure thou wilt never be a wise man.

I think it was my brilliant confrère on the first floor (he had pecuniary transactions with Sherrick, and visited two or three of her Majesty's metropolitan prisons at that gentleman's suit) who first showed me how grievously I had been cheated in the newspaper matter. Slumley wrote for a paper printed at our office. The same boy often brought proofs to both of us—a little bit of a puny bright-eyed chap, who looked scarce twelve years old when he was sixteen; who in wit was a man when in stature he was a child—like many other children of the poor. This little Dick Bedford used to sit many hours asleep on my landing place or Slumley’s, while we were preparing our invaluable compositions within our respective apartments. S. was a good-natured reprobate, and gave the child of his meat and his drink. I used to like to help the little man from my breakfast, and see him enjoy the meal. As he sat, with his bag on his knees, his head sunk in sleep, his little high-lows scarce reaching the floor, Dick made a touching little picture. The whole house was fond of him. The tipsy captain nodded him a welcome as he swaggered downstairs, stock and coat and waistcoat in hand, to his worship’s toilet in the back kitchen. The children and Dick were good friends; and Elizabeth patronized him, and talked with him now and again, in her grave way. You know Clancy, the composer?—know him better, perhaps, under his name of Friedrich Donner? Donner used to write music to Slumley’s words, or vice versa; and would come now and again to Beak Street, where he and his poet would try their joint work at the piano. At the sound of that music little Dick’s eyes used to kindle. ‘Oh, it’s prime!’ said the young enthusiast. And I will say that good-natured miscreant of a Slumley not only gave the child pence, but tickets for the play, concerts, and so forth. Dick had a neat little suit of clothes at home; his mother made him a very nice little waistcoat out of my undergraduate’s gown, and he and she, a decent woman, when in their best raiment, looked respectable enough for any theater pit in England.

Among other places of public amusement which he attended Mr. Dick frequented the academy where Miss Bellenden danced, and whence poor Elizabeth Prior issued forth after midnight in her shabby frock. And once, the captain, Elizabeth’s father and protector, being unable to walk very accurately, and noisy and incoherent in his speech, so that the attention of messieurs of the police was directed toward him, Dick came up, placed Elizabeth and her father in a cab, paid the fare with his own money, and brought the whole party home in triumph, himself sitting on the box of the vehicle. I chanced to be coming home myself (from one of Mrs. Wateringham’s elegant tea soirees, in Dorset Square), and reached my door just at the arrival of Dick and his caravan. ‘Here, cabby!’ says Dick, handing out the fare, and looking with his brightest eyes. It is pleasanter to look at that beaming little face than at the captain yonder, reeling into his house, supported by his daughter. Dick cried, Elizabeth told me, when, a week afterward, she wanted to pay him back his shilling; and she said he was a strange child, that he was.
I revert to my friend Lovel. I was coaching Lovel for his degree (which, between ourselves, I think he never would have attained) when he suddenly announced to me from Weymouth, where he was passing the vacation, his intention to quit the university, and to travel abroad. 'Events have happened, dear friend,' he wrote, 'which will make my mother's home miserable to me (I little knew when I went to town about your business what caused her wonderful complaisance to me). She would have broken my heart, Charles' (my Christian name is Charles), 'but its wounds have found a consoler!'

Now, in this little chapter, there are some little mysteries propounded, upon which, were I not above any such artifice, I might easily leave the reader to ponder for a month.

1. Why did Mrs. Prior, at the lodgings, persist in calling the theater at which her daughter danced the academy?

2. What were the special reasons why Mrs. Lovel should be so very gracious with her son, and give him £150 as soon as he asked for the money?

3. Why was Fred Lovel's heart nearly broken? And 4. Who was his consoler?

I answer these at once, and without the slightest attempt at delay or circumlocution. 1. Mrs. Prior, who had repeatedly received money from her brother, John Erasmus Sargent, D. D., master of St. Boniface College, knew perfectly well that if the master (whom she already pestered out of his life) heard that she had sent a niece of his on the stage, he would never give her another shilling.

2. The reason why Emma, widow of the late Adolphus Loeffel of Whitechapel Road, sugar baker, was so particularly gracious to her son, Adolphus Frederick Lovel, Esq., of St. Boniface College, Oxbridge, and principal partner in the house of Loeffel aforesaid, an infant, was that she, Emma, was about to contract a second marriage with the Rev. Samuel Bonnington.

3. Fred Lovel's heart was so very much broken by this intelligence that he gave himself airs of Hamlet, dressed in black, wore his long fair hair over his eyes, and exhibited a hundred signs of grief and desperation; until:

4. Louisa (widow of the late Sir Popham Baker of Bakers-town, Co. Kilkenny, Baronet) induced Mr. Lovel to take a trip on the Rhine with her and Cecilia, fourth and only unmarried daughter of the aforesaid Sir Popham Baker, deceased.

My opinion of Cecilia I have candidly given in a previous page. I adhere to that opinion. I shall not repeat it. The subject is disagreeable to me, as the woman herself was in life.
What Fred found in her to admire I cannot tell; lucky for us all that tastes, men, women, vary. You will never see her alive in this history. That is her picture, painted by the late Mr. Gandish. She stands fingerling that harp with which she has often driven me half mad with her 'Tara's Halls,' and her 'Poor Marianne.' She used to bully Fred so, and be so rude to his guests, that in order to pacify her he would meanly say, 'Do, my love, let us have a little music!' and thumpety—thrumpty, off would go her gloves, and 'Tara's Halls,' would begin. 'The harp that once,' indeed! the accursed catgut scarce knew any other music, and 'once' was a hundred times at least in my hearing. Then came the period when I was treated to the cold joint which I have mentioned; and, not liking it, I gave up going to Shrublands.

So, too, did my Lady Baker, but not of her own free will, mind you. She did not quit the premises because her reception was too cold, but because the house was made a great deal too hot for her. I remember Fred coming to me in high spirits, and describing to me, with no little humor, a great battle between Cecilia and Lady Baker, and her ladyship's defeat and flight. She fled, however, only as far as Putney village, where she formed again, as it were, and fortified herself in a lodging. Next day she made a desperate and feeble attack, presenting herself at Shrublands lodge gate, and threatening that she and sorrow would sit down before it; and that all the world should know how a daughter treated her mother. But the gate was locked, and Barnet, the gardener, appeared behind it, saying, 'Since you are come, my lady, perhaps you will pay my missis the four-and-twenty shillings you borrowed of her.' And he grinned at her through the bars, until she fled before him, cowering. Lovel paid the little forgotten account; the best four-and-twenty shillings he had ever laid out, he said.

Eight years passed away, during the last four of which I scarce saw my old friend, except at clubs and taverns, where we met privily, and renewed, not old warmth and hilarity, but old kindness. One winter he took his family abroad; Cecilia's health was delicate, Lovel told me, and the doctor had advised that she should spend a winter in the South. He did not stay with them; he had pressing affairs at home; he had embarked in many businesses besides the paternal sugar bakery; was concerned in companies, a director of a joint-stock bank, a man in whose fire were many irons. A faithful governess was with the children; a faithful man and maid were in attendance on the invalid; and Lovel, adoring his wife as he certainly did, yet supported her absence with great equanimity.

In the spring I was not a little scared to read among the deaths in the newspaper: 'At Naples, of scarlet fever, on the 25th ult., Cecilia, wife of Frederick Lovel, Esq., and daughter of the late Sir Popham Baker, Bart.' I knew what my friend's grief would be. He had hurried abroad at the news of her illness; he did not reach Naples in time to receive the last words of his poor Cecilia.

Some months after the catastrophe I had a note from Shrublands. Lovel wrote quite in the old affectionate tone. He begged his dear old friend to go to him, and console him in his solitude. Would I come to dinner that evening?

Of course I went off to him straightway. I found him in deep sables in the drawing room with his children, and I confess I was not astonished to see my Lady Baker once more in that room.

'You seem surprised to see me here, Mr. Batchelor?' says her ladyship, with that grace and good breeding which she generally exhibited; for if she accepted benefits, she took care to insult those from whom she received them.

'Indeed, no,' said I, looking at Lovel, who piteously hung down his head. He had his little Cissy at his knee; he was sitting under the portrait of the defunct musician, whose harp, now muffled in leather, stood dimly in the corner of the room.

'I am here not at my own wish, but from a feeling of duty toward that—departed angel!' says Lady Baker, pointing to the picture.

'I am sure when mamma was here, you were always quarreling,' says little Popham, with a scowl.

'This is the way those innocent children have been taught to regard me,' cries grandmamma.

'Silence, Pop,' says papa, 'and don't be a rude boy.'

'Isn't Pop a rude boy?' echoes Cissy.

'Silence, Pop,' continues papa, 'or you must go up to Miss Prior.'

CHAPTER II.

IN WHICH MISS PRIOR IS KEPT AT THE DOOR.

Of course we all know who she was, the Miss Prior of Shrublands, whom papa and grandmamma called to the unruly children. Years had passed since I had shaken the Beak Street dust off my feet. The brass plate of 'Prior' was removed from the once familiar door, and screwed, for what I can tell, on to the late reprobate owner's coffin. A little eruption of mushroom-formed brass knobs I saw on the doorpost when I passed by it last week, and Café des Ambassadeurs was thereon inscribed, with three fly-blown blue teacups, a couple of coffeepots of the well-known Britannia metal, and two freckled copies of the Indépendence Belge hanging over the window blind. Were those their Excellencies the Ambassadors at the door, smoking cheroots? Pool and Billiards were written on their countenances, their hats, their elbows. They may have been ambassadors down on their luck, as the phrase is. They were in disgrace, no doubt, at the court of her Imperial Majesty Queen Fortune. Men as shabby have retrieved their disgraces ere now, washed their cloudy faces, strapped their dingy waistcoats with cordons, and stepped into fine carriages from quarters not a whit more reputable than the Café des Ambassadeurs. If I lived in the Leicester Square neighborhood, and kept a café, I would always treat foreigners with respect. They may be billiard markers now, or doing a little shady police business; but why should they not afterward be generals and great officers of state? Suppose that gentleman is at present a barber, with his tongs and stick of fixature for the mustaches, how do you know he has not his epaulets and his bâton de maréchal in the same pouch? I see engraven on the second floor bell, on my rooms, 'Plugwell.' Who can Plugwell be, whose feet now warm at the fire where I sat many a long evening? And this gentleman with the fur collar, the strangling beard, the frank and engaging leer, the somewhat husky voice, who is calling out on the doorstep, 'Step in, and 'ave it done. Your correct likeness, only one shilling'—is he an ambassador too? Ah, no; he is only the chargé-d'affaires of a photographer who lives upstairs: no doubt where the little ones used to be. Bless me! Photography was an infant and in the nursery too, when we lived in Beak Street.

Shall I own that, for old time's sake, I went upstairs, and 'ad it done'—that correct likeness, price one shilling? Would Someone (I have said, I think, that the party in question is well married in a distant island) like to have the thing, I wonder, and be reminded of a man whom she knew in life's prime, with brown curly locks, as she looked on the effigy of this elderly gentleman, with a forehead as bare as a billiard ball?

As I went up and down that darkling stair, the ghosts of the Prior children peeped out from the banisters; the little faces smiled in the twilight; it may be wounds (of the heart) throbbed and bled again—oh, how freshly and keenly! How infernally I have suffered behind that door in that room—I mean that one where Plugwell now lives. Confound Plugwell! I wonder what that woman thinks of me as she sees me shaking my fist at the door? Do you think me mad, madam? I don’t care if you do. Do you think when I spoke anon of the ghosts of Prior’s children I mean that any of them are dead? None are, that I know of. A great hulking Bluccoat boy, with fluffy whiskers, spoke to me not long since, in an awful bass voice, and announced his name as ‘Gus Prior.’ And ‘How’s Elizabeth?’ he added, nodding his bullet head. Elizabeth, indeed, you great vulgar boy! Elizabeth—and, by the way, how long we have been keeping her waiting!

You see, as I beheld her, a heap of memories struck upon me, and I could not help chattering; when of course—and you are perfectly right, only you might just as well have left the observation alone; for I knew quite well what you were going to say—when I had much better have held my tongue. Elizabeth means a history to me. She came to me at a critical period of my life. Bleeding and wounded from the conduct of that other individual (by her present name of Mrs. O’D—her present O D-ous name—I say, I will never—never call her—desperately wounded and miserable on my return from a neighboring capital, I went back to my lodgings in Beak Street, and there there grew up a strange intimacy between me and my landlady’s young daughter. I told her my story—indeed, I believe I told anybody who would listen. She seemed to compassionate me. She would come wistfully into my rooms, bringing me my gruel and things (I could scarcely bear to eat for a while after—after that affair to which I may have alluded before)—she used to come to me, and she used to pity me, and I used to tell her all, and to tell her over and over again. Days and days have I passed tearing my heart out in that second room floor which answers to the name of Plugwell now. Afternoon after afternoon have I spent there, and poured out my story of love and wrong to Elizabeth, showed her that waistcoat I told you of—that glove (her hand wasn’t so very small either)—her letters, those two or three vacuous, meaningless letters, with ‘My dear sir—mamma hopes you will come to tea;’ or, ‘If dear Mr. Batchelor should be riding in the Phenix Park near the Long Milestone, about 2, my sister and I will be in the car, and,’ etc., or, ‘Oh, you kind man! the tickets’ (she called it tickuts—by Heaven! she did) ‘were too welcome, and the bouquays too lovely’ (this word,
I saw, had been operated on with a penknife. I found no faults, not even in her spelling—then); or—never mind what more. But more of this pulling, of this humbug, of this bad spelling, of this infernal jilting, swindling, heartless hypocrisy (all her mother's doing, I own; for until he got his place my rival was not so well received as I was)—more of this rubbish, I say, I showed Elizabeth, and she pitied me!

She used to come to me day after day, and I used to talk to her. She used not to say much. Perhaps she did not listen; but I did not care for that. On—and on—and on I would go with my prate about my passion, my wrongs, and despair; and untiring as my complaints were, still more constant was my little hearer's compassion. Mamma's shrill voice would come to put an end to our conversation, and she would rise up with an 'Oh, bother!' and go away; but the next day the good girl was sure to come to me again, when we would have another repetition of our tragedy.

I dare say you are beginning to suppose (what, after all, is a very common case, and certainly no conjuror is wanted to make the guess) that out of all this crying and sentimentality, which a soft-hearted old fool of a man poured out to a young girl—out of all this whimpering and pity, something which is said to be akin to pity might arise. But in this, my good madam, you are utterly wrong. Some people have the small-pox twice; I do not. In my case, if a heart is broke, it's broke; if a flower is withered, it's withered. If I choose to put my grief in a ridiculous light, why not? why do you suppose I am going to make a tragedy of such an old used-up, battered, stale, vulgar, trivial everyday subject as a jilt who plays with a man's passion, and laughs at him, and leaves him? Tragedy indeed! Oh, yes! poison—black-edged notepaper—Waterloo Bridge—one more unfortunate, and so forth! No: if she goes, let her go!—si celeris quatit pennas, I puff the what-d'ye-call-it away! But I'll have no tragedy, mind you.

Well, it must be confessed that a man desperately in love (as I fear I must own I then was, and a good deal cut up by Glorvina's conduct) is a most selfish being, while women are so soft and unselfish that they can forget or disguise their own sorrows for a while, while they minister to a friend in affliction. I did not see, though I talked with her daily, on my return from that accursed Dublin, that my little Elizabeth was pale and distraite, and sad, and silent. She would sit quite dumb while I chattered, her hands between her knees, or draw one of them over her eyes. She would say, 'Oh, yes! Poor fellow—poor fellow!' now and again, as giving a melancholy confirmation of my dismal stories; but mostly she remained quiet, her head drooping toward the ground, a hand to her chin, her feet to the fender.

I was one day harping on the usual string. I was telling Elizabeth how, after presents had been accepted, after letters had passed between us (if her scrawl could be called letters, if my impassioned song could be so construed), after everything but the actual word had passed our lips—I was telling Elizabeth how, on one accursed day, Glorvina's mother greeted me on my arrival in Merrion Square, by saying, 'Dear, dear Mr. Batchelor, we look on you quite as one of the family! Congratulate me—congratulate my child! Dear Tom has got his appointment as Recorder of Tobago; and it is to be a match between him and his cousin Glory.'

'His cousin what!' I shriek, with a maniacal laugh.

'My poor Glorvina! Sure the children have been fond of each other ever since they could speak. I knew your kind heart would be the first to rejoice in their happiness.'

And so, say I—ending the story—I, who thought myself loved, was left without a pang of pity; I, who could mention a hundred reasons why I thought Glorvina well disposed to me, was told she regarded me as an uncle! Were her letters such as nieces write? Who ever heard of an uncle walking round Merrion Square for hours of a rainy night, and looking up to a bedroom window, because his niece, forsooth, was behind it! I had set my whole heart on the cast, and this was the return I got for it. For months she cajoles me—her eyes follow me, her cursed smiles welcome and fascinate me, and at a moment, at the beck of another—she laughs at me and leaves me!

At this my little pale Elizabeth, still hanging down, cries, 'Oh, the villain! the villain!' and sobs so that you might have thought her little heart would break.

'Nay,' said I, 'my dear, Mr. O'Dowd is no villain. His uncle, Sir Hector, was as gallant an old officer as any in the service. His aunt was a Molloy of Molloystown, and they are of excellent family, though, I believe, of embarrassed circumstances; and young Tom—'

'Tom?' cries Elizabeth, with a pale, bewildered look. 'His name wasn't Tom, dear Mr. Batchelor; his name was Woo-woo-illiam!' and the tears begin again.

Ah, my child! my child! my poor young creature! and you too have felt the infernal stroke. You too have passed the tossing nights of pain—have heard the dreary hours toll—
LOVEL THE WIDOWER.

have looked at the cheerless sunrise with your blank sleepless eyes—have woke out of dreams, mayhap, in which the beloved one was smiling on you, whispering love-words—oh! how sweet and fondly remembered! What!—your heart has been robbed, too, and your treasury is rifled and empty!—poor girl! And I looked in that sad face, and saw no grief there! You could do your little sweet endeavor to soothe my wounded heart, and I never saw yours was bleeding! Did you suffer more than I did, my poor little maid? I hope not. Are you so young, and is all the flower of life blighted for you? the cup without savor, the sun blotted, or almost invisible over your head? The truth came on me all at once; I felt ashamed that my own selfish grief should have made me blind to hers.

‘What!’ said I, ‘my poor child? Was it——’ and I pointed with my finger downward.

She nodded her poor head.

I knew it was the lodger who had taken the first floor shortly after Slumley’s departure. He was an officer in the Bombay Army. He had had the lodgings for three months. He had sailed for India shortly before I returned home from Dublin.

Elizabeth is waiting all this time—shall she come in? No, not yet. I have still a little more to say about the Priors.

You understand that she was no longer Miss Prior of Beak Street, and that mansion, even at the time of which I write, had been long handed over to other tenants. The captain dead, his widow with many tears pressed me to remain with her, and I did, never having been able to resist that kind of appeal. Her statements regarding her affairs were not strictly correct. Are not women sometimes incorrect about money matters? A landlord (not unjustly indignant) quickly handed over the mansion in Beak Street to other tenants. The queen’s taxes swooped down on poor Mrs. Prior’s scanty furniture—on hers?—on mine likewise: on my neatly bound college books, emblazoned with the effigy of Bonifacius, our patron, and of Bishop Budgeon, our founder; on my elegant Raphael Morghen prints, purchased in undergraduate days (ye powers! what did make us boys go tick for fifteen-guinea proofs of Raphael, Dying Stags, Duke of Wellington Banquets, and the like?); my harmonium, at which someone has warbled songs of my composition (I mean the words, artfully describing my passion, my hopes, or my despair); on my rich set of Bohemian glass, bought on the Zeil, Frankfort-O.-M.; on my picture of my father, the late Captain Batchelor (Hoppner), R. N., in white ducks, and a telescope, pointing, of course, to a tempest, in the midst of which was a naval engagement; on my poor mother's miniature, by old Adam Buck, in pencil and pink, with no waist to speak of at all; my tea and cream pots (boullion), with a hundred such fond knickknacks as decorate the chamber of a lonely man. I found all these household treasures in possession of the myrmidons of the law, and had to pay the Priors' taxes with this hand, before I could be re-integrated in my own property. Mrs. Prior could only pay me back with a widow's tears and blessings (Prior having quitted a world where he had long ceased to be of use or ornament). The tears and blessings, I say, she offered me freely, and they were all very well. But why go on tampering with the tea box, madam? Why put your finger—your finger?—your whole paw—in the jam pot? And it is a horrible fact that the wine and spirit bottles were just as leaky after Prior's decease as they had been during his disreputable lifetime. One afternoon, having a sudden occasion to return to my lodgings, I found my wretched landlady in the very act of marauding sherry. She gave an hysterical laugh, and then burst into tears. She declared that since her poor Prior's death she hardly knew what she said or did. She may have been incoherent; she was; but she certainly spoke truth on this occasion. I am speaking lightly—flippantly, if you please—about this old Mrs. Prior, with her hard, eager smile, her wizened face, her frowning look, her cruel voice; and yet, goodness knows, I could, if I liked, be serious as a sermonizer. Why, this woman had once red cheeks, and was well-looking enough, and told few lies, and stole no sherry, and felt the tender passions of the heart, and I dare say kissed the weak old beneficed clergyman her father very fondly and remorsefully that night when she took leave of him to skip round to the back garden gate and run away with Mr. Prior. Maternal instinct she had, for she nursed her young as best she could from her lean breast, and went about hungrily, robbing and pilfering for them. On Sundays she furbished up that threadbare black silk gown and bonnet, ironed the collar, and clung desperately to church. She had a feeble pencil drawing of the vicarage in Dorsetshire, and silhouettes of her father and mother, which were hung up in the lodgings wherever she went. She migrated much; wherever she went she fastened on the gown of the clergyman of the parish; spoke of her dear father the vicar, of her wealthy and gifted brother the Master of Boniface, with a reticence which implied that Dr. Sargent might do more for his poor sister and her family if he would. She plumed herself (oh! those poor molting old plumes!) upon belonging to the clergy; had read a good deal of good sound old-fashioned theology in early life, and wrote a noble hand, in which she had been used to copy her father's sermons. She used to put cases of conscience, to present her humble duty to the Rev. Mr. Green, and ask explanation of such and such a passage of his admirable sermon, and bring the subject round so as to be reminded of certain quotations of Hooker, Beveridge, Jeremy Taylor. I think she had an old commonplace book with a score of these extracts, and she worked them in very amusingly and dexterously into her conversation. Green would be interested; perhaps pretty young Mrs. Green would call, secretly rather shocked at the coldness of old Dr. Brown, the rector, about Mrs. Prior. Between Green and Mrs. Prior money transactions would ensue; Mrs. Green's visits would cease: Mrs. Prior was an expensive woman to know. I remember Pye of Maudlin, just before he 'went over,' was perpetually in Mrs. Prior's back parlor with little books, pictures, medals, etc., etc.—you know. They called poor Jack a Jesuit at Oxbridge; but one year at Rome I met him (with a half crown shaved out of his head, and a hat as big as Don Basilio's), and he said, 'My dear Batchelor, do you know that person at your lodgings? I think she was an artful creature! She borrowed fourteen pounds of me, and I forget how much of—seven, I think—of Barfoot of Corpus, just—just before we were received. And I believe she absolutely got another loan from Pummel, to be able to get out of the hands of us Jesuits. Are you going to hear the cardinal? Do—do go and hear him—everybody does: it's the most fashionable thing in Rome.' And from this I opine that there are slyboots in other communions besides that of Rome.

Now Mamma Prior had not been unaware of the love passages between her daughter and the fugitive Bombay captain. Like Elizabeth, she called Captain Walkingham 'villain' readily enough; but, if I know woman's nature in the least (and I don't), the old schemer had thrown her daughter only too frequently in the officer's way, had done no small portion of the flirting herself, had allowed poor Bessy to receive presents from Captain Walkingham, and had been the manager and directress of much of the mischief which ensued. You see, in this humble class of life, unprincipled mothers will coax and wheedle and cajole gentlemen whom they suppose to be eligible, in order to procure an establishment for their darling children! What the Prioress did was done from the best motives of course. 'Never—never did the monster see Bessy without me, or one or two of her brothers and sisters, and Jack and dear Ellen are as sharp children as any in England!' protested the indignant Mrs. Prior to me; 'and if one of my boys had been grown up, Walkingham never would have dared to act as he did—the unprincipled wretch! My poor husband would have punished the villain as he deserved; but what could he do in his shattered state of health? Oh! you men—you men, Mr. Batchelor! how unprincipled you are!'

'Why, my good Mrs. Prior,' said I, 'you let Elizabeth come to my room often enough,'

'To have the conversation of her uncle's friend, of an educated man, of a man so much older than herself! Of course, dear sir! Would not a mother wish every advantage for her child? and whom could I trust if not you, who have ever been such a friend to me and mine?' asks Mrs. Prior, wiping her dry eyes with the corner of her handkerchief, as she stands by my fire, my monthly bills in hand—written in her neat old-fashioned writing, and calculated with that prodigal liberality which she always exercised in compiling the little accounts between us. 'Why, bless me!' says my cousin, little Mrs. Skinner, coming to see me once when I was unwell, and examining one of the just mentioned documents—'bless me! Charles, you consume more tea than all my family, though we are seven in the parlor, and as much sugar and butter—well, it's no wonder you are bilious!'

'But then, my dear, I like my tea so very strong,' said I; 'and you take yours uncommonly mild. I have remarked it at your parties.'

'It's a shame that a man should be robbed so,' cried Mrs. S. 'How kind it is of you to cry thieves, Flora!' I reply.

'It's my duty, Charles!' exclaims my cousin. 'And I should like to know who that great, tall, gawky, red-haired girl in the passage is!'

Ah me! the name of the only woman who ever had possession of this heart was not Elizabeth; though I own I did think at one time that my little schemer of a landlady would not have objected if I had proposed to make Miss Prior Mrs. Batchelor. And it is not only the poor and needy who have this mania, but the rich too.' In the very highest circles, as I am informed by the best authorities, this matchmaking goes on. Ah, woman—woman!—ah, wedded wife!—ah, fond mother of fair daughters! how strange thy passion is to add to thy titles that of mother-in-law! I am told, when you have got the title, it is often but a bitterness and a disappointment. Very likely the son-in-law is rude to you, the coarse, ungrateful brute! and very possibly the daughter rebels, the thankless serpent! And yet you will go on scheming; and having met only with disappointment from Lousia and her husband, you will try and get one for Jemima, and Maria, and down even to little Toddles coming out of the nursery in her red shoes! When you see her with little Tommy, your neighbor’s child, fighting over the same Noah’s ark, or clambering on the same rocking horse, I make no doubt, in your fond silly head, you are thinking, ‘Will those little people meet some twenty years hence!’ And you give Tommy a very large piece of cake, and have a fine present for him on the Christmas tree—you know you do, though he is but a rude, noisy child, and has already beaten Toddles, and taken her doll away from her, and made her cry. I remember, when I myself was suffering from the conduct of a young woman in—in a capital which is distinguished by a vice-regal court—and from her heartlessness, as well as that of her relative, who I once thought would be my mother-in-law—shrieking out to a friend who happened to be spouting some lines from Tennyson’s ‘Ulysses’: ‘By George! Warrington, I have no doubt that when the young sirens set their green caps at the old Greek captain and his crew, waving and beckoning him with their white arms and glancing smiles, and wheeling him with their sweetest pipes—I make no doubt, sir, that the mother sirens were behind the rocks (with their dyed fronts and cheeks painted, so as to resist water), and calling out, ‘Now, Halcyone, my child, that air from the Pirata! Now, Glaukopis, dear, look well at that old gentleman at the helm! Bathykolpos, love, there’s a young sailor on the main-top, who will tumble right down into your lap if you beckon him!’ And so on—and so on.’ And I laughed a wild shriek of despair. For I too have been on the dangerous island, and come away thence, mad, furious, wanting a strait-waistcoat.

And so, when a white-armed siren, named Glorvina, was beguiling me with her all too tempting ogling and singing, I did not see at the time, but now I know, that her artful mother was egging that artful child on.

How, when the captain died, bailiffs and executions took possession of his premises, I have told in a previous page, nor do I care to enlarge much upon the odious theme. I think the bailiffs were on the premises before Prior’s exit; but he did not know of their presence. If I had to buy them out ‘twas no great matter; only I say it was hard of Mrs. Prior to represent me in the character of Shylock to the Master of Boniface. Well—well! I suppose there are other gentlemen besides Mr. Charles Batchelor who have been misrepresented in this life. Sargent and I made up matters afterward, and Miss Bessy was the cause of our coming together again. ‘Upon my word, my dear Batchelor,’ says he one Christmas, when I went up to the old college, ‘I did not know how much my—ahem!—my family was obliged to you! My—ahem!—niece, Miss Prior, has informed me of various acts of—ahem!—generosity which you showed to my poor sister, and her still more wretched husband. You got my second—ahem!—nephew—pardon me if I forget his Christian name—into the what-d’you-call’em—Bluecoat School; you have been, on various occasions, of considerable pecuniary service to my sister’s family. A man need not take high university honors to have a good—ahem!—heart; and, upon my word, Batchelor, I and my—ahem!—wife are sincerely obliged to you!’

‘I tell you what, master,’ said I, ‘there is a point upon which you ought really to be obliged to me, and in which I have been the means of putting money into your pocket too.’

‘I confess I fail to comprehend you,’ says the master with his grandest air.

‘I have got you and Mrs. Sargent a very good governess for your children, at the very smallest renumeration,’ say I.

‘Do you know the charges that unhappy sister of mine and her family have put me to already?’ says the master, turning as red as his hood.

‘They have formed the frequent subject of your conversation,’ I replied. ‘You have had Bessy as a governess—’

‘A nursery governess—she has learned Latin, and a great deal more, since she has been in my house!’ cries the master.

‘A nursery governess at the wages of a housemaid,’ I continued, as bold as Corinthian brass.

‘Does my niece, does my—ahem!—children’s governess complain of my treatment in my college?’ cries the master.

‘My dear master,’ I asked, ‘you don’t suppose I would have listened to her complaints, or, at any rate, have repeated them, until now?’

‘And why now, Batchelor, I should like to know?’ says the master, pacing up and down his study in a fume, under the portraits of Holy Bonifacius, Bishop Budgeon, and all the defunct bigwigs of the college. ‘And why now, Batchelor, I should like to know?’ says he.

‘Because—though after staying with you for three years, and having improved herself greatly, as every woman must in your society, my dear master, Miss Prior is worth at least fifty guineas a year more than you give her—I would not have had her speak until she had found a better place.'

'You mean to say she proposes to go away?'

'A wealthy friend of mine, who was a member of our college, by the way, wants a nursery governess, and I have recommended Miss Prior to him, at seventy guineas a year.'

'And pray who's the member of my college who will give my niece seventy guineas?' asks the master fiercely.

'You remember Lovel, the gentleman-pensioner?'

'The sugar-baking man—the man who took you out of ja—'

'One good turn deserves another,' says I hastily. 'I have done as much for some of your family, Sargent!'

The red master, who had been rustling up and down his study in his gown and bands, stopped in his walk as if I had struck him. He looked at me. He turned redder than ever. He drew his hand over his eyes. 'Batchelor,' says he, 'I ask your pardon. It was I who forgot myself—may Heaven forgive me!—forgot how good you have been to my family, to my—ahem!—humble family, and—and how devoutly thankful I ought to be for the protection which they have found in you.'

His voice quite fell as he spoke; and of course any little wrath which I might have felt was disarmed before his contrition. We parted the best friends. He not only shook hands with me at the study door, but he actually followed me to the hall door, and shook hands at his lodge porch, sub Jove, in the quadrangle. Huckles, the tutor (Highlow Huckles we used to call him in our time), and Botts (Trumperian professor), who happened to be passing through the court at the time, stood aghast as they witnessed the phenomenon.

'I say, Batchelor,' asks Huckles, 'have you been made a marquis by any chance?'

'Why a marquis, Huckles?' I ask.

'Sargent never comes to his lodge door with any man under a marquis,' says Huckles in a low whisper.

'Or a pretty woman,' says that Botts (he will have his joke). 'Batchelor, my elderly Tiresias, are you turned into a lovely young lady par hasard?'

'Get along, you absurd Trumperian professor!' say I. But the circumstance was the talk not only in compotation room that evening over our wine, but of the whole college. And further, events happened which made each man look at his neighbor with wonder. For that whole term Sargent did not ask our nobleman Lord Sackville (Lord Wigmore's son) to the lodge. (Lord W.'s father, you know, Duff, was baker to the college.) For that whole term he was rude but twice to Perks, the junior tutor, and then only in a very mild way; and what is more, he gave his niece a present of a gown, of his blessing, of a kiss, and a high character, when she went away; and promised to put one of her young brothers to school—which promise, I need not say, he faithfully kept; for he has good principles, Sargent has. He is rude; he is ill bred; he is bumptious beyond almost any man I ever knew; he is spoiled not a little by prosperity—but he is magnanimous; he can own that he has been in the wrong; and oh me! what a quantity of Greek he knows!

Although my late friend the captain never seemed to do aught but spend the family money, his disreputable presence somehow acted for good in the household. 'My dear husband kept our family together,' Mrs. Prior said, shaking her lean head under her meager widow's cap. 'Heaven knows how I shall provide for these lambs now he is gone.' Indeed, it was not until after the death of that tipsy shepherd that the wolves of the law came down upon the lambs—myself included, who have passed the age of lambhood and mint sauce a long time. They came down upon our fold in Beak Street, I say, and ravaged it. What was I to do? Could I leave that widow and children in their distress? I was not ignorant of misfortune, and knew how to succor the miserable. Nay, I think, the little excitement attendant upon the seizure of my goods, etc., the insolent vulgarity of the low persons in possession—with one of whom I was very near coming to a personal encounter—and other incidents which occurred in the bereft household, served to rouse me, and dissipate some of the languor and misery under which I was suffering in consequence of Miss Mulligan's conduct to me. I know I took the late captain to his final abode. My good friends the printers of the Museum took one of his boys into their counting house. A blue coat and a pair of yellow stockings were procured for Augustus; and seeing the master's children walking about in Boniface gardens with a glum-looking old wretch of a nurse, I bethought me of proposing to him to take his niece Miss Prior—and, Heaven be good to me! never said one word to her uncle about Miss Bellenden and the academy. I dare say I drew a number of longbows about her. I managed about the bad grammar pretty well, by lamenting that Elizabeth's poor mother had been forced to allow the girl to keep company with ill-educated people; and added that she could not fail to mend her English in the house of one of the most distinguished scholars in Europe, and one of the best bred women. I did say so, upon my word, looking that half-bred, stuck-up Mrs. Sargent gravely in the face; and I humbly trust, if that bouncer has been registered against me, the recording angel will be pleased to consider that the motive was good, though the statement was unjustifiable. But I don't think it was the compliment; I think it was the temptation of getting a governor for next to nothing that operated upon Madam Sargent. And so Bessy went to her aunt, partook of the bread of dependence, and drank of the cup of humiliation, and ate the pie of humility, and brought up her odious little cousins to the best of her small power, and bowed the head of hypocrisy before the don her uncle, and the pompous little upstart her aunt. She the best bred woman in England, indeed! She, the little vain skinflint!

Bessy's mother was not a little loath to part with the fifty pounds a year which the child brought home from the academy, but her departure thence was inevitable. Some quarrel had taken place there about which the girl did not care to talk. Some rudeness had been offered to Miss Bellenden to which Miss Prior was determined not to submit; or was it that she wanted to go away from the scenes of her own misery, and to try and forget that Indian captain? Come, fellow-sufferer! Come, child of misfortune, come hither! Here is an old bachelor who will weep with thee tear for tear!

I protest here is Miss Prior coming into the room at last. A pale face, a tawny head of hair combed back, under a black cap; a pair of blue spectacles, as I live! a tight mourning dress, buttoned up to her white throat; a head hung meekly down: such is Miss Prior. She takes my hand when I offer it. She drops me a demure little courtesy, and answers my many questions with humble monosyllabic replies. She appeals constantly to Lady Baker for instruction, or for confirmation of her statements. What! have six years of slavery so changed the frank daring young girl whom I remember in Beak Street? She is taller and stouter than she was. She is awkward and high-shouldered, but surely she has a very fine figure.

'Will Miss Cissy and Master Popham have their teas here or in the schoolroom?' asks Bedford, the butler, of his master. Miss Prior looks appealingly to Lady Baker.

'In the sch——' Lady Baker is beginning.

'Here—here!' bawl out the children. 'Much better fun down here; and you'll send us out some fruit and things from dinner, papa!' cries Cissy.

'It's time to dress for dinner,' says her ladyship.

'Has the first bell rung?' asks Lovel.

'Yes, the first bell has rung, and grandmamma must go, for it always takes her a precious long time to dress for dinner!' cries Pop. And, indeed, on looking at Lady Baker, the connoisseur might perceive that her ladyship was a highly composite person, whose charms required very much care and arrangement. There are some cracked old houses where the painters and plumbers and puttyers are always at work.

'Have the goodness to ring the bell!' she says in a majestic manner to Miss Prior, though I think Lady Baker herself was nearest.

I sprang toward the bell myself, and my hand meets Elizabeth's there, who was obeying her ladyship's summons, and who retreats, making me the demurest courtesy. At the summons, enter Bedford, the butler (he was an old friend of mine too), and young Buttons, the page under that butler.

Lady Baker points to a heap of articles on a table, and says to Bedford: 'If you please, Bedford, tell my man to give those things to Pincott, my maid, to be taken to my room.'

'Shall not I take them up, dear Lady Baker?' says Miss Prior.

But Bedford, looking at his subordinate, says: 'Thomas! tell Bulkeley, her ladyship's man, to take her ladyship's things and give them to her ladyship's maid.' There was a tone of sarcasm, even of parody, in Monsieur Bedford's voice; but his manner was profoundly grave and respectful. Drawing up her person, and making a motion, I don't know whether of politeness or defiance, exit Lady Baker, followed by page, bearing bandboxes, shawls, paper parcels, parasols—I know not what. Dear Popham stands on his head as grandmamma leaves the room. 'Don't be vulgar!' cries little Cissy (the dear child is always acting as a little Mentor to her brother). 'I shall if I like,' says Pop; and he makes faces at her.

'You know your room, Batch?' asks the master of the house.

'Mr. Batchelor's old room—always has the blue room,' says Bedford, looking very kindly at me.

'Give us,' cries Lovel, 'a bottle of that Sau—'

'—terne Mr. Batchelor used to like. Château Yquem. All right!' says Mr. Bedford. 'How will you have the turbot done you brought down? Dutch sauce? Make lobster into salad? Mr. Bonnington likes lobster salad,' says Bedford. Pop is winding up the butler's back at this time. It is evident
Mr. Bedford is a privileged person in the family. As he had entered it on my nomination several years ago, and had been ever since the faithful valet, butler, and major-domo of Lovel, Bedford and I were always good friends when we met.

'By the way, Bedford, why wasn't the barouche sent for me to the bridge?' cries Lovel. 'I had to walk all the way home, with a bat and stumps for Pop, with the basket of fish, and that bandbox with my lady's—'

'He—he!' grins Bedford.

'“He—he!” Confound you, why do you stand grinning there? Why didn't I have the carriage, I say?' bawls the master of the house.

'You know, sir,' says Bedford. 'She had the carriage.' And he indicated the door through which Lady Baker had just retreated.

'Then why didn't I have the phaeton?' asks Bedford's master.

'Your ma and Mr. Bonnington had the phaeton.'

'And why shouldn't they, pray? Mr. Bonnington is lame: I'm at my business all day. I should like to know why they shouldn't have the phaeton?' says Lovel, appealing to me. As we had been sitting talking together previous to Miss Prior's appearance, Lady Baker had said to Lovel, 'Your mother and Mr. Bonnington are coming to dinner of course, Frederick?' and Lovel had said, 'Of course they are,' with a peevish bluster, whereof I now began to understand the meaning. The fact was these two women were fighting for the possession of this child; but who was the Solomon to say which should have him? Not I. Neéni. I put my oar in no man's boat. Give me an easy life, my dear friends, and row me gently over.

'You had better go and dress,' says Bedford sternly, looking at his master; 'the first bell has rung this quarter of an hour. Will you have some '34?'

Lovel started up; he looked at the clock. 'You are all ready, Batch, I see. I hope you are going to stay some time, aint you?' And he disappeared to array himself in his sables and starch. I was thus alone with Miss Prior and her young charges, who resumed straightway their infantine gambols and quarrels.

'My dear Bessy!' I cry, holding out both hands, 'I am heartily glad to——'

'Ne m'appellez que de mon nom paternel devant tout ce monde, s'il vous plait, mon cher ami, mon bon protecteur!' she says hastily, in very good French, folding her hands and making a courtesy.
'Oui, oui, oui! Parlez-vous Français? J'aime, tu aimes, il aime!' cries out dear Master Popham. 'What are you talking about? Here's the phaeton!' and the young innocent dashes through the open window on to the lawn, whither he is followed by his sister, and where we see the carriage containing Mr. and Mrs. Bonnington rolling over the smooth walk.

Bessy advances toward me, and gives me readily enough now the hand she had refused anon.

'I never thought you would have refused it, Bessy,' said I. 'Refuse it to the best friend I ever had!' she says, pressing my hand. 'Ah, dear Mr. Batchelor, what an ungrateful wretch I should be if I did!'

'Let me see your eyes. Why do you wear spectacles? You never wore them in Beak Street,' I say. You see I was very fond of the child. She had wound herself around me in a thousand fond ways. Owing to a certain person's conduct my heart may be a ruin—a Persepolis, sir—a perfect Tadmor. But what then? May not a traveler rest under its shattered columns? May not an Arab maid repose there till the morning dawns and the caravan passes on? Yes, my heart is a Palmyra, and once a queen inhabited me (O Zenobia! Zenobia! to think thou should'st have been led away captive by an O'D.!). Now, I am alone, alone in the solitary wilderness. Nevertheless, if a stranger comes to me I have a spring for his weary feet, I will give him the shelter of my shade. Rest thy cheek a while, young maiden, on my marble—then go thy ways and leave me.

This I thought, or something to this effect, as in reply to my remark, 'Let me see your eyes,' Bessy took off her spectacles, and I took them up and looked at her. Why didn't I say to her, 'My dear brave Elizabeth! as I look in your face I see you have had an awful deal of suffering. Your eyes are inscrutably sad. We who are initiated know the members of our community of sorrow. We have both been wrecked in different ships, and been cast on this shore. Let us go hand in hand, and find a cave and a shelter somewhere together'? I say, why didn't I say this to her? She would have come, I feel sure she would. We would have been semi-attached, as it were. We would have locked up that room in either heart where the skeleton was, and said nothing about it, and pulled down the party wall and taken our mild tea in the garden. I live in Pump Court now. It would have been better than this dingy loneliness and a snuffy laundress who bullies me. But for Bessy? Well—well, perhaps better for her too.
I remember these thoughts rushing through my mind while I held the spectacles. What a number of other things too? I remember two canaries making a tremendous concert in their cage. I remember the voices of the two children quarreling on the lawn, the sound of the carriage wheels grinding over the gravel; and then of a little old familiar cracked voice in my ear, with a 'La, Mr. Batchelor! are you here?' And a sly face looks up at me from under an old bonnet.

'Is mamma,' says Bessy.

'And I'm come to tea with Elizabeth and the dear children; and while you are at dinner, dear Mr. Batchelor, thankful—thankful for all mercies! And, dear me! here is Mrs. Bonnington, I do declare! Dear madam, how well you look—not twenty, I declare! And dear Mr. Bonnington! Oh, sir! let me—let me, I must press your hand. What a sermon last Sunday! All Putney was in tears!'

And the little woman, flinging out her lean arms, seizes portly Mr. Bonnington's fat hand, as he and kind Mrs. Bonnington enter at the open casement. The little woman seems inclined to do the honors of the house. 'And won't you go upstairs, and put on your cap? Dear me, what a lovely ribbon! How blue does become Mrs. Bonnington! I always say so to Elizabeth,' she cries, peeping into a little packet which Mrs. Bonnington bears in her hand. After exchanging friendly words and greetings with me, that lady retires to put the lovely cap on, followed by her little jackal of an aid-de-camp. The portly clergyman surveys his pleased person in the spacious mirror. 'Your things are in your old room—like to go in, and brush up a bit?' whispers Bedford to me. I am obliged to go you see, though, for my part, I had thought, until Bedford spoke, that the ride on the top of the Putney omnibus had left me without any need of brushing; having aired my clothes, and given my young cheek a fresh and agreeable bloom.

My old room, as Bedford calls it, was that snug apartment communicating by double doors with the drawing room, and whence you can walk on to the lawn out of the windows.

'Here's your books, here's your writing paper,' says Bedford, leading the way into the chamber. 'Does sore eyes good to see you down here again, sir. You may smoke now. Clarence Baker smokes when he comes. Go and get some of that wine you like for dinner.' And the good fellow's eyes beam kindness upon me as he nods his head, and departs to superintend the duties of his table. Of course you understand that this Bedford was my young printer's boy of former days. What a queer fellow! I had not only been kind to him, but he was grateful.

CHAPTER III.

IN WHICH I PLAY THE SPY.

The room to which Bedford conducted me I hold to be the very pleasantest chamber in all the mansion of Shrublands. To lie on that comfortable cool bachelor's bed there, and see the birds hopping about on the lawn; to peep out of the French window at early morning, inhale the sweet air, mark the dewy bloom on the grass, listen to the little warblers performing their chorus, step forth in your dressing gown and slippers, pick a strawberry from the bed, or an apricot in its season, blow one, two, three, just half a dozen puffs of a cigarette, hear the venerable towers of Putney toll the hour of six (three hours from breakfast, by consequence), and pop back into bed again with a favorite novel or review to set you off (you see I am not malicious, or I could easily insert here the name of some twaddler against whom I have a grudgekin)—to pop back into bed again, I say, with a book which sets you off into that dear, invaluable second sleep, by which health, spirits, appetite are so prodigiously improved—all these I hold to be most cheerful and harmless pleasures, and have partaken of them often at Shrublands with a grateful heart. That heart may have had its griefs, but is yet susceptible of enjoyment and consolation. That bosom may have been lacerated, but is not therefore and henceforward a stranger to comfort. After a certain affair in Dublin—nay, very soon after, three months after—I recollect remarking to myself: 'Well, thank my stars, I still have a relish for '34 claret.' Once at Shrublands I heard steps pacing overhead at night, and the feeble but continued wail of an infant. I wakened from my sleep, was sulky, but turned and slept again. Biddlecombe, the barrister, I knew was the occupant of the upper chamber. He came down the next morning looking wretchedly yellow about the cheeks, and livid round the eyes. His teething infant had kept him on the march all night, and Mrs. Biddlecombe, I am told, scolds him frightfully besides. He munched a shred of toast, and was off by the omnibus to chambers. I chipped a second egg; I may have tried one or two other nice little things on the table (Strasbourg pâté I know I never can resist, and am convinced it is perfectly wholesome). I could see my own sweet face in the mirror opposite, and my gills were as rosy as any broiled salmon. 'Well—well!' I thought as the barrister disappeared on the roof of the coach, 'he has domus and *placentawxor—but is she placens? Placente to walk about all night with a roaring baby? Is it pleasing to go to bed after a long hard day's work, and have your wife nagging you because she has not been invited to the Lady Chancelloress' soirée, or what not? Suppose the Glorvina whom you loved so had been yours? Her eyebrows looked as if they could scowl, her eyes as if they could flash with anger. Remember what a slap she gave the little knife-boy for upsetting the butter boat over her cabinet. Suppose parvulus aula, a little Batchelor your son, who had the toothache all night in your bedroom?' These thoughts passed rapidly through my mind as I helped myself to the comfortable meal before me. 'I say, what a lot of muffins you're eating!' cried innocent Master Lovel. Now the married, the wealthy, the prosperous Biddlecombe only took his wretched scrap of dry toast. 'Aha!' you say, 'this man is consoling himself after his misfortune.' Oh, churl! and do you grudge me consolation? 'Thank you, dear Miss Prior. Another cup, and plenty of cream, if you please.' Of course Lady Baker was not at table when I said, 'Dear Miss Prior,' at breakfast. Before her ladyship I was as mum as a mouse. Elizabeth found occasion to whisper to me during the day, in her demure way: 'This is a very rare occasion. Lady B. never allows me to breakfast alone with Mr. Lovel, but has taken her extra nap, I suppose, because you and Mr. and Mrs. Biddlecombe were here.'

Now it may be that one of the double doors of the room which I inhabited was occasionally open, and that Mr. Batchelor's eyes and ears are uncommonly quick, and note a number of things which less observant persons would never regard or discover; but out of this room, which I occupied for some few days, now and subsequently, I looked forth as from a little ambush upon the proceedings of the house, and got a queer little insight into the history and characters of the personages round about me. The two grandmothers of Lovel's children were domineering over that easy gentleman, as women—not grandmothers merely, but sisters, wives, aunts, daughters, when the chance is given them—will domineer. Ah! Glorvina, what a gray mare you might have become had you chosen Mr. Batchelor for your consort! (But this I only remark with a parenthetic sigh.) The two children had taken each the side of a grandmamma, and while Master Pop was declared by his maternal grandmother to be a Baker all over, and taught to despise sugar-baking and trade, little.
Cecilia was Mrs. Bonnington's favorite, repeated Watts' hymns with fervent precocity; declared that she would marry none but a clergyman; preached infantine sermons to her brother and maid about worldliness; and somewhat wearied me, if the truth must be told, by the intense self-respect with which she regarded her own virtues. The old ladies had that love for each other which one may imagine that their relative positions would engender. Over the bleeding and helpless bodies of Lovel and his worthy and kind stepfather, Mr. Bonnington, they skirmished, and fired shots at each other. Lady B. would give hints about second marriages, and second families, and so forth, which of course made Mrs. Bonnington wince. Mrs. B. had the better of Lady Baker in consequence of the latter's notorious pecuniary irregularities. She had never had recourse to her son's purse, she could thank Heaven. She was not afraid of meeting any tradesman in Putney or London; she had never been ordered out of the house in the late Cecilia's lifetime; she could go to Boulogne and enjoy the fresh air there. This was the terrific whip she had over Baker. Lady B. I regret to say, in consequence of the failure of remittances, had been locked up in prison, just at a time when she was in a state of violent quarrel with her late daughter, and good Mr. Bonnington had helped her out of durance. How did I know this? Bedford, Lovel's factotum, told me; and how the old ladies were fighting like two cats.

There was one point on which the two ladies agreed. A very wealthy widower, young still, good-looking, and good-tempered, we know can sometimes find a dear woman to console his loneliness and protect his motherless children. From the neighboring Heath, from Wimbledon, Roehampton, Barnes, Mortlake, Richmond, Esher, Walton, Windsor, nay, Reading, Bath, Exeter, and Penzance itself, or from any other quarter of Britain over which your fancy may please to travel, families would have come ready with dear young girls to take charge of that man's future happiness; but it is a fact that these two dragons kept all women off from their ward. An unmarried woman, with decent good looks, was scarce ever allowed to enter Shrublands gate. If such an one appeared Lovel's two mothers sallied out, and crunched her hapless bones. Once or twice he dared to dine with his neighbors, but the ladies led him such a life that the poor creature gave up the practice, and faintly announced his preference for home. 'My dear Batch,' says he, 'what do I care for the dinners of the people round about? Has any one of them got a better cook or better wine than mine? When I come home from business it is an intolerable nuisance to have to dress and go out seven or eight miles to cold entrées and loaded claret and sweet port. I can't stand it, sir. I won't stand it' (and he stamps his foot in a resolute manner). 'Give me an easy life, a wine merchant I can trust, and my own friends by my own fireside. Shall we have some more? We can manage another bottle between us three, Mr. Bonnington?'

'Well,' says Mr. Bonnington, winking at the ruby goblet, 'I am sure I have no objections, Frederick, to another bo——'

'Coffee is served, sir,' cries Bedford, entering.

'Well—well, perhaps we have had enough,' says worthy Bonnington.

'We have had enough; we all drink too much,' says Lovel briskly. 'Come in to coffee.'

We go to the drawing room. Fred and I and the two ladies sit down to a rubber, while Miss Prior plays a piece of Beethoven to a slight warbling accompaniment from Mr. Bonnington's handsome nose, who has fallen asleep over the newspaper. During our play Bessy glides out of the room—a gray shadow. Bonnington wakens up when the tray is brought in. Lady Baker likes that good old custom; it was always the fashion at the Castle, and she takes a good glass of negus too; and so do we all; and the conversation is pretty merry, and Fred Lovel hopes I shall sleep better to-night, and is very facetious about poor Biddlecombe, and the way in which that eminent Q. C. is henpecked by his wife.

From my bachelor's room, then, on the ground floor; or from my solitary walks in the garden, whence I could oversee many things in the house; or from Bedford's communications to me, which were very friendly, curious, and unreserved; or from my own observation, which I promise you can see as far into the millstones of life as most folks', I grew to find the mysteries of Shrublands no longer mysterious to me; and like another Diable Boiteux, had the roofs of a pretty number of the Shrublands rooms taken off for me.

For instance, on that very first day of my stay, while the family were attiring themselves for dinner, I chanced to find two secret cupboards of the house unlocked, and the contents unveiled to me. Pinhorn, the children's maid, a giddy little flirting thing in a pink ribbon, brought some articles of the toilet into my worship's apartment, and as she retired did not shut the door behind her. I might have thought that pert little head had never been made to ache by any care; but ah!
black care sits behind the horseman, as Horace remarks; and not only behind the horseman, but behind the footman; and not only on the footman, but on the buxom shoulders of the lady's maid. So with Pinhorn. You surely have remarked respecting domestic servants that they address you in a tone utterly affected and unnatural—adopting, when they are among each other, voices and gestures entirely different to those which their employers see and hear. Now this little Pinhorn, in her occasional intercourse with your humble servant, had a brisk, quick, fluttering toss of the head, and a frisky manner, no doubt capable of charming some persons. As for me, ancillary allurements have, I own, had but small temptations. If Venus brought me a bedroom candle and a jug of hot water, I should give hersixpence, and nomore. Having, you see, given my all to one wom—— Psha! never mind that old story. Well, I dare say this little creature may have been a flirt, but I took no more notice of her than if she had been a coal scuttle.

Now suppose she was a flirt. Suppose, under a mask of levity, she hid a profound sorrow. Do you suppose she was the first woman who has ever done so? Do you suppose because she had fifteen pounds a year, her tea, sugar, and beer, and told fibs to her masters and mistresses, she had not a heart? She went out of the room, absolutely coaxing and leering at me as she departed, with a great counterpane over her arm; but in the next apartment I heard her voice quite changed, and another changed voice too—though not so much altered—interrogating her. My friend Dick Bedford's voice, in addressing those whom fortune had pleased to make his superiors, was gruff and brief. He seemed to be anxious to deliver himself of his speech to you as quickly as possible; and his tone always seemed to hint, 'There—there is my message, and I have delivered it; but you know perfectly well that I am as good as you.' And so he was, and so I always admitted; so even the trembling, believing, flustered, suspicious Lady Baker herself admitted when she came into communication with this man. I have thought of this little Dick as of Swift at Sheen hard by, with Sir William Temple; or Spartacus when he was as yet the servant of the fortunate Roman gentleman who owned him. Now if Dick was intelligent, obedient, useful, only not rebellious, with his superiors, I should fancy that among his equals he was by no means pleasant company, and that most of them hated him for his arrogance, his honesty, and his scorn of them all.

But women do not always hate a man for scorning and despising them. Women do not revolt at the rudeness and arrogance of us their natural superiors. Women, if properly trained, come down to heel at the master’s bidding, and lick the hand that has been often raised to hit them. I do not say the brave little Dick Bedford ever raised an actual hand to this poor serving girl, but his tongue whipped her, his behavior trampled on her, and she cried, and came to him whenever he lifted a finger. Psha! Don’t tell me. If you want a quiet, contented, orderly home, and things comfortable about you, that is the way you must manage your women.

Well, Bedford happens to be in the next room. It is the morning room at Shrublands. You enter the dining room from it, and they are in the habit of laying out the dessert there, before taking it in for dinner. Bedford is laying out his dessert as Pinhorn enters from my chamber, and he begins upon her with a sarcastic sort of grunt, and a ‘Ho! suppose you’ve been making up to B., have you?’

‘Oh, Mr. Bedford, you know very well who it is I cares for!’ she says, with a sigh.

‘Bother!’ Mr. B. remarks.

‘Well, Richard, then!’ (here she weeps).

‘Leave go my ‘and!—leave go my a-hand, I say!’ (What could she have been doing to cause this exclamation?)

‘O Richard, it’s not your ‘and I want—it’s your ah-ah-art, Richard!’

‘Mary Pinhorn,’ exclaims the other, ‘what’s the use of going on with this game? You know we couldn’t be a-happy together—you know your ideers aint no good, Mary. It aint your fault. I don’t blame you for it, my dear. Some people are born clever, some are born tall: I aint tall.’

‘Oh, you’re tall enough for me, Richard!’

Here Richard again found occasion to cry out: ‘Don’t I say! Suppose Baker was to come in and find you squeezing of my hand in this way? I say, some people are born with big brains, Miss Pinhorn, and some with big figures. Look at that ass Bulkeley, Lady B.’s man! He is as big as a Life Guardsman, and he has no more education, nor no more ideas, than the beef he feeds on.’

‘La! Richard, whatever do you mean?’

‘Pooh! How should you know what I mean? Lay them books straight. Put the volumes together, stupid! and the papers, and get the table ready for nursery tea, and don’t go on there mopping your eyes, and making a fool of yourself, Mary Pinhorn!’
'Oh, your heart is a stone—a stone—a stone!' cries Mary in a burst of tears. 'And I wish it was hung round my neck, and I was at the bottom of the well, and—there's the upstairs bell!' with which signal I suppose Mary disappeared, for I only heard a sort of grunt from Mr. Bedford, then the clatter of a dish or two, the wheeling of chairs and furniture, and then came a brief silence, which lasted until the entry of Dick's subordinate, Buttons, who laid the table for the children's and Miss Prior's tea.

So here was an old story told over again. Here was love unrequited, and a little passionate heart wounded and unhappy. My poor little Mary! As I am a sinner, I will give thee a crown when I go away, and not a couple of shillings, as my wont has been. Five shillings will not console thee much, but they will console thee a little. Thou wilt not imagine that I bribe thee with any privy thought of evil? Away! Ich habe genossen das irdische Glück—ich habe—geliebt!

At this juncture I suppose Mrs. Prior must have entered the apartment, for though I could not hear her noiseless step, her little cracked voice came pretty clearly to me with a 'Good-afternoon, Mr. Bedford! Oh, dear me! what a many—many years we have been acquainted. To think of the pretty little printer's boy who used to come to Mr. Batchelor, and see you grown such a fine man!'

Bedford.—'How? I'm only five foot four.'

Mrs. P.—'But such a fine figure, Bedford! You are—now indeed you are! Well, you are strong and I am weak. You are well, and I am weary and faint.'

Bedford.—'The tea's a coming directly, Mrs. Prior.'

Mrs. P.—'Could you give me a glass of water first—and perhaps a little sherry in it, please? Oh, thank you. How good it is! How it revives a poor old wretch!—and your cough, Bedford? How is your cough? I have brought you some lozenges for it—some of Sir Henry Halford's own prescribing for my dear husband, and—'

Bedford (abruptly).—'I must go—never mind the cough now, Mrs. P.'

Mrs. Prior.—'What's here? Almonds and raisins, macaroons, preserved apricots, biscuits for dessert—and—la bless the man! how you sta—artled me!'

Bedford.—'Don't! Mrs. Prior, I beg and implore of you, keep your 'ands out of the dessert. I can't stand it. I must tell the governor if this game goes on.'

Mrs. P.—'Ah! Mr. Bedford, it is for my poor—poor child
"WHERE THE SUGAR GOES."
at home; the doctor recommended her apricots. Aye, indeed, dear Bedford, he did, for her poor chest!

Bedford.—'And I'm blest if you haven't been at the sherry bottle again! Oh, Mrs. P., you drive me wild—you do. I can't see Lovel put upon in this way. You know it's only last week I whopped the boy for stealing the sherry, and 'twas you done it.'

Mrs. Prior (passionately).—'For a sick child, Bedford. What won't a mother do for her sick child?'

Bedford.—'Your children's always sick. You're always taking things for 'em. I tell you, by the laws, I won't and mustn't stand it, Mrs. P.'

Mrs. Prior (with much spirit).—Go and tell your master, Bedford! Go and tell tales of me, sir. Go and have me dismissed out of this house. Go and have my daughter dismissed out of this house, and her poor mother brought to disgrace.'

Bedford.—'Mrs. Prior—Mrs. Prior! you have been a taking the sherry. A glass I don't mind; but you've been a bringing that bottle again.'

Mrs. P. (whimpering).—'It's for Charlotte, Bedford! my poor delicate angel of a Shatty! She's ordered it, indeed she is!'

Bedford.—'Confound your Shatty! I can't stand it, I mustn't, and won't, Mrs. P.!'

Here a noise and clatter of other persons arriving interrupted the conversation between Lovel's major-domo and the mother of the children's governess, and I presently heard Master Pop's voice saying, 'You're going to tea with us, Mrs. Prior?'

Mrs. P.—'Your kind dear grandmammies have asked me, dear Master Popham.'

Pop.—'But you'd like to go to dinner best, wouldn't you? I dare say you have doosid bad dinners at your house. Haven't you, Mrs. Prior?'

Cissy.—'Don't say doosid. It's a naughty word, Popham!'

Pop.—'I will say doosid. Doo-oo-oosid! There! And I'll say worse words too, if I please, and you hold your tongue. What's there for tea? Jam for tea? strawberries for tea? muffins for tea? That's it; strawberries and muffins for tea. And we'll go in to dessert besides: that's prime. I say, Miss Prior?'

Miss Prior.—'What do you say, Popham?'

Pop.—'Shouldn't you like to go in to dessert—there's lots of good things there—and have wine? Only when grandmamma tells her story about—about my grandfather and King George the what-d'ye-call'im—King George the Fourth—'

Cis.—'Ascended the throne, 1820; died at Windsor, 1830.'
Pop.—'Bother Windsor! Well, when she tells that story I can tell you that aint very good fun.'

Cis.—'And it's rude of you to speak in that way of your grandmamma, Pop!'

Pop.—'And you'll hold your tongue, miss! And I shall speak as I like. And I'm a man, and I don't want any of your stuff and nonsense. I say, Mary, give us the marmalade!'

Cis.—'You have had plenty to eat, and boys oughtn't to have so much.'

Pop.—'Boys may have what they like. Boys can eat twice as much as women. There, I don't want any more. Anybody may have the rest.'

Mrs. Prior.—'What nice marmalade! I know some children, my dears, who—'

Miss P. (imploringly).—'Mamma, I beseech you—'

Mrs. P.—'I know three dear children who very—very seldom have nice marmalade and delicious cake.'

Pop.—'I know whom you mean; you mean Augustus and Frederick and Fanny—your children! Well, they shall have marmalade and cake.'

Cis.—'Oh, yes, I will give them all mine.'

Pop. (who speaks, I think, as if his mouth was full).—'I won't give 'em mine; but they can have another pot, you know. You have always got a basket with you; you know you have, Mrs. Prior. You had it the day you took the cold fowl.'

Mrs. P.—'For the poor blind black man! Oh, how thankful he was to his dear young benefactors! He is a man and a brother, and to help him was most kind of you, dear Master Popham!'

Pop.—'That black beggar my brother? He aint my brother.'

Mrs. P.—'No, dears, you have both the most lovely complexions in the world.'

Pop.—'Bother complexions! I say, Mary, another pot of marmalade?'

Mary.—'I don't know, Master Pop—'

Pop.—'I will have it, I say. If you don't I'll smash everything, I will.'

Cis.—'Oh, you naughty, rude boy!'

Pop.—'Hold your tongue, stupid! I will have it, I say.'

Mrs. P.—'Do humor him, Mary, please. And I'm sure my dear children at home will be better for it.'

Pop.—'There's your basket. Now put this cake in, and this bit of butter, and this sugar on the top of the butter. Hurray! hurray! Oh, what jolly fun! Here's some cake—no, I think I'll keep that; and, Mrs. Prior, tell Gus and Fanny and Fred I sent it to 'em, and they shall never want for anything as long as Frederick Popham Baker Lovel, Esquire, can give it them. Did Gus like my gray greatcoat that I didn't want?'

_MISS. P._—' You did not give him your new greatcoat?'

_Pop._—' It was beastly ugly, and I did give it him; and I'll give him this if I choose. And don't you speak to me; I'm going to school, and I aint going to have no governesses soon.'

_Mrs. Prior._—' Ah, dear child! what a nice coat it is; and how well my poor boy looks in it!'

_MISS Prior._—' Mother, mother! I implore you—mother—'

_MR. LOVEL ENTERS._—' So the children at high tea! How d'ye do, Mrs. Prior? I think we shall be able to manage that little matter for your second boy, Mrs. Prior.'

_Mrs. Prior._—' Heaven bless you—bless you, my dear kind benefactor! Don't prevent me, Elizabeth; I must kiss his hand. There!'

And here the second bell rings, and I enter the morning room, and can see Mrs. Prior's great basket popped cunningly under the tablecloth. Her basket?—her _porte-manteau_, her _porte-bouteille_, her _porte-gâteau_, her _porte-pantalon_, her _porte-boutin_ in general. Thus I could see that every day Mrs. Prior visited Shrublands she gleaned greedily of the harvest. Well, Boaz was rich, and this ruthless Ruth was hungry and poor.

At the welcome summons of the second bell Mr. and Mrs. Bonnington also made their appearance; the latter in the new cap which Mrs. Prior had admired, and which she saluted with a nod of smiling recognition. 'Dear madam, it is lovely—I told you it was,' whispers Mrs. P., and the wearer of the blue ribbons turned her bonny, good-natured face toward the looking-glass, and I hope saw no reason to doubt Mrs. Prior's sincerity. As for Bonnington, I could perceive that he had been taking a little nap before dinner—a practice by which the appetite is improved, I think, and the intellect prepared for the bland prandial conversation.

'Have the children been quite good?' asks papa of the governess.

'There are worse children, sir,' says Miss Prior meekly.

'Make haste and have your dinner; we are coming in to dessert!' cries Pop.

'You would not have us go to dine without your grandmother?' papa asks. Dine without Lady Baker, indeed! I should have liked to see him go to dinner without Lady Baker.
Pending her ladyship's arrival papa and Mr. Bonnington walk to the open window, and gaze on the lawn and the towers of Putney rising over the wall.

'Ah, my good Mrs. Prior,' cries Mrs. Bonnington, 'those grandchildren of mine are sadly spoiled.'

'Not by you, dear madam,' says Mrs. Prior, with a look of commiseration. 'Your dear children at home are, I am sure, perfect models of goodness. Is Master Edward well, ma'am? and Master Robert, and Master Richard, and dear funny little Master William? Ah, what blessings those children are to you! If a certain willful little nephew of theirs took after them!'

'The little naughty wretch!' cried Mrs. Bonnington; 'do you know, Prior, my grandson Frederick (I don't know why they call him Popham in this house, or why he should be ashamed of his father's name)—do you know that Popham spilt the ink over my dear husband's bands, which he keeps in his great dictionary, and fought with my Richard, who is three years older than Popham, and actually beat his own uncle!'

'Gracious goodness!' I cried; 'you don't mean to say, ma'am, that Pop has been laying violent hands upon his venerable relative?' I feel ever so gentle a pull at my coat. Was it Miss Prior who warned me not to indulge in the sarcastic method with good Mrs. Bonnington?

'I don't know why you call my poor child a venerable relative?' Mrs. B. remarks. 'I know that Popham was very rude to him: and then Robert came to his brother, and that graceless little Popham took a stick, and my husband came out, and do you know Popham Lovel actually kicked Mr. Bonnington on the shins, and butted him like a little naughtyram; and if you think such conduct is a subject for ridicule—I don't, Mr. Batchelor.'

'My dear, dear lady!' I cried, seizing her hand; for she was going to cry, and in woman's eye the unanswerable tear always raises a deuce of a commotion in my mind. 'I would not for the world say a word that should willingly vex you; and as for Popham, I give you my honor, I think nothing would do that child so much good as a good whipping.'

'He is spoiled, madam; we know by whom,' says Mrs. Prior. 'Dear Lady Baker! how that red does become your ladyship.' In fact, Lady B. sailed in at this juncture, arrayed in ribbons of scarlet, with many brooches, bangles, and other gimeracks ornamenting her plenteous person. And now her ladyship having arrived, Bedford announced that dinner was served, and Lovel gave his mother-in-law an arm, while I offered mine to Mrs. Bonnington to lead her to the adjoining dining room. And the capable kind soul speedily made peace with me. And we ate and drank of Lovel's best. And Lady Baker told us her celebrated anecdote of George the Fourth's compliment to her late dear husband, Sir Popham, when his Majesty visited Ireland. Mrs. Prior and her basket were gone when we repaired to the drawing room; having been hunting all day the hungry mother had returned with her prey to her wide-mouthed birdikins. Elizabeth looked very pale and handsome, reading at her lamp. And whist and the little tray finished the second day at Shrublands.

I paced the moonlit walk alone when the family had gone to rest; and smoked my cigar under the tranquil stars. I had been some thirty hours in the house, and what a queer little drama was unfolding itself before me! What struggles and passions were going on here—what certamina and motus animorum! Here was Lovel, this willing horse; and what a crowd of relations, what a heap of luggage had the honest fellow to carry! How that little Mrs. Prior was working and scheming and tacking and flattering and fawning and plundering, to be sure! And that serene Elizabeth, with what consummate skill, art, and prudence had she to act to keep her place with two such rivals reigning over her. And Elizabeth not only kept her place, but she actually was liked by those two women! Why, Elizabeth Prior, my wonder and respect for thee increase with every hour during which I contemplate thy character! How is it that you live with those lionesses and are not torn to pieces? What sops of flattery do you cast to them to appease them? Perhaps I do not think my Elizabeth brings up her two children very well, and, indeed, have seldom become acquainted with young people more odious. But is the fault hers, or is it Fortune's spite? How, with these two grandmothers spoiling the children alternately, can the governess do better than she does? How has she managed to lull their natural jealousy? I will work out that intricate problem, that I will, ere many days are over. And there are other mysteries which I perceive. There is poor Mary breaking her heart for the butler. That butler, why does he contrive at the rügeries of Mrs. Prior? Ha! herein lies a mystery too; and I vow I will penetrate it ere long. So saying, I fling away the butt end of the fragrant companion of my solitude, and enter into my room by the open French window just as Bedford walks in at the door. I had heard the voice of that worthy domestic warbling a grave melody from his pantry window as I paced the lawn. When the family goes to rest Bedford passes a couple of hours in study in his pantry, perusing the newspapers and the new works, and forming his opinion on books and politics. Indeed I have reason to believe that the letters in the Putney Herald and Mortlake Monitor signed 'A Voice from the Basement,' were Mr. Bedford's composition.

'Come to see all safe for the night, sir, and the windows closed before you turn in,' Mr. Dick remarks. 'Best not leave 'em open, even if you are asleep inside—catch cold—many bad people about. Remember Broomley murder! Enter at French window—you cry out—cut your throat—and there's a fine paragraph for papers next morning!'

'What a good voice you have, Bedford,' I say; 'I heard you warbling just now—a famous bass, on my word!'

'Always fond of music—sing when I'm cleaning my plate—learned in old Beak Street. She used to teach me,' and he points toward the upper floors.

'What a little chap you were then!—when you came for my proofs for the Museum,' I remark.

'I aint a very big one now, sir; but it aint the big ones that do the best work,' remarks the butler.

'I remember Miss Prior saying that you were as old as she was.'

'Hm! and I scarce came up to her—eh—elbow.' (Bedford had constantly to do battle with the aspirates. He conquered them, but you could see there was a struggle.)

'And it was Miss Prior taught you to sing?' I say, looking him full in the face.

He dropped his eyes—he could not bear my scrutiny. I knew the whole story now.

'When Mrs. Lovel died at Naples, Miss Prior brought home the children, and you acted as courier to the whole party.'

'Yes, sir,' says Bedford. 'We had the carriage, and of course poor Mrs. L. was sent home by sea, and I brought home the young ones, and—and the rest of the family. I could say, Avanti! avanti! to the Italian postilions, and ask for des chevaux when we crossed the Halps—the Alps—I beg your pardon, sir.'

'And you used to see the party to their rooms at the inns, and call them up in the morning, and you had a blunderbuss in the rumble to shoot the robbers?'

'Yes,' says Bedford.

'And it was a pleasant time?'

'Yes,' says Bedford, groaning, and hanging down his miserable head. 'Oh, yes, it was a pleasant time.'
He turned away; he stamped his foot; he gave a sort of imprecation; he pretended to look at some books, and dust them with a napkin which he carried. I saw the matter at once. 'Poor Dick!' says I.

'It's the old—old story,' says Dick. 'It's you and the Hirish girl over again, sir. I'm only a servant, I know; but I'm a—— Confound it!' And here he stuck his fists into his eyes.

'And this is the reason you allow old Mrs. Prior to steal the sherry and the sugar?' I ask.

'How do you know that? You remember how she prigged in Beak Street?' asks Bedford fiercely.

'I overheard you and her just before dinner,' I said.

'You had better go and tell Lovel—have me turned out of the house. That's the best thing that can be done,' cries Bedford again, fiercely, stamping his feet.

'It is always my custom to do as much mischief as I possibly can, Dick Bedford,' I say with fine irony.

He seizes my hand. 'No, you're a trump—everybody knows that; beg pardon, sir; but you see I'm so—so—dash! —miserable, that I hardly know whether I'm walking on my head or my heels.'

'You haven't succeeded in touching her heart, then, my poor Dick?' I said.

Dick shook his head. 'She has no heart,' he said. 'If she ever had any that fellar in India took it away with him. She don't care for anybody alive. She likes me as well as anyone. I think she appreciates me, you see, sir; she can't 'elp it—I'm blest if she can. She knows I am a better man than most of the chaps that come down here—I am, if I wasn't a servant. If I were only an apothecary—like that grinning jackass who comes here from Barnes in his gig, and wants to marry her—she'd have me. She keeps him on, and encourages him—she can do that cleverly enough. And the old dragon fancies she is fond of him. Psha! Why am I making a fool of myself? I am only a servant. Mary's good enough for me; she'll have me fast enough. I beg your pardon, sir; I am making a fool of myself; I ain't the first, sir. Good-night, sir; hope you'll sleep well,' And Dick departs to his pantry and his private cares, and I think, 'Here is another victim who is writhing under the merciless arrows of the universal torturer.'

'He is a very singular person,' Miss Prior remarked to me as, next day, I happened to be walking on Putney Heath by her side, while her young charges trotted on and quarreled in the distance. 'I wonder where the world will stop next, dear
Mr. Batchelor, and how far the march of intellect will proceed! Anyone so free and easy and cool as this Mr. Bedford I never saw. When we were abroad with poor Mrs. Lovel he picked up French and Italian in quite a surprising way. He takes books down from the library now; the most abstruse works—works that I couldn't pretend to read, I'm sure. Mr. Bonnington says he has taught himself history, and Horace in Latin, and algebra, and I don't know what besides. He talked to the servants and tradespeople at Naples much better than I could, I assure you.' And Elizabeth tosses up her head heavenward, as if she would ask of yonder skies how such a man could possibly be as good as herself.

She stepped along the Heath—slim, stately, healthy, tall—her firm, neat foot treading swiftly over the grass. She wore her blue spectacles, but I think she could have looked at the sun without the glasses and without wincing. That sun was playing with her tawny, wavy ringlets, and scattering gold dust over them.

'It is wonderful,' said I, admiring her, 'how these people give themselves airs, and try to imitate their betters!'

'Most extraordinary!' says Bessy. She had not one particle of humor in all her composition. I think Dick Bedford was right; and she had no heart. Well, she had famous lungs health, appetite, and with these one may get through life not uncomfortably.

'You and St. Cecilia got on pretty well, Bessy?' I ask.

'Saint who?'

'The late Mrs. L.'

'Oh, Mrs. Lovel—yes. What an odd person you are! I did not understand whom you meant,' says Elizabeth the downright.

'Not a good temper, I should think? She and Fred fought?'

'He never fought.'

'I think a little bird has told me that she was not averse to the admiration of our sex?'

'I don't speak ill of my friends, Mr. Batchelor,' replies Elizabeth the prudent.

'You must have difficult work with the two old ladies at Shrublands?'

Bessy shrugs her shoulders. 'A little management is necessary in all families,' she says. 'The ladies are naturally a little jealous one of the other; but they are both of them not unkind to me in the main; and I have to bear no more than other women in my situation. It was not all pleasure at St.
Boniface, Mr. Batchelor, with my uncle and aunt. I suppose all governesses have their difficulties; and I must get over mine as best I can, and be thankful for the liberal salary which your kindness procured for me, and which enables me to help my poor mother and my brothers and sisters.'

"I suppose you give all your money to her?"

"Nearly all. They must have it; poor mamma has so many mouths to feed."

"And notre petit cœur, Bessy?" I ask, looking in her fresh face. "Have we replaced the Indian officer?"

Another shrug of the shoulders. "I suppose we all get over those follies, Mr. Batchelor. I remember somebody else was in a sad way too'—and she looks askance at the victim of Glorvina. "My folly is dead and buried long ago. I have to work so hard for mamma, and my brothers and sisters, that I have no time for such nonsense."

Here a gentleman in a natty gig, with a high-trotting horse, came spanking toward us over the common, and with my profound knowledge of human nature, I saw at once that the servant by the driver's side was a little doctor's boy, and the gentleman himself was a neat and trim general practitioner.

He stared at me grimly as he made a bow to Miss Bessy. I saw jealousy and suspicion in his aspect.

"Thank you, dear Mr. Drencher," says Bessy, "for your kindness to mamma and our children. You are going to call at Shrublands? Lady Baker was indisposed this morning. She says when she can't have Dr. Piper there's nobody like you." And this artful one smiles blandly on Mr. Drencher.

"I have got the workhouse, and a case at Roehampton, and I shall be at Shrublands about two, Miss Prior," says that young doctor, whom Bedford had called a grinning jackass. He laid an eager emphasis on the two. Go to! I know what two and two mean as well as most people, Mr. Drencher! Glances of rage he shot at me from out his gig. The serpents of that miserable Æsculapius unwound themselves from his rod, and were gnawing at his swollen heart!

"He has a good practice, Mr. Drencher?" I ask, sly rogue as I am.

"He is very good to mamma and our children. His practice with them does not profit him much," says Bessy.

"And I suppose our walk will be over before two o'clock?" remarks that slyboots who is walking with Miss Prior.

"I hope so. Why, it is our dinner time; and this walk on the Heath does make one so hungry!" cries the governess.
Bessy Prior,' I said, 'it is my belief that you no more want spectacles than a cat in the twilight.' To which she replied that I was such a strange, odd man she really could not understand me.

We were back at Shrublands at two. Of course we must not keep the children's dinner waiting; and of course Mr. Drencher drove up at five minutes past two, with his gig horse all in a lather. I who knew the secrets of the house was amused to see the furious glances which Bedford darted from the sideboard, or as he served the doctor with cutlets. Drencher, for his part, scowled at me. I, for my part, was easy, witty, pleasant, and I trust profoundly wicked and malicious. I bragged about my aristocratic friends to Lady Baker. I trumped her old-world stories about George the Fourth at Dublin with the latest dandified intelligence I had learned at the club. That the young doctor should be dazzled and disgusted was, I own, my wish; and I enjoyed his rage as I saw him choking with jealousy over his victuals.

But why was Lady Baker sulky with me? How came it, my fashionable stories had no effect upon that polite matron? Yesterday at dinner she had been gracious enough; and turning her back upon those poor simple Bonningtons, who knew nothing of the beau monde at all, had condescended to address herself specially to me several times with an 'I need not tell you, Mr. Batchelor, that the Duchess of Dorsetshire's maiden name was De Bobus'; or, 'You know very well that the etiquette at the Lord Lieutenant's balls, at Dublin Castle, is for the wives of baronets to—if, etc., etc.

Now whence, I say, did it arise that Lady Baker, who had been kind and familiar with me on Sunday, should on Monday turn me a shoulder as cold as that lamb which I offered to carve for the family, and which remained from yesterday's quarter? I had thought of staying but two days at Shrublands. I generally am bored at country houses. I was going away on the Monday morning, but Lovel, when he and I and the children and Miss Prior breakfasted together before he went to business, pressed me to stay so heartily and sincerely that I agreed, gladly enough, to remain. I could finish a scene or two of my tragedy at my leisure; besides, there were one or two little comedies going on in the house which inspired me with no little curiosity.

Lady Baker growled at me, then, during lunch time. She addressed herself in whispers and hints to Mr. Drencher. She had in her own man Bulkeley, and bullied him. She desired to know whether she was to have the barouche or not; and when informed that it was at her ladyship's service, said it was a great deal too cold for the open carriage, and that she would have the brougham. When she was told that Mr. and Mrs. Bonnington had impounded the brougham, she said she had no idea of people taking other people's carriages; and when Mr. Bedford remarked that her ladyship had her choice that morning, and had chosen the barouche, she said, 'I didn't speak to you, sir; and I will thank you not to address me until you are spoken to!' She made the place so hot that I began to wish I had quitted it.

'And pray, Miss Prior, where is Captain Baker to sleep,' she asked, 'now that the ground floor room is engaged?'

Miss Prior meekly said, 'Captain Baker would have the pink room.'

'The room on my landing place, without double doors? Impossible! Clarence is always smoking. Clarence will fill the whole house with his smoke. He shall not sleep in the pink room. I expected the ground floor room for him, which—a—this gentleman persists in not vacating.' And the dear creature looked me full in the face.

'This gentleman smokes too, and is so comfortable where he is that he proposes to remain there,' I say, with a bland smile.

'Haspic of plovers' eggs, sir,' says Bedford, handing a dish over my back. And he actually gave me a little dig, and growled, 'Go it—give it her!'

'There is a capital inn on the Heath,' I continue, peeling one of my opal favorites. 'If Captain Baker must smoke, he may have a room there.'

'Sir! my son does not live at inns,' cries Lady Baker.

'Oh, grandma! don't he, though? And wasn't there a row at the Star and Garter? and didn't pa pay Uncle Clarence's bill there, though?'

'Silence, Popham! Little boys should be seen and not heard,' says Cissy. 'Shouldn't little boys be seen and not heard, Miss Prior?'

'They shouldn't insult their grandmothers. Oh, my Cecilia—my Cecilia!' cries Lady Baker, lifting her hand.

'You shan't hit me! I say you shan't hit me!' roars Pop, starting back, and beginning to square at his enraged ancestress. The scene was growing painful. And there was that rascal of a Bedford choking with suppressed laughter at the sideboard. Bulkeley, her ladyship's man, stood calm as fate; but young Buttons burst out in a guffaw; on which, I assure you, Lady Baker looked as savage as Lady Macbeth.
'Am I to be insulted by my daughter's servants?' cries Lady Baker. 'I will leave the house this instant.'

'At what hour will your ladyship have the barouche?' says Bedford with perfect gravity.

If Mr. Drencher had whipped out a lancet and bled Lady B. on the spot he would have done her good. I shall draw the curtain over this sad—this humiliating scene. Drop, little curtain! on this absurd little act.

CHAPTER IV.

A BLACK SHEEP.

The being for whom my friend Dick Bedford seemed to have a special contempt and aversion was Mr. Bulkeley, the tall footman in attendance upon Lovel's dear mother-in-law. One of the causes of Bedford's wrath the worthy fellow explained to me. In the servants' hall Bulkeley was in the habit of speaking in disrespectful and satirical terms of his mistress, enlarging upon her many foibles, and describing her pecuniary difficulties to the many habitués of that second social circle at Shrublands. The hold which Mr. Bulkeley had over his lady lay in a long unsettled account of wages, which her ladyship was quite disinclined to discharge. And, in spite of this insolvency, the footman must have found his profit in the place, for he continued to hold it from year to year, and to fatten on his earnings, such as they were. My lady's dignity did not allow her to travel without this huge personage in her train; and a great comfort it must have been to her to reflect that in all the country houses which she visited (and she would go wherever she could force an invitation), her attendant freely explained himself regarding her peculiarities, and made his brother servants aware of his mistress' embarrassed condition. And yet the woman, whom I suppose no soul alive respected (unless, haply, she herself had a hankering delusion that she was a respectable woman), thought that her position in life forbade her to move abroad without a maid, and this hulking incumbrance in plush; and never was seen anywhere, in watering place, country house, hotel, unless she was so attended.

Between Bedford and Bulkeley, then, there was feud and mutual hatred. Bedford chafed the big man by constant snears and sarcasms, which penetrated the other's dull hide, and caused him frequently to assert that he would punch Dick's ugly head off. The housekeeper had frequently to interpose, and fling her matronly arms between these men of war; and perhaps Bedford was forced to be still at times, for Bulkeley was nine inches taller than himself, and was perpetually bragging of his skill and feats as a bruise. This sultan may also have wished to fling his pocket handkerchief to Miss Mary Pinhorn, who, though she loved Bedford's wit and cleverness, might also be not insensible to the magnificent chest, calves, whiskers, of Mr. Bulkeley. On this delicate subject, however, I can't speak. The men hated each other. You have, no doubt, remarked in your experience of life that when men do hate each other, about a woman, or some other cause, the real reason is never assigned. You say, 'The conduct of such and such a man to his grandmother—his behavior in selling that horse to Benson—his manner of brushing his hair down the middle'—or what you will, 'makes him so offensive to me that I can't endure him.' His verses, therefore, are mediocre; his speeches in parliament are utter failures; his practice at the bar is dwindling every year; his powers (always small) are utterly leaving him, and he is repeating his confounded jokes until they quite nauseate. Why, only about myself, and within these three days, I read a nice little article—written in sorrow, you know, not in anger—by our eminent confrère Wiggins, deploiring the decay of, etc., etc. And Wiggins' little article which was not found suitable for a certain magazine?—Allons donc! The drunkard says the pickled salmon gave him the headache; the man who hates us gives a reason, but not the reason. Bedford was angry with Bulkeley for abusing his mistress at the servants' table? Yes. But for what else besides? I don't care—nor possibly does your worship, the exalted reader, for these low vulgar kitchen quarrels.

Out of that ground floor room, then, I would not move in spite of the utmost efforts of my Lady Baker's broad shoulder to push me out; and with many grins that evening Bedford complimented me on my gallantry in routing the enemy at luncheon. I think he may possibly have told his master, for Lovel looked very much alarmed and uneasy when we greeted each other on his return from the city, but became more composed when Lady Baker appeared at the second dinner bell, without a trace on her fine countenance of that storm which had caused all her waves to heave with such commotion at noon. How finely some people, by the way, can hang up quarrels—or pop them into a drawer—as they do their work, when dinner is announced, and take them out again at a convenient season! Baker was mild, gentle, a thought sad and sentimental—tenderly interested about her dear son and daughter in Ireland, whom she must go and see—quite easy in hand, in a word, and to the immense relief of all of us. She kissed Lovel on retiring, and prayed blessings on her Frederick. She pointed to the picture: nothing could be more melancholy or more gracious.

'She go!' says Mr. Bedford to me at night—'not she.' She knows when she's well off; was obliged to turn out of Bakers-town before she came here: that brute Bulkeley told me so. She's always quarreling with her son and his wife. Angels don't grow everywhere as they do at Putney, Mr. B.! You gave it her well to-day at lunch—you did, though!' During my stay at Shrublands, Mr. Bedford paid me a regular evening visit in my room, set the carte du pays before me, and in his curt way acquainted me with the characters of the inmates of the house, and the incidents occurring therein.

Captain Clarence Baker did not come to Shrublands on the day when his anxious mother wished to clear out my nest (and expel the amiable bird in it) for her son's benefit. I believe an important fight, which was to come off in the Essex Marshes, and which was postponed in consequence of the interposition of the county magistrates, was the occasion, or at any rate the pretext, of the captain's delay. 'He likes seeing fights better than going to 'em, the captain does,' my major-domo remarked. 'His regiment was ordered to India, and he sold out; climate don't agree with his precious health. The captain aint been here ever so long, not since poor Mrs. L.'s time, before Miss P. came here; Captain Clarence and his sister had a tremendous quarrel together. He was up to all sorts of pranks, the captain was. Not a good lot, by any means, I should say, Mr. Batchelor.' And here Bedford begins to laugh. 'Did you ever read, sir, a farce called 'Raising the Wind'? There's plenty of Jeremy Diddlers now, Captain Jeremy Diddlers and Lady Jeremy Diddlers too. Have you such a thing as half a crown about you? If you have, don't invest it in some folks' pockets—that's all. Beg your pardon, sir, if I am bothering you with talking.'

As long as I was at Shrublands, and ready to partake of breakfast with my kind host and his children and their governess, Lady Baker had her own breakfast taken to her room. But when there were no visitors in the house, she would come groaning out of her bedroom to be present at the morning meal; and not uncommonly would give the little company anecdotes of the departed saint, under whose invocation, as it were, we were assembled, and whose simpering effigy looked down upon us, over her harp, and from the wall. The eyes of the portrait followed you about, as portraits' eyes so painted will; and those glances, as it seemed to me, still domineered over Lovel, and made him quail as they had done in life. Yonder, in the corner, was Cecilia's sharp with its leathern cover. I likened the skin to that drum which the dying Zisca ordered should be made out of his hide, to be beaten before the hosts of his people and inspire terror. Vous concevez, I did not say to Lovel at breakfast, as I sat before the ghostly musical instrument, 'My dear fellow, that skin of Cordovan leather belonging to your defunct Cecilia's harp is like the hide which,' etc.; but I confess, at first, I used to have a sort of crawly sensation, as of a sickly genteel ghost flitting about the place, in an exceedingly peevish humor, trying to scold and command, and finding her defunct voice couldn't be heard—trying to re-illumine her extinguished leers and faded smiles and ogles, and finding no one admired or took note. In the gray of the gloaming, in the twilight corner where stands the shrouded companion of song—what is that white figure flickering round the silent harp? Once, as we were assembled in the room at afternoon tea, a bird, entering at the open window, perched on the instrument. Popham dashed at it. Lovel was deep in conversation upon the wine duties with a member of parliament he had brought down to dinner. Lady Baker, who was, if I may use the expression, 'jawing' as usual, and telling one of her tremendous stories about the Lord Lieutenant to Mr. Bonnington, took no note of the incident. Elizabeth did not seem to remark it; what was a bird on a harp to her but a sparrow perched on a bit of leather casing! All the ghosts in Putney churchyard might rattle all their bones, and would not frighten that stout spirit!

I was amused at a precaution which Bedford took, and somewhat alarmed at the distrust toward Lady Baker which he exhibited, when, one day on my return from town—whither I had made an excursion of four or five hours—I found my bedroom door locked, and Dick arrived with the key. 'He's wrote to say he's coming this evening, and if he had come when you was away Lady B. was capable of turning your things out, and putting his in, and taking her oath she believed you was going to leave. The longbows Lady B. do pull are perfectly awful, Mr. B.! So it was longbow to longbow, Mr. Batchelor; and I said you had took the key in your pocket, not wishing to have your papers disturbed. She tried the lawn window, but I had bolted that, and the captain will have the pink room, after all, and must smoke up the chimney. I should have liked to see him or you or anyone do it in poor Mrs. L.'s time—I just should!'
During my visit to London I had chanced to meet my friend Captain Fitzb—dle, who belongs to a dozen clubs, and knows something of every man in London. 'Know anything of Clarence Baker?' 'Of course I do,' says Fitz; 'and if you want any renseignement, my dear fellow, I have the honor to inform you that a blacker little sheep does not trot the London pâvé. Wherever that ingenious officer's name is spoken—at Tattersall's, at his clubs, in his late regiment, in men's society, in ladies' society, in that expanding and most agreeable circle which you may call no society at all—a chorus of maledictions rises up at the mention of Baker. Know anything of Clarence Baker! My dear fellow, enough to make your hair turn white, unless (as I sometimes fondly imagine) nature has already performed that process, when of course I can't pretend to act upon mere hair dye.' (The whiskers of the individual who addressed me, innocent, stared me in the face as he spoke, and were dyed of the most unblushing purple.) 'Clarence Baker, sir, is a young man who would have been invaluable in Sparta as a warning against drunkenness and an exemplar of it. He has helped the regimental surgeon to some most interesting experiments in delirium tremens. He is known, and not in the least trusted, in every billiard room in Brighton, Canterbury, York, Sheffield—on every pavement which has rung with the clink of dragoon boot heels. By a wise system of revoking at whist he has lost games which have caused not only his partners, but his opponents and the whole club, to admire him and to distrust him; long before and since he was of age he has written his eminent name to bills which have been dishonored, and has nobly pleaded his minority as a reason for declining to pay. From the garrison towns where he has been quartered he has carried away not only the hearts of the milliners, but their gloves, haberdashery, and perfumery. He has had controversies with Cornet Green regarding horse transactions; disputed turf accounts with Lieutenant Brown; and betting and backgammon differences with Captain Black. From all I have heard he is the worthy son of his admirable mother. And I bet you even on the four events, if you stay three days in a country house with him—which appears to be your present happy idea—that he will quarrel with you, insult you, and apologize; that he will intoxicate himself more than once; that he will offer to play cards with you, and not pay on losing (if he wins, I perhaps need not state what his conduct will be); and that he will try to borrow money from you, and most likely from your servant, before he goes away.' So saying, the sententious Fitz strutted up the steps of one of his many club haunts in Pall Mall, and left me forewarned, and I trust forearmed, against Captain Clarence and all his works.

The adversary, when at length I came in sight of him, did not seem very formidable. I beheld a weakly little man with Chinese eyes and pretty little feet and hands, whose pallid countenance told of finishes and casinos. His little chest and fingers were decorated with many jewels. A perfume of tobacco hung round him. His little mustache was twisted with an elaborate gummy curl. I perceived that the little hand which twirled the mustache shook woefully; and from the little chest there came a cough surprisingly loud and dismal.

He was lying on a sofa as I entered, and the children of the house were playing round him. 'If you are our uncle, why didn't you come to see us oftener?' asks Popham.

'How should I know that you were such uncommonly nice children?' asks the captain.

'We're not nice to you,' says Popham. 'Why do you cough so? Mammaused to cough. And why does your hand shake so?'

'My hand shakes because I am ill; and I cough because I'm ill. Your mother died of it, and I dare say I shall too.'

'I hope you'll be good and repent before you die, uncle, and I will lend you some nice books,' says Cecilia.

'Oh, bother books!' cries Pop.

'And I hope you'll be good, Popham,' and 'You hold your tongue, miss,' and 'I shall,' and 'I shan't,' and 'You're another,' and 'I'll tell Miss Prior,'—'Go and tell, telltale,' 'Boo'—'Boo'—'Boo'—'Boo'—'Boo'—and I don't know what more exclamations came tumultuously and rapidly from these dear children as their uncle lay before them, a handkerchief to his mouth, his little feet high raised on the sofa cushions.

Captain Baker turned a little eye toward me as I entered the room, but did not change his easy and elegant posture. When I came near to the sofa where he reposed he was good enough to call out:

'Glass of sherry!'

'It's Mr. Batchelor; it isn't Bedford, uncle,' says Cissy.

'Mr. Batchelor aint got any sherry in his pocket—have you, Mr. Batchelor? You aint like old Mrs. Prior, always pocketing things, are you?' cries Pop, and falls a laughing at the ludicrous idea of my being mistaken for Bedford.

'Beg your pardon. How should I know, you know?' drawls the invalid on the sofa. 'Everybody's the same now, you see.'
'Sir!' says I, and 'sir' was all I could say. The fact is, I could have replied with something remarkably neat and cutting, which would have transfixed the languid little jackanapes who dared to mistake me for a footman; but, you see, I only thought of my repartee some eight hours afterward when I was lying in bed, and I am sorry to own that a great number of my best bon mots have been made in that way. So, as I had not the pungent remark ready when wanted, I can't say I said it to Captain Baker; but I dare say I turned very red, and said, 'Sir!' and—and in fact that was all.

'You were goin' to say somethin'?' asked the captain affably.

'You know my friend Mr. Fitzbooodle, I believe?' said I; the fact is I really did not know what to say.

'Some mistake—think not."

'He's a member of the Flag Club,' I remarked, looking my young fellow hard in the face.

'I aint. There's a set of cads in that club that will say anything.'

'You may not know him, sir, but he seemed to know you very well. Are we to have any tea, children?' I say, flinging myself down on an easy-chair, taking up a magazine, and adopting an easy attitude, though I dare say my face was as red as a turkey cock's and I was boiling over with rage.

As we had a very good breakfast and a profuse luncheon at Shrublands, of course we could not support nature till dinner time without a five-o'clock tea; and this was the meal for which I pretended to ask. Bedford, with his silver kettle, and his buttony satellite, presently brought in this refecton, and of course the children bawled out to him:

'Bedford—Bedford! uncle mistook Mr. Batchelor for you.'

'I could not be mistaken for a more honest man, Pop,' said I. And the bearer of the tea urn gave me a look of gratitude and kindness which, I own, went far to restore my ruffled equanimity.

'Since you are the butler, will you get me a glass of sherry and a biscuit?' says the captain. And Bedford, retiring, returned presently with the wine.

The young gentleman's hand shook so that in order to drink his wine he had to surprise it, as it were, and seize it with his mouth, when a shake brought the glass near his lips. He drained the wine, and held out his hand for another glass. The hand was steadier now.

'You the man who was here before?' asks the captain.

'Six years ago, when you were here, sir,' says the butler.
‘What! I aint changed, I suppose?’
‘Yes, you are, sir.’
‘Then how the dooce do you remember me?’
‘You forgot to pay me some money you borrowed of me: one pound five, sir,’ says Bedford, whose eyes slyly turned in my direction.

And here, according to her wont at this meal, the dark-robed Miss Prior entered the room. She was coming forward with her ordinarily erect attitude and firm step, but paused in her walk an instant, and when she came to us, I thought, looked remarkably pale. She made a slight courtesy, and it must be confessed that Captain Baker rose up from the sofa for a moment when she appeared. She then sat down, with her back toward him, turning toward herself the table and its tea apparatus.

At this board my Lady Baker found us assembled when she returned from her afternoon drive. She flew to her darling reprobate of a son. She took his hand, she smoothed back his hair from his damp forehead. ‘My darling child,’ cries this fond mother, ‘what a pulse you have got! ’

‘I suppose, because I’ve been drinking,’ says the prodigal. ‘Why didn’t you come out driving with me? The afternoon was lovely!’

‘To pay visits at Richmond? Not as I knows on, ma’am,’ says the invalid. ‘Conversation with elderly ladies about poodles, Bible societies, that kind of thing? It must be a doosid lovely afternoon that would make me like that sort of game.’

And here comes a fit of coughing, over which mamma ejaculates her sympathy.

‘Kick — kick — killin’ myself!’ gasps out the captain; ‘know I am. No man can lead my life, and stand it. Dyin’ by inches! Dyin’ by whole yards, by Jo—ho—hove, I am!’ Indeed he was as bad in health as in morals, this graceless captain.

‘That man of Lovel’s seems a d—— insolent beggar,’ he presently and ingenuously remarks.

‘Oh, uncle, you mustn’t say those words!’ cries Niece Cissy.

‘He’s a man, and may say what he likes, and so will I, when I’m a man. Yes, and I’ll say it now, too, if I like,’ cries Master Popham.

‘Not to give me pain, Popham? Will you?’ asks the governess.

On which the boy says, ‘Well, who wants to hurt you, Miss Prior?’
And our colloquy ends by the arrival of the man of the house from the city.

What I have admired in some dear women is their capacity for quarreling and for reconciliation. As I saw Lady Baker hanging round her son's neck, and fondling his scanty ringlets, I remembered the awful stories with which in former days she used to entertain us regarding this reprobate. Her heart was pincushioned with his filial crimes. Under her chestnut front her ladyship's real head of hair was gray, in consequence of his iniquities. His precocious appetite had devoured the greater part of her jointure. He had treated her many dangerous illnesses with indifference; had been the worst son, the worst brother, the most ill-conducted schoolboy, the most immoral young man—the terror of households, the Lovelace of garrison towns, the perverter of young officers; in fact, Lady Baker did not know how she supported existence at all under the agony occasioned by his crimes, and it was only from the possession of a more than ordinarily strong sense of religion that she was enabled to bear her burden.

The captain himself explained these alternating maternal caresses and quarrels in his easy way.

'Saw how the old lady kissed and fondled me?' says he to his brother-in-law. 'Quite refreshin', aint it? Hang me, I thought she was goin' to send me a bit of sweetbread off her own plate. Came up to my room last night, wanted to tuck me up in bed, and abused my brother to me for an hour. You see, when I'm in favor she always abuses Baker; when he's in favor she abuses me to him. And my sister-in-law, didn't she give it my sister-in-law! Oh! I'll trouble you! And poor Cecilia—why, hang me, Mr. Batchelor, she used to go on—this bottle's corked, I'm hanged if it isn't—to go on about Cecilia, and call her—— Hullo!'

Here he was interrupted by our host, who said sternly:

'Will you please to forget those quarrels, or not mention them here? Will you have more wine, Batchelor?'

And Lovel rises, and haughtily stalks out of the room. To do Lovel justice, he had a great contempt and dislike for his young brother-in-law, which, with his best magnanimity, he could not at all times conceal.

So our host stalks toward the drawing room, leaving Captain Clarence sipping wine.

'Don't go, too,' says the captain. 'He's a confounded rum fellow, my brother-in-law is. He's a confounded ill-conditioned fellow too. They always are, you know, these tradesmen fellows these half-bred uns. I used to tell my sister so; but she would have him, because he had such lots of money, you know. And she threw over a fellar she was very fond of; and I told her she'd regret it. I told Lady B. she'd regret it. It was all Lady B.'s doing. She made Cissy throw the fellar over. He was a bad match, certainly, Tom Mountain was; and not a clever fellow, you know, or that sort of thing; but, at any rate, he was a gentleman, and better than a confounded sugar-baking beggar out Ratcliff Highway.'

'You seem to find that claret very good,' I remark, speaking, I may say, Socratically to my young friend, who had been swallowing bumper after bumper.

'Claret good! Yes, doosid good!'

'Well, you see our confounded sugar baker gives you his best.'

'And why shouldn't he, hang him? Why, the fellow chokes with money. What does it matter to him how much he spends? You're a poor man, I dare say; you don't look as if you were overflush of money. Well, if you stood a good dinner, it would be all right—I mean it would show—you understand me, you know. But a sugar baker with ten thousand a year, what does it matter to him, bottle of claret more—less?'

'Let us go in to the ladies,' I say.

'Go in to mother! I don't want to go in to my mother,' cries out the artless youth. 'And I don't want to go in to the sugar baker, hang him! and I don't want to go in to the children; and I'd rather have a glass of brandy and water with you, old boy. Here you! What's your name? Bedford! I owe you five-and-twenty shillings, do I, old Bedford? Give us a glass of Schnaps, and I'll pay you! Look here, Batchelor. I hate that sugar baker. Two years ago, I drew a bill on him, and he wouldn't pay it—perhaps he would have paid it, but my sister wouldn't let him. And, I say, shall we go and have a cigar in your room? My mother's been abusing you to me like fun this morning. She abuses everybody. She used to abuse Cissy. Cissy used to abuse her—used to fight like two cats. . .'

And if I narrate this conversation, dear Spartan youth! if I show thee this Helot maundering in his cups, it is that from his odious example thou may'st learn to be moderate in the use of thine own. Has the enemy who has entered thy mouth ever stolen away thy brains? Has wine ever caused thee to blab secrets—to utter egotisms and follies? Beware of it. Has it ever been thy friend at the end of the hard day's work, the cheery companion of thy companions, the promoter of harmony, kindness, harmless social pleasure? Be thankful for it.
Three years since, when the comet was blazing in the autumnal sky, I stood on the château steps of a great claret proprietor. 'Boirai-je de ton vin, oh, comète?' I said, addressing the luminary with the flaming tail. 'Shall those generous bunches which you ripen yield their juices for me moritura?' It was a solemn thought. Ah, my dear brethren! who knows the Order of the Fates? When shall we pass the Gloomy Gates? Which of us goes, which of us waits to drink those famous fifty-eights? A sermon, upon my word! And pray why not a little homily on an autumn eve over a purple cluster? . . . If that rickety boy had only drunk claret, I warrant you his tongue would not have blabb'd, his hand would not have shaken, his wretched little brain and body would not have reeled with fever. 'Gad,' said he next day to me, 'cut again last night. Have an idea that I abused Lovel. When I have a little wine on board, always speak my mind, don't you know? Last time I was here in my poor sister's time, said somethin' to her, don't quite know what it was—somethin' confoundedly true and unpleasant, I dare say. I think it was about a fellow she used to go on with before she married the sugar baker. And I got orders to quit, by Jove, sir—neck and crop, sir, and no mistake! And we gave it one another over the stairs. Oh, my! we did pitch in! And that was the last time I ever saw Cecilia—give you my word. A doosid unforgiving woman my poor sister was, and between you and me, Batchelor, as great a flirt as ever threw a fellar over. You should have heard her and my Lady B. go on, that's all!—Well, mamma, are you going out for a drive in the coachy-poachy? Not as I knows on, thank you, as I before had the honor to observe. Mr. Batchelor and me are going to play a little game at billiards.' We did, and I won; and, from that day to this, have never been paid my little winnings.

On the day after the doughty captain's arrival Miss Prior, in whose face I had remarked a great expression of gloom and care, neither made her appearance at breakfast nor at the children's dinner. 'Miss Prior was a little unwell,' Lady Baker said, with an air of most perfect satisfaction. 'Mr. Drencher will come to see her this afternoon, and prescribe for her, I dare say,' adds her ladyship, nodding and winking a roguish eye at me. I was at a loss to understand what was the point of humor which amused Lady B., until she herself explained it.

'My good sir,' she said, 'I think Miss Prior is not at all averse to being ill.' And the nods recommenced.
'As how?' I ask.
'To being ill, or at least to calling in the medical man.'
'Attachment between governess and Sawbones, I make bold for to presume?' says the captain.
'Precisely, Clarence—a very fitting match. I saw the affair, even before Miss Prior owned it—that is to say, she has not denied it. She says she can't afford to marry, that she has children enough at home in her brothers and sisters. She is a well-principled young woman, and does credit, Mr. Batchelor, to your recommendation, and the education she has received from her uncle, the Master of St. Boniface.'
'Cissy to school; Pop to Eton; and Miss What-d'you-call to grind the pestle in Sawbones' back shop: I see!' says Captain Clarence. 'He seems a low, vulgar blackguard, that Sawbones.'
'Of course, my love, what can you expect from that sort of person?' asks mamma, whose own father was a small attorney in a small Irish town.
'I wish I had his confounded good health,' cries Clarence, coughing.
'My poor darling!' says mamma.
I said nothing. And so Elizabeth was engaged to that great, broad-shouldered, red-whiskered young surgeon with the huge appetite and the dubious h's! Well, why not? What was it to me? Why shouldn't she marry him? Was he not an honest man, and a fitting match for her? Yes. Very good. Only if I do love a bird or flower to glad me with its dark blue eye, it is the first to fade away. If I have a partiality for a young gazelle it is the first to— Psha! What have I to do with this namby-pamby? Can the heart that has truly loved ever forget, and doesn't it as truly love on to the— Stuff! I am past the age of such follies. I might have made a woman happy; I think I should. But the fugacious years have lapsed, my Posthumus! My waist is now a good bit wider than my chest, and it is decreed that I shall be alone!
My tone, then, when next I saw Elizabeth, was sorrowful—not angry. Drencher, the young doctor, came punctually enough, you may be sure, to look after his patient. Little Pinhorn, the children's maid, led the young practitioner smiling toward the schoolroom regions. His creaking high-lows sprang swiftly up the stairs. I happened to be in the hall, and surveyed him with a grim pleasure. 'Now he is in the schoolroom,' I thought. 'Now he is taking her hand—it is very white—and feeling her pulse. And so on, and so on. Surely, surely Pinhorn remains in the room?' I am sitting on a hall table as I muse plaintively on these things, and gaze up the stairs by which the Hakeem (great caroty-whiskered cad!) has passed into the sacred precincts of the harem. As I gaze up the stair another door opens into the hall; a scowling face peeps through that door, and looks up the stair too. 'Tis Bedford, who has slid out of his pantry, and watches the doctor. And thou, too, my poor Bedford! Oh! the whole world throbs with vain heart-pangs, and tosses and heaves with longing, unfulfilled desires! All night, and all over the world, bitter tears are dropping as regular as the dew, and cruel memories are haunting the pillow. Close my hot eyes, kind Sleep! Do not visit it, dear delusive images out of the Past! Often your figure shimmers through my dreams, Glorvina. Not as you are now, the stout mother of many children—you always had an alarming likeness to your own mother, Glorvina—but as you were—slim, black-haired, blue-eyed—when your carnation lips warbled the 'Vale of Avoca,' or the 'Angel’s Whisper.' 'What!' I say then, looking up the stair, 'am I absolutely growing jealous of the apothecary? Oh, fool!' And at this juncture out peers Bedford's face from the pantry, and I see he is jealous too. I tie my shoe as I sit on the table; I don't affect to notice Bedford in the least (who, in fact, pops his own head back again as soon as he sees mine). I take my wide-awake from the peg, set it on one side my head, and strut whistling out of the hall door. I stretch over Putney Heath, and my spirit resumes its tranquillity.

I sometimes keep a little journal of my proceedings, and on referring to its pages the scene rises before me pretty clearly to which the brief notes allude. On this day I find noted:

Friday, July 14.—B. came down to-day. Seems to require a great deal of attendance from Dr. Row between dowagers after dinner.

'B,' I need not remark, is Bessy. 'Dr.' of course you know. 'Row between dowagers' means a battle royal between Mrs. Bonnington and Lady Baker, such as not unfrequently raged under the kindly Lovel's roof.

Lady Baker's gigantic menial Bulkeley condescended to wait at the family dinner at Shrublands, when perforce he had to put himself under Mr. Bedford's orders. Bedford would gladly have dispensed with the London footman, over whose calves, he said, he and his boy were always tumbling; but Lady Baker's dignity would not allow her to part from her own man; and her good-natured son-in-law allowed her, and indeed almost all other persons, to have their own way. I have reason to fear Mr. Bulkeley's morals were loose. Mrs. Bonnington had a special horror of him; his behavior in the village public houses, where his powder and plush were forever visible—his freedom of conduct and conversation before the good lady's nurse and parlor maids—provoked her anger and suspicion. More than once she whispered to me her loathing of this flour-besprinkled monster; and, as much as such a gentle creature could, she showed her dislike to him by her behavior. The flunkey's solemn equanimity was not to be disturbed by any such feeble indications of displeasure. From his powdered height he looked down upon Mrs. Bonnington, and her esteem or her dislike was beneath him.

Now on this Friday night, the 14th, Captain Clarence had gone to pass the day in town, and our Bessy made her appearance again, the doctor's prescriptions having, I suppose, agreed with her. Mr. Bulkeley, who was handing coffee to the ladies, chose to offer none to Miss Prior, and I was amused when I saw Bedford's heel scrunch down on the flunkey's right foot, as he pointed toward the governess. The oaths which Bulkeley had to devour in silence must have been frightful. To do the gallant fellow justice, I think he would have died rather than speak before company in a drawing room. He limped up and offered the refreshment to the young lady, who bowed and declined it.

'Frederick,' Mrs. Bonnington begins, when the coffee ceremony is over, 'now the servants are gone, I must scold you about the waste at your table, my dear. What was the need of opening that great bottle of champagne? Lady Baker only takes two glasses. Mr. Batchelor doesn't touch it.' (No, thank you, my dear Mrs. Bonnington; too old a stager.) 'Why not have a little bottle instead of that great, large, immense one? Bedford is a teetotaler. I suppose it is that London footman who likes it.'

'My dear mother, I haven't really ascertained his tastes,' says Lovel.

'Then why not tell Bedford to open a pint, dear?' pursues mamma.

'Oh, Bedford—Bedford, we must not mention him, Mrs. Bonnington!' cries Lady Baker. 'Bedford is faultless. Bedford has the keys of everything. Bedford is not to be controlled in anything. Bedford is to be at liberty to be rude to my servant.'

'Bedford was admirably kind in his attendance on your daughter, Lady Baker,' says Lovel, his brow darkening; 'and as for your man, I should think he was big enough to protect himself from any rudeness of poor Dick!’ The good fellow had been angry for one moment, at the next he was all for peace and conciliation.

Lady Baker puts on her superfine air. With that air she had often awe-stricken good, simple Mrs. Bonnington; and she loved to use it whenever city folks or humble people were present. You see she thought herself your superior and mine, as de par la monde there are many artless Lady Bakers who do. ‘My dear Frederick!’ says Lady B., then, putting on her best May Fair manner, ‘excuse me for saying, but you don’t know the—the class of servant to which Bulkeley belongs. I had him as a great favor from Lord Toddleby’s. That—that class of servant is not generally accustomed to go out single.’

‘Unless they are two behind a carriage perch they pine away, I suppose,’ remarks Mr. Lovel, ‘as one love-bird does without his mate.’

‘No doubt—no doubt,’ says Lady B., who does not in the least understand him; ‘I only say you are not accustomed here—in this kind of establishment, you understand—to that class of—’

But here Mrs. Bonnington could contain her wrath no more. ‘Lady Baker!’ cries that injured mother, ‘is my son’s establishment not good enough for any powdered wretch in England? Is the house of a British merchant—’

‘My dear creature—my dear creature!’ interposes her ladyship, ‘it is the house of a British merchant, and a most comfortable house too.’

‘Yes, as you find it,’ remarks mamma.

‘Yes, as I find it, when I come to take care of that departed angel’s children, Mrs. Bonnington!’ (Lady B. here indicates the Cecilian effigy)—of that dear seraph’s orphans, Mrs. Bonnington! You cannot. You have other duties—other children—a husband, whom you have left at home in delicate health, and who—’

‘Lady Baker!’ exclaims Mrs. Bonnington, ‘no one shall say I don’t take care of my dear husband!’

‘My dear Lady Baker!—my dear—dear mother!’ cries Lovel, éploër, and whimpers aside to me, ‘They spar in this way every night when we’re alone. It’s too bad, ain’t it, Batch?’

‘I say you do take care of Mr. Bonnington,’ Baker blandly resumes (she has hit Mrs. Bonnington on the raw place, and smilingly proceeds to thong again)—‘I say you do take care of your husband, my dear creature, and that is why you can’t attend to Frederick! And as he is of a very easy temper—except sometimes with his poor Cecilia's mother—he allows all his tradesmen to cheat him; all his servants to cheat him; Bedford to be rude to everybody; and if to me, why not to my servant Bulkeley, with whom Lord Toddleby's groom of the chambers gave me the very highest character?

Mrs. Bonnington in a great flurry broke in by saying she was surprised to hear that noblemen had grooms in their chambers; and she thought they were much better in the stables; and when they dined with Captain Huff, you know, Frederick, his man always brought such a dreadful smell of the stable in with him that—Here she paused. Baker's eye was on her; and that dowager was grinning a cruel triumph.

'He—he! You mistake, my good Mrs. Bonnington!' says her ladyship. 'Your poor mother mistakes, my dear Frederick. You have lived in a quiet and most respectable sphere, but not, you understand, not—'

'Not what, pray, Lady Baker? We have lived in this neighborhood twenty years in my late husband's time, when we saw a great deal of company, and this dear Frederick was a boy at Westminster School. And we have paid for everything we have had for twenty years; and we have not owed a penny to any tradesman. And we may not have had powdered footmen, six feet high, impertinent beasts, who were rude to all the maids in the place. Don't—I will speak, Frederick! But servants who loved us, and who were paid their wages, and who—o—ho—ho—ho!'

Wipe your eyes, dear friends! out with all your pocket handkerchiefs. I protest I cannot bear to see a woman in distress. Of course Fred Lovel runs to console his dear old mother, and vows Lady Baker meant no harm.

'Vented no harm! My dear Frederick, what harm can I mean? I only said your poor mother did not seem to know what a groom of the chambers was! How should she?'

'Come—come,' says Frederick, 'enough of this! Miss Prior, will you be so kind as to give us a little music?'

Miss Prior was playing Beethoven at the piano, very solemnly and finely, when our Black Sheep returned to this quiet fold, and, I am sorry to say, in a very riotous condition. The brilliancy of his eye, the purple flush on his nose, the unsteady gait, and uncertain tone of voice, told tales of Captain Clarence, who stumbled over more than one chair before he found a seat near me.

'Quite right, old boy,' says he, winking at me. 'Cut again—dooshid good fellosh. Better than being along with you shtoopid-old-fogish.' And he began to warble wild 'Fol-de-rol-lolls' in an insane accompaniment to the music.

'By Heavens, this is too bad!' growls Lovel. 'Lady Baker, let your big man carry your son to bed. Thank you, Miss Prior!'

At a final yell, which the unlucky young scapegrace gave, Elizabeth stopped, and rose from the piano, looking very pale. She made her courtesy, and was departing, when the wretched young captain sprang up, looked at her, and sank back on the sofa with another wild laugh. Bessy fled away scared, and white as a sheet.

'Take the brute to bed!' roars the master of the house in great wrath. And scapegrace was conducted to his apartment, whither he went laughing wildly, and calling out, 'Come on, old sh-sh-shugar-baker!'

The morning after this fine exhibition Captain Clarence Baker's mamma announced to us that her poor dear suffering boy was too ill to come to breakfast, and I believe he prescribed for himself deviled drumstick and soda water, of which he partook in his bedroom. Lovel, seldom angry, was violently wroth with his brother-in-law, and, almost always polite, was at breakfast scarcely civil to Lady Baker. I am bound to say that female abused her position. She appealed to Cecilia's picture a great deal too much during the course of breakfast. She hinted, she sighed, she waggled her head at me, and spoke about 'that angel' in the most tragic manner. Angel is all very well; but your angel brought in à tout propos, your departed blessing called out of her grave ever so many times a day: when grandmamma wants to carry a point of her own; when the children are naughty, or noisy; when papa betrays a flickering inclination to dine at his club, or to bring home a bachelor friend or two to Shrublands—I say your angel always dragged in by the wings into the conversation loses her effect. No man's heart put on wider crape than Lovel's at Cecilia's loss. Considering the circumstances, his grief was most creditable to him; but at breakfast, at lunch, about Bulkeley the footman, about the barouche or the phaeton, or any trumpery domestic perplexity, to have a Deus inter sit was too much. And I observed, with some inward satisfaction, that when Baker uttered her pompous funereal phrases, rolled her eyes up to the ceiling, and appealed to that quarter, the children ate their jam and quarreled and kicked their little shins under the table, Lovel read his paper and looked at his watch to see if it was omnibus time, and Bessy made the tea, quite undisturbed by the old lady's tragical prattle.
When Baker described her son's fearful cough and dreadfully feverish state, I said, 'Surely, Lady Baker, Mr. Drencher had better be sent for'; and I suppose I uttered the disgusting dissyllable Drencher with a fine sarcastic accent; for once, just once Bessy's gray eyes rose through the spectacles and met mine with a glance of unutterable sadness, then calmly settled down on to the slop-basin again or the urn, in which her pale features, of course, were odiously distorted.

'You will not bring anybody home to dinner, Frederick, in my poor boy's state?' asks Lady B.

'He may stay in his bedroom, I suppose,' replies Lovel.

'He is Cecilia's brother, Frederick!' cries the lady.

'Conf—' Lovel was beginning. What was he about to say?

'If you are going to confound your angel in heaven, I have nothing to say, sir!' cries the mother of Clarence.

'Parbleu, madame!' cried Lovel in French; 'if he were not my wife's brother do you think I would let him stay here?'

'Partly Français? Oui, oui, oui!' cries Pop. 'I know what pa means!'

'And so do I know. And I shall lend Uncle Clarence some books which Mr. Bonnington gave me, and—'

'Hold your tongues all!' shouts Lovel, with a stamp of his foot.

'You will, perhaps, have the great kindness to allow me the use of your carriage—or, at least, to wait here until my poor suffering boy can be moved, Mr. Lovel?' says Lady B., with the airs of a martyr.

Lovel rang the bell. 'The carriage for Lady Baker—at her ladyship's hour, Bedford, and the cart for her luggage. Her ladyship and Captain Baker are going away.'

'I have lost one child, Mr. Lovel, whom some people seem to forget. I am not going to murder another! I will not leave this house, sir, unless you drive me from it by force, until the medical man has seen my boy!' And here she and sorrow sat down again. She was always giving warning. She was always fitting the halter and traversing the cart, was Lady B., but she forever declined to drop the handkerchief and have the business over. I saw by a little shrug in Bessy's shoulders what the governess' views were of the matter; and, in a word, Lady B. no more went away on this day than she had done on forty previous days when she announced her intention of going. She would accept benefits, you see, but then she insulted her benefactors, and so squared accounts.

That great healthy, florid, scarlet-whiskered medical wretch came at about twelve, saw Mr. Baker and prescribed for him; and of course he must have a few words with Miss Prior, and inquire into the state of her health. Just as on the previous occasion, I happened to be in the hall when Drencher went upstairs; Bedford happened to be looking out of his pantry door; I burst into a yell of laughter when I saw Dick's livid face—the sight somehow suited my savage soul.

No sooner was Medicus gone than Bessy, grave and pale, in bonnet and spectacles, came sliding downstairs. I do not mean down the banisters, which was Pop's favorite method of descent; but slim, tall, noiseless, in a unlike calm, she swept down the steps. Of course I followed her. And there was Master Bedford's nose peeping through the pantry door at us as we went out with the children. Pray, what business of his was it to be always watching anybody who walked with Miss Prior?

'So, Bessy,' I said, 'what report does Mr.—hem!—Mr. Drencher—give of the interesting invalid?'

'Oh, the most horrid! He says that Captain Baker has several times had a dreadful disease brought on by drinking, and that he is mad when he has it. He has delusions, sees demons, when he is in this state—wants to be watched.'

'Drencher tells you everything?'

She says meekly: 'He attends us when we are ill.'

I remark, with fine irony: 'He attends the whole family; he is always coming to Shrublands!'

'He comes very often,' Miss Prior says gravely.

'And do you mean to say, Bessy,' I cry, madly cutting off two or three heads of yellow broom with my stick—'do you mean to say a fellow like that, who drops his hat's about the room, is a welcome visitor?'

'I should be very ungrateful if he were not welcome, Mr. Batchelor,' says Miss Prior. 'And call me by my surname, please—and he has taken care of all my family—and—'

'And, of course, of course, of course, Miss Prior!' say I brutally; 'and this is the way the world wags; and this is the way we are ill, and are cured; and we are grateful to the doctor that cures us!'

She nods her grave head. 'You used to be kinder to me once, Mr. Batchelor, in old days—in your—in my time of trouble! Yes, my dear, that is a beautiful bit of broom! Oh, what a fine butterfly!' (Cecilia scours the plain after the butterfly). 'You used to be kinder to me once—when we were both unhappy.'

'I was unhappy,' I say, 'but I survived. I was ill, but I am now pretty well, thank you. I was jilted by a false heartless woman. Do you suppose there are no other heartless women in the world?' And I am confident, if Bessy's breast had not been steel, the daggers which darted out from my eyes would have bored frightful stabs in it.

But she shook her head, and looked at me so sadly that my eye-daggers tumbled down to the ground at once; for, you see, though I am a jealous Turk, I am a very easily appeased jealous Turk; and if I had been Bluebeard, and my wife, just as I was going to decapitate her, had lifted up her head from the block and cried a little, I should have dropped my scimitar, and said, 'Come, come, Fatima, never mind for the present about that key and closet business, and I'll chop your head off some other morning.' I say Bessy disarmed me. Pooh! I say, women will make a fool of me to the end. Ah! ye gracious Fates! Cut my thread of life ere it grow too long. Suppose I were to live till seventy, and some little wretch of a woman were to set her cap at me? She would catch me—I know she would. All the males of our family have been spooney and soft to a degree perfectly ludicrous and despicable to contemplate—— Well, Bessy Prior, putting a hand out, looked at me, and said:

'You are the oldest and best friend I have ever had, Mr. Batchelor—the only friend.'

'Am I, Elizabeth?' I gasp, with a beating heart.

'Cissy is running back with a butterfly.' (Our hands unlock.) 'Don't you see the difficulties of my position? Don't you know that ladies are often jealous of governesses; and that unless—unless they imagined I was—I was favorable to Mr. Drencher, who is very good and kind—the ladies of Shrublands might not like my remaining alone in the house with—with—you understand?' A moment the eyes look over the spectacles; at the next the meek bonnet bows down toward the ground.

I wonder did she hear the bump—bumping of my heart! Oh, heart! oh, wounded heart! did I ever think thou would'st bump—bump again? 'Egl—Egl—izabeth,' I say, choking with emotion, 'do, do, do you—te—tell me—you don't—don't—don't—lo—love that apothecary?'

She shrugs her shoulder—her charming shoulder.

'And if,' I hotly continue, 'if a gentleman—if a man of mature age certainly, but who has a kind heart and four hundred a year of his own—were to say to you, "Elizabeth! will you bid the flowers of a blighted life to bloom again? Elizabeth! will you soothe a wounded heart?"——'
‘Oh, Mr. Batchelor!’ she sighed, and then added quickly, ‘Please don’t take my hand. Here’s Pop.’

And that dear child (bless him!) came up at the moment, saying, ‘Oh, Miss Prior, look here! I’ve got such a jolly big toadstool!’ And next came Cissy with a confounded butterfly. O Richard the Third! Haven’t you been maltreated because you smothered two little nuisances in a Tower? What is to prove to me that you did not serve the little brutes right, and that you weren’t a most humane man? Darling Cissy coming up, then, in her dear, charming way, says, ‘You shan’t take Mr. Batchelor’s hand, you shall take my hand!’ And she tosses up her little head, and walks with the instructress of her youth.

‘Ces enfans ne comprennent guère le Français,’ says Miss Prior, speaking very rapidly.

‘Après lonche?’ I whisper. The fact is I was so agitated I hardly knew what the French for lunch was. And then our conversation dropped; and the beating of my own heart was all the sound I heard.

Lunch came. I couldn’t eat a bit: I should have choked; Bessy ate plenty, and drank a glass of beer. It was her dinner, to be sure. Young Blacksheep did not appear. We did not miss him. When Lady Baker began to tell her story of George IV. at Slane Castle I went into my own room. I took a book. Books? Pshaw! I went into the garden. I took out a cigar. But no, I would not smoke it. Perhaps she—many people don’t like smoking.

I went into the garden. ‘Come into the garden, Maud.’ I sat by a large lilac bush. I waited. Perhaps she would come? The morning room windows were wide open on the lawn. Will she never come? Ah! what is that tall form advancing? gliding—gliding into the chamber like a beauteous ghost? ‘Who most does like an angel show, you may be sure ‘tis she.’ She comes up to the glass. She lays her spectacles down on the mantelpiece. She puts a slim white hand over her auburn hair and looks into the mirror. Elizabeth, Eliza-Beth! I come!

As I came up, I saw a horrid little grinning, debauched face surge over the back of a great armchair and look toward Elizabeth. It was Captain Blacksheep, of course. He laid his elbows over the chair. He looked keenly and with a diabolical smile at the unconscious girl; and just as I reached the window he cried out, ‘Bessy Bellenden, by Jove!’

Elizabeth turned round, gave a little cry, and— But what happened I shall tell in the ensuing chapter.
CHAPTER V.

IN WHICH I AM STUNG BY A SERPENT.

If when I heard Baker call out Bessy Bellenden, and adjure Jove, he had run forward and seized Elizabeth by the waist, or offered her other personal indignity, I too should have run forward on my side and engaged him. Though I am a stout elderly man, short in stature and in wind, I know I am a match for that rickety little captain on his high-heel’d boots. A match for him? I believe Miss Bessy would have been a match for both of us. Her white arm was as hard and polished as ivory. Had she held it straight pointed against the rush of the dragoon, he would have fallen backward before his intended prey; I have no doubt he would. It was the hen, in this case, was stronger than the libertine fox, and au besoin would have pecked the little marauding vermin’s eyes out. Had, I say, Partlet been weak, and Reynard strong, I would have come forward; I certainly would. Had he been a wolf, now, instead of a fox, I am certain I should have run in upon him, grappled with him, torn his heart and tongue out of his black throat, and trampled the lawless brute to death.

Well, I didn’t do any such thing. I was just going to run in—and I didn’t. I was just going to rush to Bessy’s side to clasp her (I have no doubt) to my heart; to beard the whiskered champion who was before her, and perhaps say, ‘Cheer thee—cheer thee, my persecuted maiden, my beauteous love—my Rebecca! Come on, Sir Brian de Bois Guilbert, thou dastard Templar! It is I, Sir Wilfrid of Ivanhoe.’ (By the way, though the fellow was not a Templar, he was a Lincoln’s Inn man, having passed twice through the Insolvent Court there with infinite discredit.) But I made no heroic speeches. There was no need for Rebecca to jump out of window and risk her lovely neck. How could she, in fact, the French window being flush with the ground floor? And I give you my honor, just as I was crying my war cry, couching my lance, and rushing à la recousse upon Sir Baker, a sudden thought made me drop my (figurative) point; a sudden idea made me rein in my galloping (metaphorical) steed and spare Baker for that time.

Suppose I had gone in? But for that sudden precaution there might have been a Mrs. Batchelor. I might have been a bullied father of ten children. (Elizabeth has a fine high temper of her own.) What is four hundred and twenty a year with a wife and perhaps half a dozen children? Should I have been a whit the happier? Would Elizabeth? Ah no.
And yet I feel a certain sort of shame, even now, when I think that I didn't go in. Not that I was in a fright, as some people choose to hint. I swear I was not. But the reason why I did not charge was this:

Nay, I did charge part of the way, and then, I own, stopped. It was an error in judgment. It wasn't a want of courage. Lord George Sackville was a brave man, and as cool as a cucumber under fire. Well, he didn't charge at the battle of Minden, and Prince Ferdinand made the deuce and all of a disturbance, as we know. Byng was a brave man—and I ask, wasn't it a confounded shame executing him? So with respect to myself. Here is my statement. I make it openly. I don't care. I am accused of seeing a woman insulted, and not going to her rescue. I am not guilty, I say. That is, there were reasons which caused me not to attack. Even putting aside the superior strength of Elizabeth herself to the enemy—I vow there were cogent and honorable reasons why I did not charge home.

You see I happened to be behind a blue lilac bush (and was turning a rhyme—Heaven help us!—in which death was only to part me and Elizabeth) when I saw Baker's face surge over the chair back. I rush forward as he cries 'by Jove.' Had Miss Prior cried out on her part the strength of twenty Heenans, I know, would have nerved this arm; but all she did was to turn pale, and say, 'Oh, mercy! Captain Baker. Do pity me!' 'What! you remember me, Bessy Bellenden, do you?' asks the captain, advancing.

'Oh, not that name! please, not that name!' cries Bessy.

'I thought I knew you yesterday,' says Baker. 'Only, 'gad, you see, I had so much claret on board I did not much know what was what. And oh! Bessy, I have got such a splinter of a headache.'

'Oh! please—please, my name is Miss Prior. Pray! pray, sir, don't—'

'You've got handsomer—doosid deal handsomer. Know you now well, your spectacles off. You come in here—teach my nephew and niece, humbug my sister, make love to the sh—

Oh! you uncommon sly little toad!'

'Captain Baker! I beg—I implore you,' says Bessy, or something of the sort; for the white hands assumed an attitude of supplication.

'Pooh! don't gammon me!' says the rickety captain (or words to that effect), and seizes those two firm white hands in his moist, trembling palms.

Now do you understand why I paused? When the dandy came grinning forward, with looks and gestures of familiar recognition; when the pale Elizabeth implored him to spare her: a keen arrow of jealousy shot whizzing through my heart, and caused me well nigh to fall backward as I ran forward. I bumped up against a bronze group in the garden. The group represented a lion stung by a serpent. I was a lion stung by a serpent too. Even Baker could have knocked me down. Fiends and anguish! he had known her before. The academy, the life she had led, the wretched old tipsy ineffective guardian of a father—all these antecedents in poor Bessy’s history passed through my mind. And I had offered my heart and troth to this woman! Now, my dear sir, I appeal to you. What would you have done? Would you have liked to have such a sudden suspicion thrown over the being of your affection! ‘Oh! spare me—spare me!’ I heard her say in clear—too clear—pathetic tones. And then there came rather a shrill ‘Ah!’ and then the lion was up in my breast again; and I give you my honor, just as I was going to step forward—to step?—to rush forward from behind the urn where I had stood for a moment with thumping heart, Bessy’s ‘Ah!’ or little cry was followed by a whack, which I heard as clear as anything I ever heard in my life; and I saw the little captain spin back, topple over a chair heels up, and in this posture heard him begin to scream and curse in shrill tones.

Not for long, for as the captain and the chair tumble down a door springs open; a man rushes in, who pounces like a panther upon the prostrate captain, pitches into his nose and eyes, and chokes his bad language by sending a fist down his naughty throat.

‘Oh! thank you, Bedford!—please, leave him, Bedford! that’s enough. There, don’t hurt him any more!’ says Bessy, laughing—laughing, upon my word.

‘Ah! will you?’ says Bedford. ‘Lie still, you little beggar, or I’ll knock your head off. Look here, Miss Prior!—Elizabeth—dear, dear Elizabeth! I love you with all my heart and soul and strength—I do.’

‘O Bedford! Bedford!’ warbles Elizabeth.

‘I do! I can’t help it. I must say it! Ever since Rome, I do. Lie still, you drunken little beast! It’s no use. But I adore you, O Elizabeth! Elizabeth!’ And there was Dick, who was always following Miss P. about, and poking his head into keyholes to spy her, actually making love to her over the prostrate body of the captain.

Now what was I to do? Wasn’t I in most confoundedly awkward situation? A lady had been attacked—a lady!—the lady—and I hadn’t rescued her. Her insolent enemy was overthrown, and I hadn’t done it. A champion, three inches shorter than myself, had come in, and dealt the blow. I was in such a rage of mortification that I should have liked to thrash the captain and Bedford too. The first I know I could have matched; the second was a tough little hero. And it was he who rescued the damsel, while I stood by! In a strait so odious, sudden, and humiliating, what should I, what could I, what did I do?

Behind the lion and snake there is a brick wall and marble balustrade, built for no particular reason, but flanking three steps and a grassy terrace, which then rises up on a level to the house windows. Beyond the balustrade is a shrubbery of more lilacs and so forth by which you can walk round into another path, which also leads up to the house. So as I had not charged—ah, woe is me!—as the battle was over, I—I just went round that shrubbery into the other path, and so entered the house, arriving like Fortinbras in 'Hamlet,' when everybody is dead and sprawling, you know, and the whole business is done.

And was there to be no end to my shame, or to Bedford’s laurels? In that brief interval, while I was walking round the bypath (just to give myself a pretext for entering coolly into the premises), this fortunate fellow had absolutely engaged another and larger champion. This was no other than Bulkeley, my Lady B.’s first-class attendant. When the captain fell, amid his screams and curses, he called for Bulkeley; and that individual made his appearance, with a little Scotch cap perched on his powdered head.

'Hullo! what’s the row year?' says Goliath, entering.

'Kill that blackguard! Hang him, kill him!' screams Captain Blacksheep, rising with bleeding nose.

'I say, what’s the row year?' asks the grenadier.

'Off with your cap, sir, before a lady!' calls out Bedford.

'Hoff with my cap! You be blo——'

But he said no more, for little Bedford jumped some two feet from the ground, and knocked the cap off, so that a cloud of ambrosial powder filled the room with violet odors. The immense frame of the giant shook at this insult. 'I will be the death on you, you little beggar!' he grunted out; and was advancing to destroy Dick just as I entered in the cloud which his head had raised.

'I'll knock the brains as well as the powder out of your ugly head!' says Bedford, springing at the poker. At which juncture I entered.
'What—what is this disturbance?' I say, advancing with an air of mingled surprise and resolution.

'You git out of the way till I knock his 'ead off!' roars Bulkeley.

'Take up your cap, sir, and leave the room,' I say, still with the same elegant firmness.

'Put down that there poker, you coward!' bellows the monster on board wages.

'Miss Prior!' I say (like a dignified hypocrite, as I own I was), 'I hope no one has offered you a rudeness?' And I glare round, first at the knight of the bleeding nose, and then at his squire.

Miss Prior's face, as she replied to me, wore a look of awful scorn.

'Thank you, sir,' she said, turning her head over her shoulder, and looking at me with her gray eyes. 'Thank you, Richard Bedford! God bless you! I shall ever be thankful to you, wherever I am.' And the stately figure swept out of the room.

She had seen me behind that confounded statue, then, and I had not come to her! Oh, torments and racks! Oh, scorpions, fiends, and pitchforks! The face of Bedford too (flashing with knightly gratitude anon as she spoke kind words to him and passed on) wore a look of scorn as he turned toward me, and then stood, his nostrils distended, and breathing somewhat hard, glaring at his enemies, and still grasping his mace of battle.

When Elizabeth was gone there was a pause of a moment, and then Blacksheep, taking his bleeding cambric from his nose shrieks out, 'Kill him, I say! A fellow that dares to hit one in my condition, and when I'm down! Bulkeley, you great hulking jackass! kill him, I say!'

'Jest let him put that there poker down, that's hall,' growls Bulkeley.

'You're afraid, you great cowardly beast! You shall go, Mr. What-d'ye-call'im—Mr. Bedford—you shall have the sack, sir, as sure as your name is what it is! I'll tell my brother-in-law everything; and as for that woman—'

'If you say a word against her I'll cane you wherever I see you, Captain Baker!' I cry out.

'Who spoke to you?' says the captain, falling back and scowling at me.

'Whoever told you to put your foot in?' says the squire.

I was in such a rage, and so eager to find an object on which I might wreak my fury, that I confess I plunged at this Bulkeley,
I gave him two most violent blows on the waistcoat, which caused him to double up with such frightful contortions that Bedford burst out laughing; and even the captain with the damaged eye and nose began to laugh too. Then, taking a lesson from Dick, as there was a fine shining dagger on the table, used for the cutting open of reviews and magazines, I seized and brandished this weapon, and I dare say would have sheathed it in the giant's bloated corpus had he made any movement toward me. But he only called out, 'Hi'll be the death on you, you cowards! Hi'll be the death of both on you!' and snatching up his cap from the carpet, walked out of the room.

'Glad you did that, though,' says Baker, nodding his head. 'Think I'd best pack up.'

And now the Devil of Rage which had been swelling within me gave place to a worse devil—the Devil of Jealousy—and I turned on the captain, who was also just about to slink away. 'Stop!' I cried out—I screamed out, I may say. 'Who spoke to you, I should like to know? and who the dooce dares to speak to me in that sort of way?' says Clarence Baker, with a plentiful garnish of expletives, which need not be here inserted. But he stopped, nevertheless, and turned slouching round.

'You spoke just now of Miss Prior?' I said. 'Have you anything against her?'

'What's that to you?' he asked.

'I am her oldest friend. I introduced her into this family. Dare you say a word against her?'

'Well, who the dooce has?'

'You knew her before?'

'Yes, I did, then.'

'When she went by the name of Bellenden?'

'Of course I did. And what's that to you?' he screams out.

'I this day asked her to be my wife, sir! That's what it is to me!' I replied with severe dignity.

Mr. Clarence began to whistle. 'Oh! if that's it—of course not!' he says.

The jealous demon writhed within me and rent me.

'You mean that there is something, then?' I asked, glaring at the young reprobate.

'No, I don't,' says he, looking very much frightened. 'No, there is nothin'. Upon my sacred honor, there isn't that I know.' (I was looking uncommonly fierce at this time, and, I must own, would rather have quarreled with somebody than not.) 'No, there is nothin' that I know. Ever so many years ago, you see, I used to go with Tom Papillion, Turkington, and two or three fellows, to that theater. Dolphin had it. And we used to go behind the scenes—and—and I own I had a row with her. And I was in the wrong. There, now, I own I was.
And she left the theater. And she behaved quite right. And I was very sorry. And I believe she is as good a woman as ever stept now. And the father was a disreputable old man, but most honorable—I know he was. And there was a fellow in the Bombay service—a fellow by the name of Walker or Walkingham—yes, Walkingham; and I used to meet him at the Cave of Harmony, you know; and he told me that she was as right as right could be. And he was doosidly cut up about leaving her. And he would have married her, I desay, only for his father the general, who wouldn't stand it. And he was ready to hang himself when he went away. He used to drink awfully, and then he used to swear about her; and we used to chaff him, you know. Low, vulgarish sort of man, he was; and a very passionate fellow. And if you're goin' to marry her, you know—of course I ask your pardon, and that: and upon the honor of a gentleman I know nothin' against her. And I wish you joy and all that sort of thing. I do now, really, now!' And so saying the mean, mischievous little monkey sneaked away, and clambered up to his own perch in his own bedroom.

Worthy Mrs. Bonnington, with a couple of her young ones, made her appearance at this juncture. She had a key, which gave her a free pass through the garden door, and brought her children for an afternoon's play and fighting with their little nephew and niece. Decidedly Bessy did not bring up her young folks well. Was it that their grandmothers spoiled them, and undid the governess' work? Were those young people odious (as they often were) by nature, or rendered so by the neglect of their guardians? If Bessy had loved her charges more, would they not have been better? Had she a kind, loving, maternal heart? Ha! This thought—this jealous doubt—smote my bosom; and were she mine, and the mother of many possible little Batchelors, would she be kind to them? Would they be willful and selfish and abominable little wretches, in a word, like these children? Nay—nay! Say that Elizabeth has but a cold heart; we cannot be all perfection. But, per contra, you must admit that, cold as she is, she does her duty.
How good she has been to her own brothers and sisters; how cheerfully she has given away her savings to them; how admiraably she has behaved to her mother, hiding the iniquities of that disreputable old schemer, and covering her improprieties with decent filial screens and pretexts. Her mother? Ah! grands dieux! You want to marry, Charles Batchelor, and you will have that greedy pauper for a mother-in-law; that fluffy Blue-coat boy, those hobnailed taw players, top spinners, taffy eaters, those underbred girls, for your brothers and sisters-in-law! They will be quartered upon you. You are so absurdly weak and good-natured—you know you are—that you will never be able to resist. Those boys will grow up; they will go out as clerks or shopboys, get into debt, and expect you to pay their bills; want to be articled to attorneys and so forth, and call upon you for the premium. Their mother will never be out of your house. She will ferret about in your drawers and wardrobes, filch your haberdashery, and cast greedy eyes on the very shirts and coats on your back, and calculate when she can get them for her boys. Those vulgar young miscreants will never fail to come and dine with you on Sunday. They will bring their young linen draper or articled friends. They will draw bills on you, or give their own to money lenders, and unless you take up those bills they will consider you a callous, avaricious brute, and the heartless author of their ruin. The girls will come and practice on your wife's piano. They won't come to you on Sundays only; they will always be staying in the house. They will always be preventing a tête-à-tête between your wife and you. As they grow old they will want her to take them out to tea parties, and to give such entertainments, where they will introduce their odious young men. They will expect you to commit meannesses in order to get theater tickets for them from the newspaper editors of your acquaintance. You will have to sit in the back seat; to pay the cab to and from the play; to see glances and bows of recognition passing between them and dubious bucks in the lobbies; and to lend the girls your wife's gloves, scarfs, ornaments, smelling bottles, and handkerchiefs, which of course they will never return. If Elizabeth is ailing from any circumstance they will get a footing in your house, and she will be jealous of them. The ladies of your own family will quarrel with them of course; and very likely your mother-in-law will tell them a piece of her mind. And you bring this dreary certainty upon you because, forsooth, you fall in love with a fine figure, a pair of gray eyes, and a head of auburn (not to say red) hair! O Charles Batchelor! in what a galley hast thou seated thyself, and what a family is crowded in thy boat!

All these thoughts are passing in my mind as good Mrs. Bonnington is prattling to me—I protest I don't know about what. I think I caught some faint sentences about the Patagonian mission, the national schools, and Mr. Bonnington's lumbago; but I can't say for certain. I was busy with my own thoughts. I had asked the awful question—I was not answered. Bessy had even gone away in a huff about my want of gallantry, but I was easy on that score. As for Mr. Drencher, she had told me her sentiments regarding him; 'and though I am considerably older, yet,' thought I, 'I need not be afraid of that rival. But when she says yes? Oh, dear! oh, dear! Yes means Elizabeth—certainly a brave young woman—but it means Mrs. Prior and Gus and Amelia Jane and the whole of that dismal family.' No wonder, with these dark thoughts crowding my mind, Mrs. Bonnington found me absent; and, as a comment upon some absurd reply of mine, said, 'La! Mr. Batchelor, you must be crossed in love!' Crossed in love! It might be as well for some folks if they were crossed in love. At my age, and having loved madly, as I did, that party in Dublin, a man doesn't take the second fit by any means so strongly. Well! well! the die was cast, and I was there to bide the hazard. What can be the matter? I look pale and unwell, and had better see Mr. D.? Thank you, my dear Mrs. Bonnington. I had a violent—a violent toothache last night—yes, toothache; and was kept awake, thank you. And there's nothing like having it out? and Mr. D. draws them beautifully, and has taken out six of your children's? It's better now; I dare say it will be better still soon. I retire to my chamber; I take a book—can't read one word of it. I resume my tragedy. Tragedy? Bosh!

I suppose Mr. Drencher thought his yesterday's patient would be better for a little more advice and medicine, for he must pay a second visit to Shrublands on this day, just after the row with the captain had taken place, and walked up to the upper regions, as his custom was. Very likely he found Mr. Clarence bathing his nose there, and prescribed for the injured organ. Certainly he knocked at the door of Miss Prior's schoolroom (the fellow was always finding a pretext for entering that apartment), and Master Bedford comes to me, with a woebegone, livid countenance, and a 'Ha! ha! young Sawbones is up with her!'

'So, my poor Dick,' I say, 'I heard your confession as I was myself running in to rescue Miss P. from that villain.'

'My blood was hup,' groans Dick,—'up, I beg your pardon. But when I saw that young rascal lay a hand on her I could not help flying at him. I would have hit him if he had been my own father. And I could not help saying what was on my mind. It would come out; I knew it would some day. I might as well wish for the moon as hope to get her. She thinks herself superior to me, and perhaps she is mistaken. But it's no use; she don't care for me; she don't care for anybody. Now the words are out, in course I mustn't stay here.

'You may get another place easily enough with your character, Bedford!'

But he shook his head. 'I'm not disposed to black nobody else's boots no more. I have another place. I have saved a bit of money. My poor old mother is gone, whom you used to be so kind to, Mr. B. I'm alone now. Confound that Sawbones, will he never come away? I'll tell you about my plans some day, sir, and I know you'll be so good as to help me.' And away goes Dick, looking the picture of woe and despair.

Presently, from the upper rooms, Sawbones descends. I happened to be standing in the hall, you see, talking to Dick. Mr. Drencher scowls at me fiercely, and I suppose I return him haughty glance for glance. He hated me: I him; I liked him to hate me.

'How is your patient, Mr.—a—Drencher?' I ask.

'Trifling contusion of the nose—brown paper and vinegar,' says the doctor.

'Great powers! did the villain strike her on the nose?' I cry in terror.

'Her—whom?' says he.

'Oh—ah—yes—indeed; it's nothing,' I say, smiling. The fact is I had forgotten about Baker in my natural anxiety for Elizabeth. 'I don't know what you mean by laughing, sir?' says the red-haired practitioner. 'But if you mean, Mr. Batchelor, let me tell you I don't want chaff, and I won't have chaff!' and herewith exit Sawbones, looking black doses at me.

Jealous of me, think I, as I sink down in a chair in the morning room, where the combat had just taken place. And so thou too art fever-caught, my poor physician! What a fascination this girl has! Here's the butler; here's the medical man; here am I; here is the captain has been smitten—smitten on the nose. Has the gardener been smitten too, and is the page gnawing his buttons off for jealousy, and is Monsieur Bulkeley equally in love with her? 'I take up a review, and think over this as I glance through its pages.

As I am lounging and reading, Monsieur Bulkeley himself makes his appearance, bearing in cloaks and packages belonging to his lady. 'Have the goodness to take that cap off,' I say coolly.
'You 'ave the goodness to remember that if hever I see you hout of this'ouse I'll punch your hugly'ead off,' says the monstrous menial. But I poise my paper cutter, and he retires growling.

From despondency I pass to hope; and the prospect of marriage, which before appeared so dark to me, assumes a gayer hue. I have four hundred a year, and that house in Devonshire Street, Bloomsbury Square, of which the upper part will be quite big enough for us. If we have children, there is Queen Square for them to walk and play in. Several genteel families I know, who still live in the neighborhood, will come and see my wife, and we shall have a comfortable, cozy little society, suited to our small means. The tradesmen in Lamb's Conduit Street are excellent, and the music at the Foundling always charming. I shall give up one of my clubs. The other is within an easy walk.

No; my wife's relations will not plague me. Bessy is a most sensible, determined woman, and as cool a hand as I know. She will only see Mrs. Prior at proper (and, I trust, distant) intervals. Her brothers and sisters will learn to know their places and not obtrude upon me or the company which I keep. My friends, who are educated people and gentlemen, will not object to visit me because I live over a shop (my ground floor and spacious back premises in Devonshire Street are let to a German toy warehouse). I shall add a hundred or two at least to my income by my literary labor; and Bessy, who has practiced frugality all her life, and been a good daughter and a good sister, I know will prove a good wife, and, please Heaven! a good mother. Why, four hundred a year, plus two hundred, is a nice little income. And my old college friend Wigmore, who is just on the bench? He will, he must get me a place—say three hundred a year. With nine hundred a year we can do quite well.

Love is full of elations and despondencies. The future, over which such a black cloud of doubt lowered a few minutes since, blushed a sweet rose color now. I saw myself happy, beloved, with a competence, and imagined myself reposing in the delightful garden of Red Lion Square on some summer evening, and half a dozen little Batchelors frisking over the flower-bespangled grass there.

After our little colloquy Mrs. Bonnington, not finding much pleasure in my sulkly society, had gone to Miss Prior's room with her young folks, and as the door of the morning room opened now and again, I could hear the dear young ones scuttling about the passages, where they were playing at horses and fighting and so forth. After a while good Mrs. B. came down from the schoolroom. ‘Whatever has happened, Mr. Batchelor?’ she said to me in her passage through the morning room. ‘Miss Prior is very pale and absent. You are very pale and absent. Have you been courting her, you naughty man, and trying to supplant Mr. Drencher?’ There, now, you turn as red as my ribbon! Ah! Bessy is a good girl, and so fond of my dear children. “Ah, dear Mrs. Bonnington,” she says to me—but of course you won’t tell Lady B. it would make Lady B. perfectly furious. “Ah!” says Miss P.; to me, “I wish, ma’am, that my little charges were like their dear little uncles and aunts—so exquisitely brought up!” Pop again wished to beat his uncle. I wish—I wish Frederick would send that child to school! Miss P. owns that he is too much for her. Come, children, it is time to go to dinner.’ And with more of this prattle, the good lady summons her young ones, who descend from the schoolroom with their nephew and niece.

Following nephew and niece comes demure Miss Prior, to whom I fling a knowing glance, which says plain as eyes can speak, Do Elizabeth, come and talk for a little to your faithful Batchelor! She gives a sidelong look of intelligence, leaves a parasol and a pair of gloves on a table, and accompanies Mrs. Bonnington and the young ones into the garden, sees the clergyman’s wife and children disappear through the garden gate, and her own youthful charges engaged in the strawberry beds, and, of course, returns to the morning room for her parasol and gloves, which she had forgotten. There is a calmness about that woman—an easy, dauntless dexterity, which frightens me—ma parole d’honneur. In that white breast is there a white marble stone in place of the ordinary cordial apparatus? Under the white velvet glove of that cool hand are there bones of cold steel?

‘So Drencher has again been here, Elizabeth?’ I say.

She shrugs her shoulders. ‘To see that wretched Captain Baker. The horrid little man will die! He was not actually sober just now when he—when I—when you saw him. How I wish you had come sooner—to prevent that horrible, tipsy, disreputable quarrel. It makes me very, very thoughtful, Mr. Batchelor. He will speak to his mother—to Mr. Lovel. I shall have to go away. I know I must.’

‘And don’t you know where you can find a home, Elizabeth? Have the words I spoke this morning been so soon forgotten?’

‘Oh, Mr. Batchelor! you spoke in a heat. You could not think seriously of a poor girl like me, so friendless and poor, with so many family ties. Pop is looking this way, please. To a man bred like you, what can I be?

'You may make the rest of my life happy, Elizabeth!' I cry. 'We are friends of such old—old date that you know what my disposition is.'

'Oh, indeed!' says she, 'it is certain that there never was a sweeter disposition or a more gentle creature.' (Somehow I thought she said the words 'gentle creature' with rather a sarcastic tone of voice.) 'But consider your habits, dear sir. I remember how in Beak Street you used to be always giving, and in spite of your income, always poor. You love ease and elegance; and having, I dare say, not too much for yourself now, would you encumber yourself with—with me and the expenses of a household? I shall always regard you, esteem you, love you as the best friend I ever had, and—voici venir la mère du vaurien.'

Enter Lady Baker. 'Do I interrupt a tête-à-tête, pray?' she asks.

'My benefactor has known me since I was a child, and befriended me since then,' says Elizabeth, with simple kindness beaming in her look. 'We were just speaking—I was just—ah! telling him that my uncle has invited me most kindly to St. Boniface, whenever I can be spared; and if you and the family go to the Isle of Wight this autumn, perhaps you will intercede with Mr. Lovel, and let me have a little holiday. Mary will take every charge of the children, and I do so long to see my dear aunt and cousins! And I was begging Mr. Batchelor to use his interest with you, and to entreat you to use your interest to get me leave. That was what our talk was about.'

The deuce it was! I couldn't say No, of course; but I protest I had no idea until that moment that our conversation had been about aunt and uncle at St. Boniface. Again came the horrible suspicion, the dreadful doubt—the chill as of a cold serpent crawling down my back—which had made me pause and gasp and turn pale anon when Bessy and Captain Clarence were holding colloquy together. What has happened in this woman's life? Do I know all about her, or anything? or only just as much as she chooses? O Batch—Batch! I suspect you are no better than an old gaby!

'And Mr. Drencher has just been here and seen your son,' Bessy continues softly; 'and he begs and entreats your ladyship to order Captain Baker to be more prudent. Mr. D. says Captain Baker is shortening his life, indeed he is, by his carelessness.'

There is Mr. Lovel coming from the city, and the children are running to their papa! And Miss Prior makes her patroness a meek courtesy, and demurely slides away from the room. With a sick heart I say to myself, 'She has been—yes—humbugging is the word—humbugging Lady B. Elizabeth! Elizabeth! can it be possible thou art humbugging me too?'

Before Lovel enters Bedford rapidly flits through the room. He looks as a ghost. His face is awful gloomy.

'Here's the governor come,' Dick whispersto me. 'It mustall come hout now—out, I beg your pardon. So she's caught you, has she? I thought she would.' And he grins a ghastly grin.

'What do you mean?' I ask, and I dare say turn rather red.

'I know all about it. I'll speak to you to-night, sir. Confound her! confound her!' and he doubles his knuckles into his eyes, and rushes out of the room over Buttons entering with the afternoon tea.

'What on earth's the matter, and why are you knocking the things about!' Lovel asks at dinner of his butler, who, indeed, acted as one distraught. A savage gloom was depicted on Bedford's usually melancholy countenance, and the blunders in his service were many. With his brother-in-law Lovel did not exchange many words. Clarence was not yet forgiven for his escapade two days previous. And when Lady Baker cried, 'Mercy, child! what have you done to yourself?' and the captain replied, 'Knocked my face against a dark door—made my nose bleed,' Lovel did not look up or express a word of sympathy. 'If the fellow knocked his worthless head off, I should not be sorry,' the widower murmured to me. Indeed, the tone of the captain's voice, his ton, and his manners in general, were specially odious to Mr. Lovel, who could put up with the tyranny of women, but revolted against the vulgarity and assumption of certain men.

As yet nothing had been said about the morning's quarrel. Here we were all sitting with a sword hanging over our heads, smiling and chatting, and talking cookery, politics, the weather, and what not. Bessy was perfectly cool and dignified at tea. Danger or doubt did not seem to affect her. If she had been ordered for execution at the end of the evening she would have made the tea, played her Beethoven, answered questions in her usual voice, and glided about from one to another with her usual dignified calm until the hour of decapitation came, when she would have made her courtesy, and gone out and had the amputation performed quite quietly and neatly. I admired her. I was frightened before her. The cold snake crept more than ever down my back as I meditated on her. I made such awful blunders at whist that even good Mrs. Bonnington lost her temper with her fourteen shillings. Miss Prior would have played her hand out, and never made a fault, you may be sure. She retired at her accustomed hour. Mrs. Bonnington had her glass of negus, and withdrew too. Lovel keeping his eyes sternly on the captain, that officer could only get a little sherry and seltzer, and went to bed sober. Lady Baker folded Lovel in her arms, a process to which my poor friend very humbly submitted. Everybody went to bed, and no tales were told of the morning's doings. There was a respite, and no execution could take place till to-morrow at any rate. Put on thy night-cap, Damocles, and slumber for to-night at least. Thy slumbers will not be cut short by the awful Chopper of Fate.

Perhaps you may ask what need had I to be alarmed? Nothing could happen to me. I was not going to lose a governess' place. Well, if I must tell the truth, I had not acted with entire candor in the matter of Bessy's appointment. In recommending her to Lovel and the late Mrs. L., I had answered for her probity, and so forth, with all my might. I had described the respectability of her family, her father's campaigns, her grandfather's (old Dr. Sargent's) celebrated sermons; and had enlarged with the utmost eloquence upon the learning and high character of her uncle, the Master of Boniface, and the deserved regard he bore his niece. But that part of Bessy's biography which related to the academy I own I had not touched upon. À quoi bon? Would every gentleman or lady like to have everything told about him or her? I had kept the academy dark then; and so had brave Dick Bedford the butler; and should that miscreant captain reveal the secret, I knew there would be an awful commotion in the building. I should have to incur Lovel's not unjust reproaches for supressò verî, and the anger of those two viraginae, the grandmothers of Lovel's children. I was more afraid of the women than of him, though conscience whispered me that I had not acted quite rightly by my friend.

When, then, the bed candles were lighted, and everyone said good-night, 'Oh! Captain Baker,' said I gayly, and putting on a confoundedly hypocritical grin, 'if you will come into my room, I will give you that book.'

'The book we were talking of this morning.'

'Hang me, if I know what you mean,' says he. And luckily for me, Lovel, giving a shrug of disgust, and a good-night to me, stalked out of the room, bed candle in hand. No doubt he thought his wretch of a brother-in-law did not well remember after dinner what he had done or said in the morning.

As I now had the Blacksheep to myself, I said calmly, 'You are quite right. There was no talk about a book at all, Captain Baker. But I wished to see you alone, and impress upon you my earnest wish that everything which occurred this morning—mind, everything—should be considered as strictly private, and should be confided to no person whatever—you understand?—to no person?'

'Confound me,' Baker breaks out, 'if I understand what you mean by your books and your "strictly private." I shall speak what I choose—hang me!'

'In that case, sir,' I said, 'will you have the goodness to send a friend of yours to my friend Captain Fitzboodle? I must consider the matter as personal between ourselves. You insulted—and, as I find now, for the second time—a lady whose relations to me you know. You have given neither to her nor to me the apology to which we are both entitled. You refuse even to promise to be silent regarding a painful scene which was occasioned by your own brutal and cowardly behavior; and you must abide by the consequences, sir! you must abide by the consequences!' And I glared at him over my flat candlestick.

'Curse me!—and hang me!—and,' etc., etc., etc., he says, 'if I know what all this is about. What the dooce do you talk to me about books and about silence and apologies and sending Captain Fitzboodle to me? I don't want to see Captain Fitzboodle—great fat brute! I know him perfectly well.'

'Hush!' say I, 'here's Bedford.' In fact, Dick appeared at this juncture, to close the house and put the lamps out.

But Captain Clarence only spoke or screamed louder. 'What do I care about who hears me? That fellow insulted me already to-day, and I'd have pitched his life out of him only I was down, and I'm so confounded weak and nervous, and just out of my fever—and—and hang it all! what are you driving at, Mr. What's-your-name?' And the wretched little creature cries almost as he speaks.

'Once for all, will you agree that the affair about which we spoke shall go no further?' I say as stern as Draco.

'I shan't say anythin' about it. I wish you'd leave me alone, you fellows, and not come botherin'. I wish I could get a glass of brandy and water up in my bedroom. I tell you I can't sleep without it,' whimper's the wretch.

'Sorry I laid hands on you, sir,' says Bedford sadly. 'It wasn't worth the while. Go to bed, and I'll get you something warm.'
'Will you, though? I couldn't sleep without it. Do now—do now! and I won't say anythin'—I won't, now—on the honor of a gentleman, I won't. Good-night, Mr. What-d'ye-call.' And Bedford leads the helot to his chamber.

'I've got him in bed, and I've given him a dose; and I put some laudanum in it. He aint been out. He has not had much to-day,' says Bedford, coming back to my room, with his face ominously pale.

'You have given him laudanum?' I ask.

'Sawbones gave him some yesterday—told me to give him a little—forty drops,' growls Bedford.

Then the gloomy major-domo puts a hund into each waistcoat pocket, and looks at me. 'You want to fight for her, do you, sir? Calling out, and that sort of game? Pooh!' and he laughs scornfully.

'The little miscreant is too despicable, I own,' say I, 'and it's absurd for a peaceful fellow like me to talk about powder and shot at this time of day. But what could I do?'

'I say it's she aint worth it,' says Bedford, lifting up both clenched fists out of the waistcoat pockets.

'What do you mean, Dick?' I ask.

'She's humbugging you—she's humbugging me—she's humbugging everybody,' roars Dick. 'Look here, sir!' and out of one of the clenched fists he flings a paper down on the table.

'What is it?' I ask. It's her handwriting. I see the neat trim lines on the paper.

'It's not to you; nor yet to me,' says Bedford.

'Then how dare you read it, sir?' I ask, all of a tremble.

'It's to him. It's to Sawbones,' hisses out Bedford. 'Sawbones dropt it as he was getting into his gig; and I read it. I aint going to make no bones about whether it's wrote to me or not. She tells him how you asked her to marry you.

[Ha!] That's how I came to know it. And do you know what she calls you, and what he calls you—that easter hoil beast? And do you know what she says of you? That you hadn't pluck to stand by her to-day. There—it's all down under her hand and seal. You may read it or not, if you like. And if poppy or mandragora will medicine you to sleep afterward, I just recommend you to take it. I shall go and get a drop of the captain's bottle—I shall.'

And he leaves me, and the fatal paper on the table.

Now, suppose you had been in my case—would you or would you not have read the paper? Suppose there is some news—bad news—about the woman you love, will you or will you not hear it? Was Othello a rogue because he let Iago speak to him? There was the paper. It lay there glimmering under the light, with all the house quiet.

CHAPTER VI.

CECILIA'S SUCCESSOR.

Monsieur et honoré lecteur! I see, as perfectly as if you were sitting opposite to me, the scorn depicted on your noble countenance when you read my confession that I, Charles Batchelor, Esquire, did burglariously enter the premises of Edward Drencher, Esquire, M. R. C. S. I. (phew! the odious pestle-grinder, I never could bear him!), and break open and read a certain letter, his property. I may have been wrong, but I am candid. I tell my misdeeds; some fellows hold their tongues. Besides, my good man, consider the temptation, and the horrid insight into the paper which Bedford's report had already given me. Would you like to be told that the girl of your heart was playing fast and loose with it, had none of her own, or had given hers to another? I don't want to make a Mrs. Robin Gray of any woman, and merely because 'her mither presses her sair' to marry against her will. 'If Miss Prior,' thought I, 'prefers this lint-scraper to me, ought I to balk her? He is younger, and stronger, certainly, than myself. Some people may consider him handsome. (By the way, what a remarkable thing it is about many women that, in affairs of the heart, they don't seem to care or understand whether a man is a gentleman or not.) It may be it is my superior fortune and social station which may induce Elizabeth to waver in her choice between me and my bleeding, bolusing, tooth-drawing rival. If so, and I am only taken from mercenary considerations, what a pretty chance of subsequent happiness do either of us stand! Take the vaccinator, girl, if thou preferrest him! I know what it is to be crossed in love already. It's hard, but I can bear it! I ought to know, I must know, I will know what is in that paper!' So saying, as I pace round and round the table where the letter lies flickering white under the midnight taper, I stretch out my hand—I seize the paper—I—well, I own it—there—yes—I took it, and I read it.

Or rather, I may say, I read that part of it which the bleeder and blisterer had flung down. It was but a fragment of a letter—a fragment—oh! how bitter to swallow! A lump of Epsom salt could not have been more disgusting. It appeared (from Bedford's statement) that Æsculapius, on getting into his gig, had allowed this scrap of paper to whisk out of his pocket—the rest he read, no doubt, under the eyes of the writer. Very likely, during the perusal, he had taken and squeezed the false hand which wrote the lines. Very likely the first part of the precious document contained compliments to him—from the horrible context I judge so—compliments to that vendor of leeches and bandages, into whose heart I dare say I wished ten thousand lancets might be stuck, as I perused the False One's wheeling address to him! So ran the document. How well every word of it was engraved on my anguished heart! If page three, which I supposed was about the bit of the letter which I got, was as it was—what must pages one and two have been? The dreadful document began, then, thus:

— dear hair in the locket, which I shall ever wear for the sake of him who gave it (dear hair! indeed—distressing carrots! She should have been ashamed to call it 'dear hair')—for the sake of him who gave it, and whose bad temper I shall pardon, because I think in spite of his faults he is a little fond of his poor Lizzie! Ah, Edward! how could you go on so long the last time about poor Mr. B.? Can you imagine that I can ever have more than a filial regard for the kind old gentleman? [Il était question de moi, ma parole d'honneur. I was the kind old gentleman!] I have known him since my childhood. He was intimate in our family in earlier and happier days; made our house his home; and, I must say, was most kind to all of us children. If he has vanities, you naughty boy, is he the only one of his sex who is vain? Can you fancy that such an old creature (an old muff, as you call him, you wicked, satirical man!) could ever make an impression on my heart? No, sir! [Aha! So I was an old muff, was I?] Though I don't wish to make you vain too, or that other people should laugh at you, as you do at poor dear Mr. B., I think, sir, you need but look in your glass to see that you need not be afraid of such a rival as that. You fancy he is attentive to me? If you looked only a little angrily at him, he would fly back to London. To-day, when your horrid little patient did presume to offer to take my hand, when I boxed his little wicked ears and sent him spinning to the end of the room—poor Mr. Batch was so frightened that he did not dare to come into the room, and I saw him peeping behind a statue on the lawn, and he would not come in until the servants arrived. Poor man! We cannot all of us have courage like a certain Edward, who I know is as bold as a lion. Poor sir, you must not be quarrelling with that wretched little captain for being rude. I have shown him that I can very well take care of myself. I knew the odious thing the first moment I set eyes on him, though he had forgotten me. Years ago I met him, and I remember he was equally rude and tips—

Here the letter was torn. Beyond 'tips' it did not go. But that was enough, wasn't it? To this woman I had offered a gentle and manly, I may say a kind and tender, heart—I had offered four hundred a year in funded property, besides my house in Devonshire Street, Bloomsbury—and she preferred Edward, forsooth, at the sign of the gallipot; and may ten thousand pestles smash my brains!

You may fancy what a night I had after reading that scrap. I promise you I did not sleep much. I heard the hours toll as I kept vigil. I lay amid shattered capitals, broken shafts of the tumbled palace which I had built in imagination—oh! how bright and stately! I sat among the ruins of my own happiness, surrounded by the murdered corpses of innocentvisioned domestic joys. Tick—tack! Moment after moment I heard on the clock the clinking footsteps of wakeful grief. I fell into a doze toward morning and dreamed that I was dancing with Glorvina, when I woke with a start, finding Bedford arrived with my shaving water and opening the shutters. When he saw my haggard face he wagged his head.
LOVEL THE WIDOWER.

'You have read it, I see, sir,' says he.

'Yes, Dick,' groaned I out of bed, 'I have swallowed it.' And I laughed I may say a fiendish laugh. 'And now I have taken it, not poppy nor mandragora, nor all the drowsy syrups in his shop (hang him), will be able to medicine me to sleep for some time to come!'

'She has no heart, sir. I don't think she cares for t'other chap much,' groans the gloomy butler. 'She can't after having known us'—and my companion in grief, laying down my hot-water jug, retreats.

I did not cut any part of myself with my razor. I shaved quite calmly. I went to the family at breakfast. My impression is I was sarcastic and witty. I smiled most kindly at Miss Prior when she came in. Nobody could have seen from my outward behavior that anything was wrong within. I was an apple. Could you inspect the worm at my core? No, no. Somebody, I think old Baker, complimented me on my good looks. I was a smiling lake. Could you see on my placid surface, among my sheeny water lilies, that a corpse was lying under my cool depths? 'A bit of deviled chicken?' 'No, thank you. By the way, Lovel, I think I must go to town to-day.' 'You'll come back to dinner, of course?' 'Well—no.' 'Oh, stuff! You promised me to-day and to-morrow. Robinson, Brown, and Jones are coming to-morrow, and you must be here to meet them.' Thus we prattle on. I answer, I smile, I say, 'Yes, if you please, another cup,' or, 'Be so good as to hand the muffins,' or what not. But I am dead. I feel as if I am underground and buried. Life and tea and clatter and muffins are going on, of course; and daisies spring, and the sun shines on the grass while I am under it. Ah, dear me! it's very cruel; it's very, very lonely; it's very odd! I don't belong to the world any more. I have done with it. I am shelved away. But my spirit returns and flutters through the world, which it has no longer anything to do with; and my ghost, as it were, comes and smiles at my own tombstone. Here lies Charles Batchelor, the Unloved One. Oh! alone, alone, alone! Why, Fate! didst thou ordain that I should be companionless? Tell me where the Wandering Jew is, that I may go and sit with him. Is there any place at a lighthouse vacant? Who knows where is the Island of Juan Fernandez? Engage me a ship and take me there at once. Mr. R. Crusoe, I think? My dear Robinson, have the kindness to hand me over your goatskin cap, breeches, and umbrella. Go home and leave me here. Would you know who is the solitariest man on earth? That man am I. Was that cutlet which I ate at breakfast anon, was that lamb which frisked on the mead last week (beyond yon wall where the unconscious cucumber lay basking which was to form his sauce)—I say, was that lamb made so tender that I might eat him? And my heart, then? Poor heart! wert thou so softly constituted only that women might stab thee? So I am a Muff, am I? And she will always wear a lock of his 'dear hair,' will she? Ha! ha! The men on the omnibus looked askance as they saw me laugh. They thought it was from Hanwell, not Putney, I was escaping. Escape? Who can escape? I went into London. I went to the clubs. Jawkins, of course, was there; and my impression is that he talked as usual. I took another omnibus and went back to Putney. 'I will go back and revisit my grave,' I thought. It is said that ghosts loiter about their former haunts a good deal when they are first dead; flit wistfully among their old friends and companions, and, I dare say, expect to hear a plenty of conversation and friendly tearful remark about themselves. But suppose they return and find nobody talking of them at all? Or suppose Hamlet (Père and Royal Dane) comes back and finds Claudius and Gertrude very comfortable over a piece of cold meat, or what not? Is the late gentleman's present position as a ghost a very pleasant one? Crow, Cocks! Quick, Sundawn! Open, Trapdoor! Allons: it's best to pop underground again. So I am a Muff, am I? What a curious thing that walk up the hill to the house was! What a different place Shrublands was yesterday to what it is to-day! Has the sun lost its light, and the flowers their bloom, and the joke its sparkle, and the dish its savor? Why, bless my soul! what is Lizzy herself—only an ordinary woman—freckled certainly—incurrigibly dull, and without a scintillation of humor; and you mean to say, Charles Batchelor, that your heart once beat about that woman? Under the intercepted letter of that cold assassin my heart had fallen down dead, irretrievably dead. I remember, à propos of the occasion of my first death, that perpetrated by Glorvina—on my second visit to Dublin—with what a strange sensation I walked under some trees in the Phœnix Park, beneath which it had been my custom to meet my False One Number 1. There were the trees—there were the birds singing—there was the bench on which we used to sit—the same, but how different! The trees had a different foliage, exquisite amaranthine; the birds sang a song paradisiacal; the bench was a bank of roses and fresh flowers, which young Love twined in fragrant chaplets around the statue of Glorvina. Roses and fresh flowers? Rheumatism and flannel waistcoats, you silly old man! Foliage and Song? Oh, namby-pamby drivel! A statue? A doll, thou twaddling old dullard!—a doll with carmine cheeks, and a heart stuffed with bran—I say, on the night preceding that ride to and from Putney, I had undergone death—in that omnibus I had been carried over to t'other side of the Stygian shore. I returned but as a passionless ghost, remembering my life days, but not feeling any more. Love was dead, Elizabeth! Why, the doctor came, and partedook freely of lunch, and I was not angry. Yesterday I called him names, and hated him, and was jealous of him. To-day I felt no rivalship, and no envy at his success, and no desire to supplant him. No—I swear—not the slightest wish to make Elizabeth mine if she would. I might have cared for her yesterday—yesterday I had a heart. Psha! my good sir or madam. You sit by me at dinner. Perhaps you are handsome and use your eyes. Ogle away. Don’t balk yourself, pray. But if you fancy I care a threepenny piece about you—or for your eyes—or for your bonny brown hair—or for your sentimental remarks, sidelong warbled—or for your praise to (not of) my face—or for your satire behind my back—ah me! how mistaken you are! Peine perdue ma chère dame! The digestive organs are still in good working order—but the heart? Caret.

I was perfectly civil to Mr. Drencher, and indeed wonder to think how in my irritation I had allowed myself to apply (mentally) any sort of disagreeable phrases to a most excellent and deserving and good-looking young man, who is beloved by the poor, and has won the just confidence of an extensive circle of patients. I made no sort of remark to Miss Prior, except about the weather and the flowers in the garden. I was bland, easy, rather pleasant, not too high-spirited, you understand. No; I vow you could not have seen a nerve wince, or the slightest alteration in my demeanor. I helped the two old dowagers; I listened to their twaddle; I gayly wiped up with my napkin three-quarters of a glass of sherry which Popham flung over my trousers. I would defy you to know that I had gone through the ticklish operation of an excision of the heart.
a few hours previously. Heart—pooh! I saw Miss Prior's lip quiver. Without a word between us, she knew perfectly well that all was over as regarded her late humble servant. She winced once or twice. While Drencher was busy with his plate, the gray eyes cast toward me interjectional looks of puzzled entreaty. She, I say, winced; and I give you my word I did not care a fig whether she was sorry or pleased or happy or going to be hung. And I can't give a better proof of my utter indifference about the matter than the fact that I wrote two or three copies of verses descriptive of my despair. They appeared, you may perhaps remember, in one of the annuals of those days, and were generally attributed to one of the most sentimental of our young poets. I remember the reviews said they were 'replete with emotion,' 'full of passionate and earnest feeling,' and so forth. Feeling, indeed!—ha! ha! 'Passionate outbursts of a grief-stricken heart!' Passionate scrapings of a fiddlestick, my good friend. 'Lonely' of course rhymes with 'only,' and 'gushes' with 'blushes,' and 'despair' with 'hair,' and so on. Despair is perfectly compatible with a good dinner, I promise you. Hair is false: hearts are false. Grapes may be sour, but claret is good, my master. Do you suppose I am going to cry my eyes out because Chloe's are turned upon Strephon? If you find any whimpering in mine, may they never wink at a bee's wing again.

When the doctor rose presently, saying he would go and see the gardener's child, who was ill, and casting longing looks at Miss Prior, I assure you I did not feel a tittle of jealousy though Miss Bessy actually followed Mr. Drencher on to the lawn, under the pretext of calling back Miss Cissy, who had run thither without her bonnet.

'Now, Lady Baker, which was right? you or I?' asks bonny Mrs. Bonnington, wagging her head toward the lawn where this couple of innocents were disporting.

'You thought there was an affair between Miss Prior and the medical gentleman,' I say, smiling. 'It was no secret, Mrs. Bonnington.'

'Yes, but there were others who were a little smitten in that quarter too,' says Lady Baker; and she in turn wags her old head toward me.

'You mean me?' I answer, as innocent as a newborn babe. 'I am a burnt child, Lady Baker; I have been at the fire, and am already thoroughly done, thank you. One of your charming sex jilted me some years ago; and once is quite enough, I am much obliged to you.'
This I said, not because it was true—in fact, it was the reverse of truth—but if I choose to lie about my own affairs, pray, why not? And though a strictly truth-telling man generally, when I do lie I promise you I do it boldly and well.

‘If, as I gather from Mrs. Bonnington, Mr. Drencher and Miss Prior like each other, I wish my old friend joy. I wish Mr. Drencher joy with all my heart. The match seems to me excellent. He is a deserving, a clever, and a handsome young fellow; and I am sure, ladies, you can bear witness to her goodness after all you have known of her.’

‘My dear Batchelor,’ says Mrs. Bonnington, still smiling and winking, ‘I don’t believe one single word you say—not one single word!’ and she looks infinitely pleased as she speaks.

‘Oh!’ cries Lady Baker, ‘my good Mrs. Bonnington, you are always matchmaking—don’t contradict me. You know you thought—’

‘Oh, please don’t,’ cries Mrs. B.

‘I will. She thought, Mr. Batchelor, she actually thought that our son, that my Cecilia’s husband, was smitten by the governess. I should like to have seen him dare!’ and her flashing eyes turn toward the late Mrs. Lovel’s portrait, with its faded simper leering over the harp. ‘The idea that any woman could succeed that angel, indeed!’

‘Indeed, I don’t envy her,’ I said.

‘You don’t mean, Batchelor, that my Frederick would not make any woman happy?’ cries the Bonnington. ‘He is only seven-and-thirty, very young for his age, and the most affectionate of creatures. I am surprised, and it’s most cruel, and most unkind of you to say that you don’t envy any woman that marries my boy!’

‘My dear good Mrs. Bonnington, you quite misapprehend me,’ I remark.

‘Why, when his late wife was alive,’ goes on Mrs. B., sobbing, ‘you know with what admirable sweetness and gentleness he bore her—her—bad temper—excuse me, Lady Baker.’

‘Oh, pray, abuse my departed angel!’ cries the Baker; ‘say that your son should marry and forget her—say that those darlings should be made to forget their mother. She was a woman of birth, and a woman of breeding, and a woman of family, and the Bakers came in with the Conqueror, Mrs. Bonnington—’

‘I think I heard of one in the court of Pharaoh,’ I interposed.

‘And to say that a Baker is not worthy of a Lovel is pretty news indeed! Do you hear that, Clarence?’
'Hear what, ma'am?' says Clarence, who enters at this juncture. 'You're speakin' loud enough—though blesht if I hear two sh-shyllables.'

'You wretched boy, you have been smoking!'

'Smoking—haven't I?' says Clarence, with a laugh; 'and I've been at the Five Bells, and I've been having a game of billiards with an old friend of mine,' and he lurches toward a decanter.

'Ah, don't drink any more, my child!' cries the mother.

'I'm as sober as a judge, I tell you. You leave so precious little in the bottle at dinner that I must get it when I can, mustn't I, Batchelor, old boy? We had a row yesterday, hadn't we? No, it was sugar baker. I'm not angry—you're not angry. Bear no malish. Here's your health, old boy!'

The unhappy gentleman drank his bumper of sherry, and, tossing his hair off his head, said, 'Where's the governess—where's Bessy Bellenden? Who's that kickin' me under the table, I say?'

'Where is who?' asks his mother.

'Bessy Bellenden—the governess—that's her real name. Known her these ten years. Ushed to dansh at Prinsh's Theater. Remember her in the corps-de-ballet. Ushed to go behind the shenes. Dooshid pretty girl!' maunders out the tipsy youth; and as the unconscious subject of his mischievous talk enters the room, again he cries out, 'Come and sit by me, Bessy Bellenden, I say!'

The matrons rose with looks of horror in their faces. 'A ballet dancer!' cries Mrs. Bonnington. 'A ballet dancer!' echoes Lady Baker. 'Young woman, is this true?'

'The Bulbul and the Roshe—hey?' laughs the captain. 'Don't you remember you and Fosbery in blue and shpangles? Always all right, though, Bellenden was. Fosbery wasn't, but Bellenden was. Give you every credit for that, Bellenden. Boxsh my earsh. Bear no malish—no—no—malish! Get some more sherry, you—whats your name—Bedford, butler—and I'll pay you the money I owe you.' And he laughs his wild laugh, utterly unconscious of the effect he is producing. Bedford stands staring at him as pale as death. Poor Miss Prior is as white as marble. Wrath, terror, and wonder are in the countenances of the dowagers. It is an awful scene!

'Mr. Batchelor knows that it was to help my family I did it,' says the poor governess.

'Yes, by George! and nobody can say a word against her,' bursts in Dick Bedford, with a sob; 'and she is as honest as any woman here.'
'Pray, who told you to put your roar in?' cries the tipsy captain.

'And you knew that this person was on the stage, and you introduced her into my son's family? Oh, Mr. Batchelor, Mr. Batchelor, I didn't think it of you! Don't speak to me, miss,' cries the flurried Bonnington.

'You brought this woman to the children of my adored Cecilia?' calls out the other dowager. 'Serpent, leave the room! Pack your trunks, viper! and quit the house this instant. Don't touch her, Cissy. Come to me, my blessing. Go away, you horrid wretch!'

'She ain't a horrid wretch; and when I was ill she was very good to us,' breaks in Pop, with a roar of tears; 'and you shan't go, Miss Prior—my dear, pretty Miss Prior. You shan't go!' and the child rushes up to the governess and covers her neck with tears and kisses.

'Leave her, Popham, my darling blessing—leave that woman!' cries Lady Baker.

'I won't, you old beast!—and she sha-a-an't go. And I wish you was dead—and, my dear, you shan't go, and pa shan't let you!' shouts the boy.

'O Popham, if Miss Prior has been naughty, Miss Prior must go!' says Cecilia, tossing up her head.

'Spoken like my daughter's child!' cries Lady Baker; and little Cissy, having flung her little stone, looks as if she had performed a very virtuous action.

'God bless you, Master Pop—you are a trump, you are!' says Mr. Bedford.

'Yes, that I am, Bedford; and she shan't go, shall she?' cries the boy.

But Bessy stooped down sadly and kissed him. 'Yes, I must, dear,' she said.

'Don't touch him! Come away, sir! Come away from her this moment!' shrieked the two mothers.

'I nursed him through the scarlet fever when his own mother would not come near him,' says Elizabeth gently.

'I'm blest if she didn't,' sobs Bedford; 'and—bub—bub—bless you, Master Pop!'

'That child is wicked enough and headstrong enough and rude enough already!' exclaims Lady Baker. 'I desire, young woman, you will not pollute him further!'

'That's a hard word to say to an honest woman, ma'am,' says Bedford.

'Pray, miss, are you engaged to the butler too?' hisses out the dowager.
‘There’s very little the matter with Barnet’s child—only teeth. . . What on earth has happened? My dear Lizzy—my dear Miss Prior—what is it?’ cries the doctor, who enters from the garden at this juncture.

‘Nothing has happened, only this young woman has appeared in a new character,’ says Lady Baker. ‘My son has just informed us that Miss Prior danced upon the stage, Mr. Drencher; and if you think such a person is a fit companion for your mother and sisters, who attend a place of Christian worship, I believe—I wish you joy.’

‘Is this—is this—true?’ asks the doctor, with a look of bewilderment.

‘Yes, it is true,’ sighs the girl.

‘And you never told me, Elizabeth?’ groans the doctor.

‘She’s as honest as any woman here,’ calls out Bedford.

‘She gave all the money to her family.’

‘It wasn’t fair not to tell me. It wasn’t fair,’ sobs the doctor. And he gives her a ghastly parting look, and turns his back.

‘I say, you—hi! What-d’ye-call’im! Sawbones!’ shrieks out Captain Clarence. ‘Come back, I say. She’s all right, I say. Upon my honor, now, she’s all right.’

‘Miss P. shouldn’t have kept this from me. My mother and sisters are Dissenters, and very strict. I couldn’t ask a party into my family who has been—who has been—I wish you good-morning,’ says the doctor, and stalks away.

‘And now will you please to get your things ready and go too!’ continues Lady Baker. ‘My dear Mrs. Bonnington, you think—’

‘Certainly, certainly, she must go!’ cries Mrs. Bonnington.

‘Don’t go till Lovel comes home, miss. These aint your mistresses. Lady Baker don’t pay your salary. If you go, I go too. There!’ calls out Bedford, and mumbles something in her ear about ‘the end of the world.’

‘You go too, and a good riddance, you insolent brute!’ exclaims the dowager.

‘Oh, Captain Clarence! you have made a pretty morning’s work,’ I say.

‘I don’t know what the dooce all the sherry—all the shinty’s about,’ says the captain, playing with the empty decanter. ‘Gal’s a very good gal—pretty gal. If she choosesh dansh shport her family, why the doosh shouldn’t she dansh shport a family?’

‘That is exactly what I recommend this person to do,’ says Lady Baker, tossing up her head. ‘And now I will thank you to leave the room. Do you hear?’
As poor Elizabeth obeyed this order, Bedford darted after her; and I know ere she had gone five steps he had offered her his savings and everything he had. She might have had mine yesterday. But she had deceived me. She had played fast and loose with me. She had misled me about this doctor. I could trust her no more. My love of yesterday was dead, I say. That vase was broken which never could be mended. She knew all was over between us. She did not once look at me as she left the room.

The two dowagers—one of them, I think, a little alarmed at her victory—left the house, and for once went away in the same barouche. The young maniac who had been the cause of the mischief staggered away, I know not whither.

About four o'clock poor little Pinhorn, the children's maid, came to me, well nigh choked with tears, as she handed me a letter. 'She's goin' away—and she saved both them children's lives, she did. And she've wrote to you, sir. And Bedford's a-goin'. And I'll give warnin', I will, too!'. And the weeping handmaiden retires, leaving me, perhaps somewhat frightened, with the letter in my hand.

Dear Sir [she said]: I may write you a line of thanks and farewell. I shall go to my mother. I shall soon find another place. Poor Bedford, who has a generous heart, told me that he had given you a letter of mine to Mr. D. I saw this morning that you knew everything. I can only say now that for all your long kindnesses and friendship to my family I am always your sincere and grateful.

E. P.

Yes; that was all. I think she was grateful. But she had not been candid with me, nor with the poor surgeon. I had no anger; far from it; a great deal of regard and good will, nay, admiration, for the intrepid girl, who had played a long, hard part very cheerfully and bravely. But my foolish little flicker of love had blazed up and gone out in a day; I knew that she never could care for me. In that dismal, wakeful night, after reading the letter, I had thought her character and story over, and seen to what a life of artifice and dissimulation necessity had compelled her. I did not blame her. In such circumstances, with such a family, how could she be frank and open? Poor thing! poor thing! Do we know anybody? Ah! dear me, we are most of us very lonely in the world. You who have any who love you, cling to them and thank God. I went into the hall toward evening: her poor trunks and packages were there, and the little nursery maid weeping over them. The sight unmanned me; and I believe I cried myself. Poor Elizabeth! And with these small chests you recommence your life's lonely voyage! I gave the girl a couple of sovereigns. She sobbed a God bless me! and burst out crying more desperately than ever. Thou hast a kind heart, little Pinhorn!
‘“Miss Prior—to be called for.” Whose trunks are these?’ says Lovel, coming from the city. The dowagers drove up at the same moment.

‘Didn’t you see us from the omnibus, Frederick?’ cries her ladyship coaxingly. ‘We followed behind you all the way!’

‘We were in the barouche, my dear,’ remarks Mrs. Bonnington rather nervously.

‘Whose trunks are these?—what’s the matter?—and what’s the girl crying for?’ asks Lovel.

‘Miss Prior is a-going away,’ sob’s Pinhorn.

‘Miss Prior going? Is this your doing, my Lady Baker—or yours, mother?’ the master of the house says sternly.

‘She is going, my love, because she cannot stay in this family,’ says mamma.

‘That woman is no fit companion for my angel’s children, Frederick!’ cries Lady B.

‘That person has deceived us all, my love!’ says mamma.

‘Deceived—how? Deceived whom?’ continues Mr. Lovel, more and more hotly.

‘Clarence, love! come down, dear. Tell Mr. Lovel everything. Come down and tell him this moment,’ cries Lady Baker to her son, who at this moment appears on the corridor which was round the hall.

‘What’s the row now, pray?’ And Captain Clarence descends, breaking his shins over poor Elizabeth’s trunks, and calling down on them his usual maledictions.

‘Tell Mr. Lovel where you saw that—that person, Clarence! Now, sir, listen to my Cecilia’s brother!’

‘Saw her—saw her in blue and spangles, in the “Rose and the Bulbul,” at the Prince’s Theater—and a doosid nice looking girl she was too!’ says the captain.

‘There, sir!’

‘There, Frederick!’ cry the matrons in a breath.

‘And what then?’ asks Lovel.

‘Mercy! you ask, What then, Frederick? Do you know what a theater is? Tell Frederick what a theater is, Mr. Batchelor, and that my grandchildren must not be educated by——’

‘My grandchildren—my Cecilia’s children,’ shrieks the other, ‘must not be pol-luted by——’

‘Silence!’ I say. ‘Have you a word against her—have you, pray, Baker?’

‘No. ‘Gad! I never said a word against her,’ says the captain. ‘No, hang me, you know—but——’

‘But suppose I knew the fact the whole time?’ asked Lovel, with rather a blush on his cheek. 'Suppose I knew that she danced to give her family bread? Suppose I knew that she toiled and labored to support her parents and brothers and sisters? Suppose I know that out of her pittance she has continued to support them? Suppose I know that she watched my own children through fever and danger? For these reasons I must turn her out of doors, must I? No, by Heaven! No! Elizabeth! Miss Prior! Come down—come here, I beg you!'

The governess, arrayed as for departure, at this moment appeared on the corridor running round the hall. As Lovel continued to speak very loud and resolute, she came down looking deadly pale.

Still much excited, the widower went up to her and took her hand. 'Dear Miss Prior!' he said—'dear Elizabeth! you have been the best friend of me and mine. You tended my wife in illness, you took care of my children in fever and danger. You have been an admirable sister, daughter, in your own family—and for this, and for these benefits conferred upon us, my relatives—my mother-in-law—would drive you out of my doors! It shall not be!—by Heavens, it shall not be!'

You should have seen little Bedford sitting on the governess' box, shaking his fist, and crying 'Hurrah!' as his master spoke. By this time the loud voices and the altercation in the hall had brought a half dozen of servants from their quarters into the hall. 'Go away, all of you!' shouts Lovel; and the domestic posse retires, Bedford being the last to retreat, and nodding approval at his master as he backs out of the room.

'You are very good and kind and generous, sir,' says the pale Elizabeth, putting her handkerchief to her eyes. 'But without the confidence of these ladies I must not stay, Mr. Lovel. God bless you for your goodness to me. I must, if you please, return to my mother.'

The worthy gentleman looked fiercely round at the two elder women, and again seizing the governess' hand, said: 'Elizabeth! dear Elizabeth! I implore you not to go! If you love the children——'

'Oh, sir!' (A cambric veil covers Miss Prior's emotion, and the expression of her face, on this ejaculation.)

'If you love the children,' gasps out the widower, 'stay with them. If you have a regard for—for their father' (Timanthes, where is thy pocket handkerchief?) 'remain in this house, with such a title as none can question. Be the mistress of it.'

'His mistress—and before me!' screams Lady Baker. 'Mrs. Bonnington, this depravity is monstrous!'
'Be my wife, dear Elizabeth!' the widower continues. 'Continue to watch over the children, who shall be motherless no more.'

'Frederick! Frederick! haven't they got us?' shrieks one of the old ladies.

'Oh, my poor dear Lady Baker!' says Mrs. Bonnington.

'Oh, my poor dear Mrs. Bonnington!' says Lady Baker.

'Frederick, listen to your mother,' implores Mrs. Bonnington.

'To your mothers,' sobs Lady Baker.

And they both go down on their knees, and I heard a boo-hoo of a guffaw behind the green-baized servants' door, where I have no doubt Monsieur Bedford was posted.

'Ah, Batchelor! dear Batchelor, speak to him!' cries good Mrs. Bonny. 'We are praying this child, Batchelor—this child whom you used to know at college, and when he was a good, gentle, obedient boy. You have influence with my poor Frederick. Exert it for his heartbroken mother's sake; and you shall have my bubble-uble-essings, you shall.'

'My dear good lady!' I exclaim, not liking to see the kind soul in grief.

'Send for Dr. Straightwaist! Order him to pause in his madness,' cries Baker; 'or it is I, Cecilia's mother, the mother of that murdered angel, that shall go mad.'

'Angel? Allons!' I say. 'Since his widowhood you have never given the poor fellow any peace. You have been forever quarreling with him. You took possession of his house; bullied his servants; spoiled his children—you did, Lady Baker.'

'Sir,' cries her ladyship, 'you are a low, presuming, vulgar man! Clarence, beat this rude man!'

'Nay,' I say, 'there must be no more quarreling to-day. And I am sure Captain Baker will not molest me. Miss Prior, I am delighted that my old friend should have found a woman of good sense, good conduct, good temper—a woman who has had many trials, and borne them with very great patience—to take charge of him, and make him happy. I congratulate you both. Miss Prior has borne poverty so well that I am certain she will bear good fortune, for it is good fortune to become the wife of such a loyal, honest, kindly gentleman as Frederick Lovel.'

After such a speech as that I think I may say, liberavi animam. Not one word of complaint, you see, not a hint about 'Edward,' not a single sarcasm, though I might have launched some terrific shots out of my quiver, and have made Lovel and his bride-elect writhe before me. But what is the need of spoiling sport? Shall I growl out of my sulky manger, because my comrade gets the meat? Eat it, happy dog! and be thankful. Would not that bone have choked me if I had tried it? Besides, I am accustomed to disappointment. Other fellows get the prizes which I try for. I am used to run second in the dreary race of love. Second? Psha! Third, fourth. Que sais-je? There was the Bombay captain in Bess' early days. There was Edward. Here is Frederick. Go to, Charles Batchelor; repine not at fortune, but be content to be Batchelor still. My sister has children. I will be an uncle, a parent to them. Isn't Edward of the scarlet whiskers distanced? Has not poor Dick Bedford lost the race—poor Dick, who never had a chance, and is the best of us all? Besides, what fun it is to see Lady Baker deposed; think of Mrs. Prior coming in and reigning over her! The purple-faced old fury of a Baker, never will she bully and rage and trample more. She must pack up her traps and be off. I know she must. I can congratulate Lovel sincerely, and that's the fact.

And here at this very moment, and as if to add to the comicality of the scene, who should appear but mother-in-law No. 2, Mrs. Prior, with her Bluecoat boy, and two or three of her children, who had been invited, or had invited themselves, to drink tea with Lovel's young ones, as their custom was whenever they could procure an invitation. Master Prior had a fine 'copy' under his arm, which he came to show to his patron Lovel. His mamma, entirely ignorant of what had happened, came fawning in with her old poke bonnet, her old pocket, that vast depository of all sorts of stores, her old umbrella, and her usual dreary smirk. She made her obeisance to the matrons,—she led up her Bluecoat boy to Mr. Lovel, in whose office she hoped to find a clerk's place for her lad, on whose very coat and waistcoat she had designs while they were yet on his back; and she straightway began business with the dowagers:

'My lady, I hope your ladyship is quite well?' (a courtesy). 'Dear, kind Mrs. Bonnington! I came to pay my duty to you, mum. This is Louisa, my lady, the great girl for whom your ladyship so kindly promised the gown. And this is my little girl, Mrs. Bonnington, mum, please; and this is my big Blue. Go and speak to dear, kind Mr. Lovel, Gus, our dear, good friend and protector—the son and son-in-law of these dear ladies. Look, sir, he has brought his copy to show you; and it's creditable to a boy of his age, isn't it, Mr. Batchelor? You can say, who know so well what writing is, and my kind services to you, sir—and—Elizabeth, Lizzie, my dear! where's your spectacles, you—you—'

Here she stopped, and looking alarmed at the group, at the boxes, at the blushing Lovel, at the pale countenance of the governess, 'Gracious goodness!' she said, 'what has happened? Tell me, Lizzie, what is it?'

'Is this collusion, pray?' says ruffled Mrs. Bonnington.

'Collusion, dear Mrs. Bonnington?'

'Or insolence?' bawls out my Lady Baker.

'Insolence, your ladyship? What—what is it? What are these boxes—Lizzy's boxes? Ah!' the mother broke out with a scream, 'you've not sent the poor girl away? Oh! my poor child—my poor children!'

'The Prince's Theater has come out, Mrs. Prior,' here said I. The mother clasps her meager hands. 'It wasn't the darling's fault. It was to help her poor father in poverty. It was I who forced her to it. Oh, ladies! ladies! don't take the bread out of the mouth of these poor orphans!' and genuine tears rained down her yellow cheeks.

'Enough of this,' says Mr. Lovel haughtily. 'Mrs. Prior, your daughter is not going away. Elizabeth has promised to stay with me, and never to leave me—as governess no longer, but as—' and here he takes Miss Prior's hand.

'His wife! Is this—is this true, Lizzy!' gasped the mother.

'Yes, mamma,' meekly said Miss Elizabeth Prior.

At this the old woman flung down her umbrella, and uttering a fine scream, folds Elizabeth in her arms and then runs up to Lovel. 'My son! my son!' says she (Lovel's face was not bad, I promise you, at this salutation and salute). 'Come here, children!—come, Augustus, Fanny, Louisa, kiss your dear brother, children! And where are yours, Lizzy! Where are Pop and Cissy? Go and look for your little nephew and niece, dears: Pop and Cissy in the schoolroom, or in the garden, dears. They will be your nephew and niece now. Go and fetch them, I say.'

As the young Priors filed off, Mrs. Prior turned to the two other matrons, and spoke to them with much dignity: 'Most hot weather, your ladyship, I'm sure! Mr. Bonnington must find it very hot for preaching, Mrs. Bonnington! Lor! there's that little wretch beating my Johnny on the stairs. Have done, Pop, sir! How evershall we make those children agree, Elizabeth?'

Quick, come to me, some skillful delineator of the British dowager, and draw me the countenances of Lady Baker and Mrs. Bonnington!
'I call this a jolly game, don’t you, Batchelor, old boy?' remarks the captain to me. 'Lady Baker, my dear, I guess your ladyship’s nose is out of joint.'

'O Cecilia—Cecilia! don’t you shudder in your grave?' cries Lady B. 'Call my people, Clarence—call Bulkeley—call my maid! Let me go, I say, from this house of horror!' and the old lady dashed into the drawing room, where she uttered I know not what incoherent shrieks and appeals before that calm, glazed, simpering portrait of the departed Cecilia.

Now this is a truth for which I call Lovel, his lady, Mrs. Bonnington, and Captain Clarence Baker as witnesses. Well, then, while Lady B. was abjuring the portrait it is a fact that a string of Cecilia’s harp—which has always been standing in the corner of the room under its shroud of Cordovan leather—a string, I say, of Cecilia’s harp cracked, and went off with a loud bong which struck terror into all beholders. Lady Baker’s agitation at this incident was awful; I do not like to describe it—not having any wish to say anything tragic in this narrative—though that I can write tragedy, plays of mine (of which envious managers never could be got to see the merit) I think will prove when they appear in my posthumous works.

Baker has always averred that at the moment when the harp string broke her heart broke too. But as she lived for many years, and may be alive now for what I know, and as she borrowed money repeatedly from Lovel, he must be acquitted of the charge which she constantly brings against him of hastening her own death and murdering his first wife Cecilia. 'The harp that once in Tara’s halls’ used to make such a piteous, feeble thrumming, has been carted off I know not whither, and Cecilia’s portrait, though it has been removed from the post of honor (where, you conceive, under present circumstances it would hardly be à propos), occupies a very reputable position in the pink room upstairs, which that poor young Clarence inhabited during my visit to Shrublands.

All the house has been altered. There’s a fine organ in the hall, on which Elizabeth performs sacred music very finely. As for my old room, I will trouble you to smoke there under the present government. It is a library now, with many fine and authentic pictures of the Lovel family hanging up in it, the English branch of the house with the wolf crest, and Gare à la louve for the motto, and a grand posthumous portrait of a Portuguese officer (Gandish), Elizabeth’s late father.

As for dear old Mrs. Bonnington, she, you may be sure, would be easily reconciled to any live mortal who was kind to her, and any plan which should make her son happy; and Elizabeth has quite won her over. Mrs. Prior, on the deposition of the other dowagers, no doubt expected to reign at Shrublands, but in this object I am not very sorry to say was disappointed. Indeed, I was not a little amused, upon the very first day of her intended reign—that eventful one of which we have been describing the incidents—to see how calmly and gracefully Bessy pulled the throne from under her on which the old lady was clambering.

Mrs. P. knew the house very well, and everything which it contained; and when Lady Baker drove off with her son and her suite of domestics, Prior dashed through the vacant apartments gleaning what had been left in the flurry of departure—a scarlet feather out of the dowager’s room, a shirt stud and a bottle of hair oil, the captain’s property. ‘And now they are gone, and as you can’t be alone with him, my dear, I must be with you,’ says she, coming down to her daughter.

‘Of course, mamma, I must be with you,’ says obedient Elizabeth.

‘And there is the pink room, and the blue room, and the yellow room for the boys—and the chintz boudoir for me—I can put them all away, oh, so comfortably!’

‘I can come and share Louisa’s room, mamma,’ says Bessy. ‘It will not be proper for me to stay here at all—until afterward, you know. Or I can go to my uncle at St. Boniface. Don’t you think that will be best, eh, Frederick?’

‘Whatever you wish, my dear Lizzy!’ says Lovel.

‘And I dare say there will be some little alterations made in the house. You talked, you know, of painting, Mr. Lovel; and the children can go to their grandmamma Bonnington. And on our return when the alterations are made we shall always be delighted to see you, Mr. Batchelor—our kindest old friend. Shall we not, Frederick?’

‘Always, always,’ said Frederick.

‘Come, children, come to your teas,’ calls out Mrs. P. in a resolute voice.

‘Dear Pop, I’m not going away—that is, only for a few days, dear,’ says Bessy, kissing the boy; ‘and you will love me, won’t you?’

‘All right,’ says the boy. But Cissy said, when the same appeal was made to her: ‘I shall love my dear mamma!’ and makes her new mother-in-law a very polite courtesy.

‘I think you had better put off those men you expect to dinner to-morrow, Fred,’ I say to Lovel.
LOVEL THE WIDOWER.

‘I think I had, Batch,’ says the gentleman.
‘Or you can dine with them at the club, you know?’ remarks Elizabeth.
‘Yes, Bessy.’
‘And when the children have had their tea I will go with mamma. My boxes are ready, you know,’ says arch Bessy.
‘And you will stay and dine with Mr. Lovel, won’t you, Mr. Batchelor?’ asks the lady.

It was the dreariest dinner I ever had in my life. No undertaker could be more gloomy than Bedford as he served us. We tried to talk politics and literature. We drank too much, purposely. Nothing would do. ‘Hang me, if I can stand this, Lovel,’ I said as we sat mum over our third bottle. ‘I will go back and sleep at my chambers. I was not a little soft upon her myself, that’s the truth. Here’s her health, and happiness to both of you, with all my heart.’ And we drained a great bumper apiece, and I left him. He was very happy I should go.

Bedford stood at the gate as the little pony carriage came for me in the dusk. ‘God bless you, sir,’ says he. ‘I can’t stand it; I shall go too.’ And he rubbed his hands over his eyes.

He married Mary Pinhorn, and they have emigrated to Melbourne; whence he sent me, three years ago, an affectionate letter, and a smart gold pin from the diggings.

A month afterward a cab might have been seen driving from the Temple to Hanover Square; and a month and a day after that drive an advertisement might have been read in the Post and Times: Married, on Thursday, 10th, at St George’s, Hanover Square, by the Reverend the Master of St. Boniface College, Oxbridge, uncle of the bride, Frederick Lovel, Esquire, of Shrublands, Roehampton, to Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the late Captain Montagu Prior, K. S. F.

We may hear of Lovel Married some other day, but here is an end of Lovel the Widower. Valet et plaudite, you good people, who have witnessed the little comedy. Down with the curtain; cover up the boxes; pop out the gas lights. Ho! cab. Take us home, and let us have some tea, and go to bed. Good-night, my little players. We have been merry together, and we part with soft hearts and somewhat rueful countenances, don’t we?

THE END.